54. Why doubt that body shall rise again from body? Grain is sown, grain comes up again: fruit is sown, fruit comes up again; but the grain is clothed with blossom and husk. And this mortal must put on immortality, and this corruptible must put on incorruption. 1 Corinthians 15:53 The blossom of the resurrection is immortality, the blossom of the resurrection is incorruption. For what is more fruitful than perpetual rest? What supplied with richer store than everlasting security? Here is that abundant fruit, by whose increase man’s nature shoots forth more abundantly after death.

55. Sed miraris quemadmodum putrefacta solidentur, dispersa coeant, absumpta reparentur, non miraris quemadmodum semina vapore et compressu terrae soluta viridescant. Nam utique etiam ipsa terreno coalitu putrefacta solvuntur, et cum occaecata et mortua soli genitalis succus animaverit, quodam calore vitali spiritum quemdam herbae viridantis exhalant. Deinde paulatim teneram spicae adolescentis aetatem culmo erigit, et vaginis quibusdam natura tamquam sedula mater includit; ne pubescentem glacies adurat aspera, atque a nimio solis defendat ardore: frugem quoque ipsam adhuc quasi primis erumpentem cunabulis, mox adultam ne pluvia decutiat, ne aura dispergat, ne avium minorum morsus interimat, vallo aristarum sepire consuevit.

55. But you wonder how what has yielded to putrefaction can again become solid, how scattered particles can come together, those that are consumed be made good: you do not wonder how seeds broken up under the moist pressure of the earth grow green. For certainly they too, rotting under contact with the earth, are broken up, and when the fertilising moisture of the soil gives life to the dead and hidden seeds, and, by the vital warmth, as it were breathes out a kind of soul of the green herb. Then little by little nature raises from the ground the tender stalk of the growing ear, and as a careful mother folds it in certain sheaths, lest the sharp ice should hurt it as it grows, and to protect it from too great heat of the sun; and lest after this the rain should break down the fruit itself escaping as it were from its first cradle and just grown up, or lest the wind should scatter it, or small birds destroy it, she usually hedges it around with a fence of bristling awn.

56. Quid igitur miraris si homines, quos acceperit, terra restituat; cum seminum corpora quaecumque susceperit, vivificet, erigat, vestiat, muniat, atque defendat? Desine ergo dubitare quod depositum generis humani terrae fides reddat, quae commendata sibi semina usurario quodam fenore multiplicata restituat. Nam quid de generibus arborum loquar, quae posito surgunt de semine, fructusque resolutos rediviva fecunditate resuscitant, et formae veteri atque imagini suae reddunt, multasque aetates quaedam arborum corpora reparata transmittunt; ut ipsa durando vincant saecula? Putrescere videmus acinum, vitem resurgere: surculus inseritur, arbor renascitur. An de reparandis arboribus divina est providentia, de hominibus nulla cura? Et qui ea quae ad usus hominum dedit, perire non passus est; hominem perire patietur, quem ad imaginem sui fecit?

56. Why should one, then, be surprised if the earth give back those bodies of men which it has received, seeing that it gives life to, raises, clothes, protects, and defends whatsoever bodies of seeds it has received? Cease then to doubt that the trustworthy earth, which restores multiplied as it were by usury the seeds committed to it, will also restore the entrusted deposit of the race of man. And why should I speak of the kinds of trees, which spring up from seed sown, and with revivified fruitfulness bear again their opening fruits, and repeat the old shape and likeness, and certain trees being renewed continue through many generations, and in their endurance overpass the very centuries? We see the grape rot, and the vine come up again: a graft is inserted and the tree is born again. Is there this divine foresight for restoring trees, and no care for men? And He Who has not suffered to perish that which He gave for man’s use, shall He suffer man to perish, whom he made after His own image?

57. Sed incredibile tibi videtur, ut mortui reviviscant: Insipiens tu ipse quod seminas, nonne prius moritur, ut vivificetur (Ibid., 36)? Sere quemlibet fructum arentem, resuscitatur. Sed habet succum. Et nostrum corpus habet sanguinem suum, habet humorem suum. Hic nostri succus est corporis. Unde illud quoque explosum arbitror, quod arentem surculum quidam reviviscere negant, idque ad praejudicium carnis derivare nituntur. Non enim caro arida, cum caro omnis e limo sit, limus in humore, humor e terris. Denique multa gignentia quamvis jugi serenitate humo arida arenosaque nascuntur; quoniam ipsa sibi terra humorem sufficit.

57. But it appears incredible to you that the dead rise again? You foolish one, that which you yourself sow, does it not first die that it may be quickened? 1 Corinthians 15:36 Sow any dry seed you please, it is raised up. But, you answer, it has the life-juice in itself. And our body has its blood, has its own moisture. This is the life-juice of our body. So that I think that the objection is exploded which some allege that a dry twig does not revive, and then endeavour to argue from this to the prejudice of the flesh. For the flesh is not dry, since all flesh is of clay, clay comes from moisture — moisture from the earth. Then, again, many growing plants, though always fresh, spring from dry and sandy soil, since the earth itself supplies sufficient moisture for itself. Does the earth then, which continually restores all things, fail with regard to man? From what has been said it is clear that we must not doubt that it is rather in accordance with than contrary to nature; for it is natural that all things living should rise again, but contrary to nature that they should perish.

58. Sequitur illud quod gentiles plerumque perturbat, quomodo fieri possit ut quos mare absorbuerit, ferae dilaceraverint, bestiae devoraverint, terra restituat. Quo ita demum veniatur necesse est, ut non de fide resurrectionis, sed de parte dubitetur. Esto enim ut laceratorum corpora non resurgant, resurgunt caeteri: nec resurrectio destruitur, si conditio excipitur. Miror tamen cur vel de his dubitandum putent, quasi non omnia quae ex terris sunt, in terram redeant, et in terram resolvantur (Eccles. III, 20). Mare quoque ipsum quaecumque corpora humana demerserit, vicinis exspuit unda plerumque littoribus. Quod ni ita esset, difficile, credo, Deo foret dispersa connectere, dissipata sociare; cui mundus obtemperat, muta obsequuntur elementa, servit natura: quasi non majoris miraculi sit limum animare quam jungere?

58. We come now to a point which much troubles the heathen, how it can be that the earth should restore those whom the sea has swallowed up, wild beasts have torn to pieces or have devoured. So, then, at last we necessarily come to the conclusion that the doubt is not as to belief in resurrection in general, but as to a part. For, granted that the bodies of those torn in pieces do not rise again, the others do so, and the resurrection is not disproved, but a certain class is an exception. Yet I wonder why they think there is any doubt even concerning these, as though not all things which are of the earth return to the earth, and crumble again into earth. And the sea itself for the most part casts up on neighbouring shores whatever human bodies it has swallowed. And if this were not so, I suppose we are to believe that it would not be difficult for God to join together what was dispersed, to unite what was scattered; God, Whom the universe obeys, to Whom the dumb elements submit and nature serves; as though it were not a greater wonder to give life to clay than to join it together.

59. Avis in regione Arabiae, cui nomen est phoenix, redivivo suae carnis humore reparabilis, cum mortua fuerit, reviviscit; solos non credimus homines resuscitari? Atqui hoc relatione crebra, et scripturarum auctoritate cognovimus memoratam avem quingentorum annorum spatia vitalis usus habere praescripta; eamque cum sibi finem vitae adesse praesaga quadam naturae suae aestimatione cognoverit, thecam sibi de thure et myrrha, et caeteris odoribus adornare, completoque opere pariter ac tempore, intrare illo, atque emori: ex cujus humore oriri vermem, paulatimque eum in avis ejusdem figuram concrescere, usumque formari, subnixam quoque remigio pennarum, renovatae vitae officia munere pietatis ordiri. Nam thecam illam, vel tumulum corporis, vel incunabulum resurgentis, in qua deficiens occidit, et occidens resurgit, ex Aethiopia in Lycaoniam vehit: atque ita resurrectione avis hujus, locorum incolae completum quingentorum annorum tempus intelligunt. Ergo isti avi quingentesimus resurrectionis annus est, nobis millesimus: illi in hoc saeculo, nobis in consummatione mundi. Plerique etiam opinantur quod avis haec rogum sibi ipsa succendat, et rursus de favillis suis et cineribus reviviscat.

59. That bird in the country of Arabia, which is called the Phoenix, restored by the renovating juices of its flesh, after being dead comes to life again: shall we believe that men alone are not raised up again? Yet we know this by common report and the authority of writings, namely, that the bird referred to has a fixed period of life of five hundred years, and when by some warning of nature it knows that the end of its life is at hand, it furnishes for itself a casket of frankincense and myrrh and other perfumes, and its work and the time being together ended, it enters the casket and dies. Then from its juices a worm comes forth, and grows by degrees into the fashion of the same bird, and its former habits are restored, and borne up by the oarage of its wings it commences once more the course of its renewed life, and discharges a debt of gratitude. For it conveys that casket, whether the tomb of its body or the cradle of its resurrection, in which quitting life it died, and dying it rose again, from Ethiopia to Lycaonia; and so by the resurrection of this bird the people of those regions understand that a period of five hundred years is accomplished. So to that bird the five hundredth is the year of resurrection, but to us the thousandth: it has its resurrection in this world, we have ours at the end of the world. Many think also that this bird kindles its own funeral pile, and comes to life again from its own ashes.

60. Sed fortasse natura discretior, fidei quoque discretionem videatur afferre: in originem principiumque hominis procreandi mens nostra redeat.

60. But perhaps nature if more deeply investigated will seem to give a deeper reason for our belief: let our thoughts turn back to the origin and commencement of the creation of man. You are men and women, you are not ignorant of the things which have to do with human nature, and if any of you have not this knowledge, you know that we are born of nothing. But how small an origin for being so great as we are! And if I do not speak more plainly, yet you understand what I mean, or rather what I will not say. Whence, then, is this head, and that wonderful countenance, whose maker we see not? We see the work, it is fashioned for various purposes and uses. Whence is this upright figure, this lofty stature, this power of action, this quickness of perception, this capacity for walking upright? Doubtless the organs of nature are not known to us, but that which they effect is known. Thou too wast once seed, and your body is the seed of that which shall rise again. Listen to Paul and learn that you are this seed: It is sown in corruption, it shall rise in incorruption; it is sown in dishonour, it shall rise in glory; it is sown in weakness, it shall rise in power; it is sown a natural body, it shall rise a spiritual body. Thou also, then, art sown as are other things, why do you wonder if you shall rise again as shall others? But you believe as to them, because you see, you believe not this, because you see it not: Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. John 20:29

61. Tamen antequam tempus veniat, nec illa creduntur; non enim omne tempus accommodum ad resuscitanda semina. Alio triticum seminatur, alio nascitur: alio vitis inseritur, alio gemmantia sarmenta pubescunt, luxuriat pampinus, uva formatur: alio plantatur olea, alio velut alvo gravis et onusta prole baccarum, fructus sui ubertate curvescit. Ante vero quam suum cuique tempus adveniat, fetura restrictior est: nec generationis aetatem habet in potestate generandi ipsa, quae generat. Nunc informem situ, nunc fetu nudam, nunc virentem floribus, nunc arentem ipsam omnium cernas parentem. Quae utique vellet omnibus se vestire temporibus, nec umquam aurea segetum aut viridantia pratorum indumenta deponere: ipsa sui egens, et proventuum suorum, quae in alios transfuderit, indotata compendiis.

61. However, before the season comes, those things also are not believed, for every season is not suited for the raising of seeds. Wheat is sown at one time, and comes up at another; at one time the vine is planted, at another the budding twigs begin to shoot, the foliage grows luxuriant, and the grape is formed; at one time the olive is planted, at another time, as though pregnant and loaded with its offspring of berries, it is bent down by the abundance of its fruit. But before its own period arrives for each, the produce is restricted, and that which bears has not the age of bearing in its own power. One may see the mother of all at one time disfigured with mould, at another bare of produce, at another green and full of flowers, at another dried up. Any spot which might wish to be always clothed and never to lay aside the golden dress of its seeds, or the green dress of the meadows, would be barren in itself and unendowed with the gain of its own produce which it would have transferred to others.

62. Ergo et nostram resurrectionem et si non credis fide, non credis exemplo, usu es crediturus. Et aliis quidem fructibus, ut viti, oleae, pomisque diversis anni aetas extrema habilis maturandis: nobis quoque mundi consummatio tamquam extremus anni finis accommodam resurgendi praescripsit aetatem. Et bene in consummatione mundi resurrectio mortuorum est; ne post resurrectionem in hoc malum nobis esset saeculum recidendum. Ideo enim Christus est passus, ut nos ex hoc malo saeculo liberaret; ne iterum nos hujus saeculi tentamenta subruerent et obesset renasci, si renasceremur ad culpam.

62. So, then, even if you will not believe in our resurrection by faith nor by example, you will believe by experience. For many products, as the vine, the olive, and different fruits, the end of the year is the fit time for ripening; and for us also the consummation of the world, as though the end of the year has set the fitting time for rising again. And fitly is the resurrection of the dead at the consummation of the world, lest after the resurrection we should have to fall back into this evil age. For this cause Christ suffered that He might deliver us from this evil world; lest the temptations of this world should overthrow us again, and it should be an injury to us to come again to life, if we came to life again for sin.

63. Et rationem igitur resurrectionis, et tempus tenemus: rationem quia in omnibus sibi fetibus aeque natura respondet, nec in sola hominum successione degenerat: tempus, quia omnia in anni fine generantur. Mundi tempora annus unus est. Et quid mirum si annus unus est, quando dies una est? Una enim die Dominus operarios conduxit ad vineam, dicens: Quid hic statis tota die otiosi (Matth. XX, 6)?

63. So then we have both a reason and a time for the resurrection: a reason because nature in all its produce remains consistent with itself, and does not fail in the generation of men alone; a time because all things are produced at the end of the year. For the seasons of the world consist of one year. What wonder if the year be one since the day is one. For on one day the Lord hired the labourers to work in the vineyard, when He said, Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matthew 20:6

64. Causae originum semina sunt. Semen esse corpus humanum gentium Doctor asseruit (I Cor. XV, 42). Est ergo substantia resurgendi, quando est series seminandi. Quod si substantia aut causa non esset, arduum quisquam putaret Deo unde vellet, vel quomodo vellet, homines regenerare, qui mundum ex nulla materia, nulla substantia esse jussit, et factus est? Coelum aspice, terram intuere. Unde stellarum ignes? unde orbis solis et radii? unde lunae globus? unde montium vertices, dura saxorum, nemorosa silvarum? unde vel diffusus aer, vel infusae vel superfusae aquae? Sed si haec omnia Deus fecit ex nihilo (Ipse enim (Psal. CXLVIII, 5) dixit et facta sunt: ipse mandavit, et creata sunt), cur miremur renasci posse, quod fuerit; cum videamus natum esse, quod non fuit?

64. The causes of the beginnings of all things are seeds. And the Apostle of the Gentiles has said that the human body is a seed. 1 Corinthians 15:43 And so in succession after sowing there is the substance needful for the resurrection. But even if there were no substance and no cause, who could think it difficult for God to create man anew whence He will and as He wills. Who commanded the world to come into being out of no matter and no substance? Look at the heaven, behold the earth. Whence are the fires of the stars? Whence the orb and rays of the sun? Whence the globe of the moon? Whence the mountain heights, the hard rocks, the woody groves? Whence are the air diffused around, and the waters, whether enclosed or poured abroad? But if God made all these things out of nothing (for He spoke and they were made, He commanded and they were created), why should we wonder that which has been should be brought to life again, since we see produced that which had not been?

65. Illud mirum, quod cum resurrectionem non credant, tamen ne genus pereat hominum, clementi quadam benignitate prospiciunt; et ideo transire ac demigrare in corpora dicunt animas, ne mundus intereat. Sed quid sit difficilius, ipsi asserant, transire animas an redire: sua repetere, an nova quaerere.

65. It is a cause for wonder that though they do not believe in the resurrection, yet in their kindly care they make provision that the human race should not perish, and so say that souls pass and migrate into other bodies that the world may not pass away. But let them say which is the most difficult, for souls to migrate, or to return; come back to that which is their own, or seek for fresh dwelling places.

66. Sed illi dubitent, qui non didicerunt: nos vero qui legimus Legem, prophetas, apostolos, Evangelium, dubitare fas non est. Quis enim dubitet, cum legit: Et in tempore illo salvabitur omnis plebs tua, quae scripta est in libro: et multi dormientium in terrae fossis, una apertione exsurgent, hi in vitam aeternam, et hi in opprobrium et in confusionem perpetuam: et intelligentes splendebunt ut splendor firmamenti, et ex justis multi sicut stellae in saecula (Dan. XII, 1 et seq.)? Bene itaque dormientium dixit quietem, ut intelligas mortem non esse perpetuam, quae somni vice initur ad tempus, et ad tempus excluditur: melioremque profectum vitae ejus ostendit, quae futura post mortem est, quam ejus quae ante mortem moerore ac dolore transigitur. Siquidem illa stellis comparatur, haec aerumnae addicitur.

66. But let those who have not been taught doubt. For us who have read the Law, the Prophets, the Apostles, and the Gospel it is not lawful to doubt. For who can doubt when he reads: And in that time shall all your people be saved which is written in the book; and many of them that sleep in the graves of the earth shall arise with one opening, these to everlasting life, and those to shame and everlasting confusion. And they that have understanding shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and of the just many shall be as the stars forever. Well, then, did he speak of the rest of those that sleep, that one may understand that death lasts not for ever, which like sleep is undergone for a time, and is put off at its time; and he shows that the progress of that life which shall be after death is better than that which is passed in sorrow and pain before death, inasmuch as the former is compared to the stars, the latter is assigned to trouble.

67. Nam quid illa contexam, quae alio loco scripta sunt: Suscitabis me et confitebor tibi? Quid etiam illud, quod Job sanctus vitae istius expertus injurias, et adversa omnia patientia virtutis exsuperans, compensationem sibi malorum praesentium de resurrectione promisit dicens: Suscitabis corpus meum hoc, quod multa mala passum est (Job. XIX, 26)? Esaias quoque resurrectionem populis annuntians, Dominici se nuntium dixit esse responsi; sic enim habes: Os enim Domini locutum est, et dicent die illa (Esai. XXV, 8). Quid igitur os Domini locutum sit populos esse dicturos, in posterioribus declaratur, ubi scriptum est: Propter timorem tuum, Domine, in utero accepimus et parturivimus spiritum salutis tuae, quem effudisti super terram. Cadent qui inhabitant terram, resurgent qui in monumentis sunt (Esai. XXVI, 18): ros enim qui abs te, sanitas est illis, terra vero impiorum peribit. Ambula, populus meus, et intra in recessus tuos. Abscondere aliquantulum, donec transeat ira Dei.

67. And why should I bring together what is written elsewhere: You shall raise me up and I will praise You. Or that other passage in which holy Job, after experiencing the miseries of this life, and overcoming all adversity by his virtuous patience, promised himself a recompense for present evils in the resurrection, saying: You shall raise up this body of mine which has suffered many evils. Isaiah also, proclaiming the resurrection to the people, says that he is the announcer of the Lord's message, for we read thus: For the mouth of the Lord has spoken, and they shall say in that day. Isaiah 25:8-9 And what the mouth of the Lord declared that the people should say is set forth later on, where it is written: Because of Your fear, O Lord, we have been with child and have brought forth the Spirit of Your Salvation, which You have poured forth upon the earth. They that inhabit the earth shall fall, they shall rise that are in the graves. For the dew which is from You is health for them but the land of the wicked shall perish. Go, O my people, and enter into your chambers; hide yourself for a little until the Lord's wrath pass by.

68. Quam bene recessus esse signavit tumulos mortuorum, quibus pauxillulum abscondimur; ut in judicium Dei, quod pro nostris sceleribus jus debitae indignationis assumet, tolerabilius transire possimus! Vivit igitur qui absconditur et quiescit, quasi e medio se subtrahens et recedens; ne eum arctioribus laqueis mundi hujus involvat aerumna, quibus repositam resurrectionis esse laetitiam, sanitatemque corporum solutorum divino rore reparabilem; coelestia oracula propheticis vocibus pollicentur. Et bene ros significatur, quo genitalia omnia terrarum semina suscitantur. Quid igitur mirum si fatiscentis quoque corporis nostri cineres ac favillae pinguedine coelestis roris exuberant, et accepto humore vitali in compaginem suam membrorum nostrorum habitus reformantur?

68. How well did he by the chambers point out the tombs of the dead, in which for a brief space we are hidden, that we may be better able to pass to the judgment of God, which shall try us with the indignation due for our wickednesses. He, then, is alive who is hidden and at rest, as though withdrawing himself from our midst and retiring, lest the misery of this world should entangle him with closer snares, for whom the heavenly oracles affirm by the voices of the prophets that the joy of the resurrection is reserved, and the soundness of their freed bodies procured by the divine deed. And dew is well used as a sign, since by it all vital seeds of the earth are raised to growth. What wonder is it, then, if the dust and ashes also of our failing body grow vigorous by the richness of the heavenly dew, and by the reception of this vital moistening the shapes of our limbs are refashioned and connected again with each other?

69. Docet etiam sanctus Ezechiel propheta, et plena expositione describit, quemadmodum arentibus vigor ossibus refundatur, sensus redeat, motus accedat, nervisque redeuntibus, corporis compago rigescat humani: quemadmodum nimis arida renatis ossa visceribus vestiantur, venarumque hiatus, et sanguinis rivulos extentae cutis velamen obducat. In ipsis, dum legimus, propheticis sermonibus humanorum videtur seges corporum rediviva consurgere, atque ipsa spatia diffusa camporum novis videas pullulare seminibus.

69. And the holy prophet Ezekiel teaches and describes with a full exposition how vigour is restored to the dry bones, the senses return, motion is added, and the sinews coming back, the joints of the human body grow strong; how the bones which were very dry are clothed with restored flesh, and the course of the veins and the flow of the blood is covered by the veil of the skin drawn over them. As we read, the reviving multitude of human bodies seems to spring up under the very words of the prophet, and one can see on the widespread plain the new seed shoot forth.

70. Quod si veteres sapientes satis hydri dentibus in regione Thebana inhorruisse armatorum segetem crediderunt: cum utique alterius naturae semina certum sit in naturam verti alteram nequivisse, nec partum suis discordem fudisse seminibus; ut ex serpente homines nascerentur, ut caro ex dentibus gigneretur: quanto magis utique credendum est, quaecumque sunt seminata, in suam naturam resurgere, nec a satione sua segetes discrepare, nec duris mollia, nec mollibus dura viviscere, nec in sanguinem venena converti; sed carnem de carne, os de ossibus, sanguinem de sanguine, humorem de humore reparari. Potestis ergo, gentiles, reformationem negare naturae, qui mutationem potestis asserere? Potestis non credere oraculis, non Evangelio, non prophetiis, qui fabulis inanibus creditis?

70. But if the wise men of old believed that a crop of armed men sprang up in the district of Thebes from the sowing of the hydra's teeth, whereas it is certainly established that seeds of one kind cannot be changed into another kind of plant, nor bring forth produce differing from its own seeds, so that men should spring from serpents and flesh from teeth; how much more, indeed, is it to be believed that whatever has been sown rises again in its own nature, and that crops do not differ from their seed, that soft things do not spring from hard, nor hard from soft, nor is poison changed into blood; but that flesh is restored from flesh, bone from bone, blood from blood, the humours of the body from humours. Can you then, you heathen, who are able to assert a change, deny a restoration of the nature? Can you refuse to believe the oracles of God, the Gospel, and the prophets, who believe empty fables?

71. Sed jam ipsum audiamus prophetam; sic enim ait: Et facta est super me manus Domini, et eduxit me in spiritu Dominus, et posuit me in medio campo, et hic erat plenus ossibus humanis: et circumduxit me per gyrum eorum, et ecce ossa multa valde in facie campi, arida nimis. Et ait ad me: Fili hominis, si vivent ossa ista? Et dixi: Domine tu scis. Et ait ad me: Prophetiza super ossa ista, et dices illis: Ossa arida haec, audite verbum Domini. Haec dicit Dominus ossibus istis: Ecce ego induco in vos spiritum vitae, et dabo in vos nervos, et adducam super vos viscera, et extendam super vos cutem, et dabo Spiritum meum in vos; et vivetis, et scietis quod ego sum Dominus. Et prophetavi sicut mandavit mihi. Et factum est cum prophetarem haec omnia, ecce factus est terrae motus magnus (Ezech. XXXVII, 1 et seq.).

71. But let us now hear the prophet himself, who speaks thus: The hand of the Lord was upon me, and the Lord led me forth in the Spirit, and placed me in the midst of the plain, and it was full of men's bones; and He led me through them round about, and, lo, there were very many bones on the face of the plain, and they were very dry. And He said to me: Son of man, can these bones live? And I said: Lord, You know; and He said to me: Prophesy over these bones, and you shall say unto them: O you dry bones, hear the word of the Lord. Thus says the Lord to these bones: Behold I bring upon you the Spirit of life, and I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and will stretch skin over you, and will put My Spirit into you, and you shall live, and know that I am the Lord. And I prophesied as He commanded me. And it came to pass when I was prophesying all these things, lo, there was a great earthquake. Ezekiel 37:1-7

72. Vide nunc quemadmodum et auditum in ossibus, et motum prius ostendat esse, quam vitae spiritus refundatur. Nam et supra ossa arida jubentur audire, quasi sensum habeant audiendi: et hic accessisse eorum unumquodque ad suam compaginem prophetico sermone signatur; sic enim habes: Et accedebant ossa, unumquodque ad suam compaginem. Et vidi, et

72. Note how the prophet shows that there was hearing and movement in the bones before the Spirit of life was poured upon them. For, above, both the dry bones are bidden to hear, as if they had the sense of hearing, and that upon this each of them came to its own joint is pointed out by the words of the prophet, for we read as follows: And the bones came together, each one to its joint. And I beheld, and, lo, sinews and flesh were forming upon them, and skin came upon them from above, and there was no Spirit in them. Ezekiel 5:7

73. Magna Domini gratia, quod futurae resurrectionis propheta testis adhibetur, ut nos quoque eam illius oculis videremus. Neque enim omnes testes adhiberi poterant, sed in uno omnes testes sumus: quia nec in virum sanctum cadit mendacium, nec in tantum error prophetam.

73. Great is the lovingkindness of the Lord, that the prophet is taken as a witness of the future resurrection, that we, too might see it with his eyes. For all could not be taken as witnesses, but in that one all we are witnesses, for neither does lying come upon a holy man, nor error upon so great a prophet.

74. Nec nimus verisimile debet videri, quia jubente Deo, ossa in suam compaginem reformantur; cum utique innumera habeamus exempla, quibus natura rerum coelestibus est obsecuta praeceptis; ut terra pabulum gignere juberetur, et gigneret (Gen. I, 11); ut ad virgae tactum sitientibus populis petra vomeret aquam (Num. XX, 11), atque aestu torridis miseratione divina undarent fluenta dura saxorum (Exod. IV, 3). Virga in serpentem versa quid aliud indicavit, nisi volente Deo ex insensibilibus sensibilia posse generari? An vero incredibilius putas quod ossa, cum jubentur, accedunt (Ezech.

XXXVII, 7); quam quod retrorsum fluenta vertuntur, maria fugiunt? Sic enim propheta testatur; Mare vidit et fugit, Jordanis conversus est retrorsum (Psal. CXIII, 3). Nec super hoc ambigi potest, quod duorum populorum alterius salute, alterius obitu comprobatum est, aquarum cursus stetisse frenatos eosdemque aliis circumfusos, aliis ad mortem refusos, ut alios mergerent, alios reservarent (Exod. XIV, 22 et seq.). Quid in ipso Evangelio? Nonne ibi probavit Dominus, quod verbo unda mitescat (Matth. VIII, 26), fugentur coeli nubila, cedantflabra ventorum, placidisque littoribus muta Deo famulentur elementa?

74. Nor ought it to appear at all improbable, that at the command of God the bones were fitted again to their joints, since we have numberless instances in which nature has obeyed the commands of heaven; as the earth was bidden to bring forth the green herb, Genesis 1:11 and did bring it forth; as the rock at the touch of the rod gave forth water for the thirsting people; and the hard stone poured forth streams by the mercy of God for those parched with heat. What else did the rod changed into a serpent Exodus 4:3 signify, than that at the will of God living things can be produced from those that are without life? Do you think it more incredible that bones should come together when bidden, than that streams should be turned back or the sea flee? For thus does the prophet testify: The sea saw it and fled, Jordan was driven back. Nor can there be any doubt about this fact, which was proved by the rescue of one and the destruction of the other of two peoples, that the waves of the sea stood restrained, and at the same time surrounded one people, and poured back upon the other for their death, that they might overwhelm the one, but preserve the other. And what do we find in the Gospel itself? Did not the Lord Himself prove there that the sea grew calm at a word, the clouds were driven away, the blasts of the winds yielded, and that on the quieted shores the dumb elements obeyed God?

75. Sed persequamur caetera, ut quemadmodum spiritu vitae animentur defuncti, surgant jacentes, sepulcra reserentur, possimus advertere. Et ait ad me: Prophetiza, fili hominis, et dic spiritui: Haec dicit Dominus: A quatuor ventis coeli veni, spiritus, et insuffla in mortuos istos, et vivant. Et prophetavi sicut mandavit mihi, et intravit in eos spiritus vitae, et vixerunt, et steterunt in pedibus suis congregatio nimis multa. Et locutus est Dominus ad me, dicens: Fili hominis, ossa haec omnis domus Israel. Ipsi enim dicunt: Arida facta sunt ossa nostra, periit spes nostra, interibimus. Propterea prophetiza et dic: Haec dicit Dominus: Ecce ego aperio vobis monumenta vestra, et educam vos de monumentis vestris in terram Israel, et scietis quod ego sum Dominus, cum aperiam sepulcra vestra, et educam de sepulcris populum meum, et dabo Spiritum meum in vobis, et vivetis, et ponam vos super terram vestram, et scietis quia ego sum Dominus: locutus sum, et faciam, dicit Dominus (Ezech. XXXVII, 9 et seq.).

75. But let us go on with the other points, that we may observe how by the Spirit of life the dead are quickened, they that lie in the graves arise, and the tombs are opened: And He said to me: Prophesy, son of man, and say to the Spirit, Come from the four winds of heaven, O Spirit, and breathe upon these dead, that they may live. And I prophesied as He commanded me, and the Spirit of life entered into them, and they lived, and stood up on their feet, an exceeding great company. And the Lord spoke unto me, saying: Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. For they say, Our bones have become dry, our hope is lost, we shall perish. Therefore, prophesy and say: Thus says the Lord: Behold I will open your graves, and will bring you up out of your graves into the land of Israel, and you shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall open your graves, and bring forth My people out of the graves, and shall put My Spirit in you, and place you in your own land, and you shall know that I am the Lord; I have spoken, and I will perform it, says the Lord. Ezekiel 37:9-14

76. Advertimus quemadmodum vitalis spiritus commercia resumantur, cognovimus quemadmodum dehiscentibus tumulis, mortui suscitentur. An vero mirandum est jussu Domini mortuorum sepulcra reserari, cum tota suis terminis uno tonitruo terra quatiatur, mare suis exundet finibus, idemque suarum cursus refrenet undarum? Denique ille qui credidit quia in momento, in ictu oculi, in novissima tuba (canet enim tuba) mortui resurgent (I Cor. XV, 52); cum primis rapietur in nubibus obviam Christo in aera (I Thess. IV, 16); qui non credidit, relinquetur, et perfidia sua subdet se ipse sententiae.

76. We notice here how the operations of the Spirit of life are again resumed; we know after what manner the dead are raised from the opening tombs. And is it in truth a matter of wonder that the sepulchres of the dead are unclosed at the bidding of the Lord, when the whole earth from its utmost limits is shaken by one thunderclap, the sea overflows its bounds, and again checks the course of its waves? And finally, he who has believed that the dead shall rise again in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump (for the trumpet shall sound), 1 Corinthians 15:52 shall be caught up among the first in the clouds to meet Christ in the air; 1 Thessalonians 4:17 he who has not believed shall be left, and subject himself to the sentence by his own unbelief.

77. Ostendit tibi Dominus etiam in Evangelio, ut jam ad exempla veniamus, quemadmodum resurgas. Non enim unum Lazarum, sed fidem omnium suscitavit: quod tu si credas, cum legis, mens quoque tua, quae mortua fuerat, in illo Lazaro reviviscit. quid enim sibi vult quod Dominus ad monumentum accessit, magna voce clamavit: Lazare, exi foras (Joan. XI, 44)? nisi ut futurae resurrectionis specimen praestaret, exemplum ederet? Cur voce clamavit, quasi spiritu non soleat operari, quasi tacitus non soleat imperare? Sed ut illud ostenderet, quod scriptum est: Quoniam in momento, in ictu oculi, in novissima tuba, et mortui resurgent incorrupti (I Cor. XV, 52); tubarum enim crepitus vocis metitur elatio. Et clamavit: Lazare, exi foras. Cur etiam nomen additur; nisi forte ne alius resuscitatus pro alio videretur, aut fortuita magis resurrectio, quam imperata?

77. The Lord also shows us in the Gospel, to come now to instances, after what manner we shall rise again. For He raised not Lazarus alone, but the faith of all; and if you believe, as you read, your spirit also, which was dead, revives with Lazarus. For what does it mean, that the Lord went to the sepulchre and cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth, John 11:43 except that He would give us a visible proof, would set forth an example of the future resurrection? Why did He cry with a loud voice, as though He were not wont to work in the Spirit, to command in silence, but only that He might show that which is written: In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump the dead shall rise again incorruptible? 1 Corinthians 15:52 For the raising of the voice answers to the peal of trumpets. And He cried, Lazarus, come forth. Why is the name added, except perchance lest one might seem to be raised instead of another, or that the resurrection were rather accidental than commanded.

78. Audivit ergo defunctus, et exivit foras de monumento, ligatus pedes et manus institis, et facies ejus orario colligata erat (Joan. XI, 44). Comprehende, si potes, quemadmodum clausis oculis iter carpat, vinctis pedibus gradum dirigat, inseparabili gressu, separabilique progressu. Manebant vincula, nec tenebant: tegebantur oculi, sed videbant. Videbat denique qui resurgebat, qui ambulabat, qui deserebat sepulcrum. Virtute enim divinae praeceptionis operante, natura suum non requirebat officium; et tamquam in excessu posita, non jam suo ordini, sed divino nutui serviebat. Rumpebantur prius mortis quam sepulturae vincula: agebatur priusquam parabatur incessus.

78. So, then, the dead man heard, and came forth from the tomb, bound hand and foot with grave cloths, and his face was bound with a napkin. Conceive, if you can, how he makes his way with closed eyes, directs his steps with bound feet, and moves as though free with fastened limbs. The bands remained on him but did not restrain him, his eyes were covered yet they saw. So, then, he saw who was rising again, who was walking, who was leaving the sepulchre. For when the power of the divine command was working, nature did not require its own functions, and brought, as it were, into extremity, obeyed no longer its own course, but the divine will. The bands of death were burst before those of the grave. The power of moving was exercised before the means of moving were supplied.

79. Si miraris haec, disce quis imperaverit, ut mirari desinas. Jesus Christus Dei virtus; vita, lux, resurrectio mortuorum: virtus erexit jacentem, vita gressum extulit, lux fugavit tenebras, reparavit obtutum, resurrectio vivendi gratiam reformavit.

79. If you marvel at this, consider Who gave the command, that you may cease to wonder; Jesus Christ. the Power of God, the Life, the Light, the Resurrection of the dead. The Power raised up him that was lying prostrate, the Life produced his steps, the Light drove away the darkness and restored his sight, the Resurrection renewed the gift of life.

80. Fortasse moveat quod Judaei lapidem tollunt, Judaei institas solvunt; ne forte et tu sollicitus sis, quis lapidem de monumento tuo tollat (Ibid., 41). Quasi vero qui spiritum refundere poterat, lapidem removere non poterat: aut vincula rumpere, qui vinctum fecerat ambulare: aut deoperire faciem, qui opertis oculis lumen infuderat: aut findere petram, qui poterat reformare naturam? Sed ut vel oculis suis crederent, qui credere mente nolebant, removent lapidem, vident cadaver, fetorem sentiunt, institas rumpunt. Non possunt negare defunctum, quem aspiciunt resurgentem, vident signa mortis, et vitae munera. Quid si dum conantur, labore ipso emendantur? quid si dum audiunt, vel auribus suis credunt? quid si dum intuentur, vel oculis suis corriguntur? quid si dum rumpunt vincula, mentes suas solvunt? quid si dum Lazarus exuitur, populus liberatur? dum Lazarum abire permittunt, ipsi ad Dominum revertuntur? Denique multi qui venerant ad Mariam, videntes quae facta sunt, crediderunt (Ibid., 45).

80. Perchance it may trouble you that the Jews took away the stone and loosened the grave cloths, and you may haply be anxious as to who shall move the stone from your tomb. As though He Who could restore the Spirit could not remove the stone; or He Who made the bound to walk could not burst the bonds; or He Who had shed light upon the covered eyes could not uncover the face; or He Who could renew the course of nature could not cleave the stone! But, in order that they may believe their eyes who will not believe with their heart, they remove the stone, they see the corpse, they smell the stench, they loose the grave cloths. They cannot deny that he is dead whom they behold rising again; they see the signs of death and the proofs of life. What if, while they are busied, they are converted by the very toil itself? What if, while they hear, they believe their own ears? What if, while they behold, they are instructed by their own eyes? What if, while they loose the bonds, they free their own minds? What if, while Lazarus is being unbound, the people is set free, while they let Lazarus go, themselves return to the Lord? For, lastly, many who had come to Mary, seeing what had taken place, believed.

81. Nec hoc solum exemplum edidit Dominus noster Jesus Christus; sed alios quoque resuscitavit, ut nos vel exemplis uberioribus crederemus. Resuscitavit adolescentem fletu viduae matris inflexus, quando accessit et tetigit loculum, dicens: Adolescens, tibi dico surge: et resedit qui erat mortuus, et coepit loqui (Luc. VII, 14). Statim ut audivit, statim resedit, statim locutus est. Alia ergo virtutis gratia, alius ordo naturae.

81. And this was not the only instance which our Lord Jesus Christ set forth, but He raised others also, that we might at any rate believe more numerous instances. He raised the young man again, moved by the tears of his widowed mother, when He came and touched the bier, and said: Young man, I say unto you, arise, and he that was dead sat up and began to speak. Luke 14:7-8 As soon as he heard he immediately sat up, he immediately spoke. The working of power, then, is one thing, the order of nature is another.

82. Nam quid de archisynagogi filia loquar, in cujus obitu flebant turbae, tibicines personabant? Etenim ad fidem mortis pompa funeris exhibetur. Quam cito ad vocem Domini convertitur spiritus, redivivum corpus erigitur, cibus sumitur; ut vitae testimonium crederetur.

82. And what shall I say of the daughter of the ruler of the synagogue, at whose death multitudes were weeping and the flute-players piping? For the funeral solemnities were being performed because of the conviction of death. How quickly at the word of the Lord does the spirit return, the reviving body rise up, and food is taken, that the evidence of life may be believed! Mark 5:38-43

83. Et quid miremur ad vocem Dei refundi animam, redire ossibus viscera; cum meminerimus prophetici tactu corporis mortuum suscitatum (IV Reg. 13, 21)? Elias oravit, et defunctum suscitavit infantem (III Reg. XVII, 22): Petrus in nomine Christi Tabitham surgere atque ambulare praecepit, et redditam sibi pauperes gratulati crediderunt pro alimentis (Act. IX, 40); et nos adhuc pro salute non credimus? Illi resurrectionem alienam suis lacrymis redemerunt, nos nostram nec Christi credimus passione? Qui cum emitteret spiritum, ut ostenderet pro nostra resurrectione se mortuum, seriem ipsam resurrectionis exercuit; simul enim ut clamans iterum voce magna emisit spiritum; et terra mota est, et petrae scissae sunt, et monumenta aperta sunt, et multa corpora sanctorum dormientium resurrexerunt, et exeuntes de monumento post resurrectionem ejus venerunt in sanctam civitatem, et multis apparuerunt (Matth. XXVII, 51, 52).

83. And why should we wonder that the soul is restored at the word of God, that flesh returns to the bones, when we remember the dead raised by the touch of the prophet's body? Elijah prayed, and raised the dead child. Peter in the name of Christ bade Tabitha rise and walk, Acts 9:40 and the poor rejoicing believed for the food's sake which she ministered to them, and shall we not believe for our salvation's sake? They purchased the resurrection of another by their tears, shall we not believe in the purchase of ours by the Passion of Christ? Who when He gave up the ghost, in order to show that He died for our resurrection, worked out the course of the resurrection; for so soon as He cried again with a loud voice and gave up the ghost, the earth did quake, and the rocks were rent, and the tombs were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and, going forth out of the tombs after His resurrection, came into the holy city and appeared unto many. Matthew 27:50-53

84. Si haec facta sunt, cum emitteret spiritum, cur incredibilia putamus, cum redire coeperit ad judicium? praesertim cum haec resurrectio documentum illius resurrectionis, et futurae sit veritatis exemplum: minus autem exemplum est, quam veritas. Quis igitur in Domini passione monumenta aperuit, manum resurgentibus dedit, viam qua civitatem sanctam peterent, demonstravit? si nemo fuit, fuit utique vis divina, quae operaretur in corporibus mortuorum. Hominis tu quaeris auxilium, ubi opus Dei cernis?

84. If these things happened when He gave up the ghost, why should we think them incredible when He shall return to judgment? Especially since this earlier resurrection is a pledge of that future resurrection, and a pattern of that reality Which is to come; indeed, it is rather itself truth than a pattern. Who, then, at the Lord's resurrection opened the graves, gave a hand to those who were rising, showed them the road to find the holy city? If there was no one, it was certainly the Divine Power which was working in the bodies of the dead. Shall one seek for the aid of man where one sees the work of God?

85. Non egent humanis divina ministeriis. Coelum Deus fieri jussit, et factum est: terram creari statuit, et creata est (Gen. I, 6 et seq.). Quis humeris saxa convexit? quis congessit impensas? quis laboranti Deo suam operam ministravit? In momento haec facta sunt. Vis scire quam brevi? Dixit, et facta sunt (Psal. CXLIII, 5). Si dicto elementa consurgunt, cur dicto mortui non resurgant? Qui licet mortui sint, tamen aliquando vixerunt, habuerunt spiritum sentiendi, habuerunt vires agendi; plurimumque refert capax animi non fuisse, et exanimum remansisse. Diabolus dixit: Dic lapidi huic, ut fiat panis (Luc. IV, 3). Confitetur, jubente Deo, converti posse naturam; tu non credis, jubente Deo, reformari posse naturam?

85. Divine action has no need of human assistance. God commanded that the heavens should come into existence, and it was done; He determined that the earth should be created, and it was created. Who carried together the stones on his shoulders? Who supplied the expenses? Who furnished assistance to God as He toiled? These things were made in a moment. Would you know how quickly? He spoke and they were made. If the elements spring up at a word, why should the dead not rise at a word? For though they be dead, yet they once lived, once had the breath of life for feeling, and strength for acting; and there is a very great difference between not having been capable of life, and having remained lifeless. The devil said: Command this stone that it become bread. Luke 4:3 He confesses that at the command of God nature can be transformed, do you not believe that at the command of God nature can be remade?

86. De solis cursu coelique ratione philosophi disputant, et sunt qui putant his esse credendum; cum quid loquantur, ignorent. Neque enim coelum ascenderunt, axem dimensi, mundum oculis perscrutati sunt; quia nullus eorum cum Deo in principio fuit, nullus eorum de Deo dixit: Cum pararet coelum, cum ipso eram, et eram cum eo componens, ego eram cui adgaudebat (Prov. VIII, 27, 30). Si ergo illis creditur, non creditur Deo, qui ait: Quemadmodum coelum novum, et terra nova, quae ego facio manere coram me, dicit Dominus, sic stabit nomen vestrum, et semen vestrum: et erit mensis ex mense, et sabbatum ex sabbato: et veniet omnis caro in conspectu meo, ut adorent in Hierusalem, dicit Dominus Deus: et exibunt, et videbunt membra hominum, qui praevaricati sunt in me. Nam vermis eorum non morietur, et ignis eorum non exstinguetur, et erunt in aspectum universae carni (Esai. LXVI, 22 et seq.)

86. Philosophers dispute about the course of the sun and the system of the heavens, and there are those who think that these should be believed when they are ignorant of what they are talking about. For neither have they climbed up into the heavens, nor measured the sky, nor examined the universe with their eyes; for none of them was with God in the beginning, none of them has said of God: When He was preparing the heavens I was with Him, I was with Him as a master workman, I was he in whom He delighted. If, then, they are believed, is God not believed, Who says: As the new heavens and the new earth, which I make to remain before Me, says the Lord; so shall your name and your seed abide; and month shall be after month, and sabbath after sabbath, and all flesh shall come in My sight to worship in Jerusalem, says the Lord God; and they shall go forth, and shall see the limbs of men who have transgressed against Me. For their worm shall not die and their fire shall not be quenched and they shall be a sight to all flesh. Isaiah 66:22-24

87. Si terra renovatur et coelum, cur dubitemus hominem posse renovari, propter quem terra facta et coelum est? Si praevaricator servatur ad poenam, cur justus non perpetuatur ad gloriam? Si vermis non moritur peccatorum, quemadmodum interibit caro justorum? Haec est enim resurrectio, sicut verbi ipsius sonus exprimit; ut quod cecidit, hoc resurgat: quod mortuum fuerit, reviviscat.

87. If the earth and heaven are renewed, why should we doubt that man, on account of whom heaven and earth were made, can be renewed? If the transgressor be reserved for punishment, why should not the just be kept for glory? If the worm of sins does not die, how shall the flesh of the just perish? For the resurrection, as the very form of the word shows, is this, that what has fallen should rise again, that which has died should come to life again.

88. Et haec est series et causa justitiae, ut quoniam corporis animique communis est actus (quia quae animus cogitavit, corpus effecit) utrumque in judicium veniat, utrumque aut poenae dedatur, aut gloriae reservetur. Nam propemodum absurdum videtur, ut cum animi legem lex carnis impugnet, et mens plerumque quod odit, hoc faciat, quando inhabitans in homine peccatum carnis operatur; animus subdatur injuriae alienae reus culpae, caro quiete potiatur auctor aerumnae: et solus atteratur, qui non solus erravit: aut solus gloriam referat, qui non solus gratiae militavit.

88. And this is the course and ground of justice, that since the action of body and soul is common to both (for what the soul has conceived the body has carried out), each should come into judgment, and each should be either given over to punishment or reserved for glory. For it would seem almost inconsistent that, since the law of the mind fights against the law of the flesh, and the mind often, when sin dwelling in man acts, does that which it hates; the mind guilty of a fault shared by another should be subjected to penalty, and the flesh, the author of the evil, should enjoy rest: and that should alone suffer which had not sinned alone, or should alone attain to glory, not having fought alone with the help of grace.

89. Plena, ni fallor, et justa ratio: sed ego rationem a Christo non exigo. Si ratione convincor, fidem abnuo. Credidit Abraham Deo (Gen. XV, 6), et nos credamus; ut qui sumus generis, etiam fidei simus haeredes. Credidit et David, propter quod et locutus est (Psal. CXV, 10): et nos credamus, ut possimus loqui, scientes quoniam, qui suscitavit Dominum Jesum Christum, et nos cum Jesu suscitabit (II Cor. IV, 14). Hoc enim promisit, qui numquam mentitur, Deus (Tit. I, 2): hoc promisit veritas in Evangelio suo, dicens: Haec est autem voluntas ejus qui misit me, ut omne quod dedit mihi, non perdam ex eo: sed resuscitem illud in novissimo die (Joan. VI, 39). Nec satis putavit semel dixisse, sed etiam repetita expressione signavit; sic enim sequitur: Haec est enim voluntas Patris mei, qui misit me, ut omnis qui videt Filium, et credit in eum, habeat vitam aeternam, et ego resuscitabo eum in novissimo die (Ibid., 40).

89. The reason, unless I am mistaken, is complete and just, but I do not require a reason from Christ. If I am convinced by reason I reject faith. Abraham believed God, Genesis 15:6 let us also believe Him, that we who are heirs of his race may also be heirs of his faith. David likewise believed, and therefore did he speak; let us also believe that we may be able to speak, knowing that He Who raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also with Jesus. 2 Corinthians 4:14 For God, Who never lies, promised this; the Truth promised this in His Gospel, when He said: This is the will of Him that sent Me, that of all that which He has given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day. John 6:39 And He thought it not sufficient to have said this once, but marked it by express repetition, for this follows: For this is the will of My Father, Who sent Me, that every one that sees the Son and believes in Him should have eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day.

90. Quis hoc dicit? Utique is qui mortuus plurima defunctorum corpora suscitavit. Si Deo non credimus, nec exemplo credimus? Non credimus quod promisit; quando etiam quod non promisit, effecit? Ipse autem quam causam moriendi habuisset, nisi habuisset et causam resurgendi? Etenim quoniam Deus mori non poterat, mori non poterat sapientia: resurgere autem non poterat, quod mortuum non erat; assumitur caro, quae mori posset; ut dum moritur, quod solet, quod mortuum fuerat, hoc resurgeret. Neque enim poterat esse nisi per hominem resurrectio; quoniam sicut per hominem mors, ita et per hominem resurrectio mortuorum (I Cor. XV, 21).

90. Who was He that said this? He in truth Who when dead raised up many bodies of the departed. If we believe not God, shall we not believe evidence? Do we not believe what He promised, since He did even that which He did not promise? And what reason would He have had for dying, had He not also had a reason for rising again? For, seeing that God could not die, Wisdom could not die; and inasmuch as that could not rise again which had not died, flesh is assumed, which can die, that while that, whose nature it is, dies, that which had died should rise again. For the resurrection could not be effected except by man; since, as by man came death, so too by man came the resurrection of the dead. 1 Corinthians 15:21

nunc enim secundum carnem jam non novimus Christum, sed carnis gratiam tenemus; ut ipsum primitias quiescentium, ipsum primogenitum ex mortuis noverimus. Primitiae utique ejusdem sunt generis atque naturae, cujus et reliqui fructus quorum pro laetiore proventu primitiva Deo munera deferuntur, sacrum munus pro omnibus, et quasi reparatae quaedam libamina naturae. Primitiae ergo quiescentium Christus. Sed utrum suorum quiescentium, qui quasi mortis exsortes dulci quodam sopore teneantur, an omnium mortuorum? Sed sicut in Adam omnes moriuntur, ita et in Christo omnes vivificabuntur (I Cor. XV, 22). Itaque sicut primitiae mortis in Adam, ita etiam primitiae resurrectionis in Christo.

91. So, then, man rose because man died; man was raised again, but God raised him. Then it was man according to the Flesh, now God is all in all. 1 Corinthians 15:28 For now we know not Christ according to the flesh, 2 Corinthians 5:16 but we possess the grace of that Flesh, so that we know Him the firstfruits of them that rest, 1 Corinthians 15:23 the firstborn of the dead. Colossians 1:18 Now the first-fruits are undoubtedly of the same nature and kind as the remaining fruits, the first of which are offered to God as a petition for a richer increase, as a holy thank-offering for all gifts, and as a kind of libation of that nature which has been restored. Christ, then, is the firstfruits of them that rest. But is this of His own who are at rest, who, as it were, freed from death, are holden by a kind of sweet slumber, or of all those who are dead? As in Christ all die, so too in Christ shall all be made alive. 1 Corinthians 15:22 So, then, as the firstfruits of death were in Adam, so also the firstfruits of the resurrection are in Christ.

92. Omnes resurgunt, sed nemo desperet, neque justus doleat commune consortium resurgendi; cum praecipuum fructum virtutis exspectet. Omnes quidem resurgent, sed unusquisque, ut ait Apostolus, in suo ordine (Ibid., 23). Communis est divinae fructus clementiae, sed distinctus ordo meritorum. Dies omnibus lucet, sol omnes populos fovet, pluvia possessiones omnium uberiore imbre fecundat.

92. All men rise again, but let no one lose heart, and let not the just grieve at the common lot of rising again, since he awaits the chief fruit of his virtue. All indeed shall rise again, 1 Corinthians 15:23 but, as says the Apostle, each in his own order. The fruit of the Divine Mercy is common to all, but the order of merit differs. The day gives light to all, the sun warms all, the rain fertilises the possessions of all with genial showers.

93. We are all born, and we shall all rise again, but in each state, whether of living or of living again, grace differs and the condition differs. For, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, the dead shall rise incorruptible and we shall be changed. 1 Corinthians 15:52 Moreover, in death itself some rest, and some live. Rest is good, but life is better. And so the Apostle rouses him that is resting to life, saying: Rise, you that sleep, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give you light. Ephesians 5:14 Therefore he is aroused that he may live, that he may be like to Paul, that he may be able to say: For we that are alive shall not prevent those that are aslee Thessalonians 4:14 He speaks not here of the common manner of life, and the breath which we all alike enjoy, but of the merit of the resurrection. For, having said, And the dead which are in Christ shall rise first, he adds further; And we that are alive shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet Christ in the air. 1 Thessalonians 4:17

94. Utique mortuus est Paulus, et passione venerabili vitam corporis cum immortali gloria commutavit: num fefellit ergo qui se viventem scripsit in nubibus obviam Christo esse rapiendum? Hoc enim de Enoch legimus (Gen. V, 24), aut Elia (IV Reg. II, 11): sed et tu rapieris in spiritu. Ecce currus Eliae, ecce ignes, etsi non videntur, parantur; ut justus ascendat, innocens transferatur, et tua vita mori nesciat. Denique apostoli mori nescierunt; unde et dictum est: Amen, amen dico vobis, multi ex his astantibus non gustabunt mortem, donec videant Filium hominis venientem in regno suo (Matth. XVI, 28). Vivit enim qui non habet, quod moriatur in eo, qui non habet ex Aegypto calceamentum aliquod aut vinculum: sed exuit illud priusquam corporis hujus deponat officium. Non solus itaque Enoch vivit, quia non solus est raptus: rapitur et Paulus obviam Christo.

94. Paul certainly is dead, and by his honourable passion exchanged the life of the body for everlasting glory; did he then deceive himself when he wrote that he should be caught up alive in the clouds to meet Christ? We read the same too of Enoch Genesis 5:24 and of Elijah, and thou too shall be caught up in the Spirit. Lo the chariot of Elijah, lo the fire, though not seen are prepared, that the just may ascend, the innocent be borne forth, and your life may not know death. For indeed the apostles knew not death, according to that which was said: Verily, verily, I say unto you, many of those standing here shall not taste death until they see the Son of man coming in His kingdom. Matthew 16:28 For he lives, who has nothing in him which can die, who has not from Egypt any shoe or bond, but has put it off before laying aside the service of this body. And so not Enoch alone is alive, for not he alone was caught up; Paul also was caught up to meet Christ.

95. Vivunt etiam patriarchae; neque enim aliter Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, et Deus Jacob, nisi mortui viverent, diceretur; Deus enim mortuorum non est, sed viventium (Luc. XX, 38). Vivemus et nos, si gesta moresque majorum voluerimus imitari. Miramur patriarcharum praemia, imitemur obsequia: praedicamus gratiam, sequamur obedientiam, non escis inducti, saeculi laqueos incidamus. Arripiamus opportunitatem temporis, praescriptum Legis, clementiam vocationis, desiderium passionis. Exierunt de terra sua patriarchae, et nos exeamus proposito de corporis potestate; nos exeamus proposito, illi exsilio: sed exsilium non putarunt, quod devotio obiret, non necessitas imperaret. Illi terram solo mutarunt, nos terram coelo mutemus: illi habitatione, nos spiritu. Illis illuminatum stellis coelum ostenderit sapientia, nostri cordis oculos illuminet. Sic typus veritati, et veritas concurrit typo.

95. The patriarchs also live, for God could not be called the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, except the dead were living; for He is not the God of the dead but of the living. Luke 20:38 And we, too, shall live if we be willing to copy the deeds and habits of our predecessors. We are astonished at the rewards of the patriarchs, let us copy their faithfulness; we tell of their grace, let us follow their obedience; let us not, enticed by appetite, fall into the snares of the world. Let us lay hold of the opportunity, of the commandment of the Law, the mercy of our vocation, the desire of suffering. The patriarchs went forth from their own land, let us go forth in purpose from the power of the body; let us go forth in purpose as they in exile; but they esteemed that not to be exile which the fear of God caused, necessity did not enforce. They changed their land for another soil, let us change earth for heaven; they changed in earthly habitation, let us change in spirit. To them Wisdom showed the heaven illuminated with stars, Genesis 15:5 let it enlighten the eyes of our heart. Thus does the type agree with the truth, and the truth with the type.

96. Abraham paratus excipiendis hospitibus (Gen. XVIII, 2), fidelis Deo, impiger ministerio promptus officio, Trinitatem in typo vidit, hospitalitatem religione cumulavit, tres suspiciens, unum adorans; et personarum distinctione servata, unum tamen Dominum nominabat, tribus honorificentiam muneris deferens, et unam significans potestatem. Loquebatur enim in eo non doctrina, sed gratia: et melius credebat ille, quod non didicerat, quam nos qui didicimus. Nemo enim typum falsaverat veritatis, et ideo tres videt, sed unitatem veneratur. Tres mensuras similaginis promit, unum immolat vitulum; satis credens unum esse sacrificium, trium munus: unam hostiam, trium gratiam. Nam in quatuor regibus (Gen. XIV, 1 et seq.) quis non intelligat quod materialis elementa naturae, praefiguratae Dominicae passionis indicio, et omnia sibi mundana subjecerit? Fidelis in bello, abstemius in triumpho, qui donis non hominum ditescere, sed Dei mallet.

96. Abraham, ready to receive strangers, faithful towards God, devoted in ministering, quick in his service, saw the Trinity in a type; Genesis 18:2 he added religious duty to hospitality, when beholding Three he worshipped One, and preserving the distinction of the Persons, yet addressed one Lord, he offered to Three the honour of his gift, while acknowledging one Power. It was not learning but grace which spoke in him, and he believed better what he had not learned than we who have learned. No one had falsified the representation of the truth, and so he sees Three, but worships the Unity. He brings forth three measures of fine meal, and slays one victim, considering that one sacrifice is sufficient, but a triple gift; one victim, an offering of three. And in the four kings, Genesis xiv who does not understand that he subjected to himself the elements of the material creation, and all earthly things in a sign whereby the Lord's Passion was prefigured? Faithful in war, moderate in his triumph, in that he preferred not to become richer by the gifts of men, but by those of God.

97. Generare se posse filium senex credidit, immolare posse se filium pater judicavit (Gen. XXII, 11): nec patrius trepidavit affectus, cum senis dexteram pietas adjuvaret; sciebat enim acceptiorem Deo filium immolatum esse, quam sanum. Ergo adducit ad sacrificium filium dilectissimum; et quem sero susceperat, cito obtulit: nec paterni nominis appellatione revocatur, cum ille patrem vocaret, hic filium. Chara quidem nominum pignora, sed amabiliora Dei praecepta. Itaque licet compaterentur corda, vota durabant. Distrinxit super filium gladium paterna manu, et patrio percussit affectu, ne periret poena: trepidavit, ne ictus erraret, dextera deficeret. Sensit pietatis affectum, sed non omisit devotionis negotium: et properabat obsequium, etiam cum audiret oraculum. Unde nos quoque Deum omnibus, quos diligimus, praeferamus, patri, fratribus, matri; ut possit nobis servare dilectos, sicut in Abraham uberiorem remuneratorem, quam ministrum videmus.

97. He believed that he when old could beget a son, Genesis 15:6 and judged himself when a father able to sacrifice his son; nor did his fatherly affection tremble when duty aided the right hand of the old man, Genesis 22:11 for he knew that his son would be more acceptable to God when sacrificed than when whole. Therefore he brings his well-beloved son to be sacrificed, and offered promptly him whom he had received late; nor is he restrained by being called by the name of father, when his son called him Father, and he replied, My son. Dear pledges of love are these names, but the commands of God are loved still more. And so although their hearts felt for each other, their purpose remained firm. The father's hand stretched out the knife over his son, and the father's heart struck the blow that the sentence might not fail of being carried out; he feared lest the stroke should miss, lest his right hand should fail. He felt the movings of fatherly affection, but did not shrink from the work of submission, and hastened his obedience, even when he heard the voice from heaven. Let us then set God before all those whom we love, father, brother, mother, that He may preserve for us those whom we love, as in the case of Abraham we behold rather the liberal Rewarder than the servant.

98. Obtulit quidem filium pater, sed Deus non sanguine, sed pietate placatur. Ovem pro homine demonstravit in ligno; ut et filium patri redderet, nec periret hostia sacerdoti. Itaque nec Abraham parricidio cruentatus est, nec Deus sacrificio defraudatus. Vidit propheta, nec affectavit jactantiam, nec tenuit pertinaciam: ovem pro homine mutavit. Quo magis ostenditur, quam religiose obtulerit, quem tam libenter recepit. Et tu si Deo munus tuum offeras, non amittis. Sed avari sumus. Deus unicum Filium morti pro nobis obtulit (Rom. VIII, 32), nos nostros negamus. Vidit hoc Abraham, et agnovit mysterium, salutem nobis in ligno futuram: nec latuit in uno eodemque sacrificio aliud esse quod videretur offerri, aliud quod posset occidi.

98. The father offered indeed his son, but God is appeased not by blood but by dutiful obedience. He showed the ram in the thicket Genesis 22:13 in the stead of the lad, that He might restore the son to his father, and yet the victim not fail the priest. And so Abraham was not stained with his son's blood, nor was God deprived of the sacrifice. The prophet spoke, and neither yielded to boastfulness nor continued obstinate, but took the ram in exchange for the lad. And by this is shown the more how piously he offered him whom he now so gladly received back. And thou, if you offer your gift to God, dost not lose it. But we are tenacious of our own; God gave His only Son for us, Romans 8:32 we refuse ours. Abraham saw this and recognized the mystery, that salvation should be to us from the Tree, nor did it escape his notice that in one and the same sacrifice it was One that seemed to be offered, Another which could be slain.

99. Imitemur ergo Abrahae devotionem, imitemur Isaac bonitatem, imitemur castimoniam. Bonus plane et pudicus vir, devotus Deo, castus uxori: qui injuriam non reddidit, excludentibus cessit, poenitentes eosdem recepit, nec protervus contumaciae, nec durus gratiae. Litium fugitans, cum recederet: facilis veniae, cum reciperet: profusior bonitate, cum ignosceret. Petebatur societatis consortium, adjunxit convivium voluptatis.

99. Let us, then, imitate the devotion of Abraham, let us imitate the goodness of Isaac, let us imitate his purity. The man was plainly good and chaste, full of devotion towards God, chaste towards his wife. He returned not evil for evil, yielded to those who would thrust him out, received them again on their repentance, neither violent towards insolence, nor stubborn towards kindness. Fleeing from strife when he went away from others, ready to forgive when he received them again, and still more lavish of goodness when he forgave them. The fellowship of his company was sought, he gave in addition a feast of pleasure.

100. Imitemur etiam in Jacob typum Christi, sit ejus in nobis aliqua similitudo factorum. Erimus consortes, si fuerimus imitatores. Matri obedivit, fratri cessit, socero servivit, mercedem de lucris, non de gregis divisione quaesivit. Non avara divisio, ubi lucrativa portio. Nec illa otiosa significatio, scala de coelo (Gen. XXVIII, 12), quod per crucem Christi angelorum atque hominum futura consortia viderentur. Cui obstupefactum est femur (Gen. XXXII, 29), ut in femore suo agnosceret generationis haeredem, et obstupefactio femoris passionem prophetaret haeredis.

100. In Jacob, too, let us imitate the type of Christ, let there be some likeness of his actions in ourselves. We shall have our share with him, if we imitate him. He was obedient to his mother, he yielded to his brother, he served his father-in-law, he sought his wages from the increase, not from a division of the flocks. There was no covetous division, where his portion brought such gain. Nor was that sign without a purpose, the ladder from earth to heaven, Genesis 28:12 wherein was seen the future fellowship between men and angels through the cross of Christ, whose thigh was paralyzed, Genesis 32:25 that in his thigh he might recognize the Heir of his body, and foretell by the paralyzing of his thigh the Passion of his Heir.

101. Videmus igitur coelum patere virtuti, nec hoc esse paucorum: Multi enim venient ab Oriente, et ab Occidente, et Aquilone et Austro, et recumbent in regno Dei (Matth. VIII, 11), delectationem perpetuae quietis sepultis animorum motibus exprimentes. Sequamur Abraham moribus, ut nos recipiat in gremium suum, et tamquam Lazarum suae humilitatis haeredem (Luc. XVI, 23) propriis circumfusum virtutibus pio foveat amplexu. Non enim nos in gremio corporali, sed in quodam bonorum factorum amictu sancti patriarchae probata Deo successio fovet. Nolite, inquit, seduci, Deus non deridetur (Galat. VI, 7).

101. We see, then, that heaven is open to virtue, and that this is the privilege not only of a few: For many shall come from the east and from the west, and the north and the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God, Matthew 8:11 giving expression to the enjoyment of perpetual rest since the motions of their souls are stilled. Let us follow Abraham in our habits, that he may receive us into his bosom, and cherish us with loving embrace, like Lazarus the inheritor of his humility surrounded by his own special virtues.

The followers of the holy patriarch, approved of God, cherish us not in a bodily bosom, but in a clothing as it were of good works. Be not deceived, says the Apostle, God is not mocked. Galatians 6:7

102. Advertimus quam grave sit sacrilegium resurrectionem non credere; si enim non resurgimus, ergo Christus gratis mortuus est, ergo Christus non surrexit (I Cor. XV, 13). Si enim nobis non resurrexit, utique non resurrexit, qui sibi cur resurgeret, non habebat. Resurrexit in eo mundus, resurrexit in eo coelum, resurrexit in eo terra; erit enim coelum novum et terra nova (Apoc. XXI, 1). Sibi autem ubi erat necessaria resurrectio, quem mortis vincula non tenebant? Nam etsi secundum hominem mortuus, in ipsis tamen erat liber infernis.

102. We have seen, then, how grave an offense it is not to believe the resurrection; for if we rise not again, then Christ died in vain, then Christ rose not again. 1 Corinthians 15:13 For if He rose not for us, He certainly rose not at all, for He had no need to rise for Himself. The universe rose again in Him, the heaven rose again in Him, the earth rose again in Him, for there shall be a new heaven and a new earth. Revelation 21:1 But where was the necessity of a resurrection for Him Whom the claims of death held not? For though He died as man, yet was He free in hell itself.

103. Vis scire quam liber? Factus sum sicut homo sine adjutorio, inter mortuos liber (Psal. LXXXVII, 5). Et bene liber, qui se poterat suscitare, juxta quod scriptum est: Solvite hoc templum, et in triduo resuscitabo illud (Joan. II, 19). Et bene liber, qui alios descenderat redempturus. Factus est autem sicut homo, non specie utique, sed veritate formatus; quia et homo est, et quis cognoscet eum? Etenim in similitudinem hominum factus, et specie inventus ut homo, humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Phil. II, 7, 8); ut per illam scilicet obedientiam ejus gloriam videremus, gloriam quasi unigeniti a Patre secundum Joannem sanctum

103. Will you know how free? I have become as a man that has no help, free among the dead. And well is He called free, Who had power to raise Himself, according to that which is written: Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. John 2:19 And well is He called free, Who had descended to rescue others. For He was made as a man, not, indeed, in appearance only, but so fashioned in truth, for He is man, and who shall know Him? For, being made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, becoming obedient even unto death, Philippians 2:7-8 in order that through that obedience we might see His glory, the glory as of the Only-begotten of the Father, John 1:14 according to Saint John. For thus is the statement of Scripture preserved, if both the glory of the Only-begotten and the nature of perfect man are preserved in Christ.

104. Itaque adjutore non eguit: neque enim eguit, cum faceret mundum; ut egeret, cum redimeret. Non legatus, non nuntius, sed ipse Dominus salvum fecit eum: Ipse dixit, et facta sunt (Psal. XXXII, 9). Ipse Dominus salvum fecit eum: ubique ipse, quia per ipsum omnia (Coloss. I, 17). Quis autem adjuvaret eum, in quo creata sunt omnia, et omnia in ipso constant? Quis adjuvaret eum, qui omnia in momento facit, et in novissima tuba mortuos suscitat (I Cor. XV, 52)? Non quia aut prima, aut secunda non possit, aut tertia: sed ordo servatur, non quo difficultas sero vincenda, sed legitimus numerus explicandus sit.

104. And so He needed no helper. For He needed none when He made the world, so as to need none when He would redeem it. No legate, no messenger, but the Lord Himself made it whole. He spoke and it was done. The Lord Himself made it whole, Himself in every part, because all things were by Him. For who should help Him in Whom all things were created and by Whom all things consist? Colossians 1:17 Who should help Him Who makes all things in a moment, and raises the dead at the last trump? 1 Corinthians 15:52 The last, not as though He could not raise them at the first, or the second, or the third, but an order is observed, not that a difficulty may be at last overcome, but that the prescribed number be accomplished.

105. Tempus autem, arbitror, de tubarum specie dicere, quoniam sermo propinquat ad finem; ut nostri quoque consummandi eloquii tuba sit signum. Septem tubas legimus in Apocalypsi Joannis, quas septem sumpsere angeli (Apoc. VIII, 2). Ubi habes quoniam septimus angelus tuba cecinit, et facta est vox magna de coelo dicens: Factum est regnum hujus mundi Dei nostri, et Christi ejus, et regnabit in saecula saeculorum (Apoc. XI, 15). Tuba quidem et pro voce accipitur, quia habes: Quoniam ecce ostium apertum in coelo, et vox prima, quam audivi, sicut tubam loquentem mecum et dicentem: Ascende huc, et ostendam tibi quae oportet fieri (Apoc. IV, 1). Legimus etiam: Canite initio mensis tuba (Psal. LXXX, 4); sed etiam alibi: Laudate eum in sono tubae (Psal. CL, 3).

105. But it is now time, I think, to speak of the trumpets since my discourse is nearing its end, that the trumpet may also be the sign of the finishing of my address. We read of seven trumpets in the Revelation of John, which seven angels received. Revelation 8:2 And there you read that when the seventh angel sounded his trumpet, there was a great voice from heaven, saying: The kingdom of this world has become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever. Revelation 11:15 The word trumpet is also used for a voice, as you read: Behold a door opened in heaven, and the first voice which I heard, as of a trumpet speaking with me and saying, Come up hither, and I will show you the things which must come to pass. Revelation 4:1 We read also: Blow up the trumpet at the beginning of the month [the new moon]; and again elsewhere: Praise Him with the sound of the trumpet.

106. Ergo quid sibi velit tubarum significatio, omni virtute debemus advertere; ne quasi fabulam aniliter accipientes periclitemur, si indigna dogmate spiritali, nec convenientia Scripturarum eminentiae sentiamus. Nam cum legerimus bellum nobis esse non adversus carnem et sanguinem, sed adversus spiritalia nequitiae, quae sunt in coelestibus (Ephes. VI, 12); non carnalia utique arma, sed fortia Deo aestimare debemus (II Cor. X, 4). Non enim satis est tubam te videre, nec sonum ejus audire, nisi proprietatem sonitus intelligas. Etenim si incertam vocem det tuba, quomodo quis parabit se ad bellum? Unde oportet vocis tubae nos scire virtutem, ne videamur barbari, cum tubas hujusmodi aut audimus, aut loquimur. Et ideo cum loquimur, oremus ut eas nobis Spiritus sanctus interpretetur.

106. Therefore we ought with all our power to observe what is the signification of the trumpets, lest, accepting them, like old women, as part of the story, we should be in danger if we were to think things unworthy of spiritual teaching, or not befitting the dignity of the Scriptures. For when we read that our warfare is not against flesh and blood, but against spiritual hosts of wickedness, which are in high places, Ephesians 6:12 we ought not to think of weapons of the flesh, but of such as are mighty before God. 2 Corinthians 10:4 It is not enough that one see the trumpet or hear its sound, unless one understands the signification of the sound. For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, how shall one prepare himself for war? 1 Corinthians 14:8 Wherefore it is important that we understand the meaning of the voice of the trumpet, lest we seem barbarians, when we either hear or utter trumpet-sounds of this sort. And therefore when we speak, let us pray that the Holy Spirit would interpret them to us.

107. Requiramus igitur in Scripturis veteribus quid de tubarum genere legerimus, consentientes eas solemnitates, quae Judaeis Lege praescriptae sunt, superiorum esse umbram celebritatum, coelestiumque festorum. Hic enim umbra, illic veritas. Per umbram ad veritatem pervenire nitamur. Cujus figura etiam alibi expressa est hoc modo; habes enim quia locutus est Dominus ad Moysen: Loquere filiis Israel, dicens: Mense septimo, una mensis, erit vobis requies in memoriale tubarum, vocata sancta erit vobis. Omne opus servile non facietis, et accendetis holocaustum Domino (Levit. XXIII, 24). In Numeris autem: Locutus est Dominus ad Moysen, dicens: Fac tibi duas tubas ductiles, argenteas facies eas, et erunt tibi ad evocandam synagogam, et promovenda castra: et tuba canes in illis, et colligetur omnis turba ad ostium tabernaculi testimonii. Si autem in una tuba cecineris, ad te venient omnes principes et duces Israel, et tuba canetis significationem primam, et promovebunt castra, et constituentur ad Orientem. Et tuba canetis significationem secundam, et promovebunt castra, et constituentur ad Libanum.

Et tuba canetis significationem tertiam, et promovebunt castra, quae constituentur ad Boream. Et tuba canetis significationem quartam, et promovebunt castra, quae constituentur ad Aquilonem. Significationem tuba canent in promotu eorum. Et cum congregabitis synagogam, tuba canite, et non significationem. Et filii Aaron sacerdotes tubis canent, et erit vobis legitimum aeternum in progenies vestras. Si autem exieritis in bellum in terram vestram ad adversarios, qui resistunt vobis, significabitis tubis, et reminiscemini coram Domino, et liberationem habebitis a mortuis vestris. Et in diebus laetitiae vestrae, et in diebus festis vestris, et in neomeniis vestris concinite tubis, et in holocaustis et sacrificiis salutaribus vestris, et erit vobis in commemoratione vestra coram Domino, ait Dominus (Num. X, 1 et seq.).

107. Let us, then, investigate what we read in the Old Testament concerning the kinds of trumpets, considering that those festivals which were enjoined on the Jews by the Law are the shadow of joys above and of heavenly festivals. For here is the shadow, there the truth. Let us endeavour to attain to the truth by means of the shadow. Of which truth the figure is expressed in this manner, where we read that the Lord said to Moses: Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, on the first day of the month, shall be a rest unto you, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, it shall be called holy unto you. You shall not do any servile work, and you shall kindle a whole burnt-offering unto the Lord. Leviticus 23:24-25 And in the Book of Numbers: The Lord spoke unto Moses, saying: Make you two trumpets of beaten work, of silver shall you make them, and they shall be to you for calling the assembly and for the journeying of the camp. And you shall blow with them, and all the congregation shall be gathered together at the door of the tabernacle of witness. But if you blow with one trumpet, all the princes and leaders of Israel shall come to you; and you shall blow a signal with the trumpet the first time, and they shall move the camp forward, and place it on the east. And you shall blow a signal with the trumpet the second time, and they shall move the camp forward, and place it towards Libanus. And you shall blow a signal with the trumpet the third time, and they shall move the camp forward, which shall be placed towards the north [Boream]. And you shall blow a signal with the trumpet the fourth time, and they shall move the camp forward, which shall be placed towards the north [Aquilonem]. They shall blow a signal with the trumpet when they move forward. And when you shall gather together the assembly, blow with the trumpet, but not the signal. And the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow with the trumpets, and it shall be for you a statute for ever throughout your generations. But if you shall go out to war into your own land, against the adversaries who resist you, you shall sound a signal with the trumpets and you shall be remembered before the Lord, and have deliverance from your dead. Also in the days of your gladness, and on your feast days, and on your new moons, you shall blow with the trumpets, and at your whole burnt sacrifices and at your peace-offerings, and it shall be for you for your memorial before the Lord, says the Lord. Numbers 10:1-10

108. Quid igitur, dies festos in potu et in epulis aestimabimus? Sed nemo nos in manducando dijudicet; novimus enim quia Lex spiritalis est (Rom. VII, 14): Nemo ergo nos judicet in escis aliquibus aut in potu, aut in parte diei festi, aut neomeniis, aut sabbato; quae sunt umbra futurorum, corpus autem Christi (Coloss. II, 16). Corpus itaque Christi requiramus, quod vobis quasi novissima tuba vox de coelo paterna monstravit, tunc cum dicebant Judaei, quia tonitruum factum est illi (Joan. XII, 28): corpus Christi quod iterum tuba nobis novissima revelabit; quoniam ipse Dominus in jussu archangeli, et in tuba Dei descendet de coelo: et mortui qui in Christo sunt, resurgent (I Thess. IV, 15); ubi enim corpus, illic et aquilae (Luc. XVII, 37): ubi Christi corpus, ibi veritas.

108. What then? Shall we esteem festival days by eating and drinking? But let no man judge us in respect of eating; for we know that the Law is spiritual. Romans 7:14 Let no man therefore judge us in any meats or in drink, or in respect of a feast day or new moons, or a sabbath day, which are a shadow of the things to come, but the body is of Christ. Colossians 2:16 Let us, then, seek the body of Christ which the voice of the Father, from heaven, as it were the last trumpet, has shown to you at the time when the Jews said that it thundered; John 12:29 the body of Christ, which again the last trump shall reveal; for the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven at the voice of the Archangel, and at the trump of God, and they that are dead in Christ shall rise again; 1 Thessalonians 4:16 for where the body is, there too are the eagles, Luke 17:37 where the body of Christ is, there is the truth.

108. Septima igitur tuba hebdomadis requiem videtur significare, quae non solum in diebus et annis et periodis aestimatur (unde et jubilaeus sacratus est numerus), sed etiam annum septuagesimum comprehendit, quando in Hierusalem regressus est populus, qui septuaginta annis in captivitate duravit. In centesimis quoque et in millesimis sacri observatio numeri minime praeteritur; neque enim otiose Deus dixit: Reliqui mihi septem millia virorum, qui non curvaverunt genua ante Baal (III Reg. XIX, 18). Ergo umbra futurae quietis in diebus, mensibus, annis, mundi ipsius tempore figuratur; et ideo per Moysen mandatur filiis Israel, ut septimo mense, una mensis, singulis fiat requies in memoriale tubarum: nec servile aliquod opus, sed Deo sacrificium offeratur; eo quod in ipso fine hebdomadis, quasi mundi sabbato, spiritalia a nobis non carnalia opera flagitantur. Quod enim carnale, servile; quia animo caro servit: liberum vero innocentia facit, culpa vernaculum.

108. The seventh trumpet, then, seems to signify the sabbath of the week, which is reckoned not only in days and years and periods (for which reason the number of the jubilee is sacred), but includes also the seventieth year, when the people returned to Jerusalem, who had remained seventy years in captivity. In hundreds also and in thousands the observation of the sacred number is by no means passed over, for not without a meaning did the Lord say: I have left the seven thousand men, who have not bent their knees before Baal. Therefore the shadow of the future rest is figured in time in the days, months, and years of this world, and therefore the children of Israel are commanded by Moses, that in the seventh month, on the first day of the month, a rest should be established for all at the memorial of the trumpets; and that no servile work should be done, but a sacrifice be offered to God, because that at the end of the week, as it were the sabbath of the world, spiritual and not bodily work is required of us. For that which is bodily is servile, for the body serves the soul, but innocence makes free, guilt reduces to slavery.

109. Oportuit igitur per speculum et in aenigmate fieri spiritalia: Nunc enim per speculum videmus, tunc autem facie ad faciem (I Cor. XIII, 12). Nunc secundum carnem militamus, tunc spiritu videbimus divina mysteria. Et ideo verae legis character in nostris moribus exprimatur, qui in Dei ambulamos imagine; quoniam jam legis umbra transivit: umbra Judaeis carnalibus, imago nobis, veritas resurrecturis. Tria enim haec secundum Legem esse cognovimus, umbram, imaginem, veritatem: umbram in Lege, imaginem in Evangilio, veritatem in judicio. Sed Christi omnia, et in Christo omnia, quem nunc secundum veritatem videre non possumus: sed videmus quasi in quadam imagine futurorum, quorum umbram in Lege perspeximus. Ergo Christus non umbra, sed imago Dei: non vacua imago, sed veritas. Et ideo per Moysen Lex; quia umbra per hominem, figura per Legem, per Jesum veritas (Joan. I, 17). Neque enim veritas aliunde, nisi ex veritate procederet.

109. It was necessary, then, that spiritual things should be made known as in a mirror and in a riddle; For now we see by means of a mirror, but then face to face. 1 Corinthians 13:12 Now we war after the flesh, then in the Spirit we shall see the divine mysteries. Let, then, the character of the true law be expressed in our manner of life, who walk in the image of God, for the shadow of the Law has now passed away. The carnal Jews had the shadow, the likeness is ours, the reality theirs who shall rise again. For we know that according to the Law there are these three, the shadow, the image or likeness, and the reality; the shadow in the Law, the image in the Gospel, the truth in the judgment. But all is Christ’s, and all is in Christ, Whom now we cannot see according to the reality, but we see Him, as it were, in a kind of likeness of future things, of which we have seen the shadow in the Law.

So, then, Christ is not the shadow but the likeness of God, not an empty likeness but the reality. And so the Law was by Moses, for the shadow was through man, the likeness was through the Law, the reality through Jesus. For reality cannot proceed from any other source than from reality.

110. Si quis ergo hanc imaginem Dei videre desiderat, debet diligere Deum ut diligatur a Deo: et sit jam non servus, sed amicus, qui mandata Dei fecerit; ut possit introire in nubem, ubi est Deus (Exod. XXIV, 15). Ipse faciat sibi rationabiles tubas duas ductiles argento probato (Num. X, 1), hoc est, pretioso verbo compositas et ornatas; quibus non raucum increpans, terribili sonitu murmur interstrepat, sed sublimes gratiae Deo continua jubilatione fundantur. Talium enim tubarum sonitu mortui suscitantur, non crepitu utique aeris, sed verbo veritatis animati. Et fortasse duae istae tubae sunt, per quas divino spiritu Paulus increpuit dicens: Orabo spiritu, orabo et mente: psallam spiritu, psallam et mente (I Cor. XIV, 15); alterum enim sine altero nequaquam videtur evocationem habere perfectam.

110. If, then, any one desires to see this Image of God, he must love God, that he may be loved by God; and be no longer a servant but a friend, because he has kept the commandments of God, that he may enter into the cloud where God is. Exodus 24:15 Let him make to himself two reasonable trumpets of beaten work of proved silver, that is, composed of precious words and adorned, from which not a harsh shrill sound with dread-inspiring voice may be uttered, but high thanks to God may be poured forth with continuous exultation. For by the voice of such trumpets the dead are raised, not indeed by the sound of the metal, but aroused by the word of truth. And perchance it is those two trumpets by which Paul, through the Divine Spirit, spoke when he said: I will pray with the Spirit, and I will pray with the understanding, I will sing with the Spirit, and I will sing with the understanding; 1 Corinthians 14:15 for the one without the other seems by no means to have perfect utterance.

111. Nec tamen omnium est utraque canere tuba, nec est omnium universam colligere synagogam: sed solis sacerdotibus, et ministris Dei canentibus ista praerogativa defertur (Num. X, 2 et seq.); ut quicumque audierit, secutus eo fuerit, ubi est Dei gloria, et ad tabernaculum testimonii praematura intentione convenerit: et opera possit spectare divina, et legitimum illud aeternumque domicilium in suae posteritatis seriem promereri. Tunc enim bellum conficitur, hostis fugatur; quando Spiritus gratia concinit, et mentis industria.

111. Yet it is not every one's business to sound each trumpet, nor every one's business to call together the whole assembly, but that prerogative is granted to the priests alone, Numbers 10:8 and the ministers of God who sound the trumpets, so that whosoever shall hear and follow there where the glory of the Lord is, and shall with early determination come to the tabernacle of witness, may be able also to see the divine works, and merit that appointed and eternal home for the entire succession of his posterity. For then is the war finished and the enemy put to flight, when the grace of the Spirit and the energy of the soul act together.

112. Sunt et illae salutares tubae, si corde credas, et ore confitearis: Corde enim creditur ad justitiam ore autem confessio fit ad salutem (Rom. X, 10). Hac igitur gemina tuba ad illam sanctam terram, resurrectionis scilicet gratiam, pervenitur; et ideo semper tibi concinant, ut semper audias Dei vocem: semper te angelorum prophetarumque oracula excitent atque commoveant, ut ad superiora festines.

112. And these are salutary trumpets also, if one believe with the heart, and confess with the mouth; For with the heart man believes unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For with this twofold trumpet man arrives at that holy land, namely, the grace of the resurrection. Let them, then, ever sound to you, that you may ever hear the voice of God; may the utterances of the Angels and Prophets ever incite and move you, that you may hasten to things above.

113. Hanc intentionem David versabat in pectore, cum dicebat: Quoniam transibo in locum tabernaculi admirabilis, usque ad domum Dei; in voce exsultationis et confessionis, sonus epulantis (Psal. XLI, 5). Non enim soli hostes harum tubarum sonitu vincuntur: sed et delectationes, et dies festi, et neomeniae sine his esse non possunt. Nemo enim potest nisi divini hauriat promissa sermonis, et resultantibus credat oraculis, exsultare laetitia, dies festos aut neomenias agere, quibus se corporali gratia, et saeculari occupatione vacuatum, Christi repleri luce desideret. Sacrificia quoque ipsa Deo probata esse non possunt, nisi confessio vocis aspiret, quae sacerdotali oblatione ad obsecrandam Dei gratiam populos excitare consuevit.

113. David was thinking of this purpose in his breast when he said: For I will pass into the place of the marvellous tabernacle, even to the house of God, with the voice of exultation and thanksgiving, the sound of one that feasts. For not only are enemies overcome by the sound of these trumpets; but without them there could not be rejoicings, and festivals or new moons. For no one, unless he have received the promises of the Divine Word, and believes the message derived therefrom, can keep festivals or new moons, in which he desires to fill himself, freed from bodily pleasure and secular occupation, with the light of Christ. And sacrifices themselves cannot be pleasing to Christ unless confession of the mouth accompanies them, which according to custom stirs up the people to implore the grace of God at the priestly oblation.

114. Itaque simus praedicatores Domini, et laudemus eum in voce tubae (Psal. CL, 3), non exigua de virtute ejus et vilia sentientes, sed ea quae possint aurem mentis implere, et intimae conscientiae penetrare secretum; ut ea quae corpori conveniunt, divinitati non putemus aptanda: nec divinae magnitudinem potestatis humanis viribus metiamur; ut quaeramus quomodo quis resurgat, aut quali corpore veniat, aut quemadmodum soluta coeant, lapsa reparentur; haec enim arbitrio Dei simul ut statuuntur, implentur. Nec sensibilis tubarum exspectatur auditus, sed invisibilis potentia magnificentiae coelestis operatur; Deo enim velle pro facto est: nec resurrectionis requirendus nisus, sed fructus nobis est expetendus. Quae proclivius celebrabitur, si exinaniti vitiis plenitudinem spiritalis mysterii consequamur, gratiamque renovata caro sumat a spiritu, et fulgorem lucis aeternae anima mutuetur a Christo.

114. Let us therefore be preachers of the Lord, and praise Him in the sound of the trumpet, not thinking little or lightly of its power, but such things as can fill the ear of the mind, and enter into the depths of our inmost consciousness, so that we think not that what suits to the body is to be applied to the Godhead, nor measure the greatness of Divine Power by human might, so as to enquire how any one can rise again, or with what kind of body he will come, or how that which has been dissolved can again coalesce, and what is lost be restored, for all these things are accomplished as soon as they are determined by the Divine Will. And it is not a sound of a trumpet distinguishable by the bodily senses which is expected, but the invisible power of the Majesty of heaven operates; for with God to will is to do; nor need we enquire into the force required for the resurrection, but seek its fruit for ourselves. Which will be accomplished all the more easily, if freed from faults we attain to the fullness of the spiritual mystery, and the renewed flesh receives grace from the Spirit, and the soul obtains from Christ the brightness of eternal light.

115. Sed non solum singulorum, verum etiam universitatis sunt ista mysteria. Adverte enim juxta typum Legis, ordinem gratiae. Cum tuba prima cecinerit, orientales congregat, quasi praecipuos et electos: cum secunda, suppares meritis, qui secundum libanum siti, dereliquerint ludibria nationum: cum tertia, eos qui tamquam in mari exagitati istius freto mundi, saeculi hujus fluctibus vacillaverint: cum quarta, illos qui duritiam mentium nequaquam satis potuerint eloquii spiritalis mollire praecepto; et ideo secundum boream vocati sunt, boreas enim secundum Salomonem durus est ventus (Prov. XXVII, 16).

115. But those mysteries pertain not to individuals only, but to the whole human race. For observe the order of grace according to the type of the Law. When the first trumpet sounds, it collects those towards the east, as the chief and elect; when the second sounds, those nearly equal in merit, who, being placed towards Libanus, have abandoned the follies of the nations; when the third, those who as it were, tossed on the sea of this world, have been driven here and there by the waves of this life; when the fourth, those who have by no means been able sufficiently to soften the hardness of their hearts by the commandments of spiritual utterance, and therefore are said to be towards the north — for, according to Solomon, the north is a hard wind.

116. Itaque licet momento resuscitentur omnes, omnes tamen meritorum ordine suscitantur. Et ideo primi resurgunt, qui maturo devotionis occursu, et quodam antelucano fidei exortu prodeuntes, solis aeterni radios receperunt. Quod vel de patriarchis juxta veteris seriem Testamenti, vel de apostolis juxta Evangelium jure memoraverim. Secundi autem, qui ritum gentium relinquentes, ab errore sacrilego transierunt in Ecclesiae disciplinam. Et ideo illi primi ex patribus, isti secundi ex gentibus; ab illis enim lux fidei coepit, in istis usque ad mundi occasum suscepta duravit. Tertii suscitantur, et quarti, qui ab austro, et qui ab aquilone sunt. His quatuor terra distinguitur, his quatuor annus includitur, his quatuor mundus impletur, his quatuor Ecclesia congregatur. Omnes enim qui sacrosanctae Ecclesiae copulati, divini nominis appellatione censentur, praerogativam resurrectionis et delectationis aeternae gratiam consequentur; quoniam venient ab Oriente et Occidente, ab Aquilone et Austro, et recumbent in regno Dei (Luc. XIII, 29).

116. And so although all are raised again in a moment, yet all are raised in the order of their merits. And therefore they rise first, who yielding early to the impulses of devotion, and as it were going forth before the rising dawn of faith, received the rays of the eternal Sun. This one may rightly say either of the patriarchs in the course of the Old Testament, or of the apostles under the Gospel. And the second are they who, forsaking the rites of the Gentiles, passed from unholy error under the training of the Church. So, then, those first were of the fathers, those second of the Gentiles, for the light of faith took its beginning from those, among these it will remain to the end of the world. In the third place and in the fourth, those are raised who are in the south and in the north. The earth is divided into these four, of these four is the year made up, in these four is the earth completed, and from these four is the Church collected. For all who are considered to be joined to holy Church, by being called by the Divine Name, shall obtain the privilege of the resurrection and the grace of eternal bliss, for they shall come from the east and west, and from the north and south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God. Luke 13:26

117. Non enim exigua mundum suum Christus luce complectitur; quandoquidem a summo coelo egressio ejus, et occursus ejus usque ad summum ejus: nec est qui se abscondat a calore ejus (Psal. XVIII, 7). Omnes enim benignus illustrat, nec refutare levem, sed emendare vult: nec excludere durum Ecclesia, sed mollire desiderat. Et ideo in Canticis canticorum eos Ecclesia, in Evangelio Christus invitat dicens: Venite ad me omnes qui laboratis, et onerati estis: et ego reficiam vos. Tollite jugum meum super vos, et discite a me quia mitis sum et humilis corde (Mat. XI, 28, 29).

117. For it is no small light wherewith Christ encompasses His world: since His going forth is from the height of heaven, and His progress to the height thereof, nor is there any who can hide himself from His heat. For with His Goodness He enlightens all, and wills not to reject but to amend the foolish, and desires not to exclude the hard-hearted from the Church, but to soften them. And so the Church in the Song of Songs and Christ in the Gospel invites them, saying: Come unto Me, all you who labour and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you; take My yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart. Matthew 12:28-29

118. Ecclesiae quoque vocem invitantis agnosce; dicit enim: Exsurge, aquilo, et veni, auster; perfla hortum meum, et defluant unguenta mea. Descendat frater meus in hortum suum, et edat fructum pomiferarum suarum (Cant. IV, 16; V, 1). Sciens enim jam tunc etiam horum tibi fore opera fructuosa, Christo tuo fructum de talibus pollicebare: et quae primo te in cubiculum dixisti Regis inductam, diligens ubera super vinum, cum diligentem amares, lactantem quaereres, pericula pro religione contemneres.

118. And you may recognize also the voice of the invitation of the Church, for she says: Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south, blow upon my garden, and let my ointment flow forth. Let my brother come down into his garden and eat the fruit of his precious trees. Song of Songs 4:16 For knowing even then, O holy Church, that from those also there would be fruitful works for you, you promised to your Christ fruit from such as they, thou who first said that you were brought into the King’s chamber, loving

His breast above wine, since you loved Him Who loved you, sought Him Who fed you, and despised dangers for religion's sake.

119. Deinde a Libano, sponsa, rogaris ut venias, judicio Domini adhuc tota formosa, adhuc tota irreprehensibilis. Sic enim scriptum est: Tota es formosa, proxima mea, et reprehensio non est in te. Ades huc a Libano, sponsa, ades huc a Libano (Cant. IV, 7, 8).

119. And then, O Bride, you are called to come from Libanus, being in the Lord's judgment all fair and without fault. For thus it is written: You are all fair, my love, and there is no fault in you. Come hither from Libanus, my bride, come hither from Libanus. Song of Songs 4:7-8

120. Postea ipsa jam nullos aquae lapsus, jam nullos impetus descendentes a Libano pertimescens, aquilonem et austrum advocas, perflari cupiens hortum tuum; ut in aliis unguenta tua defluant, in aliis multiplices fecunditatis tuae fructus offeras Christo.

120. Afterwards, you, fearing no rushing waters, no torrents coming down from Libanus, callest the north and south winds, wishing them to blow upon your garden, that your ointment may flow forth upon others, and that you may offer to Christ in others the manifold fruits of your productiveness.

121. Et ideo beatus qui custodit verba prophetiae hujus (Apoc. XXIII, 7), quae nobis resurrectionem evidentioribus testimoniis revelavit dicens: Et vidi mortuos magnos et pusillos stantes ante sedem, et libros aperuerunt: et alius liber apertus est, qui est vitae: et judicati sunt mortui de scriptis in libris, secundum facta sua. Et dedit mare mortuos, qui in ipso erant: et inferi dederunt mortuos, qui penes se erant (Apoc. XX 12). Ne ergo dubites quemadmodum resurgant, quor inferi revomunt, mare reddidit.

121. And therefore blessed is he who keeps the words of this prophecy, Revelation 21:7 which has revealed the resurrection to us by clearer testimony, saying: And I saw the dead, great and small, standing before the throne, and they opened the books; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of the things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and hell gave up the dead which were in it. Revelation 20:12-13 We must, then, not question how they shall rise again, whom hell gives up and the sea restores.

122. Accipe etiam quando promittatur gratia futura justorum: Et audivi, inquit, vocem magnam de throno dicentem: Ecce tabernaculum Dei cum hominibus, et habitabit cum illis; et ipsi populus ejus erunt, et ipse Deus cum illis erit illorum Deus. Et delebit omnem lacrymam de oculis eorum, et mors non erit amplius, neque luctus, neque clamor, neque dolor ultra erit. (Apoc. XXI, 3, 4).

122. Hear also when the future grace of the just is promised: And I heard, he says, a great voice from the throne saying: Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He shall dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be their God with them: and He shall wipe away every tear from their eyes; and death shall be no more, nor mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more. Revelation 21:3

123. Compara nunc, si placet, atque contende vitam hanc cum illa vita, et elige, si potes, perpetuam corporis vitam in labore aerumnaque miserabili tantarum commutationum, votorumque taedio, fastidio voluptatum. Nonne si Deus ista perpetuare velit, illa deligeres? Nam si per se ipsa vita fugienda est, ut sit molestiarum fuga, requies aerumnarum; quanto magis ea requies est expetenda, cui futurae resurrectionis voluptas perpetua succedet; ubi nulla criminum series, nulla illecebra delictorum?

123. Compare now, if you will, and contrast this life with that; and choose, if you then can, unending bodily existence in toil, and in the wretched misery of such changes as we endure, in satiety when we have our wishes, in that disgust which attends our pleasures. If God were willing to let these last for ever, would you choose them? For if on its own account life is to be escaped from, that there may be an avoidance of troubles and rest from miseries, how much more is that rest to be sought for, which shall be followed by the eternal pleasure of the resurrection to come, where there is no succession of faults, no enticement to sin?

124. Who is so patient in suffering as not to pray for death? Who has such endurance in weakness as not to wish rather to die than to live in debility? Who is so brave in sorrow as not to desire to escape from it even by death? But if we ourselves are dissatisfied while life lasts, although we know that a limit is fixed for it, how much more weary should we become of this life if we saw that the troubles of the body would be with us without end! For who is there who would wish to be excepted from death? Or what would be more unendurable than a miserable immortality? If in this life only, he says, we hope in Christ, we are more miserable than all men; 1 Corinthians 15:19 not because to hope in Christ is miserable, but because Christ has prepared another life for those who hope in Him. For this life is liable to sin, that life is reserved for the reward.

124. Ipsos cursus breves nostrarum aetatum quantum videmus nobis afferre fastidium? Puer adolescentiam desiderat, adolescens annos sibi majoris metitur aetatis, juvenis beneficio aevi florentis ingratus, senilem honorificentiam concupiscit. Ita omnibus ex natura venit velle mutari; quia ejus nos quod sumus, poenitet. Denique etiam ipsa post usum vota fastidio sunt: et quae mereri optavimus, cum meruerimus, abdicamus.

124. And how much weariness do we find that the short stages of our lives bring us! The boy longs to be a young man; the youth counts the years leading to riper age; the young man, unthankful for the advantage of his vigorous time of life, desires the honour of old age. And so to all there comes naturally the desire of change, because we are dissatisfied with that which we now are. And lastly, even the things we have desired are wearisome to us; and what we have wished to obtain, when we have obtained it, we dislike.

125. Unde non immerito etiam sancti viri prolongatum incolatum suum saepe doluerunt (Psal. CXIX, 5): doluit David, doluit Jeremias (Jerem. XX, 17), doluit Elias (III Reg. XIX, 4). Si sapientibus creditur, et hi in quibus divinus Spiritus loquebatur, ad meliora properabant: si reliquorum judicia sciscitamur, ut cognoscamus omnes in unam convenire sententiam; quanti mortem moerori, quanti mortem formidini praetulerunt? judicantes videlicet graviorem metum mortis esse, quam mortem. Adeo suis malis mors non timetur, sed vitae miseriis antefertur! cum expetitur morientis exitus, et evitatur formido viventis.

125. Wherefore holy men have not without reason often lamented their lengthy dwelling here: David lamented it, Jeremiah Jeremiah 20:18 lamented it, and Elijah 1 Kings 19:4 lamented it. If we believe wise men, and those in whom the Divine Spirit dwelt, they were hastening to better things; and if we enquire as to the judgment of others, that we may ascertain that all agree in one opinion, what great men have preferred death to sorrow, what great men have preferred it to fear! esteeming forsooth the fear of death to be worse than death itself. So death is not feared on account of evils which belong to it, but is preferred to the miseries of life, since the departure of the dying is desired and the dread of the living is avoided.

126. Sed esto, huic vitae resurrectio praeferatur.

Quid, philosophi ipsi genus post mortem aliquod repererunt, quo nos uti magis, quam resurgere delectabit? Et illi quidem qui dicunt animas immortales esse, non satis mulcere me possunt, cum pro parte me redimunt. Nam quae potest esse gratia, ubi non totus evasi? quae vita, si in me opus Dei occidat? quae justitia, si naturae finis mors sit, erranti justove communis? quae veritas, ut quia ipsa se moveat, et semper moveatur anima, immortalis esse credatur? Quod nobis in corpore commune cum bestiis, ante corpus quid geratur incertum; nec ex contrariis colligatur veritas, sed destruatur.

126. So be it, then. Granted that the Resurrection is preferable to this life. What! Have philosophers themselves found anything with which we should have a greater delight to continue than to rise again? Even those indeed who say that souls are immortal do not satisfy me, seeing they only allow me a partial redemption. What grace can that be by which I am not wholly benefited? What life is that if the operation of God dies out in me? What righteousness is that which, if death is the end of natural existence, is common to the sinner and the just? What is that truth, that the soul should be considered immortal, because it moves itself and is always in motion? As regards that which in the body is common to us with beasts, it is perhaps uncertain what happens before the body exists, and the truth is not to be gathered from these differences but destroyed.

127. An vero illorum sententia placet, qui nostras animas, ubi ex hoc corpore emigraverint, in corpora ferarum, variorumque animantium transire commemorant? At certe haec circeis medicamentorum illecebris composita esse ludibria poetarum ipsi philosophi disserere solent: nec tam illos qui perpessi ista simulentur, quam sensus eorum qui ista confinxerint, velut circeo poculo ferunt in varia bestiarum monstra conversos. Quid enim tam simile prodigii, quam homines credere in habitum ferarum potuisse mutari? Quanto majoris est prodigii gubernatricem hominis animam, adversam humano generi bestiarum suscipere naturam, capacemque rationis ad irrationabile animal posse transire, quam corporis effigies esse mutatas? Vos ipsi haec destruitis, qui docetis. Nam magicis incantata carminibus portentosae hujus conversionis genera tradidistis.

127. But is their opinion preferable, who say that our souls, when they have passed out of these bodies, migrate into the bodies of beasts, or of various other living creatures? Philosophers, indeed, themselves are wont to argue that these are ridiculous fancies of poets, such as might be produced by draughts of the drugs of Circe; and they say that not so much they who are represented to have undergone such things, as the senses of those who have invented such tales are changed into the forms of various beasts as it were by Circe’s cup. For what is so like a marvel as to believe that men could have been changed into the forms of beasts? How much greater a marvel, however, would it be that the soul which rules man should take on itself the nature of a beast so opposed to that of man, and being capable of reason should be able to pass over to an irrational animal, than that the form of the body should have been changed? You yourselves, who teach these things, destroy what you teach. For you have given up the production of these portentous conversions by means of magic incantations.

128. Ludunt haec poetae, reprehendunt philosophi: et quae putant ficta de viventibus, haec arbitrantur vera de mortuis. Illi autem qui ista finxerunt, non suam probare fabulam, sed philosophorum errores irridere voluerunt: qui putant quod illa anima quae miti humilique proposito iracundiam vincere, patientiam assumere, cruore abstinere consueverat, eadem frementi motu leonis incensa, irae impatiens, effrena rabie, sitire sanguinem, caedemque possit expetere: et illa quae populorum fremitus varios regali quodam consilio temperabat, et rationabili voce mulcebat; eadem se inter devia atque deserta ritu luporum patiatur ululare: aut quae injusto sub onere gemeus, dures aratri labores questu miserabili mugiebat; eadem postea in figuram hominis commutata, levi cornua quaerat in fronte: vel illa quam praepetes prius pennae usque ad alta coeli per sublime aeris alarum remigiis evehebant; eadem postea volatus jam non suos requirat, et se humani doleat corporis gravitate pigrescere.

128. Poets say these things in sport, and philosophers blame them and at the same time they imagine that those very things are true of the dead which they consider fictitious as regards the living. For they who invented such tales did not intend to assert the truth of their own fable, but to deride the errors of philosophers, who think that that same soul which was accustomed to overcome anger by gentle and lowly purpose, can now, inflamed by the raging impulses of a lion, impatient with anger and with unbridled rage, thirst for blood and seek for slaughter. Or again, that that soul, which as it were by royal counsel used to moderate the various storms of the people, and to calm them with the voice of reason, can now endure to howl in pathless and desert places after the fashion of a wolf; or that that soul which, groaning under a heavy burden, used to low in sad complaint over the labours of the plough, now changed into the fashion of a man, seeks for horns on his smooth brow; or that another, which used of old to be borne aloft on rapid wing to the heights of heaven, now thinks of flight no longer in its power, and mourns that it grows sluggish in the weight of a human body.

129. Hinc fortasse et illum Icarum perdidistis, quod persuasionibus vestris inductus adolescens, prius avem se fuisse fortasse crediderat. Hinc etiam senes plerique decepti sunt, ut gravi immorerentur dolori, cygneis male creduli fabulis, dum putant modulis se mulcendo flebilibus albentem molli pluma mutare canitiem.

129. Perchance you destroyed Icarus through some such teaching, because the youth, led on by your persuasion, imagined, it may be, that he had been a bird. By such means too have many old men been deceived so as to submit to grievous pain, having unhappily believed the fables about swans, and thought that they, while soothing their pain with mournful strains, would be able to transmute their gray hair into downy feathers.

130. Haec quam incredibilia! quam deformia! Quanto illud est convenientius, ut credas secundum naturam, credas secundum usum fructuum caeterorum, credas secundum gestorum exempla, oracula prophetarum, Christi coeleste promissum. Quid vero praestantius, quam ut opus Dei judices non perire, et secundum imaginem et similitudinem Dei factos transferri non posse in effigies bestiarum; cum utique ad similitudinem Dei non corporis sit imago, sed spiritus? Nam quemadmodum homo, cui subjecta sunt animantium genera caeterorum, in subjectum sibi animal meliore sui parte demigret? Non patitur hoc natura, et si pateretur natura, non pateretur gratia.

130. How incredible are these things! How odious! How much more fitting is it to believe in accordance with nature, in accordance with what takes place in every kind of fruit; to believe in accordance with the pattern of what has happened, in accordance with the utterances of prophets, and the heavenly promise of Christ! For what is better than to be sure that the work of God does not perish, and that those who are made in the image and likeness of God cannot be transformed into the shapes of beasts; since in truth it is not the form of the body but of the spirit which is made after the likeness of God. For in what manner could man, to whom are subjected the other kinds of living creatures, migrate with the better part of himself into an animal subjected to himself? Nature does not suffer this, and if nature did grace would not.

131. Sed videro quid vos de vobis, gentes, opinionis habeatis; neque enim mirum debet videri, quod creditis vos in bestias posse mutari, qui bestias adoratis. Ego tamen malim de vestro merito melius judicetis; ut non inter coetus ferarum, sed inter angelorum consortia vos credatis futuros.

131. But I have seen what you, Gentiles, think of each other, and indeed it ought not to seem strange that you who worship beasts should believe that you can be changed into beasts. But I had rather that you judged better concerning what is due to you, that you may believe that you will be not in the company of wild beasts, but in the companionship of angels.

132. Habet animus ex hoc jam vitae anfractu, et terreni corporis colluvione discedere, et ad illa concilia superna contendere, etsi sanctorum sit pervenire, laudem dicere Deo (quam citharizantes illos (Apoc. XIV, 2) dicere prophetica lectione (Apoc. XV, 3, 4) comperimus: Quia magna mirabilia opera tua, Domine Deus omnipotens: justae et verae viae tuae, Rex gentium! Quis non timebit et magnificabit nomen tuum; quia solus sanctus es, quia omnes gentes venient et adorabunt ante te; videre quoque tuas, Jesu, nuptias, in quibus de terrenis ad coelestia, concinentibus omnium gaudiis sponsa deducitur; ad te enim omnis caro veniet (Psal. LXIV, 3), jam non saeculo obnoxia, sed spiritui copulata: videre thalamos ornatos byssino, rosis, liliis, et coronis. Cujus enim alterius sic ornantur nuptiae? Ornantur enim confessorum livore, martyrum sanguine, lillis virginum, coronis etiam sacerdotum?

132. The soul has to depart from the surroundings of this life, and the pollutions of the earthly body, and to press on to those heavenly companies, though it is for the saints alone, to attain to them, and to sing praise to God (as in the prophet's words we hear of those who are harping Revelation 14:2 and saying: For great are Your marvellous works, O Lord God Almighty, just and true are Your ways, Thou King of the nations; who shall not fear and magnify Your Name, for Thou only art holy, for all nations shall come and worship before You), Revelation 15:3-4 and to see Your marriage feast, O Lord Jesus, in which the Bride is led from earthly to heavenly things, while all rejoice in harmony, for to You shall all flesh come, now no longer subject to transitory things, but joined to the Spirit, to see the chambers adorned with linen, roses, lilies, and garlands. Of whom else is the marriage so adorned? For it is adorned with the purple stripes of confessors, the blood of martyrs, the lilies of virgins, and the crowns of priests.

133. Hoc sibi prae caeteris David sanctus optavit, ut haec spectaret et cerneret. Denique ait: Unam petivi a Domino, hanc requiram; ut inhabitem in domo Domini omnes dies vitae meae, et videam voluptatem Domini (Ps. XXVI, 4, 5).

133. Holy David desired beyond all else for himself that he might behold and gaze upon this, for he says: One thing have I asked of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, and see the pleasure of the Lord.

134. Juvat hoc credere, sperare delectat: certe non credidisse poena est, sperasse gratia. Quod si in hoc erro, quia angelis me post mortem sociari malo, quam bestiis; libenter in hoc erro, neque umquam hac me opinione, dum vivo, fraudari patiar.

134. It is a pleasure to believe this, a joy to hope for it; and certainly, not to have believed it is a pain, to have lived in this hope a grace. But if I am mistaken in this, that I prefer to be associated after death with angels rather than with beasts, I am gladly mistaken, and so long as I live will never suffer myself to be cheated of this hope.

135. Quid enim mihi superest solatii, quam quod me citius ad te, frater, spero venturum, nec digressus tui inter nos longa divortia fore; tuisque intercessionibus mihi hoc posse conferri, ut citius desiderantem tui advoces. Quis enim est, qui non sibi debeat istud optare prae caeteris; ut corruptibile hoc induat incorruptelam, et mortale hoc induat immortalitatem (I Cor. XV, 53)? ut qui nunc morti corporis fragilitate succumbimus, supra naturam siti, mortem jam timere nequeamus.

135. For what comfort have I left but that I hope to come quickly to you, my brother, and that your departure will not cause a long severance between us, and that it may be granted me, through your intercessions, that you may quickly call me who long for you. For who is there who ought not to wish for himself beyond all else that this corruptible should put on incorruption, and this mortal put on immortality? 1 Corinthians 15:53 that we who succumb to death through the frailty of the body, being raised above nature, may no longer have to fear death.

GRATIANUM OB ARDOREM discendae fidei laudat Ambrosius, semet vero deprimit. Quamquam autem illum humana doctrina indigere neget, quippe qui a Deo ipso fuerit institutus, addit tamen eumdem hac sua pietate viam sibi ad victoriam munire. Tum difficultate operis insinuata, non tam rationem quam auctoritatem, maxime vero Nicaeni concilii, secuturum se profitetur.

PROLOGUE.

The author praises Gratian's zeal for instruction in the Faith, and speaks lowly of his own merits. Taught of God Himself, the Emperor stands in no need of human instruction; yet this his devoutness prepares the way to victory. The task appointed to the author is difficult: in the accomplishment whereof he will be guided not so much by reason and argument as by authority, especially that of the Nicene Council.

1. Regina Austri venit audire sapientiam Salomonis, ut in libro Regnorum legimus (III Reg. X, 1 et seq.). Hiram quoque rex ad Salomonem misit, ut cognosceret eum (III Reg. V, 1). Tu quoque, sancte imperator Gratiane, veteris imitator historiae, fidem meam audire voluisti. Sed non ego Salomon, cujus mireris sapientiam: neque tu unius gentis, sed totius orbis Augustus fidem libello exprimi censuisti: non ut disceres, sed ut probares.

1. The Queen of the South, as we read in the Book of the Kings, came to hear the wisdom of Solomon. 1 Kings 10:1 Likewise King Hiram sent to Solomon that he might prove him. 1 Kings 5:1 So also your sacred Majesty, following these examples of old time, has decreed to hear my confession of faith. But I am no Solomon, that you should wonder at my wisdom, and your Majesty is not the sovereign of a single people; it is the Augustus, ruler of the whole world, that has commanded the setting forth of the Faith in a book, not for your instruction, but for your approval.

2. Quid enim discas, imperator Auguste, quam ab ipsis incunabulis pio fovisti semper affectu? Priusquam te, inquit, formarem in utero matris tuae, novi te: et priusquam exires de vulva, sanctificavi te (Jerem. I, 5). Santificatio ergo non traditur, sed infunditur; et ideo divina dona custodi. Quod enim nemo te docuit, utique Deus auctor infudit.

2. For why, august Emperor, should your Majesty learn that Faith which, from your earliest childhood, you have ever devoutly and lovingly kept? Before I formed you in your mother's belly I knew you, says the Scripture, and before you came forth out of the womb I sanctified you. Sanctification, therefore, comes not of tradition, but of inspiration; therefore keep watch over the gifts of God. For that which no man has taught you, God has surely given and inspired.

3. Petis a me fidei libellum, sancte imperator, 444 profecturus ad praelium; nosti enim fide magis imperatoris quam virtute militum quaeri solere victoriam. Nam et Abraham trecentos decem et octo duxit ad bellum, et ex innumeris tropaea hostibus reportavit; signoque Dominicae crucis et nominis, quinque regum victriciumque turmarum subacto robore, et ultus est proximum, et fratris filium meruit et triumphum (Gen. XIV, 14 et seq.). Jesus quoque filius Nave hostes quos totius exercitus manu valida superare non poterat, septem tubarum sacerdotalium sono vicit, ubi ducem militiae coelestis agnovit (Jos. VI, 6 et seq.). Ergo et tu vincere paras, qui Christum adoras: vincere paras, qui fidem vindicas, cujus a me libellum petisti.

3. Your sacred Majesty, being about to go forth to war, requires of me a book, expounding the Faith, since your Majesty knows that victories are gained more by faith in the commander, than by valour in the soldiers. For Abraham led into battle three hundred and eighteen men, and brought home the spoils of countless foes; and having, by the power of that which was the sign of our Lord's Cross and Name, overcome the might of five kings and conquering hosts, he both avenged his neighbour and gained victory and the ransom of his brother's son. So also Joshua the Son of Nun, when he could not prevail against the enemy with the might of all his army, Joshua 6:6 overcame by sound of seven sacred trumpets, in the place where he saw and knew the Captain of the heavenly host. For victory, then, your Majesty makes ready, being Christ's loyal servant and defender of the Faith, which you would have me set forth in writing.

4. Mallem quidem cohortandi ad fidem subire officium, quam de fide disceptandi; in altero enim religiosa confessio est, in altero incauta praesumptio: sed quoniam neque tu cohortatione indiges, neque ego excusandi liber, ubi pietatis officium est, audax negotium verecunda occasione suscipiam; ut de fide pauca disceptem, de testimoniis plura contexam.

4. Truly, I would rather take upon me the duty of exhortation to keep the Faith, than that of disputing thereon; for the former means devout confession, whereas the latter is liable to rash presumption. Howbeit, forasmuch as your Majesty has no need of exhortation, while I may not pray to be excused from the duty of loyalty, I will take in hand a bold enterprise, yet modestly withal, not so much reasoning and disputing concerning the Faith as gathering together a multitude of witness.

5. De conciliis id potissimum sequar, quod trecenti decem et octo sacerdotes, tamquam Abrahae electi judicio, consona fidei virtute victores, velut tropaeum, toto orbe subactis perfidis, extulerunt; ut mihi videatur hoc esse divinum, quod eodem numero in conciliis fidei habemus oraculum, quo in historia pietatis exemplum.

5. Of the Acts of Councils, I shall let that one be my chief guide which three hundred and eighteen priests, appointed, as it were, after the judgment of Abraham, made (so to speak) a trophy raised to proclaim their victory over the infidel throughout the world, prevailing by that courage of the Faith, wherein all agreed. Verily, as it seems to me, one may herein see the hand of God, forasmuch as the same number is our authority in the Councils of the Faith, and an example of loyalty in the records of old.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

CATHOLICAM FIDEM A gentilium, Judaeorum, ac haereticorum erroribus distinguit: expositoque vocum Dei et Domini significatu, personarum discrimen, et naturae unitatem demonstrat: quam dum separant Ariani, non tres Deos tantum inducunt, sed etiam Trinitatis regnum destruunt.

CHAPTER 1.

The author distinguishes the faith from the errors of Pagans, Jews, and Heretics, and after explaining the significance of the names God and Lord, shows clearly the difference of Persons in Unity of Essence. In dividing the Essence, the Arians not only bring in the doctrine of three Gods, but even overthrow the dominion of the Trinity.

6. Assertio autem nostrae fidei haec est, ut unum Deum esse dicamus: neque, ut gentes, Filium separemus: neque ut Judaei, natum ex Patre ante tempora, et ex Virgine postea editum denegemus: neque ut Sabellius, Patrem confundamus et Verbum; ut eumdem Patrem asseramus et Filium: neque ut Photinus, initium Filii ex Virgine disputemus: neque ut Arius, plures credendo et dissimiles potestates, plures deos gentili errore faciamus, quia scriptum est: Audi, Israel, Dominus Deus tuus, Deus unus est (Deut. VI, 4).

6. Now this is the declaration of our Faith, that we say that God is One, neither dividing His Son from Him, as do the heathen, nor denying, with the Jews, that He was begotten of the Father before all worlds, and afterwards born of the Virgin; nor yet, like Sabellius, confounding the Father with the Word, and so maintaining that Father and Son are one and the same Person; nor again, as does Photinus, holding that the Son first came into existence in the Virgin's womb: nor believing, with Arius, in a number of diverse Powers, and so, like the benighted heathen, making out more than one God. For it is written: Hear, O Israel: the Lord your God is one God.

7. Deus enim et Dominus nomen magnificentiae, nomen est potestatis, sicut ipse dicit: Dominus nomen est mihi. Et sicut alibi Propheta asserit: Dominus omnipotens nomen est ei (Esai. XLII, 8). Dominus ergo et Deus vel quod dominetur omnibus, vel quod spectet omnia, et timeatur a cunctis.

7. For God and Lord is a name of majesty, a name of power, even as God Himself says: The Lord is My name, Exodus 3:15 and as in another place the prophet declares: The Lord Almighty is His name. God is He, therefore, and Lord, either because His rule is over all, or because He beholds all things, and is feared by all, without difference.

8. Si ergo unus Deus, unum nomen, potestas una est Trinitatis. Denique ipse dicit: Ite, baptizate gentes in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus sancti (Matth. XXVIII, 19). In nomine utique, non in nominibus.

8. If, then, God is One, one is the name, one is the power, of the Trinity. Christ Himself, indeed, says: Go, baptize the nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Matthew 28:19 In the name, mark you, not in the names.

9. Ipse etiam dicit: Ego et Pater unum sumus (Joan. X, 30). Unum dixit, ne fiat discretio potestatis et naturae: sumus addidit, ut Patrem Filiumque cognoscas; quod perfectus Pater perfectum Filium genuisse credatur: et Pater et Filius unum sint, non confusione personae, sed unitate naturae.

9. Moreover, Christ Himself says: I and the Father are One. John 10:30 One, said He, that there be no separation of power and nature; but again, We are, that you may recognize Father and Son, forasmuch as the perfect Father is believed to have begotten the perfect Son, Matthew 5:48 and the Father and the Son are One, not by confusion of Person, but by unity of nature.

10. [Alias cap. II.] Unum ergo Deum, non duos aut tres deos dicimus; ut impia Arianorum haeresis dum criminatur, incurrit. Tres enim deos dicit, qui divinitatem separat Trinitatis; cum Dominus dicendo: Ite, baptizate gentes in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus sancti, unius esse Trinitatem potestatis ostenderit. Nos Patrem 446 et Filium et Spiritum sanctum confitemur; ita ut in Trinitate perfecta et plenitudo sit divinitatis, et unitas potestatis.

10. We say, then, that there is one God, not two or three Gods, this being the error into which the impious heresy of the Arians does run with its blasphemies. For it says that there are three Gods, in that it divides the Godhead of the Trinity; whereas the Lord, in saying, Go, baptize the nations in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, has shown that the Trinity is of one power. We confess Father, Son, and Spirit, understanding in a perfect Trinity both fullness of Divinity and unity of power.

11. Omne regnum in se divisum facile destruetur, Dominus hoc dicit (Matth. XII, 25). Non ergo divisum est regnum Trinitatis. Si ergo divisum non est, unum est; quod enim unum non est, divisum est. Tale ergo regnum esse cupiunt Trinitatis, quod divisione sui facile destruatur. Immo quia non potest destrui, constat non esse divisum. Non enim dividitur unitas, nec scinditur; et ideo nec corruptelae subditur, nec aetati.

11. Every kingdom divided against itself shall quickly be overthrown, says the Lord. Now the kingdom of the Trinity is not divided. If, therefore, it is not divided, it is one; for that which is not one is divided. The Arians, however, would have the kingdom of the Trinity to be such as may easily be overthrown, by division against itself. But truly, seeing that it cannot be overthrown, it is plainly undivided. For no unity is divided or rent asunder, and therefore neither age nor corruption has any power over it.

IMPERATOREM AD FIDEI zelum exhortatus, ab ea quae Christo cum Patre inest, voluntatis atque operationis unitate ipsum Deum esse ostendit. Quapropter expositis divinis attributis, eadem Christo etiam convenire affirmat: cujus praeterea varias appellationes prosecutus, iis substantialem unitatem personalemque distinctionem probari docet: tum exemplis aliquot ad explicandam unitatem illam adductis, negat aliter Dei unitatem defendi posse.

CHAPTER 2.

The Emperor is exhorted to display zeal in the Faith. Christ's perfect Godhead is shown from the unity of will and working which He has with the Father. The attributes of Divinity are shown to be proper to Christ, Whose various titles prove His essential unity, with distinction of Person. In no other way can the unity of God be maintained.

12. Non quicumque, inquit, mihi dicit: Domine, Domine, intrabit in regnum coelorum (Matth. VII, 21). Non ergo perfunctoria fides debet esse, imperator Auguste; scriptum est enim: Zelus domus tuae comedit me (Psal. LXVIII, 10). Itaque fideli spiritu et mente devota Jesum Dominum invocemus, Deum esse credamus; ut in nomine ejus quidquid a Patre petimus, impetremus; Pater enim se per Filium vult rogari, Filius vult rogari Patrem.

12. Not every one that says unto Me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, Matthew 7:21 says the Scripture. Faith, therefore, august Sovereign, must not be a mere matter of performance, for it is written, The zeal of your house has devoured me. Let us then with faithful spirit and devout mind call upon Jesus our Lord, let us believe that He is God, to the end that whatever we ask of the Father, we may obtain in His name. For the Father's will is, that He be entreated through the Son, the Son's that the Father be entreated.

13. Concordat pietatis gratia, nec virtutis facta discordant. Quaecumque enim Pater facit, eadem et Filius facit similiter. Et similiter facit, et eadem facit Filius: sed vult rogari Patrem in eo, quod ipse facturus est; uti non impossibilitatis indicium, sed unitatem potestatis agnoscas. Jure igitur adorandus atque venerandus est Dei Filius, qui mundum divinitate sua condidit, et nostrum pietate sua informavit affectum.

13. The grace of His submission makes for agreement [with our teaching], and the acts of His power are not at variance therewith. For whatsoever things the Father does, the same also does the Son, in like manner. The Son both does the same things, and does them in like manner, but it is the Father's will that He be entreated in the matter of what He Himself proposes to do, that you may understand, not that He cannot do it otherwise, but that there is one power displayed. Truly, then, is the Son of God to be adored and worshipped, Who by the power of His Godhead has laid the foundations of the world, and by His submission informed our affections.

14. Et ideo bonum Deum, sempiternum, perfectum, omnipotentem, verum debemus 447 credere, ut in Lege accepimus et prophetis, Scripturisque divinis caeteris, quia sine his Deus non est. Non potest enim bonus non esse, qui Deus est, cum in natura Dei plenitudo bonitatis sit: neque ex tempore Deus potest esse, qui fecit tempora: neque potest imperfectus Deus esse; qui enim minor est, imperfectus utique est, cui desit aliquid, quo majori possit aequari. Haec igitur fidei praedicatio: Deus malus non est, Deo impossibile nihil est: Deus temporalis non est, Deus minor non est. Si fallor, redarguant.

14. Therefore we ought to believe that God is good, eternal, perfect, almighty, and true, such as we find Him in the Law and the Prophets, and the rest of the holy Scriptures, for otherwise there is no God. For He Who is God cannot but be good, seeing that fullness of goodness is of the nature of God: nor can God, Who made time, be in time; nor, again, can God be imperfect, for a lesser being is plainly imperfect, seeing that it lacks somewhat whereby it could be made equal to a greater. This, then, is the teaching of our faith — that God is not evil, that with God nothing is impossible, that God exists not in time, that God is beneath no being. If I am in error, let my adversaries prove it.

15. Quia igitur Deus Christus: et bonus utique, et omnipotens, et sempiternus, et perfectus, et verus est; haec enim in natura divinitatis sunt. Aut igitur negent naturam divinitatis in Christo, aut quae divinae naturae sunt, Deo negare non possunt.

15. Seeing, then, that Christ is God, He is, by consequence, good and almighty and eternal and perfect and true; for these attributes belong to the essential nature of the Godhead. Let our adversaries, therefore, deny the Divine Nature in Christ — otherwise they cannot refuse to God what is proper to the Divine Nature.

16. Certe ne quis possit errare, sequatur ea quibus Scriptura sancta, ut intelligere possimus Filium, significavit. Verbum dicitur, Filius dicitur, Dei virtus dicitur, dicitur Dei sapientia. Verbum, quia immaculatus: virtus, quia perfectus; Filius, quia genitus ex Patre: sapientia, quia unum cum Patre, unum aeternitate, unum divinitate. Non enim Pater ipse, qui Filius: sed inter Patrem et Filium generationis expressa distinctio est; ut ex Deo Deus, ex manente manens, plenus e pleno sit.

16. Further, that none may fall into error, let a man attend to those signs vouchsafed us by holy Scripture, whereby we may know the Son. He is called the Word, the Son, the Power of God, the Wisdom of God. The Word, because He is without blemish; the Power, because He is perfect; the Son, because He is begotten of the Father; the Wisdom, because He is one with the Father, one in eternity, one in Divinity. Not that the Father is one Person with the Son; between Father and Son is the plain distinction that comes of generation; so that Christ is God of God, Everlasting of Everlasting, Fulness of Fulness.

17. Non sunt igitur haec nuda nomina, sed operatricis virtutis indicia; est enim plenitudo divinitatis in Patre, est plenitudo divinitatis in Filio, non discrepans, sed una divinitas. Nec confusum, quod unum est: nec multiplex, quod indifferens.

17. Now these are not mere names, but signs of power manifesting itself in works, for while there is fullness of Godhead in the Father, there is also fullness of Godhead in the Son, not diverse, but one. The Godhead is nothing confused, for it is an unity: nothing manifold, for in it there is no difference.

18. Etenim si omnium credentium, sicut scriptum est (Act. IV, 32), erat anima una et cor unum: si omnis qui adhaeret Domino, unus spiritus est, ut Apostolus dixit (I Cor. VI, 27): si vir et uxor in carne una sunt: si omnes homines, quantum ad naturam pertinet, unius substantiae sumus: si hoc de humanis Scriptura dicit, quia multi unum sunt, quorum nulla potest esse cum divinis comparatio; quanto magis Pater et Filius divinitate unum sunt, ubi nec substantiae nec voluntatis ulla est differentia?

18. Moreover, if in all them that believed there was, as it is written, one soul and one heart: Acts 4:32 if every one that cleaves to the Lord is one spirit, 1 Corinthians 6:17 as the Apostle has said: if a man and his wife are one flesh: if all we mortal men are, so far as regards our general nature, of one substance: if this is what the Scripture says of created men, that, being many, they are one, who can in no way be compared to Divine Persons, how much more are the Father and the Son one in Divinity, with Whom there is no difference either of substance or of will!

19. Namque aliter quomodo unum Deum dicemus? Diversitas plures facit, unitas potestatis excludit numeri quantitatem; quia unitas numerus non est, sed haec omnium ipsa principium est.

19. For how else shall we say that God is One? Divinity makes plurality, but unity of power debars quantity of number, seeing that unity is not number, but itself is the principle of all numbers.

CAPUT III.

PATRIS AC FILII unitatem Scripturae testimoniis probat, et primo Esaiae locum aliorum comparatione ita illustrat, ut nullam a Patris natura in Filio inesse differentiam astruat, nisi quantum ad carnem, ac proinde unam utriusque deitatem esse. Quod ubi auctoritate Baruch confirmatum est, fidem prophetis hac in re habendam tradit.

By evidence gathered from Scripture the unity of Father and Son is proved, and firstly, a passage, taken from the Book of Isaiah, is compared with others and expounded in such sort as to show that in the Son there is no diversity from the Father's nature, save only as regards the flesh; whence it follows that the Godhead of both Persons is One. This conclusion is confirmed by the authority of Baruch.

20. Quantam vero Scriptura divina Patris et Filii secundum divinitatem expresserit unitatem, prophetica testantur oracula. Sic enim dicit Dominus sabaoth: Laboravit 448 Aegyptus, et mercatus Aethiopum et Sebaim: viri excelsi ad te transibunt, et tui erunt servi, et post te sequentur alligati vinculis, et adorabunt te, et in te deprecabuntur; quoniam in te est Deus, et non est Deus praeter te. Tu enim es Deus, et nesciebamus, Deus Israel (Esa. XLV, 14).

20. Now the oracles of the prophets bear witness what close unity holy Scripture declares to subsist between the Father and the Son as regards their Godhead. For thus says the Lord of Sabaoth: Egypt has laboured, and the commerce of the Ethiopians and Sabeans: mighty men shall come over to you, and shall be your servants, and in your train shall they follow, bound in fetters, and they shall fall down before you, and to you shall they make supplication: for God is in you, and there is no God beside you. For you are God, and we knew it not, O God of Israel.

21. Audi propheticam vocem: In te, inquit, est Deus, et non est Deus praeter te. Quomodo hoc secundum Arianos convenit? Necesse est negent aut Patris aut Filii divinitatem, nisi ejusdem divinitatis crediderint unitatem.

21. Hear the voice of the prophet: In You, he says, is God, and there is no God beside You. How agrees this with the Arians' teaching? They must deny either the Father's or the Son's Divinity, unless they believe, once for all, unity of the same Divinity.

22. In te, inquit, est Deus; quoniam in Filio Pater. Scriptum est enim: Pater qui in me manet, ipse loquitur; et: Opera quae ego facio, et ipse facit (Joan. V, 5). Sed et alibi in Patre Filius est, qui dicit: Ego in Patre, et Pater in me est (Joan. XIV, 10). Dissolvant, si possunt, hanc naturae proprietatem, et operis unitatem.

22. In You, says he, is God — forasmuch as the Father is in the Son. For it is written, The Father, Who abides in Me, Himself speaks, and The works that I do, He Himself also does. John 14:10 And yet again we read that the Son is in the Father, saying, I am in the Father, and the Father in Me. John 14:10 Let the Arians, if they can, make away with this kinship in nature and unity in work.

23. Deus igitur in Deo est, sed non duo dii; scriptum est enim, quia unus Deus (Deut. VI, 4): et Dominus in Domino, sed non duo Domini; quia aeque scriptum est: Nolite duobus dominis servire (Matth. VI, 24). Et lex dicit: Audi, Israel, Dominus Deus tuus Deus unus est (Deut. VI, 4). Et utique in eodem est Testamento: Pluit Dominus a Domino (Gen. XIX, 24).

Dominus, inquit, a Domino pluit. Sic et in Genesi habes: Et dixit Deus, et fecit Deus; et infra: Et fecit Deus hominem ad imaginem Dei (Gen. I, 3, 26); sed tamen non duo Dii, sed unus Deus lecit. Utromque igitur unitas operationis servatur et nominis. Nam utique cum legimus, Deus ex Deo, non duos deos dicimus.

23. There is, therefore, God in God, but not two Gods; for it is written that there is one God, and there is Lord in Lord, but not two Lords, forasmuch as it is likewise written: Serve not two lords. Matthew 6:24 And the Law says: Hear, O Israel! The Lord your God is one God; Deuteronomy 6:4 moreover, in the same Testament it is written: The Lord rained from the Lord. Genesis 19:24 The Lord, it is said, sent rain from the Lord. So also you may read in Genesis: And God said — and God made, Genesis 1:6-7 and, lower down, And God made man in the image of God; Genesis 1:26-27 yet it was not two gods, but one God, that made [man]. In the one place, then, as in the other, the unity of operation and of name is maintained. For surely, when we read God of God, we do not speak of two Gods.

24. Denique habes in Psalmo quadragesimo quarto, quod et Deum Patrem dixit Propheta, et Deum Filium declaravit, dicens: Sedes tua, Deus, in saeculum saeculi; et infra: Unxit te Deus Deus tuus oleo laetitiae prae consortibus tuis (Psal XLIV, 7, 8). Deus est qui ungit, et Deus qui secundum carnem ungitur Dei Filius. Denique quos habet unctionis suae Christus nisi in carne consortes? Vides igitur quia Deus a Deo unctus: sed in assumptione naturae unctus humanae Dei Filius designatur, nec Legis forma violatur.

24. Again, you may read in the forty-fourth psalm how the prophet not only calls the Father God but also proclaims the Son as God, saying: Your throne, O God, is for ever and ever. And further on: God, even your God, has anointed you with the oil of gladness above your fellows. This God Who anoints, and God Who in the flesh is anointed, is the Son of God. For what fellows in His anointing has Christ, except such as are in the flesh? You see, then, that God is by God anointed, but being anointed in taking upon Him the nature of mankind, He is proclaimed the Son of God; yet is the principle of the Law not broken.

25. Et hic ergo cum dicitur: Pluit Dominus a Domino, unitatem divinitatis agnosce. Operationis enim unitas non facit pluralem divinitatem, sicut ipse Dominus ostendit, dicens: Credite mihi, quia ego in Patre, et Pater in me: alioquin vel propter opera ipsa credite (Joan. X, 38). Et hic advertimus quod unitatem divinitatis per unitatem operum designaverit.

25. So again, when you read, The Lord rained from the Lord, acknowledge the unity of Godhead, for unity in operation does not allow of more than one individual God, even as the Lord Himself has shown, saying: Believe Me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me: or believe Me for the very works' sake. Here, too, we see that unity of Godhead is signified by unity in operation.

26. Ut autem una deitas et Patris et Filii, et una dominatio probaretur; ne gentilis aut Judaicae impietatis incurreremus errorem, providens Apostolus, quid sequi deberemus ostendit dicens: Unus Deus Pater, ex quo omnia, et nos in ipso: et unus Dominus Jesus Christus, per quem omnia, et nos per ipsum (I Cor. VIII, 6). Sicut enim unum dicendo Dominum Jesum Christum, Patrem Dominum non negavit; ita unum dicendo Deum Patrem, aeque a deitatis veritate nec Filium separavit. Unde nec pluralitatem divinitatis, sed unitatem potestatis ostendit; quia et in dominatione divinitas, et in divinitate dominatus est; sicut scriptum est: Scitote quoniam 449 Dominus ipse est Deus; ipse fecit nos, et non ipsi nos (Psal. XCIX, 3).

26. The Apostle, careful to prove that there is one Godhead of both Father and Son, and one Lordship, lest we should run into any error, whether of heathen or of Jewish ungodliness, showed us the rule we ought to follow, saying: One God, the Father, from Whom are all things, and we in Him, and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by Whom are all things, and we by Him. For just as, in calling Jesus Christ Lord, he did not deny that the Father was Lord, even so, in saying, One God, the Father, he did not deny true Godhead to the Son, and thus he taught, not that there was more than one God, but that the source of power was one, forasmuch as Godhead consists in Lordship, and Lordship in Godhead, as it is written: Be sure that the Lord, He is God. It is He that has made us, and not we ourselves.

27. In te igitur est Deus, per unitatem naturae: et non est Deus praeter te, per proprietatem substantiae, repulsa differentia.

27. In you, therefore, is God, by unity of nature, and there is no God beside You, by reason of personal possession of the Substance, without any reserve or difference.

28. In Hieremiae quoque libro unum Deum Scriptura dicit, et tamen et Patrem et Filium confitetur. Itaque sic habes: Hic Deus noster, et non reputabitur alius ad eum. Hic adinvenit omnem viam disciplinae, et dedit eam Jacob puero suo, et Israel dilecto suo. Post haec in terris visus est, et cum hominibus conversatus est (Baruc. III, 36, 37).

28. Again, Scripture speaks, in the Book of Jeremiah, of One God, and yet acknowledges both Father and Son. Thus we read: He is our God, and in comparison with Him none other shall be accounted of. He has discovered all the way of teaching, and given it to Jacob, His servant, and to Israel, His beloved. After these things He appeared upon earth, and conversed with men.

29. De Filio dicit: Ipse enim est cum hominibus conversatus; et dicit: Hic Deus noster, et non aestimabitur alius ad eum. Quid discutimus eum, de quo tantus dicit propheta, quod ad eum non possit alius aestimari? Quae enim potest esse alia aestimatio, ubi deitatis unitas est? Confitebatur hoc populus in periculis constitutus: nesciebat serere quaestiones qui religionem timebat.

29. The prophet speaks of the Son, for it was the Son Himself Who conversed with men, and this is what he says: He is our God, and in comparison with Him none other shall be accounted of. Why do we call Him in question, of Whom so great a prophet says that no other can be compared with Him? What comparison of another can be made, when the Godhead is One? This was the confession of a people set in the midst of dangers; reverencing religion, and therefore unskilled in strife of argument.

30. Adesto, sancte Spiritus, prophetis tuis, quibus inesse consuesti, quibus credimus. Si prophetis non credimus, sapientibus credam hujus mundi? Sed ubi sapiens, ubi scriba? Rusticus noster cum ficus insereret, invenit quod philosophus ignoravit. Quae stulta sunt enim hujus mundi, elegit Deus, ut confundat quae sunt fortia (I Cor. I, 27). Credimus Judaeis, quia notus aliquando in Judaea Deus (Psal. LXXV, 2)? Sed hoc ipsum negant propter quod credimus, quia non norunt Patrem, qui Filium negaverunt.

30. Come, Holy Spirit, and help Your prophets, in whom You are wont to dwell, in whom we believe. Shall we believe the wise of this world, if we believe not the prophets? But where is the wise man, where is the scribe? When our peasant planted figs, he found that whereof the philosopher knew nothing, for God has chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the strong. Are we to believe the Jews? For God was once known in Jewry. Nay, but they deny that very thing, which is the foundation of our belief, seeing that they know not the Father, who have denied the Son.

ARGUMENTIS ALIQUOT AD probandam Dei unitatem collectim propositis, in tribus magorum muneribus Christi divinitatem humanitatemque adumbratas ostendit; non secus ac in angelo cum tribus pueris inter flammas deambulante, divinitatis ac trinitatis veritatem.

The Unity of God is necessarily implied in the order of Nature, in the Faith, and in Baptism. The gifts of the Magi declare (1) the Unity of the Godhead; (2) Christ's Godhead and Manhood. The truth of the doctrine of the Trinity in Unity is shown in the Angel walking in the midst of the furnace with Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

31. Unum Deum communis natura testatur, quia unus est mundus. Unum Deum fides significat, quia una fides novi et veteris Testamenti. Unum Spiritum sanctum testificatur gratia, quia unum baptisma in nomine Trinitatis est. Unum Deum Prophetae dicunt, Apostoli audiunt. Unum Deum Magi crediderunt, et aurum, thus et myrrham supplices ad Christi cunabula detulerunt, auro regem fatentes, ut Deum thure venerantes. Thesaurus enim regni, sacrificium Dei, myrrha est sepulturae.

31. All nature testifies to the Unity of God, inasmuch as the universe is one. The Faith declares that there is one God, seeing that there is one belief in both the Old and the New Testament. That there is one Spirit, all holy, grace witnesses, because there is one Baptism, in the Name of the Trinity. The prophets proclaim, the apostles hear, the voice of one God. In one God did the Magi believe, and they brought, in adoration, gold, frankincense, and myrrh to Christ's cradle, confessing, by the gift of gold, His Royalty, and with the incense worshipping Him as God. For gold is the sign of kingdom, incense of God, myrrh of burial.

32. Quid igitur voluerunt sibi mystica munera inter abjecta praesepia, nisi ut intelligeremus in Christo differentiam divinitatis et carnis? 450 Ut homo cernitur, ut Dominus adoratur: jacet in pannis, sed fulget in stellis: cunae nascentem indicant, et stellae dominantem: caro est quae involvitur: divinitas, cui ab angelis ministratur. Ita nec dignitas naturalis majestatis amittitur, et assumptae carnis veritas comprobatur.

32. What, then, was the meaning of the mystic offerings in the lowly cattle-stalls, save that we should discern in Christ the difference between the Godhead and the flesh? He is seen as man, Philippians 2:7 He is adored as Lord. He lies in swaddling-clothes, but shines amid the stars; the cradle shows His birth, the stars His dominion; it is the flesh that is wrapped in clothes, the Godhead that receives the ministry of angels. Thus the dignity of His natural majesty is not lost, and His true assumption of the flesh is proved.

33. Haec est fides nostra. Sic se Deus cognosci voluit ab omnibus, sic tres pueri crediderunt, nec incendia circumjecta senserunt; cum infidos noxius ignis exureret, et fidelibus innoxia flamma roraret, quibus aliorum incendia refrigerabant; quia merito fidei perdiderat suam poena naturam. Aderat enim in specie angeli qui monebat ut in numero Trinitatis, unius esset laudatio potestatis. Benedicebatur Deus, videbatur in angelo Dei Filius, sancta et spiritalis in pueris gratia loquebatur.

33. This is our Faith. Thus did God will that He should be known by all, thus believed the three children, Daniel 4:17 and felt not the fire into the midst whereof they were cast, which destroyed and burnt up unbelievers, Daniel 4:22 while it fell harmless as dew upon the faithful, Hosea 14:5 for whom the flames kindled by others became cold, seeing that the torment had justly lost its power in conflict with faith. For with them there was One in the form of an angel, Daniel 4:28 comforting them, Luke 22:43 to the end that in the number of the Trinity one Supreme Power might be praised. God was praised, the Son of God was seen in God's angel, holy and spiritual grace spoke in the children.

CAPUT V.

ARIANORUM VARIAE IN Christum blasphemiae referuntur, quibus antequam respondeatur, monentur Catholici caveant a sophismatis philosophorum; eo quod scilicet in illis haeretici spem praecipuam collocarent.

CHAPTER 5.

The various blasphemies uttered by the Arians against Christ are cited. Before these are replied to, the orthodox are admonished to beware of the captious arguments of philosophers, forasmuch as in these especially did the heretics put their trust.

34. [Alias cap. III.] Nunc consideremus quas Ariani de Dei Filio inferant quaestiones.

34. Now let us consider the disputings of the Arians concerning the Son of God.

35. Dissimilem Patri dicunt esse Dei Filium. Hoc si homini objiciatur, injuria est.

35. They say that the Son of God is unlike His Father. To say this of a man would be an insult.

36. Ex tempore coepisse dicunt Dei Filium; cum conditor ipse sit temporum. Homines sumus, et esse nolumus temporales. Ex tempore coepimus, et sine tempore futuros esse nos credimus. Fieri nos optamus aeternos, et quomodo negare possumus Dei Filium sempiternum, quem sempiternum docet atque demonstrat natura, non gratia?

36. They say that the Son of God had a beginning in time, whereas He Himself is the source and ordainer of time and all that therein is. We are men, and we would not be limited to time. We began to exist once, and we believe that we shall have a timeless existence. We desire after immortality — how, then, can we deny the eternity of God's Son, Whom God declares to be eternal by nature, not by grace?

37. Creatum dicunt. Quis auctorem inter opera sua deputet, ut videatur id esse quod fecit?

37. They say that He was created. But who would reckon an author with his works, and have him seem to be what he has himself made?

38. Bonum negant. Sacrilega vox ipsa se damnat, ut indulgentiam sperare non possit.

38. They deny His goodness. Their blaspheming is its own condemnation, and so cannot hope for pardon.

39. Negant verum Dei Filium, negant omnipotentem; cum fateantur omnia facta per Filium, omnia creata per Dei esse virtutem. Quid est enim virtus, nisi perfecta natura?

39. They deny that He is truly Son of God, they deny His omnipotence, in that while they admit that all things are made by the ministry of the Son, they attribute the original source of their being to the power of God. But what is power, save perfection of nature?

40. Negant etiam divinitate unum esse cum Patre. Deleant ergo Evangelium, deleant Christi vocem. Ipse enim dixit: Ego et Pater unum sumus (Joan. X, 30). Non ego hoc dico, Christus dixit. Numquid fallax, ut mentiretur? Numquid impius, ut quod non erat usurparet? Sed singula suis locis plenius digerentur.

40. Furthermore, the Arians deny that in Godhead He is One with the Father. Let them annul the Gospel, then, and silence the voice of Christ. For Christ Himself has said: I and the Father are one. John 10:30 It is not I who say this: Christ has said it. Is He a deceiver, that He should lie? Numbers 23:19 Is He unrighteous, that He should claim to be what He never was? But of these matters we will deal severally, at greater length, in their proper place.

41. Nunc quoniam haereticus dicit esse dissimilem, idque versutis disputationibus astruere nititur, dicendum est nobis quod scriptum est: 451 Cavete ne quis vos depraedetur per philosophiam, et inanem seductionem secundum traditionem hominum, et secundum elementa hujus mundi, et non secundum Christum: quia in ipso habitat omnis plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter (Coloss. II, 8, 9).

41. Seeing, then, that the heretic says that Christ is unlike His Father, and seeks to maintain this by force of subtle disputation, we must cite the Scripture: Take heed that no man make spoil of you by philosophy and vain deceit, according to the tradition of men, and after the rudiments of this world, not according to Christ; for in Him dwells all the fullness of Godhead in bodily shape.

42. Omnem enim vim venenorum suorum in dialectica disputatione constituunt, quae philosophorum sententia definitur non astruendi vim habere, sed studium destruendi. Sed non in dialectica complacuit Deo salvum facere populum suum: Regnum enim Dei in simplicitate fidei est, non in contentione sermonis (I Cor. IV, 20).

42. For they store up all the strength of their poisons in dialetical disputation, which by the judgment of philosophers is defined as having no power to establish anything, and aiming only at destruction. But it was not by dialectic that it pleased God to save His people; for the kingdom of God consists in simplicity of faith, not in wordy contention.

CAPUT VI.

CHRISTUM PATRI DISSIMILEM non esse probaturus, memoratis celebrioribus Arianorum ducibus, quam male inter eos conveniat, aperit, atque adversus eos, tamquam in monstra quaedam, praesidium Scripturarum ostendit.

By way of leading up to his proof that Christ is not different from the Father, St. Ambrose cites the more famous leaders of the Arian party, and explains how little their witness agrees, and shows what defense the Scriptures provide against them.

43. [Alias cap. IV.] Dissimilem igitur dicunt esse: nos negamus; immo potius horremus hanc vocem. Sed nolo argumento credas, sancte Imperator, et nostrae disputationi: Scripturas interrogemus, interrogemus apostolos, interrogemus prophetas, interrogemus Christum. Quid multa? Patrem interrogemus, cujus honori studere se dicunt, si Filius degener judicetur. Sed non est honorificentia boni Patris, Filii injuria. Non potest bono Patri placere, si Filius degenerasse potius a Patre, quam Patrem aequasse credatur.

43. The Arians, then, say that Christ is unlike the Father; we deny it. Nay, indeed, we shrink in dread from the word. Nevertheless I would not that your sacred Majesty should trust to argument and our disputation. Let us enquire of the Scriptures, of apostles, of prophets, of Christ. In a word, let us enquire of the Father, Whose honour these men say they uphold, if the Son be judged inferior to Him. But insult to the Son brings no honour to the good Father. It cannot please the good Father, if the Son be judged inferior, rather than equal, to His Father.

44. Da veniam, sancte Imperator, si ad ipsos paulisper verba converto. Sed quem potissimum legam Eunomiumne, an Arium, vel Aetium ejus magistros? Plura enim nomina, sed una perfidia, impietate non dissonans, communione discordans: non dissimilis fraude, sed coitione discreta. Cur enim secum nolint convenire, non intelligo. 452

44. I pray your sacred Majesty to suffer me, if for a little while I address myself particularly to these men. But whom shall I choose out to cite? Eunomius? or Arius and Aëtius, his instructors? For there are many names, but one unbelief, constant in wickedness, but in conversation divided against itself; without difference in respect of deceit, but in common enterprise breeding dissent. But wherefore they will not agree together I understand not.

45. Eunomii personam defugiunt Ariani, sed ejus perfidiam asserunt, impietatem exsequuntur. Aiunt eum prodidisse effusius, quae Arius scripserit. Magna caecitatis effusio! Auctorem probant, exsecutorem refutant. Itaque nunc in plures sese divisere formas. Alii Eunomium, vel Aetium, alii Palladium, vel Demophilum atque Auxentium, vel perfidiae hujus haeredes sequuntur, alii diversos. Numquid divisus est Christus? Sed qui eum a Patre dividunt, ipsi se scindunt.

45. The Arians reject the person of Eunomius, but they maintain his unbelief and walk in the ways of his iniquity. They say that he has too generously published the writings of Arius. Truly, a plentiful lavishing of error! They praise him who gave the command, and deny him who executed it! Wherefore they have now fallen apart into several sects. Some follow after Eunomius or Aëtius, others after Palladius or Demophilus and Auxentius, or the inheritors of this form of unbelief. Others, again, follow different teachers. Is Christ, then, divided? 1 Corinthians 1:13 Nay; but those who divide Him from the Father do with their own hands cut themselves asunder.

46. Et ideo quoniam communiter adversus Ecclesiam Dei, quibus inter seipsos non convenit, conspirarunt, communi nomine haereticos, quibus respondendum est, nominabo. Haeresis enim, velut quaedam Hydra fabularum, vulneribus suis crevit: et dum saepe reciditur, pullulavit, igni debita, incendioque peritura: aut velut quaedam monstruosi Scylla portenti in varias formas distincta perfidiae, velut supervacuum Christianae sectae nomen obtendit: sed quos in illo impietatis suae freto miseros inter naufragia fidei reperit fluctuantes, belluinis succincta prodigiis, tetri dogmatis saevo dente dilacerat.

46. Seeing, therefore, that men who agree not among themselves have all alike conspired against the Church of God, I shall call those whom I have to answer by the common name of heretics. For heresy, like some hydra of fable, has waxed great from its wounds, and, being ofttimes lopped short, has grown afresh, being appointed to find meet destruction in flames of fire. Or, like some dread and monstrous Scylla, divided into many shapes of unbelief, she displays, as a mask to her guile, the pretence of being a Christian sect, but those wretched men whom she finds tossed to and fro in the waves of her unhallowed strait, amid the wreckage of their faith, she, girt with beastly monsters, rends with the cruel fang of her blasphemous doctrine.

47. Cujus speluncam, sancte Imperator, ut ferunt nautae, caecis latebris inhorrentem, omnemque ejus viciniam caeruleis canibus inter perfidiae saxa resonantem, clausa quodammodo praeterire aure debemus. Scriptum est enim: Sepi aures tuas spinis (Eccl. XXVIII, 28). Et alibi: Videte canes, videte malos operarios (Philip. III, 2). Et iterum: Haereticum hominem post primam correptionem devita, sciens quia subversus est qui ejusmodi est, et delinquit, cum sit proprio judicio damnatus (Tit. III, 10, 11). Itaque tamquam boni gubernatores quo tutius praetermeare possimus, fidei vela tendamus, Scripturarumque relegamus ordinem.

47. This monster’s cavern, your sacred Majesty, thick laid, as seafaring men do say it is, with hidden lairs, and all the neighbourhood thereof, where the rocks of unbelief echo to the howling of her black dogs, we must pass by with ears in a manner stopped. For it is written: Hedge your ears about with thorns; Sirach 28:28 and again: Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers; Philippians 3:2 and yet again: A man that is an heretic, avoid after the first reproof, knowing that such an one is fallen, and is in sin, being condemned of his own judgment. Titus 3:10-11 So then, like prudent pilots, let us set the sails of our faith for the course wherein we may pass by most safely, and again follow the coasts of the Scriptures.

CAPUT VII.

EX PAULO, PROPHETIS atque Evangelio Christus asseritur Patri similis; maxime vero ex hominis ad similitudinem divinam creatione.

CHAPTER 7.

The likeness of Christ to the Father is asserted on the authority of St. Paul, the prophets, and the Gospel, and especially in reliance upon the creation of man in God's image.

48. Apostolus dicit imaginem Patris Christum esse; ait enim quod ipse sit imago Dei invisibilis, primogenitus universae creaturae (Coloss. I, 15). Primogenitus, inquit, non primocreatus; ut et genitus pro natura, et primus pro perpetuitate credatur. Alibi quoque Apostolus asseruit quod ipsum posuit haeredem omnium, per quem fecit et saecula, qui est splendor gloriae, et character substantiae ejus (Hebr. I, 2). Imaginem Apostolus dicit, et Arius dicit esse dissimilem: cur imago, si similitudinem non habet? in picturis homines nolunt esse dissimiles, et Arius dissimilem Patrem contendit Filio, et vult ut Pater dissimilem genuerit sui, quasi impotens qui generare similem non potuerit.

48. The Apostle says that Christ is the image of the Father — for he calls Him the image of the invisible God, the first-begotten of all creation. First-begotten, mark you, not first-created, in order that He may be believed to be both begotten, in virtue of His nature, and first in virtue of His eternity. In another place also the Apostle has declared that God made the Son heir of all things, by Whom also He made the worlds, Who is the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His substance. Hebrews 1:2 The Apostle calls Christ the image of the Father, and Arius says that He is unlike the Father. Why, then, is He called an image, if He has no likeness? Men will not have their portraits unlike them, and Arius contends that the Father is unlike the Son, and would have it that the Father has begotten one unlike Himself, as though unable to generate His like.

49. Prophetae dicunt: In lumine tuo videbimus lumen (Psal. XXXV, 10). Prophetae dicunt: Splendor est enim lucis aeternae, et speculum sine macula Dei majestatis, et imago bonitatis illius (Sap. VII, 26). Vide quanta dicantur. Splendor; quod claritas paternae lucis in Filio sit: speculum sine macula; quod Pater videatur in Filio: imago bonitatis; quod non corpus in corpore, sed virtus in Filio tota cernatur. Imago docet non esse dissimilem, character expressum esse significat, splendor signat aeternum. Imago utique non vultus est corporalis, non fucis composita, non ceris: sed simplex de Deo, egressa de Patre, expressa de fonte.

49. The prophets say: In Your light we shall see light; and again: Wisdom is the brightness of everlasting light, and the spotless mirror of God's majesty, the image of His goodness. Wisdom 7:26 See what great names are declared! Brightness, because in the Son the Father's glory shines clearly: spotless mirror, because the Father is seen in the Son: John 12:45 image of goodness, because it is not one body seen reflected in another, but the whole power [of the Godhead] in the Son. The word image teaches us that there is no difference; expression, that He is the counterpart of the Father's form; and brightness declares His eternity. The image in truth is not that of a bodily countenance, not one made up of colors, nor modelled in wax, but simply derived from God, coming out from the Father, drawn from the fountainhead.

50. Per hanc imaginem Philippo Patrem Dominus demonstravit, dicens: Philippe, qui me videt, videt et Patrem. Et quomodo tu dicis: Ostende nobis Patrem? Non credis quia ego in Patre, et Pater in me est (Joan. XIV, 9 et 10)? Videt enim in imagine Patrem, qui videt in Filio. Vides quam imaginem dicat? Imago ista veritas est, imago ista justitia est, imago ista Dei virtus est: non muta, quia Verbum est: non insensibilis, quia sapientia est: non inanis, quia virtus est: non vacua, quia vita est: non mortua, quia resurrectio est. Vides ergo quia dum imago dicitur, Patrem significat esse cujus imago sit Filius; quia nemo potest ipse sibi imago sua esse.

50. By means of this image the Lord showed Philip the Father, saying, Philip, he that sees Me, sees the Father also. How then do you say, Show us the Father? Do you not believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me? John 14:9-10 Yes, he who looks upon the Son sees, in portrait, the Father. Mark what manner of portrait is spoken of. It is Truth, Righteousness, the Power of God: not dumb, for it is the Word; not insensible, for it is Wisdom; not vain and foolish, for it is Power; not soulless, for it is the Life; not dead, for it is the Resurrection. You see, then, that while an image is spoken of, the meaning is that it is the Father, Whose image the Son is, seeing that no one can be his own image.

51. Plura possem de Filii testimoniis dicere, sed ne forte ipse sibi nimium favisse dicatur, Patrem interrogemus. Nempe ipse dixit: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram (Gen. I, 26). Pater Filio dicit: Ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram; et tu dissimilem Filium Dei dicis?

51. More might I set down from the Son’s testimony; howbeit, lest He perchance appear to have asserted Himself overmuch, let us enquire of the Father. For the Father said, Let us make man in Our image and likeness. Genesis 1:26 The Father says to the Son in Our image and likeness, and you say that the Son of God is unlike the Father.

52. Joannes dicit: Dilecti, filii Dei sumus, et nondum apparet quid erimus: scimus quia si revelatum fuerit, similes ei erimus (I Joan. III, 2). O improvida amentia! o impudens pervicacia! Homines sumus, et in quo possumus, ad similitudinem Dei erimus; et similem audemus Dei Filium denegare? 454

52. John says, Beloved, we are sons of God, and it does not yet appear what we shall be: we know that if He be revealed, we shall be like Him. 1 John 3:2 O blind madness! O shameless obstinacy! We are men, and, so far as we may, we shall be in the likeness of God: dare we deny that the Son is like God?

53. Ergo Pater dixit: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram. In principio ipsius mundi Patrem et Filium esse audio, et unum opus cerno. Audio loquentem, agnosco facientem; sed et Patris et Filii unam imaginem, unam similitudinem lego. Similitudo haec non diversitatis, sed unitatis est. Quod igitur tibi usurpas, Filio Dei derogas; cum utique nisi per imaginem Dei, ad imaginem Dei esse non possis.

53. Therefore the Father has said: Let us make man in Our image and likeness. At the beginning of the universe itself, as I read, the Father and the Son existed, and I see one creation. I hear Him that speaks. I acknowledge Him that does: but it is of one image, one likeness, that I read. This likeness belongs not to diversity but to unity. What, therefore, you claim for yourself, you take from the Son of God, seeing, indeed, that you can not be in the image of God, save by help of the image of God.

CAPUT VIII.

EX PROBATA FILII cum Patre similitudine, eumdem aeternum etiam esse haud aegre demonstrari, quod nihilominus astruitur e prophetia Esaiae, ac Joannis Evangelio; cujus ultimi auctoritate obrui haeresiarchae declarantur.

CHAPTER 8.

The likeness of the Son to the Father being proved, it is not hard to prove the Son's eternity, though, indeed, this may be established on the authority of the Prophet Isaiah and St. John the Evangelist, by which authority the heretical leaders are shown to be refuted.

54. [Alias cap. V.] Claret igitur non esse dissimilem, et ideo proclivior via est, ut etiam sempiternum esse fateamur, cum similis sempiterni utique sempiternus sit. Si autem Patrem sempiternum dicimus, et hoc idem Filium denegamus, dicimus esse dissimilem; sempiterno enim temporale dissimile est. Clamat Propheta sempiternum, clamat et Apostolus sempiternum: plenum est vetus Testamentum testimoniis Filii sempiterni, plenum est novum.

54. It is plain, therefore, that the Son is not unlike the Father, and so we may confess the more readily that He is also eternal, seeing that He Who is like the Eternal must needs be eternal. But if we say that the Father is eternal, and yet deny this of the Son, we say that the Son is unlike the Father, for the temporal differs from the eternal. The Prophet proclaims Him eternal, and the Apostle proclaims Him eternal; the Testaments, Old and New alike, are full of witness to the Son's eternity.

55. Ordinem ergo teneamus. Scriptum est in veteri Testamento, ut vel unum de pluribus dicam: Ante me non fuit alius Deus, et post me non erit (Esai. XLIII, 10). Nihil ergo argumentabor, teipsum interrogo. Quis hoc dicit, Pater, an Filius? Utrum dixeris, eo te convinci intelliges: vel si credas, doceri? Quis ergo hoc dicit, Pater, an Filius? Si Filius: Ante me, inquit, non fuit alius Deus: Si Pater: Post me, inquit, non erit. Hic priorem, ille posteriorem non habet: invicem in se et Pater in Filio, et Filius in Patre cognoscitur. Cum enim Patrem dixeris, ejus etiam Filium designasti; quia nemo ipse sibi pater est: cum Filium nominas, etiam Patrem ejus fateris; quia nemo ipse sibi filius est. Itaque nec Filius sine Patre, nec Pater potest esse sine Filio. Semper igitur Pater, semper et Filius.

55. Let us take them, then, in their order. In the Old Testament — to cite one out of a multitude of testimonies — it is written: Before Me has there been no other God, and after Me shall there be none. Isaiah 43:10 I will not comment on this place, but ask you straight: Who speaks these words — the Father or the Son? Whichever of the two you say, you will find yourself convinced, or, if a believer, instructed. Who, then, speaks these words, the Father or the Son? If it is the Son, He says, Before Me has there been no other God; if the Father, He says, After Me shall there be none. The One has none before Him, the Other none that comes after; as the Father is known in the Son, so also is the Son known in the Father, for whenever you speak of the Father, you speak also by implication of His Son, seeing that none is his own father; and when you name the Son, you do also acknowledge His Father, inasmuch as none can be his own son. And so neither can the Son exist without the Father, nor the Father without the Son. The Father, therefore, is eternal, and the Son also eternal.

56. In principio enim erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum, hoc erat in principio apud Deum (Joan. I, 1). Erat, inquit, apud Deum. Erat, erat, erat, erat: ecce quater erat. Ubi impius invenit quod non erat? Alibi quoque Joannes in epistola sua dicit: Quod erat in principio (I Joan. I, 1); indefinite tenditur, erat: quidquid excogitaveris, erat Filius.

56. In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. Was, mark you, with God. Was — see, we have was four times over. Where did the blasphemer find it written that He was not. Again, John, in another passage — in his Epistle — speaks of That which was in the beginning. 1 John 1:1 The extension of the was is infinite. Conceive any length of time you will, yet still the Son was.

57. Omnes autem haereses hoc capitulo brevi piscator noster exclusit. Quod enim erat in principio, non includitur tempore, non principio praevenitur. Ergo Arius conticescat. Quod autem erat apud Deum, non permixtione confunditur: sed manentis Verbi apud Patrem solida perfectione distinguitur, ut Sabellius obmutescat. Et Deus erat Verbum. Non ergo in prolatione sermonis hoc Verbum est, sed in illa coelestis designatione virtutis, ut confutetur 455 Photinus. Quod vero erat in principio apud Deum, sempiternae divinitatis in Patre et Filio inseparabilis unitas edocetur ut erubescat Eunomius. Postremo cum omnia per ipsum facta dicantur, ipse conditor novi utique Testamenti et veteris designatur; ut Manichaeus locum tentationis habere non possit. Ita piscator bonus intra unum omnes rete conclusit; ut faceret inhabiles fraudi, quamvis essent inutiles captioni.

57. Now in this short passage our fisherman has barred the way of all heresy. For that which was in the beginning is not comprehended in time, is not preceded by any beginning. Let Arius, therefore, hold his peace. Moreover, that which was with God is not confounded and mingled with Him, but is distinguished by the perfection unblemished which it has as the Word abiding with God; and so let Sabellius keep silence. And the Word was God. This Word, therefore, consists not in uttered speech, but in the designation of celestial excellence, so that Photinus' teaching is refuted. Furthermore, by the fact that in the beginning He was with God is proven the indivisible unity of eternal Godhead in Father and Son, to the shame and confusion of Eunomius. Lastly, seeing that all things are said to have been made by Him, He is plainly shown to be author of the Old and of the New Testament alike; so that the Manichæan can find no ground for his assaults. Thus has the good fisherman caught them all in one net, to make them powerless to deceive, albeit unprofitable fish to take.

HAERETICOS INTERROGAT VIR sanctus, ostensaque illorum responsione, qua Filium omni quidem tempore priorem, Patre autem posteriorem esse affirmabant, in Deum induci mutationem, aeternitatem utrique personae tribuendam colligit.

CHAPTER 9.

St. Ambrose questions the heretics and exhibits their answer, which is, that the Son existed, indeed, before all time, yet was not co-eternal with the Father, whereat the Saint shows that they represent the Godhead as changeable, and further, that each Person must be believed to be eternal.

58. Dic mihi, haeretice, dat enim veniam elementissimus imperator, ut te non colloquendi studio, nec audiendi cupiditate, sed exponendi gratia, paulisper alloquar: dic mihi, inquam, fuitne aliquando tempus quo omnipotens Deus Pater non erat, et Deus erat? Tempus, inquis, non astruo. Bene et argute. Si enim tempus dixeris, te ipse convinces: quia necesse est asseras fuisse tempus ante Filium, cum Filius temporis auctor sit et creator; non potest enim post opus suum ipse coepisse: necesse est igitur auctorem operis sui esse fatearis.

58. Tell me, thou heretic — for the surpassing clemency of the Emperor grants me this indulgence of addressing you for a short space, not that I desire to confer with you, or am greedy to hear your arguments, but because I am willing to exhibit them — tell me, I say, whether there was ever a time when God Almighty was not the Father, and yet was God. I say nothing about time, is your answer. Well and subtly objected! For if you bring time into the dispute, you will condemn yourself, seeing that you must acknowledge that there was a time when the Son was not, whereas the Son is the ruler and creator of time. He cannot have begun to exist after His own work. You, therefore, must needs allow Him to be the ruler and maker of His work.

59. Ante tempora, inquis, non nego Filium: sed cum Filium dico, ostendo priorem Patrem, quia Pater, inquis, Filio prior. Quid est hoc? Negas esse tempus ante Filium, et tamen nescio quid ante Filium vis praecessise, quod temporis sit; et ostendis media nescio quae molimina fuisse generandi, in quo generationem Patris significas temporalem. Nam si Pater esse coepit, Deus ergo primo erat, postea Pater factus est. Quomodo ergo immutabilis Deus? Si enim ante Deus, postea Pater: utique generationis accessione mutatus est.

59. I do not say, do you answer, that the Son existed not before time; but when I call Him Son, I declare that His Father existed before Him, for, as you say, father exists before son. But what means this? You deny that time was before the Son, and yet you will have it that something preceded the existence of the Son — some creature of time — and you show certain stages of generation intervening, whereby thou dost give us to understand that the generation from the Father was a process in time. For if He began to be a Father, then, in the first instance, He was God, and afterwards He became a Father. How, then, is God unchangeable? For if He was first God, and then the Father, surely He has undergone change by reason of the added and later act of generation.

60. Sed avertat Deus hanc amentiam; nos enim ad impietatem eorum redarguendam, hanc retulimus quaestionem. Pia namque mens generationem sine tempore asserit; ut et sempiternum Patrem cum Filio dicat, nec aliquando asserat esse mutatum.

60. But may God preserve us from this madness; for it was but to confute the impiety of the heretics that we brought in this question. The devout spirit affirms a generation that is not in time, and so declares Father and Son to be co-eternal, and does not maintain that God has ever suffered change.

61. Jungat igitur honorificentia Patri Filium, quem divinitas junxit: non separet impietas, quem generationis proprietas copulavit. Honorificemus Filium, ut honorificemus et Patrem, sicut et in Evangelio scriptum est (Joan. V, 23). Sempiternitas Filii Paternae majestatis insigne est. Si iste non semper fuit, ergo ille mutatus est: sed semper fuit Filius, ergo nec Pater aliquando mutatus est; quia immutabilis semper est. Itaque videmus quod illi qui volunt negare Filium sempiternum, volunt Patrem docere esse mutatum. 456

61. Let Father and Son, therefore, be associated in worship, even as They are associated in Godhead; let not blasphemy put asunder those whom the close bond of generation has joined together. Let us honour the Son, that we may honour the Father also, as it is written in the Gospel. John 5:23 The Son’s eternity is the adornment of the Father’s majesty. If the Son has not been from everlasting, then the Father has suffered change; but the Son is from all eternity, therefore has the Father never changed, for He is always unchangeable. And thus we see that they who would deny the Son’s eternity would teach that the Father is mutable.

CAPUT X.

UBI CHRISTI AETERNITATEM confirmavit ex Apostolo, Divinam generationem non ad humanae modulum exigendam, aut curiosius excutiendam, at declinatis quae hinc nascuntur, difficultatibus, quidquid more corporeo de hac generatione dicitur, spiritali sensu intelligendum esse declarat.

CHAPTER 10.

Christ's eternity being proved from the Apostle's teaching, St. Ambrose admonishes us that the Divine Generation is not to be thought of after the fashion of human procreation, nor to be too curiously pried into. With the difficulties thence arising he refuses to deal, saying that whatsoever terms, taken from our knowledge of body, are used in speaking of this Divine Generation, must be understood with a spiritual meaning.

62. Accipe aliud quo clareat Filium sempiternum. Apostolus dicit quod Dei sempiterna virtus sit atque divinitas (Rom. I, 20): virtus autem Dei Christus; scriptum est enim Christum esse Dei virtutem, et Dei sapientiam (I Cor. I, 24). Ergo si Christus est Dei virtus, quia virtus Dei sempiterna: sempiternus igitur et Christus.

62. Hear now another argument, showing clearly the eternity of the Son. The Apostle says that God's Power and Godhead are eternal, and that Christ is the Power of God — for it is written that Christ is the Power of God and the Wisdom of God. If, then, Christ is the Power of God, it follows that, forasmuch as God's Power is eternal, Christ also is eternal.

63. Non ergo ex usu generationis humanae calumniam, haeretice, struas; neque ex nostro sermone componas. Neque enim angustis sermonibus nostris immensae magnitudinem possumus divinitatis includere, cujus magnitudinis non est finis (Ps. CXLIV, 3). Namque hominis generationem si definire contendas, tempus ostendis: generatio autem divina supra omnia est: late patet, supra omnes cogitationes ascendit et sensus. Scriptum est enim: Nemo venit ad Patrem, nisi per me (Joan. XIV, 6). Quidquid igitur de Patre cogitaveris, quamlibet ejus aeternitatem, non potes de eo aliquid nisi per Filium cogitare: nec potest ullus ad Patrem nisi per Filium transire sensus. Hic est, inquit, Filius meus dilectissimus (Matth. XVII, 5). Est, inquit, qui quod est, semper est. Unde et David: In aeternum, inquit, Domine, permanet Verbum tuum in coelo (Ps. CXVIII, 89). Quod enim manet, nec substantia, nec aeternitate deficit.

63. You can not, then, heretic, build up a false doctrine from the custom of human procreation, nor yet gather the wherewithal for such work from our discourse, for we cannot compass the greatness of infinite Godhead, of Whose greatness there is no end, in our straitened speech. If you should seek to give an account of a man’s birth, you must needs point to a time. But the Divine Generation is above all things; it reaches far and wide, it rises high above all thought and feeling. For it is written: No man comes to the Father, save by Me. John 14:6 Whatsoever, therefore, thou dost conceive concerning the Father — yea, be it even His eternity — you can not conceive anything concerning Him save by the Son’s aid, nor can any understanding ascend to the Father save through the Son. This is My dearly-beloved Son, the Father says. Is mark you — He Who is, what He is, forever. Hence also David is moved to say: O Lord, Your Word abides for ever in heaven, — for what abides fails neither in existence nor in eternity.

64. Quaeris a me quomodo Filius sit, si non priorem habeat Patrem? Quaero item abs te, quando aut quomodo Filium putes esse generatum? Mihi enim impossibile est generationis scire secretum: mens deficit, vox silet, non mea tantum, sed et angelorum. Supra Potestates, supra Angelos, supra Cherubim, supra Seraphim, supra omnem sensum est; quia scriptum est; Pax autem Christi quae est supra omnem sensum (Phil. IV, 7). Si pax Christi supra omnem sensum est, quemadmodum non est supra omnem sensum tanta generatio?

64. Do you ask me how He is a Son, if He have not a Father existing before Him? I ask of you, in turn, when, or how, do you think that the Son was begotten. For me the knowledge of the mystery of His generation is more than I can attain to, — the mind fails, the voice is dumb — ay, and not mine alone, but the angels' also. It is above Powers, above Angels, above Cherubim, Seraphim, and all that has feeling and thought, for it is written: The peace of Christ, which passes all understanding. If the peace of Christ passes all understanding, how can so wondrous a generation but be above all understanding?

65. Tu quoque manum ori admove, scrutari non licet superna mysteria. Licet scire quod natus sit: non licet discutere quemadmodum natus sit. Illud negare mihi non licet, hoc quaerere metus est. Nam si Paulus ea quae audivit raptus in tertium coelum, ineffabilia dicit, quomodo nos exprimere possumus paternae generationis arcanum, quod nec sentire potuimus, nec audire?

65. Do thou, then (like the angels), cover your face with your hands, for it is not given you to look into surpassing mysteries! We are suffered to know that the Son is begotten, not to dispute upon the manner of His begetting. I cannot deny the one; the other I fear to search into, for if Paul says that the words which he heard when caught up into the third heaven might not be uttered, 2 Corinthians 12:2-5 how can we explain the secret of this generation from and of the Father, which we can neither hear nor attain to with our understanding?

66. Verum si me ad consuetudinem trahis generationis humanae, ut Patrem dicas priorem; vide utrum ad generationem Dei terrenae generationis exempla conveniant. Si secundum hominem loquamur, negare non poteris priores esse in homine patris quam filii passiones. 457 Prior crevit, prior senuit, prior doluit, prior flevit. Si igitur hic tempore minor, ille antiquior passione. Si hic generationis incurrit aetatem, nec ille generandi evasit pudorem.

66. But if you will constrain me to the rule of human generation, that you may be allowed to say that the Father existed before the Son, then consider whether instances, taken from the generation of earthly creatures, are suitable to show forth the Divine Generation. If we speak according to what is customary among men, you cannot deny that, in man, the changes in the father's existence happen before those in the son's. The father is the first to grow, to enter old age, to grieve, to weep. If, then, the son is after him in time, he is older in experience than the son. If the child comes to be born, the parent escapes not the shame of begetting.

67. Quid te ista quaestionum tormenta delectant? Audis Dei Filium: aut dele nomen, aut agnosce naturam. Audis uterum, agnosce generationis perspicuae veritatem. Audis cor, Verbum intellige. Audis dexteram, agnosce virtutem. Audis os, agnosce sapientiam. Non haec sunt in Deo corporaliter aestimanda. Incomprehensibiliter generatur Filius: impassibiliter generat Pater; et tamen ex se generavit, et ante omnem intellectum generavit Deus verus Deum verum. Pater diligit, et tu discutis: Pater complacet, et tu cum Judaeis invides: Pater honorificat, et tu cum gentibus conviciaris.

67. Why take such delight in that rack of questioning? You hear the name of the Son of God; abolish it, then, or acknowledge His true nature. You hear speak of the womb — acknowledge the truth of undoubted begetting. Of His heart — know that here is God's word. Of His right hand — confess His power. Of His face — acknowledge His wisdom. These words are not to be understood, when we speak of God, as when we speak of bodies. The generation of the Son is incomprehensible, the Father begets impassibly, and yet of Himself and in ages inconceivably remote has very God begotten very God. The Father loves the Son, John 5:20 and you anxiously examine His Person; the Father is well pleased in Him, you, joining the Jews, look upon Him with an evil eye; the Father knows the Son, and you join the heathen in reviling Him. Luke 23:36-37

NON POSSE PROBARI e Scriptura Patrem Filio priorem esse; neque etiam argumentis ex hominum generatione desumptis; cum inde innumera secutura essent absurda: quod autem Christum ex tempore natum audent pronuntiare, id cumulum esse impietatis.

CHAPTER 11.

It cannot be proved from Scripture that the Father existed before the Son, nor yet can arguments taken from human reproduction avail to this end, since they bring in absurdities without end. To dare to affirm that Christ began to exist in the course of time is the height of blasphemy.

68. Quaeris a me utrum prior non possit esse, qui Pater est. Quaero a te, ut doceas quando Pater prior fuerit, testimoniis, aut argumentis collige veritatem. Si testimoniis, accepisti utique sempiternam Dei esse virtutem. Legisti etiam dicentem: Israel, si me audieris, non erit in te Deus recens, neque adorabis Deum alienum (Ps. LXXX, 10). Aliud horum aeternitatem, aliud proprietatem substantiae indifferentis significat; ut neque posteriorem Patre, neque alterius divinitatis Filium esse credamus. Nam si Patre posterior est, recens est: et si unius non est divinitatis, alienus est. Sed nec posterior; quia recens non est: nec alienus, quia ex Patre natus; quia supra omnia est Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. IX, 5), sicut scriptum est.

68. You ask me whether it is possible that He Who is the Father should not be prior in existence. I ask you to tell me when the Father existed, the Son as yet being not; prove this, gather it from argument or evidence of Scripture. If you lean upon arguments, you have doubtless been taught that God's power is eternal. Again, you have read the Scripture that says: O Israel, if you will hearken unto Me, there shall be no new God in you, neither shall you worship a strange God. The first of these commands betokens [the Son's] eternity, the second His possession of an identical nature, so that we can neither believe Him to have come into existence after the Father, nor suppose Him the Son of another Divinity. For if He existed not always with the Father, He is a new [God]; if He is not of one Divinity with the Father, He is a strange [God]. But He is not after the Father, for He is not a new God; nor is He a strange God, for He is begotten of the Father, and because, as it is written, He is God above all, blessed forever. Romans 9:5

69. Sed si alienum putant, cur adorant eum, cum scriptum sit: Neque adorabis Deum alienum (Ps. LXXX, 10)? Aut si non adorant, fateantur, et finis est; ne quem sub religiosi nominis professione decipiant. Haec nempe sunt testimonia Scripturarum. Aut si habes aliud, proferre debebis.

69. But if the Arians believe Him to be a strange God, why do they worship Him, when it is written: You shall worship no strange God? Else, if they do not worship the Son, let them confess thereto, and the case is at an end — that they deceive no one by their professions of religion. This, then, we see, is the witness of the Scriptures. If you have any others to produce, it will be your business to do so.

70. Superest ut et argumentis veritas colligatur. Quamquam etiam humanis testimoniis argumenta cedere soleant; argumentare tamen, haeretice, ut voles. Usu, inquis, accipimus eo qui nascitur, priorem esse qui generat. Persequere igitur omnia vestigia consuetudinis, et sicaetera conveniunt, non obsisto quin et istud requiras: si autem nulla concordant, quemadmodum cum desint caetera, hoc solum exigis? Ergo quia usum requiris, quando generatus est ex Patre, parvulus fuit. Vidisti in cunis infantulum vagientem,

70. Let us now go further, and gather the truth in conclusion from arguments. For although arguments usually give place, even to human evidence, still, heretic, argue as you will. Experience teaches us, you say, that the being which generates is prior to that which is generated. I answer: Follow our customary experience through all its departments, and if the rest agree herewith, I oppose not your claim that your point be granted; but if there be no such agreement, how can you claim assent on this one point, when in all the rest you lack support? Seeing, then, that you call for what is customary, it comes about that the Son, when He was begotten of the Father, was a little child. You have seen Him an infant, crying in the cradle. As the years passed, He has gone forward from strength to strength — for if He was weak with the weakness of things begotten, He must also have fallen under the weakness, not only of birth, but of life also.

71. Sed fortasse eo prolabaris amentiae, ut de Dei Filio ista non abnuas, qui eum ex infirmitate metiris humana; quid si Deum negare non potes nomine, infirmitate tamen hominem vis probare? Quid si dum Filium discutis, Patrem arguis: et dum Christo praejudicas, Patrem adjudicas?

71. But perchance you run to such a pitch of folly as not to flinch from asserting these things of the Son of God, measuring Him, as you do, by the rule of human infirmity. What, then, if, while you cannot refuse Him the name of God, you are bent to prove Him, by reason of weakness, to be a man? What if, while you examine the Person of the Son, you are calling the Father in question, and while you hastily pass sentence upon the Former, you include the Latter in the same condemnation!

72. Nam si divina generatio subjecta tempori fuit, et id ex usu generationis usurpatur humanae; ergo et Pater corporali utero portavit Filium, decem mensium curriculis onus vexit. Sed quomodo sine sexu altero generationis usus? Vides solemnem generationis seriem non coepisse, et tu partus cujusdam corporeae necessitatis putas fuisse solemnes. Tu usum quaeris, ego sexum: tu tempus exigis, ego ordinem: tu finem discutis, ego quaero principium, Nempe finis ex principio, non principium pendet ex fine.

72. If the Divine Generation has been subject to the limits of time — if we suppose this, borrowing from the custom of human generation, then it follows, further, that the Father bare the Son in a bodily womb, and laboured under the burden while ten months sped their courses. But how can generation, as it commonly takes place, be brought about without the help of the other sex? You see that the common order of generation was not the commencement, and you think that the courses of generation, which are ruled by certain necessities whereunto bodies are subject, have always prevailed. You require the customary course, I ask for difference of sex: you demand the supposition of time, I that of order: you enquire into the end, I into the beginning. Now surely it is the end that depends on the beginning, not the beginning on the end.

73. Omne, inquis, quod natum est, principium habet; et ideo quia Filius est, principium habet, et ex tempore esse coepit. Quod ipsorum ore sit dictum. Ego autem Filium natum esse profiteor: quod reliquum est impietatis, horresco. Deum confiteris, homo, et tali circumscribis calumnia? Deus hanc averruncet amentiam.

73. Everything, say you, that is begotten has a beginning, and therefore because the Son is the Son, He has a beginning, and came first into existence within limits of time. Let this be taken as the word of their own mouth; as for myself, I confess that the Son is begotten, but the rest of their declaration makes me shudder. Man, do you confess God, and diminish His honour by such slander? From this madness may God deliver us.

CAPUT XII.

ITERATAE IN FILIUM objectioni iterum respondetur eam retorqueri etiam in Patrem posse; cum ergo Pater nec loco, nec tempore, aliave ulla creatura indigeat, sic nec eorum indigentiam attribuendam Filio: cujus singularis generatio est non solum e Patre, sed etiam e Virgine; proptereaque cum in hac non sexus aut similia locum habuerint, in illa quoque non habuisse.

Further objections to the Godhead of the Son are met by the same answer — to wit, that they may equally be urged against the Father also. The Father, then, being in no way confined by time, place, or anything else created, no such limitation is to be imposed upon the Son, Whose marvellous generation is not only of the Father, but of the Virgin also, and therefore, since in His generation of the Father no distinction of sex, or the like, was involved, neither was it in His generation of the Virgin.

74. Rursus objiciunt: Ergo non est Filius, si non habet quae habent filii. Ignoscat mihi Pater, ignoscat Filius, ignoscat et Spiritus sanctus, quaestionem pro pietate referre cupienti. Est certe Pater, et manet semper: sunt etiam creaturae pro dispositione divina. Est ergo aliquid earum quod non subjectum sit aut locis, aut temporibus, aut creationi, aut causae alicui vel auctori? Profecto nihil. Quid ergo dicitis? Est horum aliquid quo egeat Pater? Impium est dicere. Ergo aut desinite, quae creaturarum sunt, aptare divinitati: aut si comparare contenditis, considerate quo vestra procedat impietas; quod absit ut vel in sensus nostros aliquando veniat.

74. The next objection is this: If the Son has not those properties which all sons have, He is no Son. May Father, Son, and Holy Spirit pardon me, for I would propound the question in all devoutness. Surely the Father is, and abides for ever: created things, too, are as God has ordained them. Is there any one, then, among these creatures which is not subject to the limitations of place, time, or the fact of having been created, or to some originating cause or creator. Surely, none. What, then? Is there any one of them whereof the Father stands in need? So to say were blasphemy. Cease, then, to apply to the Godhead what is proper only to created existences, or, if you insist upon forcing the comparison, bethink you whither your wickedness leads. God forbid that we should even behold the end thereof.

75. Nos enim piam responsionem tenemus. Namque omnipotens Deus est, et ideo nullo eorum Pater indiget, qui non habet mutationem sui aliquam, vel profectum quo nos egemus, quorum infirmitas ex hujusmodi rebus profectum accipit. Qui autem omnipotens est, 459 utique non creatus, et sine loco, et supra tempora est. Nihil enim ante Deum, immo hoc ipsum Verbum, ante Deum dicere esse aliquid, grave. Ergo si ita est, quia nihil horum est in Deo Patre, quae profectum significent; quia Deus est: nihil horum aptari etiam potest Dei Filio, ut vel initium accipiat, vel profectum; quia Deus verus ex Deo vero est.

75. We maintain the answer given by piety. God is Almighty, and therefore God the Father needs none of those things, for in Him there is no changing, nor any place for such help as we need, we whose weakness is supported by means of things of this kind. But He Who is Almighty, plainly He is uncreate, and not confined to any place, and surpasses time. Before God was not anything — nay, even to speak about anything being before God is a grave sin. If, then, you grant that in the nature of God the Father there is nought that implies a being sustained, because He is God, it follows that nothing of this sort can be supposed to exist in the Son of God, nothing that connotes a beginning, or growth, forasmuch as He is very God of very God.

76. Ergo quia usitatum non reperimus ordinem, acquiesce, Ariane, praecipuam Filii generationem fuisse. Acquiesce, inquam; et si mihi non credis, erubesce vel Dei vocem dicentis: Cui me similem aestimastis (Esai. XLVI, 5)? Et iterum: Quia non sicut homo, ita et Deus (Num. XXIII, 19). Etenim si operatio Dei praecipua est, quia non manibus operatur aliquid, non labore conficit, non diebus absolvit; Ipse enim dixit, et facta sunt, ipse mandavit, et creata sunt (Psal. CXLVIII, 5): cur non credamus praecipuam generationem esse ejus in Filio, cujus praecipuam creationem in operibus agnoscimus? Dignum certe est ut specialiter et praecipue videatur generasse Filium. Habeat generationis inusitatae gloriam, qui habet potestatis inusitatae gratiam.

76. Seeing, then, that we find not the customary order prevailing, be content, Arian, to believe in a miraculous generation of the Son. Be content, I say, and if you believe me not, at least have respect unto the voice of God saying, To whom have you esteemed Me to be like? Isaiah 46:5 and again: God is not like a man that He should repent. Numbers 23:19 If, indeed, God works mysteriously, seeing that He does not work any work, or fashion anything, or bring it to completion, by labor of hands, or in any course of days, for He spoke, and they were made; He gave the word and they were created, why should we not believe that He Whom we acknowledge as a Creator, mysteriously working, discerning it in His works, also begot His Son in a mysterious manner? Surely it is fitting that He should be regarded as having begotten the Son in a special and mysterious way. Let Him Who has the grace of majesty unrivalled likewise have the glory of mysterious generation.

77. Non sola admirabilis ex Patre generatio Christi, admirabilis etiam ipsa generatio ejus ex Virgine. Tu illam dicis nostrae similem conceptionis, et ego probo et istam nostrae esse dissimilem, immo te ipsum cogam fateri. Dic quemadmodum sit natus ex Maria, quo usu uterus eum habuerit virginalis, quomodo sine semine viri partus, unde virgo praegnans, quemadmodum puella mater ante fetus, quam copulam ut uxor experta? Causa deerat, et generabatur filius. Unde ergo legis novatae partus?

77. Not only Christ's generation of the Father, but His birth also of the Virgin, demands our wonder. You say that the former is like the manner wherein we men are conceived. I will show — nay more, I will compel you yourself to confess, that the latter also has no likeness to the manner of our birth. Tell me how it was that He was born of Mary, with what law did His conception in a Virgin's womb agree, how there could be any birth without the seed of a man, how a maiden could become great with child, how she became a mother before experience of such intercourse as is between wives and husbands. There was no [visible] cause — and yet a son was begotten. How, then, came about this birth, under a new law?

78. Si igitur in Virgine usus defuit generationis humanae, quemadmodum in Deo Patre propriae generationis usum requiris? Certe usus in sexu est, quia sexus in carne est: ubi ergo caro non est, quemadmodum carnis infirmitatem exigis? Nemo meliorem discutit: credere tibi jussum est, non discutere permissum est. Scriptum est enim: Credidit Abraham Deo, et reputatum est illi ad justitiam (Gen. XV, 6). Nec solum in generatione Filii sermo deficit, sed etiam in operibus Dei. Scriptum est enim: Omnia opera ejus in fide (Psal. XXXII, 4). Opera ergo in fide, generatio sine fide? Et discutimus quae non videmus, qui jubemur credere magis quam discutere, quae videmus.

78. If, then, the common order of human generation was not found in the case of the Virgin Mary, how can you demand that God the Father should beget in such wise as you were begotten in? Surely the common order is determined by difference of sex; for this is implanted in the nature of our flesh, but where flesh is not, how can you expect to find the infirmity of flesh? No man calls in question one who is better than he is: to believe is enjoined upon you, without permission to question. For it is written, Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Genesis 15:6 Language is vain to set forth, not only the generation of the Son, but even the works of God, for it is written: All His works are executed in faithfulness; His works, then, are done in faithfulness, but not His generation? Ay, we call in question that which we see not, we who are bidden to believe rather than enquire of that we see.

CAPUT XIII.

QUAESTIONEM QUOMODO GENITUS sit Filius solvit sanctus Doctor; et revelationi credendum Nabuchodonosoris ac Petri exemplo docet. Hujus ultimi visione aeternitatem divinitatemque Filii signatam esse; atque adeo illi credendum neglectis philosophis, quibus jam ubique fides abrogabatur. Contra vero gentilibus ostenduntur similes Ariani.

Discussion of the Divine Generation is continued. St. Ambrose illustrates its method by the same example as that employed by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. The duty of believing what is revealed is shown by the example of Nebuchadnezzar and St. Peter. By the vision granted to St. Peter was shown the Son's Eternity and Godhead — the Apostle, then, must be believed in preference to the teachers of philosophy, whose authority was everywhere falling into discredit. The Arians, on the other hand, are shown to be like the heathen.

79. Dicet aliquis: Quomodo generatus est Filius? Quasi sempiternus, quasi Verbum, 460 quasi splendor lucis aeternae, quia simul splendor operatur, ut nascitur. Apostoli istud exemplum est, non est meum. Noli ergo credere quod fuerit vel momentum aliquod quo fuerit sine sapientia Deus, aut sine splendore lux (Hebr. I, 3). Noli, Ariane, ex nostris aestimare divina: sed divina crede, ubi humana non invenis.

79. It will be asked: In what sort was the Son begotten? As one who is for ever, as the Word, as the brightness of eternal light, Hebrews 1:3 for brightness takes effect in the instant of its coming into existence. Which example is the Apostle's, not mine. Think not, then, that there was ever a moment of time when God was without wisdom, any more than that there was ever a time when light was without radiance. Judge not, Arian, divine things by human, but believe the divine where you find not the human.

80. Rex gentilis in igne cum tribus pueris Hebraeis quarti quasi angeli vidit figuram: et quia praestare putabat angelis, Dei Filium, quem non legit, sed credidit, judicavit (Dan. III, 92). Abraham quoque tres vidit, et unum adoravit (Gen. XVIII, 2).

80. The heathen king saw in the fire, together with the three Hebrew children, the form of a fourth, like as of an angel, Daniel 3:25 and because he thought that this angel excelled all angels, he judged Him to be the Son of God, Whom he had not read of, but in Whom he believed. Abraham, also, saw Three, and adored One. Genesis 18:1-3

81. Petrus in monte Moysen et Eliam cum Filio Dei vidit, nec erravit in natura, nec erravit in gloria. Denique quid facere deberet, non illos, sed Christum interrogavit; nam etsi tribus parabat obsequium, unius tamen exspectabat imperium. Sed quoniam vel tabernaculorum numerum deferendum tribus simpliciter aestimavit, emendatur Dei Patris auctoritate dicentis: Hic est Filius meus dilectissimus, ipsum audite (Matth. XVII, 5), id est: Quid conservos tuos cum Domino socias tuo? Hic est Filius meus. Non Moyses filius, non Elias filius: sed hic Filius. Sensit emendationem apostolus, procidit in faciem, consternatus Patris voce, et Filii claritate: sed sublevatur a Filio, qui jacentes erigere consuevit. Unum vidit, solum vidit Dei Filium. Recesserunt enim servuli, ut solus Dominus, qui solus designabatur Filius, videretur.

81. Peter, when he saw Moses and Elias on the mountain, with the Son of God, was not deceived as to their nature and glory. For he enquired, not of them, but of Christ, what he ought to do, inasmuch as though he prepared to do homage to all three, yet he waited for the command of one. But since he ignorantly thought that for three persons three tabernacles should be set up, he was corrected by the sovereign voice of God the Father, saying, This is My dearly beloved Son: hear Him. Matthew 17:5 That is to say: Why do you join your fellow-servants in equality with your Lord? This is My Son. Not Moses is My Son, nor Elias is My Son, but This is My Son. The Apostle was not dull to understand the rebuke; he fell on his face, brought low by the Father's voice and the glorious beauty of the Son, but he was raised up by the Son, Whose wont it is to raise up them that are fallen. Matthew 17:6-8 Then he saw one only, Matthew 17:8 the Son of God alone, for the servants had withdrawn, that He might be seen to be Lord alone, Who alone was entitled Son.

82. Quid igitur sibi voluit illa visio, non aequalitatem Christi servorumque significans, sed mysterium signans, nisi ut appareret nobis quod Lex et Prophetae cum Evangelio congruentes, sempiternum Dei Filium, quem annuntiaverant, revelarent? Ergo et nos cum audimus ex utero Filium, ex corde Verbum, credamus quia non plasmatus manibus, sed ex Patre natus: non artificis opus, sed progenies est parentis.

82. What, then, was the purpose of that vision, which signified not that Christ and His servants were equal, but betokened a mystery, save that it should be made plain to us that the Law and the Prophets, in agreement with the Gospel, revealed as eternal the Son of God, Whom they had heralded. When we, therefore, hear of the Son coming forth of the womb, the Word from the heart, let us believe that the Son was not fashioned with hands but begotten of the Father, not the work of a craftsman but the offspring of a parent.

83. Et ideo qui dicit: Hic est Filius meus, non dixit: Hic est temporalis; non dixit: Haec est creatura mea, haec factura mea, hic servus meus; sed hic Filius meus, quem videtis in gloria. Hic est Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, Deus Jacob, qui apparuit in rubo Moysi, de quo Moyses ait: Qui est, misit me (Exod. III, 14). Non Pater in rubo, non Pater in eremo: sed Filius Moysi locutus est. Denique de ipso Stephanus dixit: Hic est qui fuit in Ecclesia, in eremo, cum angelo (Act. VII, 38). Hic est ergo qui Legem dedit, ipse qui locutus est Moysi, dicens: Ego sum Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, Deus Jacob (Exod. III, 16). Hic est ergo Deus patriarcharum, hic Deus est prophetarum.

83. He, therefore, Who said, This is My Son, said not, This is a creature of time, nor This being is of My creation, My making, My servant, but This is My Son, Whom you see glorified. This is the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob, Who appeared to Moses in the bush, Exodus 3:14 concerning Whom Moses says, He Who is has sent me. It was not the Father Who spoke to Moses in the bush or in the desert, but the Son. It was of this Moses that Stephen said, This is He Who was in the church, in the wilderness, with the Angel. Acts 7:38 This, then, is He Who gave the Law, Who spoke with Moses, saying, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob. This, then, is the God of the patriarchs, this is the God of the prophets.

84. Filium ergo legimus: mens tua percipit lectionem, edat lingua confessionem. Aufer hinc argumenta, ubi fides quaeritur: in ipsis gymnasiis suis jam dialectica taceat. Non quaero quid loquantur philosophi, requiro quid faciant. Soli in suis gymnasiis remanserunt. Vide 461 quam fides argumentis praeponderet. Illi quotidie a suis consortibus deseruntur, qui copiose disputant: isti quotidie crescunt, qui simpliciter credunt. Non creditur philosophis, creditur piscatoribus: non creditur dialecticis, creditur publicanis. Illi voluptatibus et deliciis orbem ligarunt, isti jejuniis et doloribus exuerunt. Plures itaque jam coepit illicere injuria, quam voluptas.

84. It is of the Son, therefore, that we read, your mind understands the reading, let your tongue make confession. Away with arguments, where faith is required; now let dialectic hold her peace, even in the midst of her schools. I ask not what it is that philosophers say, but I would know what they do. They sit desolate in their schools. See the victory of faith over argument. They who dispute subtly are forsaken daily by their fellows; they who with simplicity believe are daily increased. Not philosophers but fishermen, not masters of dialectic but tax-gatherers, now find credence. The one sort, through pleasures and luxuries, have bound the world's burden upon themselves; the other, by fasting and mortification, have cast it off, and so does sorrow now begin to win over more followers than pleasure.

85. Nunc videamus quo distant a gentilibus Ariani. Illi deos appellant dispares sexu, dissimiles potestate: isti Trinitatem asserunt differentis divinitatis, et dissimilis potestatis. Illi deorum suorum principium asseverant temporale; et isti Christum coepisse ex tempore mentiuntur. Nonne ex philosophia omnem impietatis suae traxerunt colorem? Illi tamen quod venerantur, amplificant: isti Dei Filium creaturam asserunt esse, qui Deus est.

85. Let us now see how far Arians and pagans do differ. The latter call upon gods, who are different in sex and unequal in power; the former affirm a Trinity where there is likewise inequality of power and diversity of Godhead. The pagans assert that their Gods began to exist once upon a time; the Arians lyingly declare that Christ began to exist in the course of time. Have they not all dyed their impiety in the vats of philosophy? But indeed the pagans do extol that which they worship, the Arians maintain that the Son of God, Who is God, is a creature.

CAPUT XIV.

CREATURAM NON ESSE Dei Filium hinc astruitur, quod non jusserit sibi praedicari Evangelium, quod creatura vanitati subdita sit, quod omnia creaverit, quod legatur genitus, quod tandem tradita fuerit generationis et adoptionis differentia: ubi utraque natura in ipso declaratur. Quae tot ac tanta testimonia Apostolici expositione confirmantur.

That the Son of God is not a created being is proved by the following arguments: (1) That He commanded not that the Gospel should be preached to Himself; (2) that a created being is given over unto vanity; (3) that the Son has created all things; (4) that we read of Him as begotten; and (5) that the difference of generation and adoption has always been understood in those places where both natures — the divine and the human — are declared to co-exist in Him. All of which testimony is confirmed by the Apostle's interpretation.

86. [Alias cap. VI.] Patuit, ut arbitror, sancte Imperator, neque dissimilem Patri, neque ex tempore esse Dominum Jesum. Restat ut illud quoque sacrilegium redarguatur, et probemus creaturam non esse Dei Filium: in quo nobis praesentis oraculum lectionis aspirat; audivimus enim legi, dicente Domino: Ite in orbem universum, et praedicate Evangelium universae creaturae (Marc. LXVI, 15). Qui universam creaturam dicit, nullam excipit. Et ideo ubi sunt, qui creaturam Christum appellant? Nam si creatura esset, numquid ipse sibi mandaret Evangelium praedicari? Non igitur creatura est, sed creator, qui docendae creaturae discipulis suis mandat officium.

86. It is now made plain, as I believe, your sacred Majesty, that the Lord Jesus is neither unlike the Father, nor one that began to exist in course of time. We have yet to confute another blasphemy, and to show that the Son of God is not a created being. Herein is the quickening word that we read as our help, for we have heard the passage read where the Lord says: Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to all creation. Mark 16:15 He Who says all creation excepts nothing. How, then, do they stand who call Christ a creature? If He were a creature, could He have commanded that the Gospel should be preached to Himself? It is not, therefore, a creature, but the Creator, Who commits to His disciples the work of teaching created beings.

87. Non creatura Christus: Vanitati enim creatura subjecta est, sicut Apostolus dixit (Rom. VIII, 20). Numquid ergo Christus subjectus est vanitati? Rursus juxta eumdem Apostolum: Creatura congemiscit et comparturit usque nunc (Ibid., 22). Numquid ergo Christus congemiscit et comparturit, qui nostros a morte gemitus liberavit? Creatura, inquit, liberabitur a servitute corruptionis (Ibid., 21). Videmus igitur magnam inter creaturam et Dominum esse distantiam; quia servitus creatura est; Dominus autem spiritus est; ubi autem spiritus Domini est, ibi libertas (II Cor. III, 17).

87. Christ, then, is no created being; for created beings are, as the Apostle has said, given over to vanity. Romans 8:20 Is Christ given over unto vanity? Again, creation — according to the same Apostle — groans and travails together even until now. What, then? Does Christ take any part in this groaning and travailing — He Who has set us miserable mourners free from death? Creation, says the Apostle, shall be set free from the slavery of corruption. Romans 8:21-22 We see, then, that between creation and its Lord there is a vast difference, for creation is enslaved, but the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom. 2 Corinthians 3:17

88. Quis hunc induxit errorem, ut eum qui creavit omnia, qui fecit omnia, diceret creaturam? Numquid ipse Dominus se creavit? Si enim lectum est quod per ipsum omnia facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil (Joan. I, 3): numquid ipse se fecit? 462 Si lectum est, quod negari non potest, quia Deus in sapientia fecit omnia: numquid verisimile videri potest quia in se ipsa est facta sapientia (Psal. CIII, 24)?

88. Who was it that led first into this error, of declaring Him Who created and made all things to be a creature? Did the Lord, I would ask, create Himself? We read that all things were made by Him, and without Him was nothing made. John 1:3 This being so, did He make Himself? We read — and who shall deny? — that in wisdom has God made all things. If so, how can we suppose that wisdom was made in itself?

89. Legimus genitum; quia Pater dixit: Ego ex utero ante Luciferum genui te (Psal. CIX, 3). Legimus primogenitum (Matth. I, 25): Filium, legimus unigenitum (Joan. I, 14)? primogenitum, quia nemo ante ipsum: unigenitum, quia nemo post ipsum: legimus etiam: Generationem ejus quis enarrabit (Esai. LIII, 8? Generationem, inquit, non creationem. Quid his tantis ac talibus conferri potest.

89. We read that the Son is begotten, inasmuch as the Father says: I brought you forth from the womb before the morning star. We read of the first-born Son, Colossians 1:15 of the only-begotten John 1:14 — first-born, because there is none before Him; only-begotten, because there is none after Him. Again, we read: Who shall declare His generation? Isaiah 53:8 Generation, mark you, not creation. What argument can be brought to meet testimonies so great and mighty as these?

90. Ostendit etiam Dei Filius distantiam generationis et gratiae, dicens: Ascendo ad Patrem meum, et Patrem vestrum: Deum meum, et Deum vestrum (Joan. XX, 17). Non dixit: Ascendo ad Patrem nostrum, sed: Ascendo ad Patremmeum, et Patrem vestrum. Separatio ista diversitatem ostendit, quod illius generator, noster creator sit.

90. Moreover, God's Son discovers the difference between generation and grace when He says: I go up to My Father and your Father, to My God and your God. He did not say, I go up to our Father, but I go up to My Father and your Father. This distinction is the sign of a difference, inasmuch as He Who is Christ's Father is our Creator.

91. Et addidit: Deum meum, et Deum vestrum; quia licet ipse et Pater unum sint, et illi Pater sit proprietate naturae, nobis Deus Pater coeperit esse per Filium, non naturae jure, sed gratiae; tamen utramque naturam hic significare videtur in Christo et divinitatis et carnis, divinitatis ex Patre, carnis ex matre, illamque ante omnia, istamque ex Virgine. Denique ante Patrem ut Filius nominavit, Deum postea ut homo nuncupavit.

91. Furthermore He said, to My God and your God, because although He and the Father are One, and the Father is His Father by possession of the same nature, while God began to be our Father through the office of the Son, not by virtue of nature, but of grace — still He seems to point us here to the existence in Christ of both natures, Godhead and Manhood — Godhead of His Father, Manhood of His Mother, the former being before all things, the latter derived from the Virgin. For the first, speaking as the Son, He called God His Father, and afterward, speaking as man, named Him as God.

92. Ubique autem Deum suum quod ex persona dicat hominis, testimonia docent: Deus, Deus meus, respice me; quare me dereliquisti (Psal. XXI, 1)?

Et alibi: De ventre matris meae Deus meus es tu (Ibid., 11). Et supra quasi homo patitur: et infra homo est, qui ex matris ventre jactatur. Itaque cum dicit: De ventre matris meae Deus meus es tu; significat cum qui Pater semper erat, ex eo Deum sibi esse, ex quo de ventre matris jactatus est.

92. Everywhere, indeed, we have witness in the Scriptures to show that Christ, in naming God as His God, does so as man. My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me? And again: From My mother's womb You are My God. In the former place He suffers as a man; in the latter it is a man who is brought forth from his mother's womb. And so when He says, From My mother's womb You are My God, He means that He Who was always His Father is His God from the moment when He was brought forth from His Mother's womb.

93. Cum igitur in Evangelio, in Apostolo, in prophetis generationem Christi legerimus, unde audent dicere creatum esse vel factum? Et quidem in quo creatum legerint, in quo factum, considerare deberent. Edoctum est enim Dei Filium de Deo esse genitum, de Deo natum: factum autem in quo legerint, diligenter advertant; non enim Deus factus, sed Deus Dei Filius natus est: postea autem secundum carnem homo factus ex Maria est.

93. Seeing, then, that we read in the Gospel, in the Apostle, in the Prophets, of Christ as begotten, how dare the Arians to say that He was created or made? But, indeed, they ought to have bethought them, where they have read of Him as created, where as made. For it has been plainly shown that the Son of God is begotten of God, born of God — let them, then, consider with care where they have read that He was made, seeing that He was not made God, but born as God, the Son of God; afterward, however, He was, according to the flesh, made man of Mary.

94. Si mihi non credunt, credant Apostolo dicenti: Postquam vero venit plenitudo temporis, misit Deus Filium suum factum ex muliere, factum sub Lege (Galat. IV, 4). Filium, inquit, suum, non unum de multis: non communem, sed suum. Suum cum dicit, generationis aeternae proprietatem signavit. Hunc postea factum ex muliere asseruit, ut factura non divinitati, sed assumptioni corporis ascriberetur: factum ex muliere per carnis susceptionem: factum sub Lege per observantiam Legis: generatio autem illa coelestis ante Legem, ista post Legem (Conc. Chalcedon. act. I, in exposit. fid. Nic.). 463

94. But when the fullness of time had come, God sent His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law. His Son, observe, not as one of many, not as His in common with another, but His own, and in saying His Son, the Apostle showed that it is of the Son’s nature that His generation is eternal. Him the Apostle has affirmed to have been afterwards made of a woman, in order that the making might be understood not of the Godhead, but of the putting on of a body — made of a woman, then, by taking on of flesh; made under the Law through observance of the Law. Howbeit, the former, the spiritual generation is before the Law was, the latter is after the Law.

CAPUT XV.

DUOBUS SCRIPTURAE LOCIS quibus factus et creatus Christus dicitur, ut satisfaciat sanctus Praesul: illos non nisi secundum naturam hominis ipsi convenire declarat: in quibus etiam praeteritum pro futuro positum esse ex sacrorum codicum auctoritate planum facit.

CHAPTER 15.

An explanation of Acts 2:36 and Proverbs 8:22 , which are shown to refer properly to Christ's manhood alone.

95. [Alias cap. VII.] Unde et illud vane jactare consuerunt quod scriptum est: Et Dominum eum et Christum fecit Deus. Imperiti legant totum, et intelligant; sic enim scriptum est: Et Dominum eum fecit, et Christum fecit Deus hunc Jesum, quem vos crucifixistis (Act. II, 36). Non divinitas crucifixa, sed caro est. Hoc utique fieri potuit, quod potuit crucifigi. Non ergo factura Dei Filius.

95. To no purpose, then, is the heretics' customary citation of the Scripture, that God made Him both Lord and Christ. Let these ignorant persons read the whole passage, and understand it. For thus it is written. God made this Jesus, Whom you crucified, both Lord and Christ. It was not the Godhead, but the flesh, that was crucified. This, indeed, was possible, because the flesh allowed of being crucified. It follows not, then, that the Son of God is a created being.

96. Facessat igitur et illud, de quo calumniari solent, et discant quemadmodum dictum sit: Dominus creavit me. (Prov. VIII, 22). Non dixit:

Pater creavit, sed Dominus creavit me. Caro Dominum agnoscit, gloria Patrem significat: creatura nostra Dominum confitetur, charitas Patrem novit. Itaque quis ignoret quia ob causam incorporationis hoc dicitur? In eo igitur se creatum dicit, in quo et hominem testificatur dicens: Quid me quaeritis occidere hominem, qui veritatem locutus sum vobis (Joan. VII, 20)? Hominem dicit, in quo et crucifixus et mortuus, et sepultus est.

96. Let us dispatch, then, that passage also, which they do use to misrepresent — let them learn what is the sense of the words, The Lord created Me. It is not the Father created, but the Lord created Me. The flesh acknowledges its Lord, praise declares the Father: our created nature confesses the first, loves, knows the latter. Who, then, cannot but perceive that these words announce the Incarnation? Thus the Son speaks of Himself as created in respect of that wherein he witnesses to Himself as being man, when He says, Why do you seek to kill Me, a man, Who have told you the truth? He speaks of His Manhood, wherein He was crucified, and died, and was buried.

97. Nec dubitandum quod praeteritum posuit, quod erat futurum: haec enim consuetudo est prophetiae, ut quae futura sunt, vel quasi praesentia, vel quasi facta dicantur. Denique in psalmo XXI legisti: Tauri pingues obsederunt me (Psal. XXI, 13); legisti etiam: Diviserunt sibi vestimenta mea (Ibid., 19): quod evangelista de tempore passionis prophetatum esse significat; Deo enim quae sunt futura, praesentia sunt: et ei cui praecognita sunt omnia, ventura pro factis sunt, sicut scriptum est: Qui fecit quae ventura sunt (Esai. XLV).

97. Furthermore, there is no doubt but that the writer set down as past that which was to come; for this is the usage of prophecy, that things to come are spoken of as though they were already present or past. For example, in the twenty-first psalm you have read: Fat bulls (of Bashan) have beset me, and again: They parted My garments among them. This the Evangelist shows to have been spoken prophetically of the time of the Passion, for to God the things that are to come are present, and for Him Who foreknows all things, they are as though they were past and over; as it is written, Who has made the things that are to be.

98. Nec mirum si ante saecula fundatum se esse dicit, cum legeris praedestinatum ante tempora saecularia. Quam vere de incarnatione id videatur expressum, declarant sequentia: Sapientia, inquit, aedificavit sibi domum, et subdidit columnas septem, et interfecit suas hostias: miscuit in cratera vinum suum, et paravit suam mensam; et misit suos servos, convocans cum altissima praedicatione, dicens: Qui est insipiens declinet ad me (Prov. IX, 1 et seq.). Nonne in Evangelio post incarnationem haec omnia videmus esse completa, quod sacri convivii celebravit mysteria, quod apostolos misit, voce magna clamavit dicens: Si quis sitit, veniat ad me, et bibat (Joan. VII, 37)? Ergo sequentia respondent prioribus, et totius cursum incarnationis videmus prophetiae expositione digestum.

98. It is no wonder that He should declare His place to have been set fast before all worlds, seeing that the Scripture tells us that He was foreordained before the times and ages. The following passage discovers how the words in question present themselves as a true prophecy of the Incarnation: Wisdom has built her a house, and set up seven pillars to support it, and she has slain her victims. She has mingled her wine in the bowl, and made ready her table, and sent her servants, calling men together with a mighty voice of proclamation, saying: ‘He who is simple, let him turn in to me.’ Do we not see, in the Gospel, that all these things were fulfilled after the Incarnation, in that Christ disclosed the mysteries of the Holy Supper, sent forth His apostles, and cried with a loud voice, saying, If any man thirst, let him come to Me and drink. John 7:37 That which follows, then, answers to that which went before, and we behold the whole story of the Incarnation set forth in brief by prophecy.

99. Multa alia documenta praesto esse possent hujusmodi de incarnatione dicta videri: sed non me involvo libris, ne tractatus videatur esse diffusior.

99. Many other passages might readily be seen to be prophecies of this sort concerning the Incarnation, but I will not delay over books, lest the treatise appear too wordy

CAPUT XVI.

ARIANOS, SI CREATUM et genitum illis idem sit, Christo inferre injuriam: sin autem illa distare credant, quem legerint genitum, creaturae loco non habendum. Hoc Pauli ne creaturae serviatur, prohibentis; Christi tamen se servum esse profitentis, testimonio confirmari: cui potius credendum quam Ario. Subditur etiam creaturam in Deo non esse, cum simplex sit: nec Filium in creaturae ordinem redigendum; cum in eo Patri complaceat.

CHAPTER 16.

The Arians blaspheme Christ, if by the words created and begotten they mean and understand one and the same thing. If, however, they regard the words as distinct in meaning, they must not speak of Him, of Whom they have read that He was begotten, as if He were a created being. This rule is upheld by the witness of St. Paul, who, professing himself a servant of Christ, forbade worship of a created being. God being a substance pure and uncompounded, there is no created nature in Him; furthermore, the Son is not to be degraded to the level of things created, seeing that in Him the Father is well pleased.

100. Nunc ipsos Arianos interrogo, utrum idem putent esse genitum, quod creatum? Si enim idem dicunt, nihil utique distat inter generare et creare. Ergo quoniam et nos creati sumus, inter nos et Christum et elementa nulla distantia est. Sed quamvis amentes sint, id tamen non audebunt dicere.

100. Now will I enquire particularly of the Arians, whether they think that begotten and created are one and the same. If they call them the same, then is there no difference between generation and creation. It follows, then, that forasmuch as we also are created, there is between us and Christ and the elements no difference. Thus much, however, great as their madness is, they will not venture to say.

101. Postremo ut insipientiae eorum quod verum non est, indulgeam; si nihil, ut putant, distat in verbo: cur non eum quem colunt, meliore appellant nomine? cur verbo non utuntur Patris? cur abjiciunt quod honorificentiae est, assumunt quod injuriae?

101. Furthermore — to concede that which is no truth, to their folly — I ask them, if there is, as they think, no difference in the words, why do they not call upon Him Whom they worship by the better title? Why do they not avail themselves of the Father's word? Why do they reject the title of honour, and use a dishonouring name?

102. Si autem distat inter creatum et genitum, ut ego arbitror, cum legerimus genitum, non utique idem et genitum intelligimus et creatum. Dicant igitur generatum ex Patre, ex Virgine procreatum: aut dicant quomodo Dei Filius et genitus et creatus. Una natura, et maxime Deus diversitatem non recipit.

102. If, however, there is — as I think there is — a distinction between created and begotten, then, when we have read that He is begotten, we shall surely not understand the same by the terms begotten and created. Let them therefore confess Him to be begotten of the Father, born of the Virgin, or let them say how the Son of God can be both begotten and created. A single nature, above all, the Divine Being, rejects strife (within itself).

103. Certe facessat nostra sententia: Paulum interrogemus, qui Spiritu Dei plenus has praevidens quaestiones; generaliter contra gentes, specialiter contra Arianos locutus, ait divino judicio eos esse damnatos, qui servirent creaturae potius quam Creatori. Denique sic habes: Tradidit illos Deus in desideria cordis ipsorum, ut contumeliis afficiant corpora sua inter semetipsos: qui commutaverunt veritatem Dei in mendacium, et coluerunt, et servierunt creaturae potius quam Creatori, qui est Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. I, 24, 25).

103. But in any case let our private judgment pass: let us enquire of Paul, who, filled with the Spirit of God, and so foreseeing these questionings, has given sentence against pagans in general and Arians in particular, saying that they were by God's judgment condemned, who served the creature rather than the Creator. Thus, in fact, you may read: God gave them over to the lusts of their own heart, that they might one with another dishonour their bodies, they who changed God's truth into a lie, and worshipped and served the thing created rather than the Creator, Who is God, blessed forever. Romans 1:24-25

104. Prohibet itaque me Paulus creaturae servire, et Christo admonet serviendum. Non ergo creatura Christus, Paulus, inquit, servus Jesu Christi (Ibid., 1). Et bonus servus qui Dominum recognoscit, ipse creaturae servire nos prohibet: quemadmodum ergo Christo ipse serviret, si creaturam Christum putaret? Aut igitur desinant colere quem creaturam appellant, aut desinant quem colere se simulant, dicere creaturam; ne sub appellatione cultorum sacrilegia graviora committant. Detestabilior enim domesticus hostis quam extraneus: et gravius scelus ut adversus Christum abutantur Christi nomine.

104. Thus Paul forbids me to worship a creature, and admonishes me of my duty to serve Christ. It follows, then, that Christ is not a created being. The Apostle calls himself Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, Romans 1:1 and this good servant, who acknowledges his Lord, will likewise have us not worship that which is created. How, then, could he have been himself a servant of Christ, if he thought that Christ was a created person? Let these heretics, then, cease either to worship Him Whom they call a created being, or to call Him a creature, Whom they feign to worship, lest under color of being worshippers they fall into worse impiety. For a domestic is worse than a foreign foe, and that these men should use the Name of Christ to Christ's dishonour increases their guilt.

105. Quem igitur meliorem interpretem quaerimus Scripturarum, quam illum doctorem gentium, vas electionis, electum de persecutoribus? Qui Jesum persecutus fuerat, fatetur. Legerat 465 utique Salomonem plus quam Arius, et erat peritus in Lege; et ideo quia legerat, non creatum Christum dicit esse, sed genitum. Legerat enim: Ipse dixit, et facta sunt: ipse mandavit, et creata sunt (Psal. CXLVIII, 5). Numquid dicto factus est Christus? numquid mandato creatus est Christus?

105. What better expounder of the Scriptures do we indeed look for than that teacher of the Gentiles, that chosen vessel — chosen from the number of the persecutors? He who had been the persecutor of Christ confesses Him. He had read Solomon more, in any case, than Arius has, and he was well learned in the Law, and so, because he had read, he said not that Christ was created, but that He was begotten. For he had read, He spoke, and they were made: He commanded, and they were created. Was Christ, I ask, made at a word? Was He created at a command?

106. Quomodo autem creatura in Deo esse potest? Etenim Deus naturae simplicis est, non conjunctae atque compositae: cui nihil accedat, sed solum quod divinum est in natura habeat sua: complens omnia, nusquam ipse confusus: penetrans omnia, nusquam ipse penetrandus: ubique totus, eodemque tempore vel in coelo, vel in terris, vel in novissimo maris praesens: visu incomprehensibilis, fatu ininterpretabilis, sensu inaestimabilis, fide sequendus, religione venerandus; ut quidquid religiosus sentiri potest, quidquid praestantius ad decorem, quidquid sublimius ad potestatem, hoc Deo intelligas convenire.

106. Moreover, how can there be any created nature in God? In truth, God is of an uncompounded nature; nothing can be added to Him, and that alone which is Divine has He in His nature; filling all things, yet nowhere Himself confounded with anything; penetrating all things, yet Himself nowhere to be penetrated; present in all His fullness at one and the same moment, in heaven, in earth, in the deepest depth of the sea, to sight invisible, by speech not to be declared, by feeling not to be measured; to be followed by faith, to be adored with devotion; so that whatsoever title excels in depth of spiritual import, in setting forth glory and honour, in exalting power, this you may know to belong of right to God.

107. Ergo quia in Filio complacet Pater (Matth. XVII, 5), crede quia dignus Patre Filius, crede quia a Deo exivit Filius, ut ipse testatur dicens: Ex Deo processi, et veni (Joan. VIII, 42); et alibi: A Deo exivi (Joan. XVI, 27). Qui ex Deo processit, et a Deo exivit, nihil aliud potest habere, nisi quod Dei est.

107. Since, then, the Father is well pleased in the Son; believe that the Son is worthy of the Father, that He came out from God, as He Himself bears witness, saying: I went out from God, and have come; John 8:42 and again: I went out from God. John 16:27 He Who proceeded and came forth from God can have no attributes but such as are proper to God.

CAPUT XVII.

CHRISTUM DEUM VERUM esse ex eo probat, quod sit proprius Dei Filius; praemissaque difficultatis suborientis solutione, eamdem rem inde confirmat, quod sit genitus, quodque ex Deo exierit. His subdit Patris ac Filii unitatem operationis ac voluntatis. Tum apostolis et Centurione quem cum Arianis contendit, in testimonium adductis Esaiam jungit ac Joannem.

That Christ is very God is proved from the fact that He is God's own Son, also from His having been begotten and having come forth from God, and further, from the unity of will and operation subsisting in Father and Son. The witness of the apostles and of the centurion — which St. Ambrose sets over against the Arian teaching — is adduced, together with that of Isaiah and St. John.

108. Unde non solum Deus, sed etiam verus Deus, verus e vero, et adeo verus, ut ipse sit veritas. Itaque si nomen quaerimus, veritas est: si majestatem quaerimus naturalem, eo usque Filius Dei verus est, ut et proprius. Scriptum est enim: Qui proprio Filio non pepercit, sed pro nobis tradidit eum (Rom. VIII, 32): tradidit utique secundum carnem. Proprietas divinitatis est, veritas proprietatis, misericordia pietatis, oblatio securitatis.

108. Hence it is that Christ is not only God, but very God indeed — very God of very God, insomuch that He Himself is the Truth. John 14:6 If, then, we enquire His Name, it is the Truth; if we seek to know His natural rank and dignity, He is so truly the very Son of God, that He is indeed God's own Son; as it is written, Who spared not His own Son, but gave Him up for our sakes, Romans 8:32 gave Him up, that is, so far as the flesh was concerned. That He is God's own Son declares His Godhead; that He is very God shows that He is God's own Son; His pitifulness is the earnest of His submission, His sacrifice, of our salvation.

109. Sed ne calumniarentur, quia scriptum est: Tradidit eum Pater; ipse Apostolus alibi dixit: Pax a Deo Patre, et Domino nostro Jesu Christo, qui se dedit pro peccatis nostris (Galat. I, 3, 4); et alibi: Sicut Christus dilexit nos, et tradidit semetipsum pro nobis (Ephes. V, 2). Si ergo et traditus est a Patre, et ipse se tradidit, apparet unam esse operationem, unam esse Patris et Filii voluntatem.

109. Lest, however, men should wrest the Scripture, that God gave Him up, the Apostle himself has said in another place, Galatians 1:3-4 Peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, Who gave Himself for our sins; and again: Ephesians 5:2 Even as Christ has loved us, and given Himself for us. If, then, He both was given up by the Father, and gave Himself up of His own accord, it is plain that the working and the will of Father and Son is one.

110. Si naturalem ergo majestatem quaerimus, genitus est. Qui genitum inficiatur, proprium negat: qui proprium abnuit, communem caeteris arbitratur. Sin vero generationis ipsius proprietatem requirimus, ex Deo exivit. Nam 466 cum in usu nostro id sit exire quod jam sit, et ex interioribus secretis prodire videatur, quod exire perhibetur: angustis licet sermonibus proprietatem divinae generationis advertimus; ut non ex loco aliquo videatur exisse, sed ut Deus ex Deo, Filius ex Patre; nec videatur coepisse ex tempore, qui ex Patre nascendo prodit, ut dixit ipse qui natus est: Ex ore Altissimi prodii (Eccles. XXIV, 5).

110. If, then, we enquire into His natural pre-eminence, we find it to consist in being begotten. To deny that the Son of God is begotten [of God] is to deny that He is God's own Son, and to deny Christ to be God's own Son is to class Him with the rest of mankind, as no more a Son than any of the rest. If, however, we enquire into the distinctive property of His generation, it is this, that He came forth from God. For while, in our experience, to come out implies something already existent, and that which is said to come out seems to proceed forth from hidden and inward places, we, though it be presented but in short passages, observe the peculiar attribute of the Divine Generation, that the Son does not seem to have come forth out of any place, but as God from God, a Son from a Father, nor to have had a beginning in the course of time, having come forth from the Father by being born, as He Himself Who was born said: I came forth from the mouth of the Most High. Sirach 24:3

111. Sed si naturam non agnoscunt, si non credunt Scripturis, vel operibus credant. Cui dicit Pater: Faciamus hominem (Gen. I, 26), nisi ei quem verum Filium sciret? In quo nisi in vero suam imaginem recognosceret? Non est unum adoptivus et verus; nec Filius diceret: Unum sumus (Joan. XVI, 22); si se cum vero, qui verus non esset ipse, conferret. Faciamus ergo dicit Pater. Qui dixit, verus est: potestne ergo verus non esse ille, qui fecit; et quod dicenti defertur, facienti negatur?

111. But if the Arians acknowledge not the Son's nature, if they believe not the Scriptures, let them at least believe the mighty works. To whom does the Father say, Let us make man? Genesis 1:26 save to Him Whom He knew to be His true Son? In Whom, save in one who was true, could He recognize His Image? The son by adoption is not the same as the true Son; nor would the Son say, I and the Father are one, John 10:30 if He, being Himself not true, were measuring Himself with One Who is true. The Father, therefore, says, Let us make. He Who spoke is true; can He, then, Who made be not true? Shall the honour rendered to Him Who speaks be withheld from Him Who makes?

112. Quomodo autem nisi verum Filium sciret, committeret ei voluntatis suae unitatem, et operis veritatem? Cum enim eadem faciat Filius opera, quae Pater facit, et quos vult vivificet Filius, sicut scriptum est (Joan. V, 19, 21); nec differens potestate, et liber est voluntate: ita unitas servatur; quia et virtus Dei in divinitatis proprietate est; et libertas non in aliqua differentia, sed in unitate est voluntatis.

112. But how, unless the Father knew Him to be His true Son, should He commend to Him His will, for perfect co-operation, and His works, for perfect bringing in out in actuality? Seeing that the Son works the works which the Father does, and that the Son quickens whom He will, as it is written, He is then equal in power and free in respect of His will. And thus is the Unity maintained, forasmuch as God's power consists in that the Godhead is proper to each Person, and freedom lies not in any difference, but in unity of will.

113. Turbati in freto apostoli, licet adhuc non credentes corde, ubi primum sub pedibus Domini ludere aquas, et inquieto maris aestu deambulantis Domini super aquas intrepida videre vestigia; subitoque navi quae fluctibus turbaretur, ubi eam tamen Christus ascendit; placidata aequora, et elementa conspexere famulantia, verum Dei Filium crediderunt, dicentes: Vere Dei Filius es (Matth. XIV, 25 et seq.).

113. The apostles, being storm-tossed in the sea, as soon as they saw the waters leaping up round their Lord's feet, and beheld His fearless footsteps on the water, as He walked amid the raging waves of the sea, and the ship, which was beaten upon by the waves, had rest as soon as Christ entered it, and they saw the waves and the winds obeying Him — then, though as yet they did not believe in their hearts they believed Him to be God's true Son, saying, Truly You are the Son of God. Matthew 14:33

114. Hoc idem Centurio cum aliis qui secum erant, tremefactis mundi cardinibus in passione Domini confitetur: et tu, haeretice, negas! Centurio dicit: Vere Filius Dei erat iste (Matth. XXVII, 54). Erat, inquit Centurio, et Arianus dicit, non erat. Ille ergo generationis et veritatem et aeternitatem asserit manu cruentus, sed mente devotus: tu, haeretice, veritatem generationis negas, tempus ascribis. Utinam manus potius quam animam cruentasses! Sed nec manu innocens, et mente feralis, quantum in te est, mortem infers, qui infirmum opinaris; immo, quod gravius est, etsi divinitas vulnus sentire non possit, quod in te tamen est, majestatem suam in Christo, non corpus interficere conaris.

114. To the same effect the confession of the centurion, and others who were with him, when the foundations of the world were shaken at the Lord's Passion, — and this, heretic, you deny. The centurion said, Truly this was the Son of God. Matthew 27:54 Was said the centurion — Was not says the Arian. The centurion, then, with bloodstained hands, but devout mind, declares both the truth and the eternity of Christ's generation; and thou, O heretic, deniest its truth, and makest it matter of time! Would that you had imbued your hands rather than your soul! But you, unclean even of hand, and murderous of intent, seekest Christ's death, so far as in you lies, seeing that you think of Him as mean and weak; nay, and this is a worse sin, you, albeit the Godhead can feel no wound, still would do your diligence to slay in Christ, not His Body, but His Glory.

115. Verum igitur Deum dubitare non possumus, quem verum Dei Filium et carnifices crediderunt, et daemones fatebantur: quorum nunc non testimonia requiruntur, sed tuis tamen sacrilegiis praeferuntur. Illos nominavimus, ut erubesceres divina quoque responsa adhibuimus, ut crederes. 467

115. We cannot then doubt that He is very God, Whose true Godhead even executioners believed in and devils confessed. Their testimony we require not now, but it is withal greater than your blasphemies. We have called them in to witness, to put you to the blush, while we have also cited the oracles of God, to the end that you should believe.

116. Clamat Dominus per Esaiam: Servientibus mihi vocabitur nomen novum, quod benedicetur super terram, et benedicent Deum verum: et qui jurant super terram, jurabunt per Deum verum (Esai. LXV, 16). Haec, inquam, dixit Esaias, quando vidit majestatem ejus. Hoc in Evangelio designatur, quod majestatem viderit Christi, et locutus sit de eo.

116. The Lord proclaims by the mouth of Isaiah: In the mouth of them that serve Me shall a new name be called upon, which shall be blessed over all the earth, and they shall bless the true God, and they who swear upon earth shall swear by the true God. Isaiah 65:16 These words, I say, Isaiah spoke when he saw God's Glory, and thus in the Gospel it is plainly said that he saw the Glory of Christ and spoke of Him. John 12:41

117. Accipe tamen quid etiam scripserit Evangelista Joannes in epistola sua dicens: Scimus quia Filius Dei apparuit, et dedit nobis sensum, ut cognoscamus Patrem, et simus in vero Filio ejus Jesu Christo Domino nostro. Hic est verus Deus, et vita aeterna (I Joan. V, 20). Verum Joannes Filium Dei, et verum Deum dicit: ergo si verus Deus, utique non creatus, nihil fallax habens atque fucatum, nihil confusum atque dissimile.

117. But hear again what John the Evangelist has written in his Epistle, saying: We know that the Son of God has appeared, and has given us discernment, to know the Father, and to be in His true Son Jesus Christ, our Lord. He is very God, and Life Eternal. 1 John 5:20 John calls Him true Son of God and very God. If, then, He be very God, He is surely uncreate, without spot of lying or deceit, having in Himself no confusion, nor unlikeness to His Father.

CAPUT XVIII.

IN NICAENA DEFINITIONE Arianos errores, ne quem decipiant, commemorari. Iidem cum anathemate suo referuntur, quod non modo Nicaeae latum dicitur, sed et Arimini semel ac iterum.

CHAPTER 18.

The errors of the Arians are mentioned in the Nicene Definition of the Faith, to prevent their deceiving anybody. These errors are recited, together with the anathema pronounced against them, which is said to have been not only pronounced at Nicæa, but also twice renewed at Ariminum.

118. [Alias cap. VIII.] Deus igitur ex Deo, lumen de lumine, Deus verus de Deo vero, ex Patre natus, non factus, unius substantiae cum Patre.

118. Christ, therefore, is God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God; begotten of the Father, not made; of one substance with the Father.

119. Sic nempe nostri secundum Scripturas dixerunt Patres, qui etiam sacrilega dogmata ideo suis inserenda putavere decretis, ut Arii perfidia ipsa se proderet; ne quasi fucis quibusdam et coloribus illita velaretur. Fucum enim faciunt, qui non audent explicare quod sentiunt. Censorie itaque impietas Ariana non expositione reseratur, sed damnatione detegitur; ut qui curiose gestit audire, prius damnatam cognosceret, ne laberetur, quam expositam audiret, ut crederet.

119. So, indeed, following the guidance of the Scriptures, our fathers declared, holding, moreover, that impious doctrines should be included in the record of their decrees, in order that the unbelief of Arius should discover itself, and not, as it were, mask itself with dye or face-paint. For they give a false color to their thoughts who dare not unfold them openly. After the manner of the censor's rolls, then, the Arian heresy is not discovered by name, but marked out by the condemnation pronounced, in order that he who is curious and eager to hear it should be preserved from falling by knowing that it is condemned already, before he hears, it set forth to the end that he should believe.

120. [Alias cap. IX.] Eos, inquit, qui dicunt: Erat quando non erat, et antequam nasceretur non erat: et qui ex nihilo factum, aut ex alia substantia vel οὐσίᾳ dicunt esse, aut mutabilem, aut convertibilem Dei Filium, anathematizat catholica et apostolica Ecclesia.

120. Those, runs the decree, who say that there was a time when the Son of God was not, and that before He was born He was not, and who say that he was made out of nothing, or is of another substance or οὐσια, or that He is capable of changing, or that with Him is any shadow of turning — them the Catholic and Apostolic Church declares accursed.

121. Accepisti, sancte Imperator, eos qui talia asserunt, jure damnatos. Non humana industria, non composito aliquo trecenti decem et octo, ut supra pressius dixi (Prolog. n. 5), episcopi ad concilium convenerunt: sed ut in numero eorum 468 per signum suae passionis et nominis Dominus Jesus suo probaret se adesse concilio; Crux in trecentis, Jesu nomen in decem et octo est sacerdotibus.

121. Your sacred Majesty has agreed that they who utter such doctrines are rightly condemned. It was of no determination by man, of no human counsel, that three hundred and eighteen bishops met, as I showed above more at length, in Council, but that in their number the Lord Jesus might prove, by the sign of His Name and Passion, that He was in the midst, where His own were gathered together. Matthew 18:20 In the number of three hundred was the sign of His Cross, in that of eighteen was the sign of the Name Jesus.

122. Hoc et in Ariminensi concilio habuit prima confessio, et post Ariminense concilium secunda correctio. Confessionem epistola ad imperatorem Constantium missa testatur, correctionem secuta concilia confitentur.

122. This also was the teaching of the First Confession in the Council of Ariminum, and of the Second Correction, after that Council. Of the Confession, the letter sent to the Emperor Constantine bears witness, and the Council that followed declares the Correction.

CAPUT XIX.

UBI ARIO PRIMUM e memoratis erroribus attribuit, eumdem refellit Joannis testimonio, ac e re nata tragicam haeresiarchae mortem describit. Mox singillatim reliquas ejusdem blasphemias expendit et confutat.

Arius is charged with the first of the above-mentioned errors, and refuted by the testimony of St. John. The miserable death of the Heresiarch is described, and the rest of his blasphemous errors are one by one examined and disproved.

123. Arius ergo dicit: Erat quando non erat; sed Scriptura dicit, Erat, non dicit, non erat. Denique Joannes scripsit: In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum: hoc erat in principio apud Deum (Joan. I, 1). Ecce quoties erat et nusquam dixit quod non erat. Cui ergo credimus? Joanni in Christi pectore recumbenti, an Ario inter effusa se sua viscera volutanti; ut agnosceremus similem Judae proditoris Arii quoque fuisse perfidiam, quem similis poena damnavit?

123. Arius, then, says: There was a time when the Son of God existed not, but Scripture says: He was, not that He was not. Furthermore, St. John has written: In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. John 1:1-3 Observe how often the verb was appears, whereas was not is nowhere found. Whom, then, are we to believe? — St. John, who lay on Christ's bosom, or Arius, wallowing amid the outgush of his very bowels? — so wallowing that we might understand how Arius in his teaching showed himself like Judas, being visited with like punishment.

124. Effusa sunt enim et Arii viscera, pudet dicere ubi, atque ita crepuit medius, prostratus in faciem; ea quibus Christum negaverat, foeda ora pollutus. Crepuit enim, sicut etiam de Juda Petrus apostolus dixit (Act. I, 18), quia possedit agrum de mercede injustitiae, et in faciem prostratus crepuit medius, et effusa sunt omnia viscera ejus. Non est fortuita mors, ubi in sacrilegio pari poenae parilis processit exemplum; ut idem subirent supplicium qui eumdem Dominum negaverunt; et qui eumdem Dominum prodiderunt.

124. For Arius' bowels also gushed out — decency forbids to say where — and so he burst asunder in the midst, falling headlong, and besmirching those foul lips wherewith he had denied Christ. He was rent, even as the Apostle Peter said of Judas, because he bought a field with the price of evil-doing, and falling headlong he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. It was no chance manner of death, seeing that like wickedness was visited with like punishment, to the end that those who denied and betrayed the same Lord might likewise undergo the same torment.

125. Veniamus ad alia. Arius dicit: Antequam nasceretur, non erat: sed Scriptura dicit omnia esse per Filium. Quomodo ergo aliis dedit esse, qui non erat? Cum autem dicit impius, quando et ante, haec utique duo verba tempus ostendunt. Quomodo ergo negant tempus ante Filium, et volunt prius fuisse quae temporis sunt: cum idipsum, quando et ante et aliquando non fuisse, sit temporis? 469

125. Let us pass on to further points. Arius says: Before He was born, the Son of God was not, but the Scripture says that all things are maintained in existence by the Son's office. How, then, could He, Who existed not, bestow existence upon others? Again, when the blasphemer uses the words when and before, he certainly uses words which are marks of time. How, then, do the Arians deny that time was ere the Son was, and yet will have things created in time to exist before the Son, seeing that the very words, when, before, and did not exist once, announce the idea of time?

126. Arius dicit ex nihilo Dei Filium. Quomodo ergo Dei Filius? quomodo paterno generatus ex utero? quomodo eructatum ex corde Verbum legitur, nisi ut ex intimo et inaestimabili Patris intelligatur, ut scriptum est, prodiisse secreto? Filius enim aut per adoptionem, aut per naturam est: per adoptionem nos filii dicimur, ille per veritatem naturae est. Quomodo ergo ex nihilo ille, qui ex nihilo fecit omnia (Psal. XLIV, 1)?

126. Arius says that the Son of God came into being out of nought. How, then, is He Son of God — how was He begotten from the womb of the Father — how do we read of Him as the Word spoken of the heart's abundance, save to the end that we should believe that He came forth, as it is written, from the Father's inmost, unapproachable sanctuary? Now a son is so called either by means of adoption or by nature, as we are called sons by means of adoption. Christ is the Son of God by virtue of His real and abiding nature. How, then, can He, Who out of nothing fashioned all things, be Himself created out of nothing?

127. Non habet Filium, qui nescit unde sit. Denique nec Judaei habebant Filium, quia unde esset nesciebant. Et ideo dixit his Dominus: Nescitis unde veni (Joan. VIII, 14); et infra: Neque me nostis, neque Patrem meum scitis (Ibid. 19). Qui enim negat ex Patre Filium, nec Patrem ex quo est Filius, novit: neque Filium novit; quia Patrem nescit (Galat. IV, 5).

127. He who knows not whence the Son is has not the Son. The Jews therefore had not the Son, for they knew not whence He was. Wherefore the Lord said to them: You know not whence I came; John 8:14 and again: You neither have found out Who I am, nor know My Father, for he who denies that the Son is of the Father knows not the Father, of Whom the Son is; and again, he knows not the Son, because he knows not the Father.

128. Arius dicit: Ex alia substantia. Quae igitur alia substantia aequatur Dei Filio, ut ex ipsa Dei Filius sit? Aut quomodo reprehendunt quia nos in Deo aut οὐσίαν Graece, aut Latine substantiam dicimus, cum ex alia dicendo substantia Dei esse Filium, etiam ipsi substantiam Dei esse confirment?

128. Arius says: [The Son is] of another Substance. But what other substance is exalted to equality with the Son of God, so that simply in virtue thereof He is Son of God? Or what right have the Arians for censuring us because we speak, in Greek, of the οὐσία, or in Latin, of the Substantia of God, when they themselves, in saying that the Son of God is of another Substance, assert a divine Substantia.

129. Sed si de nomine substantiae aut naturae divinae voluerint dicere, facile revincentur; quia et οὐσίαν Graece, et Latine substantiam frequenter Scriptura memoravit. Et Petrus vult nos, ut legimus (II Petr. I, 4), divinae consortes fieri naturae. Quod si ex alia substantia Filium dicent, ipsi se revincunt, et verbum substantiae quod metuunt confitendo, et Filium creaturis quibus praeferre se simulant, conferendo.

129. Howbeit, should they desire to dispute the use of the words divine Substance or divine Nature, they shall easily be refuted, for Holy Writ oft-times has spoken of οὐσία in Greek, or Substantia in Latin, and St. Peter, as we read, would have us become partakers in the divine Nature. But if they will have it that the Son is of another Substance, they with their own lips confute themselves, in that they both acknowledge the term Substance, whereof they are so afraid, and rank the Son on a level with the creatures above which they feign to exalt Him.

130. Arius dicit creaturam Dei Filium, non sicut caeteras creaturas. Quae enim creatura non sicut alia creatura non est? Homo non ut Angelus, terra non ut coelum, sol non ut aqua, lumen non ut tenebrae. Nihil ergo praeferendo donavit, sed ad simplices decipiendos misero colore fraudem suae impietatis obduxit.

130. Arius calls the Son of God a creature, but not as the rest of the creatures. Yet what created being is not different from another? Man is not as angel, earth is not as heaven, the sun is not as water, nor light as darkness. Arius' preference, therefore, is empty — he has but disguised with a sorry dye his deceitful blasphemies, in order to take the foolish.

131. Arius dicit mutabilem et convertibilem Dei Filium. Quomodo ergo Deus, si mutabilis; cum ipse dixerit: Ego sum, ego sum, et non sum mutatus (Malac. III, 6)?

131. Arius declares that the Son of God may change and swerve. How, then, is He God if He is changeable, seeing that He Himself has said: I am, I am, and I change not?

CAPUT XX.

OPTAT AD SE mundandum ut olim ad Esaiam Seraphim aliquem advolare; immo vero ad se, ad Imperatorem aliosque lectores suos Christum invitat: ac tandem Dominico poculo mystice designato, ut ejus virtute Gratianus caeterique fideles inebrientur, petit.

CHAPTER 20.

St. Ambrose declares his desire that some angel would fly to him to purify him, as once the Seraph did to Isaiah — nay more, that Christ Himself would come to him, to the Emperor, and to his readers, and finally prays that Gratian and the rest of the faithful may be exalted by the power and spell of the Lord's Cup, which he describes in mystic language.

132. Verum nunc mihi propheticum illud est confitendum, quod prophetaturus de Domino praemittit Esaias dicens: O miser ego, et compuncto corde, qui cum immunda labia habeam, in medio quoque populi inhabitem immunda labia habentis; vidi Dominum Sabaoth (Esai. VI, 5). Ergo si Esaias miserum se dicit, qui vidit Dominum 470 Sabaoth: quid ego de me dicam, qui cum immunda labia habeam, cogor de Dei generatione tractare? Quo igitur de iis quae metuo, locuturus erumpo; cum David de iis quae sciat ori suo custodiam petat (Psal. XXXVIII, 2)? O si mihi quoque unus de Seraphim candentem illum carbonem, quem de altari divino sumpsit, utriusque forcipe deferens Testamenti, immunda adurat labia!

132. Howbeit, now must I needs confess the Prophet Isaiah's confession, which he makes before declaring the word of the Lord: Woe is me, my heart is smitten, for I, a man of unclean lips, and living in the midst of a people of unclean lips, have seen the Lord of Sabaoth. Now if Isaiah said Woe is me, who looked upon the Lord of Sabaoth, what shall I say of myself, who, being a man of unclean lips, am constrained to treat of the divine generation? How shall I break forth into speech of things whereof I am afraid, when David prays that a watch may be set over his mouth in the matter of things whereof he has knowledge? O that to me also one of the Seraphim would bring the burning coal from the celestial altar, taking it in the tongs of the two testaments, and with the fire thereof purge my unclean lips!

133. At quia tunc Seraphim descendit in figura ad prophetam (Esai. VI, 6): tu autem, Domine, revelato mysterio ad nos in carne venisti, non per legatum, neque per nuntium, sed ipse per te, ab occultis meis conscientiam meam mundes; ut ego quoque dudum immundus, sed jam per tuam misericordiam fide mundus, illud Davidicum canam, dicens: Psallam tibi in cithara, Deus Israel: gaudebunt labia mea, dum cantavero tibi; et anima mea, quam redemisti (Psal. VII, 22, 23).

133. But forasmuch as then the Seraph came down in a vision to the Prophet, while You, O Lord, in revelation of the mystery have come to us in the flesh, do Thou, not by any deputy, nor by any messenger, but You Yourself cleanse my conscience from my secret sins, that I too, erstwhile unclean, but now by Your mercy made clean through faith, may sing in the words of David: I will make music to You upon a harp, O God of Israel, my lips shall rejoice, in all my song to You, and so, too, shall my soul, whom You have redeemed.

134. Itaque, Domine, calumniatores tuos et hostes relinquens, confer te ad nos; et sanctifica aures principis Gratiani, omniumque praeterea quorum in manus hic libellus venerit, vacuas mihi praesta aures; necubi auditae perfidiae sordes resideant. Emunda ergo, emunda aurem non fontanis poculis, nec fluviali haustu, nec susurro praetermeantis rivuli: sed sermonibus ad vicem aquarum operantibus, supra nitorem aquarum perspicuis, et omni purioribus nive; illis utique sermonibus, quibus dixisti: Si fuerint peccata vestra sicut phoenicium, ut nivem dealbabo (Esai. I, 18).

134. And so, O Lord, leaving them that slander and hate You, come unto us, sanctify the ears of our sovereign ruler, Gratian, and all besides into whose hands this little book shall come — and purge my ears, that no stains of the infidelity they have heard remain anywhere. Cleanse thoroughly, then, our ears, not with water of well, river, or rippling and purling brook, but with words cleansing like water, clearer than any water, and purer than any snow — even the words You have spoken — Though your sins be as scarlet, I will make them white as snow. Isaiah 1:18

135. Est etiam poculum quo secreta mentis mundare consuevisti, poculum non naturae veteris, nec ex vite solemni: sed poculum novum de coelo delatum in terram, expressum ex illo botryone peregrino, qui sicut uva de vite, ita ille in carne crucis pependit e ligno. Ex hoc ergo botryone est vinum quod laetificat cor hominis, sobrietatem inebriat, crapulam fidei et verae religionis exhalat, crapulam castitatis infundit.

135. Moreover, there is a Cup, which You use to purify the hidden chambers of the soul, a Cup not of the old order, nor filled from a common Vine — a new Cup, brought down from heaven to earth, filled with wine pressed from the wondrous cluster, which hung in fleshly form upon the tree of the Cross, even as the grape hangs upon the Vine. From this Cluster, then, is the Wine that makes glad the heart of man, Judges 9:13 uplifts the sorrowful, is fragrant with, pours into us, the ecstasy of faith, true devotion, and purity.

136. Hoc igitur vino, Domine meus, domini aures Augusti mentis emunda, ut sicut vino naturali homines inebriati, quietem diligunt, timorem mortis expellunt, injurias non sentiunt, aliena non quaerunt, suorum obliviscuntur: ita etiam vino tuo crapulatus, pacem diligat, et fidei exsultatione securus, mortem infidelitatis ignoret, patientiam charitatis exhibeat, sacrilegia aliena non teneat, fidem etiam pignoribus suis praeferat, secundum quod scriptum est: Relinque omnia tua, et veni, sequere me (Matth. XIX, 21).

136. With this Wine, therefore, O Lord my God, cleanse the spiritual ears of our sovereign Emperor, to the end that, just as men, being uplifted with common wine, love rest and quietness, cast out the fear of death, have no feeling of injuries, seek not that which belongs to others, and forget their own; and so he, too, intoxicated with your wine, may love peace, and, confident in the exultation of faith, may never know the death of unbelief, and may display loving patience, have no part in other men's profanities, and hold the faith of more account even than kindred and children, as it is written: Leave all that you have, and come, follow Me. Matthew 19:21

137. Hoc vino, Domine Jesu, sensus etiam nostros dilue, ut te adoremus, te colamus visibilium et invisibilium creatorem. Non potes ergo invisibilis aut bonus non esse, qui id etiam tuis operibus contulisti.

137. With this Wine, also, Lord Jesus, purify our senses, that we may adore You, and worship You, the Creator of things visible and invisible. Truly, You can not fail of being Yourself invisible and good, Who hast given invisibility and goodness to the works of Your Hands.

LIBER SECUNDUS.

BOOK II.

PROLOGUS.

AMBROSIUS LIBRO SUPERIORI hunc adjecturus, duodecim nomina Filii Dei primo trifariam divisa non ejus tantum, sed Patris etiam aeternitatem probare docet. Mox eadem cum duodecim sacerdotalis vestis lapidibus cursim comparans, quam necessario conjungenda sint, inducta ipsorum nova distributione patefacit. Deinde ad propositam comparationem rediens, allegorice memorati amictus texturam ac lapillos laudat. Hinc mystica etiam geminae divisionis ratione allata, institutam comparationem pergit exponere; ex qua fidem operibus colligens attexendam esse, contractam ejusdem fidei de Filio descriptionem subdit.

INTRODUCTION.

Twelve names of the Son of God are recounted, being distributed into three classes. These names are so many proofs of the eternity not only of the Son, but of the Father also. Furthermore, they are compared with the twelve stones in the High Priest's breastplate, and their inseparability is shown by a new distribution of them. Returning to the comparison with the High Priest's breastplate, the writer sets forth the beauty of the woven-work and the precious stones of the mystic raiment, and the hidden meaning of that division into woven-work and precious stones, which being done, he expounds the comparison drawn by him, showing that faith must be woven in with works, and adds a short summary of the same faith, as concerning the Son.

1. Satis, ut arbitror, libro superiore, sancte Imperator, edoctum est sempiternum esse Dei Filium, non dissimilem Patri, genitum, non creatum:

Deum quoque verum Dei Filium Scripturarum lectionibus approbavimus, et apertis majestatis suae indiciis designatum.

1. Enough has been said, as I think, your sacred Majesty, in the book preceding to show that the Son of God is an eternal being, not diverse from the Father, begotten, not created: we have also proved, from passages of the Scriptures, that God's true Son is God, and is declared so to be by the evident tokens of His Majesty.

2. Itaque quamvis ista ad fidem copiose redundantia sint, quod a fontis meatu magnitudo plerumque decurrentis fluminis aestimatur; tamen quo purius niteat fides nostra, tripartito videtur derivanda distinctio. Sunt enim evidentia indicia quae proprietatem deitatis ostendant: sunt quae similitudinem Patris et Filii: sunt etiam quae perspicuant divinae majestatis exprimant unitatem. Proprietatis itaque sunt, generatio, Deus, Filius, Verbum: similitudinis, splendor, character, speculum, imago: unitatis aeternae, sapientia, virtus, veritas, vita.

2. Wherefore, albeit what has already been set forth is plentiful even to overflowing for maintaining the Faith — seeing that the greatness of a river is mostly judged of from the manner in which its springs rise and flow forth — still, to the end that our belief may be the plainer to sight, the waters of our spring ought, methinks, to be parted off into three channels. There are, then, firstly, plain tokens declaring essential inherence in the Godhead; secondly, the expressions of the likeness of the Father and the Son; and lastly, those of the undoubtable unity of the Divine Majesty. Now of the first sort are the names begetting, God, Son, The Word; of the second, brightness, expression, mirror, image; and of the third, wisdom, power, truth, life.

3. These tokens so declare the nature of the Son, that by them you may know both that the Father is eternal, and that the Son is not diverse from Him; for the source of generation is He Who is, and as begotten of the Eternal, He is God; coming forth from the Father, He is the Son; from God, He is the Word; He is the radiance of the Father's glory, the expression of His substance, the counterpart of God, the image of His majesty; the Bounty of Him Who is bountiful, the Wisdom of Him Who is wise, the Power of the Mighty One, the Truth of Him Who is true, the Life of the Living One. In agreement, therefore, stand the attributes of Father and Son, that none may suppose any diversity, or doubt but that they are of one Majesty. For each and all of these names would we furnish examples of their use were we not constrained by a desire to maintain our discourse within bounds.

4. His duodecim tamquam lapidibus pretiosis fidei columna consurgit. Hi sunt enim pretiosi illi lapides (Exod. XXVIII, 17 et seq.), sardius, jaspis, smaragdus, chrysolithus, et caeteri, quibus sancti Aaron, illius utique qui figuram gerit Christi, veri scilicet vestimentum sacerdotis intexitur: circumdati auro lapides, et insculpti de nominibus 472 filiorum Israel, duodecim lapides sibi invicem cohaerentes. Nam si eos aliquis separet atque secernat, omnis fidei structura dissolvitur.

4. Of these twelve, as of twelve precious stones, is the pillar of our faith built up. For these are the precious stones — sardius, jasper, smaragd, chrysolite, and the rest — woven into the robe of holy Aaron, even of him who bears the likeness of Christ, that is, of the true Priest; stones set in gold, and inscribed with the names of the sons of Israel, twelve stones close joined and fitting one into another, for if any should sunder or separate them, the whole fabric of the faith falls in ruins.

5. Itaque principium fidei nostrae est scire quo genitus est Dei Filius: si genitus non est, nec Filius est. Nec satis est dixisse Filium, nisi et unigenitum Filium designaveris. Si creatura est, Deus non est: si Deus non est, nec vita est: si non est vita, nec veritas est.

5. This, then, is the foundation of our faith — to know that the Son of God is begotten; if He be not begotten, neither is He the Son. Nor yet is it sufficient to call Him Son, unless you shall also distinguish Him as the Only-begotten Son. If He is a creature, He is not God; if He is not God, He is not the Life; if He is not the Life, then is He not the Truth.

6. Ergo tria illa, id est, generatio, Filius, unigenitus, principaliter et proprie indicant ex Deo Filium.

6. The first three tokens, therefore, that is to say, the names generation, Son, Only-begotten, do show that the Son is of God originally and by virtue of His own nature.

7. Tria sequentia, id est, Deus, vita, veritas, virtutem ejus manifestant, qua condidit et fecit subsistere creaturam: In ipso enim vivimus, movemur et sumus, sicut Paulus dixit (Act. XVII, 28). Et ideo in illis tribus proprietas Filii, in istis aliis paternae ac Filii operationis unitas declaratur.

7. The three that follow — to wit, the names God, Life, Truth, reveal His Power, whereby He has laid the foundations of, and upheld, the created world. For, as Paul said, in Him we live and move and have our being; Acts 17:28 and therefore, in the first three the Son's natural right, in the other three the unity of action subsisting between Father and Son is made manifest.

8. Imago quoque et splendor et character dicitur Dei Filius, quia haec incomprehensibilem et investigabilem paternae majestatis divinitatem in Filio, et expressam similitudinem revelarunt. Haec quoque tria videmus ad similitudinem pertinere.

8. The Son of God is also called the image and effulgence and expression [of God], for these names have disclosed the Father's incomprehensible and unsearchable Majesty dwelling in the Son, and the expression of His likeness in Him. These three names, then, as we see, refer to [the Son's] likeness [to the Father].

9. Reliquum est, virtus, sapientia, justitia; ut his singulis operationibus aeternitas probaretur.

9. We have yet the operations of Power, Wisdom, and Justice left, wherewith, severally, to prove [the Son's] eternity.

10. Hoc igitur est illud vestimentum pretiosis lapidibus adornatum, hic veri amictus est sacerdotis, haec vestis nuptialis; hic textor propheticus, qui bene noverit ista contexere. Neque vilis ista textura est, de qua Dominus dicit per prophetam: Quis dedit mulieribus texturae sapientiam (Job. XXXVIII, 36). Nec communes isti lapides, lapides, ut legimus, supplementi: omnis enim in eo perfectio est, si nihil desit. Lapides compositi et circumdati auro, intelligibili scilicet natura; si eos bene mens nostra componat, naturalisque sensus probabili ratione compaginet. Denique quam non mediocres lapides sint, lectio docet (Exod. XXXV, 27), quod cum alii alia viliora deferrent; istos tamen lapides super humeros suos religiosi principes attulerunt, ex quibus fecerunt rationale, opus textile (Ibid.). Textile enim opus est, quando fidei facta concordant.

10. This, then, is that robe, adorned with precious stones; this is the amice of the true Priest; this the bridal garment; here is the inspired weaver, who well knew how to weave that work. No common woven work is it, whereof the Lord spoke by His Prophet: Who gave to women their skill in weaving? No common stones again, are they — stones, as we find them called, of filling; for all perfection depends on this condition, that there be nought lacking. They are stones joined together and set in gold — that is, of a spiritual kind; the joining of them by our minds and their setting in convincing argument. Finally Scripture teaches us how far from common are these stones, inasmuch as, while some brought one kind, and others another, of less precious offerings, these the devout princes brought, wearing them upon their shoulders, and made of them the breastplate of judgment, that is, a piece of woven work. Now we have a woven work, when faith and action go together.

11. Nec me aliquis errare putet, quia supra tripartitam de quaternis, subter vero quadripartitam de ternis feci distinctionem. Boni operis gratia per diversas plus placet formas. Bona enim et illa quae textrinum indumenti sacerdotalis ostendit, vel lex scilicet, vel Ecclesia, quae binas vestes fecit viro suo, sicut scriptum est (Prov. XXXI, 22 et seq.): unam operis, alteram mentis, fidei intexens factorumque velamina. Itaque alibi, sicut legimus, aurum praetexit, et postea hyacinthum 473 ac purpuram cum cocco subjungit et bysso. Rursus alibi ex hyacintho et caeteris prius flosculos format, aurumque subnectit, et unus est habitus sacerdotis; ut iisdem coloribus micans, gratiae decorisque diversitas ordinis diversitate resplendeat.

11. Let none suppose me to be misguided, in that I made at first a threefold division, each part containing four, and afterwards a fourfold division, each part containing three terms. The beauty of a good thing pleases the more, if it be shown under various aspects. For those are good things, whereof the texture of the priestly robe was the token, that is to say, either the Law, or the Church, which latter has made two garments for her spouse, as it is written — the one of action, the other of spirit, weaving together the threads of faith and works. Thus, in one place, as we read, she makes a groundwork of gold, and afterwards weaves thereon blue, and purple, with scarlet, and white. Again, [as we read] elsewhere, she first makes little flowerets of blue and other colors, and attaches gold, and there is made a single priestly robe, to the end that adornments of diverse grace and beauty, made up of the same bright colors, may gain fresh glory by diversity of arrangement.

12. Itaque ut etiam rationis typicae series digeratur, auro et argento probabili non est dubium eloquia Domini designari, quibus fides constat. Scriptum est enim: Eloquia Domini, eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum, probatum terrae, purgatum septuplum (Psal. XI, 7). Hyacinthus autem aeris habet similitudinem, quem spiramus, et cujus carpimus flatum: purpura quoque speciem aquarum exprimit: per coccum ignis intelligitur: terra per byssum; haec enim ex terra gignitur. Ex his autem quatuor elementis corpus subsistit humanum.

12. Moreover (to complete our interpretation of these types), it is certain that by refined gold and silver are designated the oracles of the Lord, whereby our faith stands firm. The oracles of the Lord are pure oracles, silver tried in the fire, refined of dross, purified seven times. Now blue is like the air we breathe and draw in; purple, again, represents the appearance of water; scarlet signifies fire; and white linen, earth, for its origin is in the earth. Of these four elements, again, the human body is composed.

13. Sive ergo mentis fidei praecedenti concinentia corporis facta subnectas: sive facta praecedant, et fides astipuletur comes religiosa factorum, hic religiosi ornatus antistitis, hoc velamen est sacerdotis.

13. Whether, then, you join to faith already present in the soul, bodily acts agreeing thereto; or acts come first, and faith be joined as their companion, presenting them to God — here is the robe of the minister of religion, here the priestly vestment.

14. Bona ergo fides, cum pulchro operum renitet ornatu: de qua, ut ad summam loquar, definitiones istae sunt, quae non queunt solvi. Si ex nihilo est, non est Filius: si creatura est, non est creator: si factura est, non est omnium factor: si discens, non praecognitor: si accipiens, non est perfectus: si proficiens, non est Deus: si dissimilis, non imago: si per gratiam, non per naturam: si divinitatis expers, auctor malitiae: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Deus (Marc. X, 18).

14. Faith is profitable, therefore, when her brow is bright with a fair crown of good works. James 2:14-26 This faith — that I may set the matter forth shortly — is contained in the following principles, which cannot be overthrown. If the Son had His origin in nothing, He is not Son; if He is a creature, He is not the Creator; if He was made, He did not make all things; if He needs to learn, He has no foreknowledge; if He is a receiver, He is not perfect; if He progress, He is not God. If He is unlike (the Father) He is not the (Father's) image; if He is Son by grace, He is not such by nature; if He have no part in the Godhead, He has it in Him to sin. There is none good, but Godhead. Mark 10:18

CAPUT PRIMUM.

ARIANORUM DEI FILIO bonitatem abrogantium objectionem non sine horrore propositam ut solvat, Christi sententiam ex personis loquentium, nec non ex ipsis dictionibus explicat.

CHAPTER 1.

The Arian argument from S. Mark 10:18 , There is none good but one, that is, God, refuted by explanation of these words of Christ.

15. Stupeo itaque ad reliqua, sancte imperator, et toto corpore animoque deficio, esse aliquos homines, vel potius non homines, sed humana adopertos specie, intus autem dementiae bestialis; qui post tanta Domini et tam divina beneficia, bonum negent ipsum auctorem bonorum.

15. The objection I have now to face, your sacred Majesty, fills me with bewilderment, my soul and body faint at the thought that there should be men, or rather not men, but beings with the outward appearance of men, but inwardly full of brutish folly — who can, after receiving at the hands of the Lord benefits so many and so great, say that the Author of all good things is Himself not good.

16. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Deus. Scriptum agnosco: sed littera errorem non habet; utinam Ariana interpretatio non haberet! Apices sine crimine sunt, sensus in crimine. Dictum Domini Salvatoris agnosco: 474 sed consideremus quando dicat, cui dicat, qua circumspectione dicat.

16. It is written, say they, that There is none good but God alone. I acknowledge the Scripture — but there is no falsehood in the letter; would that there were none in the Arians' exposition thereof. The written signs are guiltless, it is the meaning in which they are taken that is to blame. I acknowledge the words as the words of our Lord and Saviour — but let us bethink ourselves when, to whom, and with what comprehension He speaks.

17. Dicit utique in hominis forma Dei Filius, et dicit Scribae, ei scilicet qui magistrum bonum Dei Filium nominaret, Deum negaret. Quod ille non credit, Christus adjungit; ut Dei Filium non ut bonum magistrum, sed ut bonum Deum credat. Nam sicubi unus Deus dicitur, nequaquam tamen Dei Filius ab unitatis plenitudine separatur; quomodo ubi unus Deus bonus nuncupatur, a plenitudine divinae bonitatis unigenitus excluditur? Necesse est igitur aut Deum negent Dei Filium, aut Deum bonum esse fateantur.

17. The Son of God is certainly speaking as man, and speaking to a scribe — to him, that is, who called the Son of God Good Master, but would not acknowledge Him as God. What he believes not, Christ further gives him to understand, to the end that he may believe in God's Son not as a good master, but as the good God, for if, wheresoever the One God is named, the Son of God is never sundered from the fullness of that unity, how, when God alone is said to be good, can the Only-begotten be excluded from the fullness of Divine Goodness? The Arians must therefore either deny that the Son of God is God, or confess that God is good.

18. Et ideo circumspectione coelesti non dixit: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Pater; sed: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Deus. Pater enim proprium generantis est nomen, Deus autem unus nequaquam deitatem Trinitatis excludit, et ideo natura laudatur. Bonitas ergo in natura est Dei, et in natura Dei etiam Dei Filius; et ideo non quod singularitatis, sed quod unitatis est, praedicatur.

18. With divinely inspired comprehension, then, our Lord said, not There is none good but the Father alone, but There is none good but God alone, and Father is the proper name of Him Who begets. But the unity of God by no means excludes the Godhead of the Three Persons, and therefore it is His Nature that is extolled. Goodness, therefore, is of the nature of God, and in the nature of God, again, exists the Son of God — wherefore that which the predicate expresses belongs not to one single Person, but to the [complete] unity [of the Godhead].

19. Non igitur a Domino bonitas negatur, sed talis discipulus refutatur. Nam cum scriba dixisset: Magister bone, respondit Dominus: Quid me dicis bonum (Mare., X, 28)? id est, quem Deum non credis, non est satis ut bonum dicas. Non tales ego quaero discipulos, qui me magis secundum hominem magistrum bonum, quam secundum divinitatem Deum bonum credant.

19. The Lord, then, does not deny His goodness — He rebukes this sort of disciple. For when the scribe said, Good Master, the Lord answered, Why do you call Me good? — which is to say, It is not enough to call Him good, Whom you believe not to be God. Not such do I seek to be My disciples — men who rather consider My manhood and reckon Me a good master, than look to My Godhead and believe Me to be the good God.

BONUM ESSE DEI Filium ab operibus probat, nimirum ab ejus in Israelitas sub Testamento veteri, et in Christianos sub novo, beneficiis. Tum ubi subjecit utile sibi esse ut bonum dominum ac judicem suum arbitretur: paternum de Filio testimonium affert; imo etiam partis non exiguae Judaeorum, quibus proinde pejores Ariani esse declarantur. Quae omnia verborum Sponsae, eamdem Christi bonitatem designantium, claudit expositio.

The goodness of the Son of God is proved from His works, namely, His benefits that He showed towards the people of Israel under the Old Covenant, and to Christians under the New. It is to one's own interest to believe in the goodness of Him Who is one's Lord and Judge. The Father's testimony to the Son. No small number of the Jewish people bear witness to the Son; the Arians therefore are plainly worse than the Jews. The words of the Bride, declaring the same goodness of Christ.

20. Sed nolo praerogativa naturae suae et privilegio potestatis utatur. Non dicatur bonus, si non meretur, a nobis. Si hoc non meretur operibus, si beneficiis non meretur, abdicetur suae jure naturae, subdatur nostro judicio. Qui judicaturus de nobis est, non dedignatur judicari; ut justificetur in sermonibus suis, et vincat cum judicatur (Psal. L, 6), 475

20. Howbeit, I would not that the Son should rely on the mere prerogative of His nature and the claims of peculiar rights of His Majesty. Let us not call Him good, if He merit not the title; and if He merit not this by works, by acts of lovingkindness, let Him waive the right He enjoys by virtue of His nature, and be submitted to our judgment. He Who is to judge us disdains not to be brought to judgment, that He may be justified in His saying, and clear when He is judged.

21. Hiccine ergo non bonus, qui bona tribuit mihi (Psal. XII, 6)? Hiccine non bonus, qui cum sexcenta millia populi Judaeorum persecutoribus suis cederent, dehiscentem subito Rubri maris aestum individua aquarum mole divisit (Exod. XIV, 6 et seq.); ut fideles circumfusa unda muniret, infidos refusa demergeret?

21. Is He then not good, Who has shown me good things? Is He not good, Who when six hundred thousand of the people of the Jews fled before their pursuers, suddenly opened the tide of the Red Sea, an unbroken mass of waters? — so that the waves flowed round the faithful, and were walls to them, but poured back and overwhelmed the unbelievers.

22. Hiccine non bonus, cujus imperio maria solidata fugientibus, saxa humefacta sitientibus; ut opus veri agnosceretur auctoris, cum humor rigesceret, petra inundaret (Exod. XVII, 6)? Quod ut agnosceres opus Christi, Apostolus dixit: Petra autem erat Christus (I Cor. X, 4).

22. Is He not good, at Whose command the seas became firm ground for the feet of them that fled, and the rocks gave forth water for the thirsty? so that the handiwork of the true Creator might be known, when the fluid became solid, and the rock streamed with water? That we might acknowledge this as the handiwork of Christ, the Apostle said: And that rock was Christ. 1 Corinthians 10:4

23. Hiccine non bonus, qui tam innumera populi millia, ne qua incesseret fames, in deserto pavit pane coelesti, sine usu laboris, cum fructu quietis (Exod. XVI, 13 et seq.): ita ut eorum per quadraginta annos nec vestimenta veterascerent, nec calceamenta tererentur (Deut. VIII, 4), instar fidelibus futurae resurrectionis ostendens, quod nec factorum decor splendidorum, nec circumfusae virtutis nitor, nec vitae cursus periret humanae?

23. Is He not good, Who in the wilderness fed with bread from heaven such countless thousands of the people, lest any famine should assail them, without need of toil, in the enjoyment of rest? — so that, for the space of forty years, their raiment grew not old, nor were their shoes worn, a figure to the faithful of the Resurrection that was to come, showing that neither the glory of great deeds, nor the beauty of the power wherewith He has clothed us, nor the stream of human life is made for nought?

24. Hiccine non bonus, qui nobis coelum fecit esse, quod terra est; ut sicut in coelo, quasi in speculo quodam, stellarum lucentium refulgerent globi; ita etiam apostolorum et martyrum et sacerdotum, vice stellarum fulgentium, toto illucescerent chori mundo?

24. Is He not good, Who exalted earth to heaven, so that, just as the bright companies of stars reflect His glory in the sky, as in a glass, so the choirs of apostles, martyrs, and priests, shining like glorious stars, might give light throughout the world.

25. Ergo non solum bonus, sed etiam pastor bonus, hoc est, non sibi tantum, sed etiam ovibus suis bonus: Bonus enim pastor animam suam ponit pro ovibus suis (Joan. X, 11). Posuit plane animam suam, ut nostram levaret: sed pro divinitatis potestate posuit et sumpsit, sicut scriptum est: Potestatem habeo ponendi animam meam, et potestatem habeo sumendi eam. Nullus eam tollit a me, sed ego a memetipso pono eam (Ibid., 17, 18).

25. Not only, then, is He good, but He is more. He is a good Shepherd, not only for Himself, but to His sheep also, for the good shepherd lays down his life for his sheep. Aye, He laid down His life to exalt ours — but it was in the power of His Godhead that He laid it down and took it again: I have power to lay down My life, and I have power to take it. No man takes it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself.

26. Vides bonitatem, quia sponte posuit: vides potestatem, quia sumpsit; et tu bonum negas, cum ipse de se in Evangelio dixerit: Si ego bonus, quare oculus tuus nequam (Matth. XX, 15)? Ingrate, quid agis? Bonum negas, per quem bona speras, si tamen credas? Bonum negas, qui dedit nobis quae oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit (I Cor. II, 9)?

26. You see His goodness, in that He laid it down of His own accord: you see His power, in that He took it again — do you deny His goodness, when He has said of Himself in the Gospel, If I am good, why is your eye evil? Ungrateful wretch what are you doing? Do you deny His goodness, in Whom is your hope of good things — if, indeed, you believe this? Do you deny His goodness, Who has given us what eye has not seen, nor ear heard?

27. Mihi expedit ut bonum credam: Bonum est enim confidere Domino (Psal. CXVII, 8). Mihi expedit ut Dominum confitear; scriptum est enim: Confitemini Domino, quoniam bonus (Ibid., I).

27. It concerns my interest to believe Him to be good, for It is a good thing to trust in the Lord. It is to my interest to confess Him Lord, for it is written: Give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good.

28. Mihi expedit, ut judicem meum bonum arbitrer; Dominus enim judex bonus domui Israel. Ergo si judex Dei Filius, utique quoniam judex Deus bonus, judex autem Dei Filius est; Deus bonus judex et Dei Filius est.

28. It is to my interest to esteem my Judge to be good, for the Lord is a righteous Judge to the house of Israel. If, then, the Son of God is Judge, surely, seeing that the Judge is the righteous God and the Son of God is Judge, [it follows that] He who is Judge and Son of God is the righteous God.

29. Sed fortasse non credas aliis, non credas Filio; audi Patrem dicentem: Eructavit cor meum Verbum bonum (Psal. XLIV, 1). Bonum ergo Verbum est, Verbum hoc de quo scriptum est: Et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum (Joan. I, 1). Ergo si Verbum bonum, Filius autem Dei Verbum est: bonus utique Deus est Dei Filius; etiamsi non 476 placeat Arianis. Erubescant aliquando.

29. But perchance you believe not others, nor the Son. Hear, then, the Father saying: My heart has brought forth out of its depth the good Word. The Word, then, is good — the Word, of Whom it is written: And the Word was with God, and the Word was God. John 1:1 If, therefore, the Word is good, and the Son is the Word of God, surely, though it displease the Arians, the Son of God is God. Let them now at least blush for shame.

30. Judaei dicebant: Bonus est (Joan. VII, 12). Etsi alii dicebant: Non est, alii dicebant tamen: Bonus est; et vos omnes bonum negatis.

30. The Jews used to say: He is good. Though some said: He is not, yet others said: He is good, — and you do all deny His goodness.

31. Bonus est, qui peccatum unius donat; et bonus non est, qui peccatum mundi abstulit? De ipso enim dictum est: Ecce Agnus Dei, ecce qui tollit peccatum mundi (Joan. I, 29).

31. He is good who forgives the sin of one man; is He not good Who has taken away the sin of the world? For it was of Him that it was said: Behold the Lamb of God, behold Him Who takes away the sin of the world.

32. Sed quid dubitamus? Credidit jam Ecclesia bonum, et confessa est dicendo: Osculetur me ab osculis oris sui; quoniam bona ubera tua super vinum (Cantic. I, 1); et alibi: Et faux tua tamquam vinum est optimum (Cantic. VII, 9). Bonus ergo ille nos Legis et gratiae nutrit uberibus, coelesti curas hominum praedicatione demulcens; et nos bonum negamus, cum sit imago bonitatis, exprimens aeternae in se bonitatis effigiem, sicut et supra ostendimus scriptum, quia ipse est speculum sine macula, et imago bonitatis illius (Sap. VII, 26).

32. But why do we doubt? The Church has believed in His goodness all these ages, and has confessed its faith in the saying: Let Him kiss me with the kisses of His mouth; for your breasts are better than wine; Song of Songs 1:1 and again: And your throat is like the goodliest wine. Of His goodness, therefore, He nourishes us with the breasts of the Law and Grace, soothing men’s sorrows with telling them of heavenly things; and do we, then, deny His goodness, when He is the manifestation of goodness, expressing in His Person the likeness of the Eternal Bounty, even as we showed above that it was written, that He is the spotless reflection and counterpart of that Bounty? Song of Songs 7:9

FILIUM DEI DEUM bonum ac verum esse, cum Deus unus sit.

Forasmuch as God is One, the Son of God is God, good and true.

33. [Alias cap. II.] Sed quid vobis videtur, qui bonum et verum Deum Dei Filium denegatis; cum scriptum sit quod nullus Deus, nisi unus (I Cor. VIII, 4)? Nam etsi sunt qui dicantur dii, an inter eos Christum annumeratis, qui dicuntur, et non sunt? Cum speciale sit ejus, ut semper sit: et praeter ipsum bonus et verus alius Deus non sit; quoniam in ipso est Deus: speciale autem etiam Patris sit, ut post ipsum verus alius Deus non sit; quia unus Deus, nec juxta Sabellianos Patrem Filiumque confundens, nec juxta Arianos Patrem Filiumque secernens. Pater enim et Filius distinctionem habent, ut Pater et Filius; separationem divinitatis non habent.

33. Yet what think you, who deny the goodness and true Godhead of the Son of God, though it is written that there is no God but One? 1 Corinthians 8:4 For although there be gods so-called, would you reckon Christ among them which are called gods, but are not, seeing that eternity is of His Essence, and that beside Him there is none other that is good and true God, forasmuch as God is in Him; John 17:22-23 while it follows from the very nature of the Father, that after Him there is no other true God, because God is One, neither confounding [the Persons of] the Father and Son, as the Sabellians do, nor, like the Arians, severing the Father and the Son. For the Father and the Son, as Father and Son, are distinct persons, but they admit no division of their Godhead.

OMNIPOTENTEM ESSE DEI Filium prisci novique foederis auctoritate demonstratur.

CHAPTER 4.

The omnipotence of the Son of God, demonstrated on the authority of the Old and the New Testament.

34. [Alias cap. III.] Itaque cum verus et bonus Dei Filius, utique omnipotens Deus Dei Filius: num hinc quoque dubitari potest? Supra (lib. I, ca) diximus lectum quia Dominus omnipotens nomen est ei. Ergo quia Filius Dominus, Dominus autem omnipotens; omnipotens est Dei Filius.

34. Seeing, then, that the Son of God is true and good, surely He is Almighty God. Can there be yet any doubt on this point? We have already cited the place where it is read that the Lord Almighty is His Name. Because, then, the Son is Lord, and the Lord is Almighty, the Son of God is Almighty.

35. Sed accipe etiam eam de qua dubitare nequeas, lectionem: Ecce venit, inquit, cum nubibus, et videbit eum omnis oculus, et qui eum compunxerunt: et plangent se super eum omnes tribus terrae. Etiam, amen. Ego sum A et Ω, dicit Dominus Deus, qui est, et qui erat, et qui venturus est omnipotens (Apoc. I, 7, 8). Quem igitur compunxerunt, et quem speramus esse venturum, nisi Filium? Ergo omnipotens Dominus et Deus Christus est.

35. But hear also such a passage as you can build no doubts upon: Behold, He comes, says the Scripture, with the clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they which pierced Him, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn because of Him. Yea, amen. I am Alpha and Omega, says the Lord God, Who is, and Who was, and Who is to come, the Almighty. Revelation 1:8 Whom, I ask, did they pierce? For Whose coming hope we but the Son's? Therefore, Christ is Almighty Lord, and God.

36. Accipe aliud, sancte Imperator, et accipe Christum loquentem: Haec dicit Dominus omnipotens: Post honorem misit me super gentes, quae 477 depraedaverunt vos; quoniam qui tangit vos, quasi qui tangit pupillam oculi ejus. Quia ecce ego injicio manum meam super eos, qui depraedaveruntvos, et eruam vos; et erunt in praedam, qui depraedaverunt vos, et scient quia Dominus omnipotens misit me (Zacchar. II, 8, 9). Utique qui dicit: Dominus est omnipotens: et qui misit, Dominus est omnipotens. Ergo et Patris et Filii omnipotentia: sed tamen Deus unus omnipotens; quia unitas potestatis est.

36. Hear another passage, your sacred Majesty, — hear the voice of Christ. Thus says the Lord Almighty: After His glory has He sent me against the nations which have made spoil of you, forasmuch as he that touches you is as he that touches the pupil of His eye. For lo, I lay my hand upon them which despoiled you, and I will save you, and they shall be for a spoil, which made spoil of you, and they shall know that the Lord Almighty has sent Me. Plainly, He Who speaks is the Lord Almighty, and He Who has sent is the Lord Almighty. By consequence, then, almighty power appertains both to the Father and to the Son; nevertheless, it is One Almighty God, for there is oneness of Majesty.

37. Atque ut scias, Imperator auguste, Christum esse, qui locutus est et in propheta et in Evangelio, tamquam in praedestinatione Evangelii per Esaiam dicit: Ipse qui loquebar, adsum (Esai. LII, 6), hoc est: Adsum in Evangelio, qui loquebar in Lege.

37. Moreover, that your most excellent Majesty may know that it is Christ which has spoken as in the Gospel, so also in the prophet, He says by the mouth of Isaiah, as though foreordaining the Gospel: I Myself, Who spoke, have come, that is to say, I, Who spoke in the Law, am present in the Gospel.

38. Deinde alibi: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 25). Quae sunt omnia? Non utique locutus est de creatis; haec enim omnia facta sunt per Filium: sed ea quae Pater habet, id est, aeternitatem, majestatem, divinitatem, quae nascendo possedit. Ergo eum qui omnia habet, quae Pater habet (scriptum est enim: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt), omnipotentem esse dubitare non possumus.

38. Elsewhere, again, He says: All things that the Father has are Mine. John 16:25 What means He by all things? Clearly, not things created, for all these were made by the Son, but the things that the Father has — that is to say, Eternity, Sovereignty, Godhead, which are His possession, as begotten of the Father. We cannot, then, doubt that He is Almighty, Who has all things that the Father has (for it is written: All things that the Father has are Mine).

CAPUT V.

OBJECTOS ADVERSUS CHRISTI omnipotentiam Scripturae textus exponit; ac maxime in eo immoratur, ut eumdem non raro ex humanae naturae affectu locutum probet.

CHAPTER 5.

Certain passages from Scripture, urged against the Omnipotence of Christ, are resolved; the writer is also at especial pains to show that Christ not seldom spoke in accordance with the affections of human nature.

39. Nec vereor ne quia scriptum est de Deo: Beatus et solus potens (I Tim. VI, 15), ab eo Dei Filius separetur; cum Scriptura Deum solum potentem dixerit, non Patrem solum: et ipse de Christo Deus Pater asserat per Prophetam: Posui adjutorium super potentem (Psal. LXXXVIII, 20). Non ergo Pater solus potens, sed potens etiam Deus Filius; in Patre enim laudatur et Filius.

39. Although it is written concerning God, Blessed and only Potentate, 1 Timothy 5:15 yet I have no misgiving that the Son of God is thereby severed from Him, seeing that the Scripture entitled God, not the Father by Himself, the only Potentate. The Father Himself also declares by the prophet, concerning Christ, that I have set help upon one that is mighty. It is not the Father alone, then, Who is the only Potentate; God the Son also is Potentate, for in the Father's praise the Son is praised too.

40. Certe ostendat aliquis quid sit, quod non possit Dei Filius: quis ei adjutor cum coelum faceret, fuit: quis adjutor cum conderet mundum? An qui in constitutione Angelorum et Dominationum adjutore non eguit, eguit ut hominem liberaret?

40. Aye, let some one show what there is that the Son of God cannot do. Who was His helper, when He made the heavens, — Who, when He laid the foundations of the world? Had He any need of a helper to set men free, Who needed none in constituting angels and principalities? Colossians 1:15-16

41. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Pater meus, si possibile est, transfer a me calicem hunc (Matth. XXVI, 39; Luc. XXII, 42). Et ideo omnipotens est, quomodo de possibilitate 478 ambigit? Ergo quia omnipotentem probavi, probavi utique ambigere eum de possibilitate non posse.

41. It is written, say they: 'My Father, if it be possible, take away this cup from Me.' If, then, He is Almighty, how comes He to doubt of the possibility? Which means that, because I have proved Him to be Almighty, I have proved Him unable to doubt of possibility.

42. Verba, inquis, Christi sunt. Verum dicis: sed quando, et in qua forma loquatur, adverte. Hominis substantiam gessit, hominis assumpsit affectum. Denique supra habes quia progressus pusillum procidit in faciem suam, orans et dicens: Pater, si possibile est. Non ergo quasi Deus, sed quasi homo loquitur; Deus enim possibile aliquid aut impossibile nesciebat? Aut aliquid impossibile Deo, cum scriptum sit: Impossibile enim tibi nihil est (Job XXII, 17)?

42. The words, you say, are the words of Christ. True — consider, though, the occasion of His speaking them, and in what character He speaks. He has taken upon Him the substance of man, and therewith its affections. Again, you find in the place above cited, that He went forward a little further, and fell on His face, praying, and saying: Father, if it be possible. Not as God, then, but as man, speaks He, for could God be ignorant of the possibility or impossibility of anything? Or is anything impossible for God, when the Scripture says: For You nothing is impossible? Job 22:17

43. De quo autem dubitat? de se, an de Patre? De eo utique qui dicit: Transfer: et dubitat hominis affectu. Ergo propheta non putat aliquid impossibile Deo. Propheta non dubitat, et Filium dubitare tu credis? Num infra homines constituis Deum? Et dubitat de Patre Deus, et de morte formidat? Timet ergo Christus; et cum Petrus non timeat, Christus timet? Petrus dicit: Animam meam pro te ponam (Joan. XIII, 37); Christus dicit: Anima mea turbatur (Joan. XII, 27).

43. Of Whom, howbeit, does He doubt — of Himself, or of the Father? Of Him, surely, Who says: Take away from Me, — being moved as man is moved to doubt. The prophet reckons nothing impossible with God. The prophet doubts not; think you that the Son doubts? Will you put God lower than man? What — God has doubts of His Father, and is fearful at the thought of death! Christ, then, is afraid — afraid, while Peter fears nothing. Peter says: I will lay down my life for Your sake. John 13:37 Christ says: My soul is troubled. John 12:27

44. Utrumque verum est, et plenum utrumque rationis; quod et ille qui est inferior, non timet: et ille qui superior est, gerit timentis affectum: ille enim quasi homo vim mortis ignorat, iste quasi Deus in corpore constitutus fragilitatem carnis exponit; ut eorum qui sacramentum Incarnationis abjurant, excluderetur impietas. Denique et haec dixit, et Manichaeus non credidit, Valentinus negavit, Marcion phantasma judicavit.

44. Both records are true, and it is equally natural that the person who is the less should not fear, as that He Who is the greater should endure this feeling, for the one has all a man’s ignorance of the might of death, while the other, as being God inhabiting a body, displays the weakness of the flesh, that the wickedness of those who deny the mystery of the Incarnation might have no excuse. Thus, then, has He spoken, yet the Manichæan believed not; Valentinus denied, and Marcion judged Him to be a ghost.

45. Eousque autem hominem quem veritate corporis demonstrabat, aequabat affectu, ut diceret: Sed tamen non sicut ego volo, sed sicut tu vis (Matth. XXVI, 39); cum utique similiter, sit Christi velle, quod Pater vult: cujus similiter est facere, quod Pater facit.

45. But indeed He so far put Himself on a level with man, such as He showed Himself to be in the reality of His bodily frame, as to say, Nevertheless, not as I will, but as You will, Matthew 26:39 though truly it is Christ's special power to will what the Father wills, even as it is His to do what the Father does.

46. Quo loco etiam illa vestra quaestio conticescit, quam soletis objicere, quia dixit Dominus: Non sicut ego volo, sed sicut tu vis; et alibi: Ad hoc descendi de coelo, non ut facium voluntatem meam, sed voluntatem ejus qui me misit (Joan. VI, 38). 479

46. Here, then, let there be an end of the objection which it is your custom to oppose to us, on the ground that the Lord said, Not as I will, but as You will; and again, For this cause I came down from heaven, not to do My own will, but the will of Him that sent Me. John 6:38

CAPUT VI.

OCCASIONE SUPERIORUM SCRIPTURAE locorum tantisper digrediens, libertatem Domini primum ex eo quod eadem praeditus affirmetur Spiritus sanctus, deinde expressis quibus ipsa Filio Dei attribuitur, testimoniis demonstrat.

CHAPTER 6.

The passages of Scripture above cited are taken as an occasion for a digression, wherein our Lord's freedom of action is proved from the ascription to the Spirit of such freedom, and from places where it is attributed to the Son.

47. Ergo ut quasi interpositis plenioris expositionis paulisper induciis, cur dixerit: Si possibile est, voluntatis interim liberae Dominum fuisse doceamus. In tantum processistis impietatis, ut negetis quod Filius Dei liberae voluntatis sit! At certe soletis etiam sancto Spiritui derogare, et negare non potestis scriptum esse: Spiritus ubi vult, spirat (Joan. III, 8). Ubi vult, inquit, non ubi jubetur. Ergo si Spiritus ubi vult, spirat, Filius quod vult, non agit? Et certe idem Dei Filius in Evangelio suo dicit, ubi velit spirandi suppetere Spiritui facultatem. Numquid ergo superiorem fatetur; quia illi licet, quod sibi non licet?

47. Let us now, for the present, explain more fully why our Lord said, If it be possible, and so call a truce, as it were, while we show that He possessed freedom of will. You deny — so far are you gone in the way of iniquity — that the Son of God had a free will. Moreover, it is your wont to detract from the Holy Spirit, though you cannot deny that it is written: The Spirit does breathe, where He will. Where He will, says the Scripture, not where He is ordered. If, then, the Spirit does breathe where He will, cannot the Son do what He will? Why, it is the very same Son of God Who in His Gospel says that the Spirit has power to breathe where He will. Does the Son, therefore, confess the Spirit to be greater, in that He has power to do what is not permitted to Himself?

48. Apostolus quoque dicit quia omnia operatur unus atque idem Spiritus, dividens singulis prout vult (I Cor. XII, 11). Prout vult, inquit, hoc est, pro liberae voluntatis arbitrio, non pro necessitatis obsequio. Et dividit Spiritus non mediocria; sed quae Deus consuevit operari, gratiam curationum, et operationem virtutum. Ergo dividit Spiritus prout vult, Filius Dei non liberat, quem vult? Sed audi etiam ipsum agere quod vult. Dixit enim: Ut faciam voluntatem tuam, Deus meus, volui (Psal. XXXIX, 9). Et alibi: Voluntarie sacrificabo tibi (Psal. LIII, 8).

48. The Apostle also says that all is the work of one and the same Spirit, distributing to each according to His will. 1 Corinthians 12:11 According to His will, mark you — that is, according to the judgment of a free will, not in obedience to compulsion. Furthermore, the gifts distributed by the Spirit are no mean gifts, but such works as God is wont to do — the gift of healing and of working deeds of power. While the Spirit, then, distributes as He will, the Son of God cannot set free whom He will. But hear Him speak when He does even as He will: I have willed to do Your will, O my God; and again: I will offer You a freewill offering.

49. Scivit sanctus apostolus Petrus Jesum in potestate habere quae vellet; et ideo cum videret ambulare eum supra mare, ait: Domine, si tu es, jube me venire ad te super aquas (Matth. XIV, 28). Petrus credidit quia si Christus jubeat, naturae possit conditio mutari; ut humanis se subjiciat unda vestigiis, et discrepantium naturarum possit convenire concordia. Petrus poscit ut jubeat, non ut roget Christus: Christus non rogavit, sed jussit, et factum est: et Arius contradicit?

49. The holy Apostle later knew that Jesus had it in His power to do as He would, and therefore, seeing Him walk upon the sea, said: Lord, if it be You, bid me come to You over the waters. Matthew 14:28 Peter believed that if Christ commanded, the natural conditions could be changed, so that water might support human footsteps, and things discrepant be reduced to harmony and agreement. Peter asks of Christ to command, not to request: Christ requested not, but commanded, and it was done — and Arius denies it!

50. Quid est tamen quod Patre velit, Filius nolit: aut Filius velit et Patre nolit? Pater quos vult, vivificat; et Filius quos vult, vivificat, sicut scriptum est (Joan. V, 21). Dic nunc quos vivificaverit Filius, et Pater vivificare noluerit. Cum autem Filius quos velit vivificet, et operatio una sit; vides quia non solum Filius voluntatem Patris, sed etiam Pater Filii faciat voluntatem? Quid est autem vivificare, nisi per Filii passionem? Passio autem Christi voluntas est Patris. Quos ergo Filius vivificat, per Patris vivificat voluntatem. Una igitur est voluntas.

50. What indeed is there that the Father will have, but the Son will not, or that the Son will have, but the Father will not? The Father quickens whom He will, and the Son quickens whom He will, even as it is written. John 5:21 Tell me now whom the Son has quickened, and the Father would not quicken. Since, however, the Son quickens whom He will, and the action [of Father and Son] is one, you see that not only does the Son the Father’s will, but the Father also does the Son’s. For what is quickening but quickening through the passion of Christ? But the passion of Christ is the Father’s will. Whom, therefore, the Son quickens, He quickens by the will of the Father; therefore their will is one.

51. Quae autem voluntas Patris, nisi ut veniret Jesus in hunc mundum, et nos mundaret a vitiis? 480 Audi leprosum dicentem: Si vis, potes me mundare (Matth. VIII, 2). Respondit Christus, Volo; et statim secutus est effectus sanitatis. Vides quia Filius suae arbiter voluntatis est, et Christi voluntas eadem quae paterna est? Quamquam cum dixerit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15): sine dubio quia nihil excipitur, quam Pater habet, eamdem habet et Filius voluntatem.

51. Again, what was the will of the Father, but that Jesus should come into the world and cleanse us from our sins? Hear the words of the leper: If You will, You can make me clean. Matthew 8:2 Christ answered, I will, and straightway health, the effect, followed. See you not that the Son is master of His own will, and Christ's will is the same as the Father's. Indeed, seeing that He has said, All things that the Father has are Mine, John 16:15 nothing of a certainty being excepted, the Son has the same will that the Father has.

CAPUT VII.

REDIT AD PROPOSITAE difficultatis solutionem, et voluntatem affectusque humanos a Christo vere susceptos esse, ac proinde quidquid in ipso non congruit divinitati, ex eisdem oriri docet, atque ad id quod simul Deus et homo erat, referri.

CHAPTER 7.

The resolution of the difficulty set forth for consideration is again taken in hand. Christ truly and really took upon Him a human will and affections, the source of whatsoever was not in agreement with His Godhead, and which must be therefore referred to the fact that He was at the same time both God and man.

52. Una ergo voluntas, ubi una operatio; in Deo enim voluntatis series operationis effectus est. Sed alia voluntas hominis, alia Dei. Denique ut scias vitam in voluntate esse hominis; quia mortem timemus: passionem autem Christi in voluntate divina; ut pateretur pro nobis: cum Petrus eum vellet a passione revocare, Dominus ait: Non sapis quae Dei sunt, sed quae sunt hominum (Matth. XVI, 23).

52. There is, therefore, unity of will where there is unity of working; for in God His will issues straightway in actual effect. But the will of God is one, and the human will another. Further, to show that life is the object of human will, because we fear death, while the passion of Christ depended on the Divine Will, that He should suffer for us, the Lord said, when Peter would have detained Him from suffering: You savour not of the things which be of God, but the things which be of men. Matthew 16:23

53. Suscepit ergo voluntatem meam, suscepit tristitiam meam. Confidenter tristitiam nomino, quia crucem praedico. Mea est voluntas, quam suam dixit; quia ut homo suscepit tristitiam meam, ut homo locutus est; et ideo ait: Non sicut ego volo, sed sicut tu vis (Matth. XXVI, 39). Mea est tristitia, quam meo suscepit affectu: nemo enim moriturus exsultat. Mihi compatitur, mihi tristis est, mihi dolet. Ergo pro me et in me doluit, qui pro se nihil habuit quod doleret.

53. My will, therefore, He took to Himself, my grief. In confidence I call it grief, because I preach His Cross. Mine is the will which He called His own, for as man He bore my grief, as man He spoke, and therefore said, Not as I will, but as You will. Mine was the grief, and mine the heaviness with which He bore it, for no man exults when at the point to die. With me and for me He suffers, for me He is sad, for me He is heavy. In my stead, therefore, and in me He grieved Who had no cause to grieve for Himself.

54. Doles igitur, Domine Jesu, non tua, sed mea vulnera: non tuam mortem, sed nostram infirmitatem, sicut ait propheta: Quia pro nobis dolet (Esai. LIII, 4): et nos, Domine, aestimavimus te esse in doloribus; cum tu non pro te, sed pro me doleres.

54. Not Your wounds, but mine, hurt You, Lord Jesus; not Your death, but our weakness, even as the Prophet says: For He is afflicted for our sakes Isaiah 53:4 — and we, Lord, esteemed You afflicted, when You grieved not for Yourself, but for me.

55. Et quid mirum si pro omnibus doluit, qui pro uno flevit? Quid mirum, si moriturus pro omnibus taedeat, qui Lazarum resuscitaturus illacrymat? Verum et ibi piae sororis lacrymis commovetur, quia mente humana tangebatur: et hic alto operatur affectu; ut sicut mors ejus mortem abstulit, livor ejus ulcera nostra sanavit: ita etiam moerorem nostrum moeror ejus aboleret.

55. And what wonder if He grieved for all, Who wept for one? What wonder if, in the hour of death, He is heavy for all, Who wept when at the point to raise Lazarus from the dead? Then, indeed, He was moved by a loving sister's tears, for they touched His human heart — here by secret grief He brought it to pass that, even as His death made an end of death, and His stripes healed our scars, so also His sorrow took away our sorrow.

56. Ut homo ergo dubitat, ut homo turbatur. Non turbatur ejus virtus, non turbatur ejus divinitas: sed turbatur anima: turbatur secundum humanae fragilitatis assumptionem. Et ideo quia suscepit animam, suscepit et animae passiones; non enim Deus eo quod Deus erat, aut turbari aut mori potuisset. Denique, Deus, Deus, inquit, meus, quare me dereliquisti (Psal. XXI, 1)? Ut homo 481 ergo loquitur, meos circumferens metus; quod in periculis positi, a Domino deseri nos putamus. Ut homo turbatur, ut homo flet, ut homo crucifigitur.

56. As being man, therefore, He doubts; as man He is amazed. Neither His power nor His Godhead is amazed, but His soul; He is amazed by consequence of having taken human infirmity upon Him. Seeing, then, that He took upon Himself a soul He also took the affections of a soul, for God could not have been distressed or have died in respect of His being God. Finally, He cried: My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me? As being man, therefore, He speaks, bearing with Him my terrors, for when we are in the midst of dangers we think ourself abandoned by God. As man, therefore, He is distressed, as man He weeps, as man He is crucified.

57. Sic enim et apostolus Paulus dixit: Quia Christi carnem crucifixerunt (Galat. V, 24). Et alibi apostolus Petrus ait: Christo passo secundum carnem

(I Pet. IV, 1). Caro igitur est passa, divinitas autem mortis libera: passioni corpus naturae humanae lege concessit; an vero mori divinitas potest, cum anima non possit? Nolite, inquit, timere eos qui corpus possunt occidere, animam autem non possunt (Matth. X, 28). Si ergo anima occidi non potest, quomodo divinitas potest?

57. For so has the Apostle Paul likewise said: Because they have crucified the flesh of Christ. And again the Apostle Peter says: Christ having suffered according to the flesh. 1 Peter 4:1 It was the flesh, therefore, that suffered; the Godhead above secure from death; to suffering His body yielded, after the law of human nature; can the Godhead die, then, if the soul cannot? Fear not them, said our Lord, which can kill the body, but cannot kill the soul. Matthew 10:28 If the soul, then, cannot be killed, how can the Godhead?

58. [Alias cap. IV]. Unde illud quod lectum est, Dominum majestatis crucifixum esse, non quasi in majestate sua crucifixum putemus (I Cor. II, 8): sed quia idem Deus, idem homo, per divinitatem Deus, per susceptionem carnis homo Jesus Christus, Dominus majestatis dicitur crucifixus, quia consors utriusque naturae, id est, humanae atque divinae, in natura hominis subiit passionem; ut indiscrete et Dominus majestatis dicatur esse qui passus est, et Filius hominis, sicut scriptum est, qui descendit de coelo (Joan. III, 13).

58. When we read, then, that the Lord of glory was crucified, let us not suppose that He was crucified as in His glory. 1 Corinthians 2:8 It is because He Who is God is also man, God by virtue of His Divinity, and by taking upon Him of the flesh, the man Christ Jesus, that the Lord of glory is said to have been crucified; for, possessing both natures, that is, the human and the divine, He endured the Passion in His humanity, in order that without distinction He Who suffered should be called both Lord of glory and Son of man, even as it is written: Who descended from heaven. John 3:13

CAPUT VIII.

EX PRINCIPIO PROXIME ante constituto illud solvitur, quod Christus dixit: Pater major me est. Quae verba et alia ejusdem rationis ubi secundum humanitatem intelligenda esse ostensum est, eumdem Dominum secundum naturam divinam dici non posse Patri inferiorem multis confirmatur.

CHAPTER 8.

Christ's saying, The Father is greater than I, is explained in accordance with the principle just established. Other like sayings are expounded in like fashion. Our Lord cannot, as touching His Godhead, be called inferior to the Father.

59. Per naturam igitur hominis et dubitavit, et taeduit et resurrexit; quod enim cecidit, hoc resurgit. Per naturam hominis dicit etiam illud, de quo calumniari solent; quia dictum est: Quoniam Pater major me est (Joan. XIV, 28).

59. It was due to His humanity, therefore, that our Lord doubted and was sore distressed, and rose from the dead, for that which fell does also rise again. Again, it was by reason of His humanity that He said those words, which our adversaries use to maliciously turn against Him: Because the Father is greater than I. John 14:28

60. Verum quia alibi dicitur: Exivi a Patre, et veni in mundum: iterum relinquo mundum, et vado ad Patrem (Joan. XVI, 28): quomodo vadit, nisi per mortem: et venit, nisi per resurrectionem? Denique addidit, ut de assumptione se dixisse signaret: Propterea dixi vobis priusquam fiat; ut cum factum fuerit, credatis (Joan. XIV, 29). Loquebatur enim passionem sui corporis, et resurrectionem per quam credere coeperant, qui ante dubitabant; neque enim Deus de loco ad locum transit, qui ubique semper est. Ut homo est qui vadit, ipse est qui venit. Denique et alibi dicit: Surgit, eamus hinc (Ibid., 31). In eo ergo vadit et venit, quod est commune nobiscum.

60. But when in another passage we read: I came out from the Father, and have come into the world; again, I leave the world, and go to the Father, John 16:28 how does He go, except through death, and how comes He, save by rising again? Furthermore, He added, in order to show that He spoke concerning His Ascension: Therefore have I told you before it come to pass, in order that, when it shall have come to pass, you may believe. John 14:20 For He was speaking of the sufferings and resurrection of His body, and by that resurrection they who before doubted were led to believe — for, indeed, God, Who is always present in every place, passes not from place to place. As it is a man who goes, so it is He Himself Who comes. Furthermore, He says in another place: Rise, let us go hence. John 14:31 In that, therefore, does He go and come, which is common to Him and to us.

61. Nam quomodo potest minor esse Deus, cum Deus perfectus et plenus sit? Sed minor 482 in natura hominis et miraris si ex persona hominis Patrem dixit majorem, qui in persona hominis se vermem dixit esse, non hominem; dixit enim: Ego autem sum vermis et non homo (Psal. XXI, 7); et alibi: Sicut ovis ad occisionem ductus est (Esai. LIII, 7).

61. How, indeed, can He be a lesser God when He is perfect and true God? Yet in respect of His humanity He is less — and still you wonder that speaking in the person of a man He called the Father greater than Himself, when in the person of a man He called Himself a worm, and not a man, saying: But I am a worm, and no man; and again: He was led as a sheep to the slaughter. Isaiah 53:7

62. Si in hoc minorem dicis, negare non possum: sed, ut verbo utar Scripturae, non minor natus, sed minoratus (Hebr. II, 9), hoc est, minor factus est. Quomodo autem minor factus, nisi quia: Cum in forma Dei esset, non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo, sed semetipsum exinanivit (Phil. II, 6, 7): non remittens utique quod erat, sed assumens quod non erat; quia formam servi accepit.

62. If you pronounce Him less than the Father in this respect, I cannot deny it; nevertheless, to speak in the words of Scripture, He was not begotten inferior, but made lower, Hebrews 2:9 that is, made inferior. And how was He made lower, except that, being in the form of God, He thought it not a prey that He should be equal with God, but emptied Himself; Philippians 2:6-7 not, indeed, parting with what He was, but taking up what He was not, for He took the form of a servant. Philippians 2:6-7

63. Denique ut sciremus per susceptionem corporis minoratum, de homine se David prophetare signavit dicens: Quid est homo, quod memor es ejus: aut Filius hominis, nisi quia visitas eum? Minorasti eum paulo minus ab angelis (Psal. VIII, 5, 6). Et hoc ipsum interpretatus Apostolus, ait: Nam paulo quam angelos minoratum videmus Jesum, propter passionem mortis gloria et honore coronatum; ut sine Deo pro omnibus gustaret mortem (Hebr. II, 9).

63. Moreover, to the end that we might know Him to have been made lower, by taking upon Him a body, David has shown that he is prophesying of a man, saying: What is man, that You are mindful of him, or the son of man, but that You visit him? You have made him a little lower than the angels. And in interpreting this same passage the Apostle says: For we see Jesus, made a little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honour because that He suffered death, in order that apart from God He might taste death for all. Hebrews 2:9

64. Non solum ergo Patre, sed etiam angelis minor Filius Dei factus est. Et si hoc ad praejudicium trabis; num ergo Filius in natura Dei minor est, quam sui angeli qui ei serviunt et ministrant (Matth. IV, 6)? Ita dum minorem vultis asserere, impietatem incurritis; ut angelorum naturam Dei Filio praeferatis. Sed non est servus supra Dominum suum (Matth. X, 24). Denique et in carne constituto angeli ministrabant; ut nihil eum agnoscas per naturam corporis imminutum; neque enim Deus sui pati potuit detrimentum, cum id quod assumpsit ex Virgine, nec accessio divinae nec diminutio potestatis sit.

64. Thus, the Son of God was made lower than, not only the Father, but angels also. And if you will turn this to His dishonour; [I ask] is then the Son, in respect of His Godhead, less than His angels who serve Him and minister to Him? Thus, in your purpose to diminish His honour, you run into the blasphemy of exalting the nature of angels above the Son of God. But the servant is not above his master. Matthew 10:24 Again, angels ministered to Him even after His Incarnation, to the end that you should acknowledge Him to have suffered no loss of majesty by reason of His bodily nature, for God could not submit to any loss of Himself, while that which He has taken of the Virgin neither adds to nor takes away from His divine power.

65. Non est ergo secundum divinitatem minor, qui plenitudinem habet divinitatis et gloriae. Major enim et minor in iis quae corporalia sunt, distingui solent: aut statu major, aut plenitudine, aut certe aetate. Vacant ista, ubi de divinis tractatus inducitur. Major enim vulgo dici solet, qui aliquem instituit et informat: in Dei autem sapientiam non cadit, ut instituta sit alterius disciplinis; cum ipsa disciplinarum omnium tradiderit institutum. Quam bene autem posuit Apostolus: Ut sine Deo pro omnibus gustaret mortem (Hebr. II, 9); ne divinitatis illam passionem putaremus fuisse, non carnis!

65. He, therefore, possessing the fullness of Divinity and glory, Colossians 2:9 is not, in respect of His Divinity, inferior. Greater and less are distinctions proper to corporeal existences; one who is greater is so in respect of rank, or qualities, or at any rate of age. These terms lose their meaning when we come to treat of the things of God. He is commonly entitled the greater who instructs and informs another, but it is not the case with God's Wisdom that it has been built up by teaching received from another, forasmuch as Itself has laid the foundation of all teaching. But how wisely wrote the Apostle: In order that apart from God He might taste death for all, — lest we should suppose the Godhead, not the flesh, to have endured that Passion!

66. Ergo si non invenerunt quemadmodum possent probare majorem, non verbis calumnientur, sed verborum rationem requirant. Ergo illos interrogo quo putent esse majorem? Si quia Pater est, eo majorem putant: sed non hic aetas et tempus, neque canities Patris, et 483 filii pueritia est; haec enim majorem solent facere patrem. Caeterum pater et filius generantis et nati nomina sunt, quae non videntur separare, sed jungere; non enim pietas naturae detrimentum est: namque homines sibi invicem conciliat necessitudo, non separat.

66. If our opponents, then, have found no means to prove [the Father] greater [than the Son], let them not pervert words unto false reports, but seek out their meaning. I ask them, therefore, as touching what do they esteem the Father the greater? If it is because He is the Father, then [I answer] here we have no question of age or of time — the Father is not distinguished by white hairs, nor the Son by youthfulness — and it is on these conditions that the greater dignity of a father depends. But father and son are names, the one of the parent, the other of the child — names which seem to join rather than separate; for dutifulness inspires no loss of personal worth, inasmuch as kinship binds men together, and does not rend them asunder.

67. Itaque si nec de natura afferre possunt aliquam quaestionem, vel testimoniis credant. Denique Filium non esse eo minorem, quia Filius est, evangelista testatur; et aequalem esse, quia Filius est, ipse significat dicens: Propterea enim volebant eum occidere Judaei, quia non solum solvebat sabbatum, sed et Patrem proprium dicebat Deum, aequalem se faciens Deo (Joan. V, 18).

67. If, then, they cannot make the order of nature a support for any questioning, let them now believe the witness [of Scripture]. Now the Evangelist testifies that the Son is not lower [than the Father] by reason of being the Son; nay, he even declares that, in being the Son, He is equal, saying, For the Jews sought to kill Him for this cause, that not only did He break the Sabbath, but even called God His own Father, making Himself equal to God. John 5:10

68. Non Judaei hoc dicunt, sed Evangelista testatur, quod aequalem se faciebat Deo, proprium se Filium Dei dicens. Non enim scriptum est ex persona Judaeorum dicentium: Propterea volebamus eum occidere: sed evangelista ex sua persona dicit: Propterea enim volebant illum Judaei occidere. Et interpretatus est causam, ideo Judaeos ad necem ejus esse commotos, quod cum et sabbatum quasi Deus solveret, et Deum Patrem sibi proprium vindicaret, non solum in solutione sabbati majestatem divinae potestatis, sed etiam in Patris proprii nomine jus sibi aeternae aequalitatis adscisceret.

68. This is not what the Jews said — it is the Evangelist who testifies that, in calling Himself God's own Son, He made Himself equal to God, for the Jews are not presented as saying, For this cause we sought to kill Him; the Evangelist, speaking for himself, says, For the Jews sought to kill Him for this cause. Moreover, he has discovered the cause, [in saying] that the Jews were stirred with desire to slay Him because, when as God He broke the Sabbath, and also claimed God as His own Father, He ascribed to Himself not only the majesty of divine authority in breaking the Sabbath, but also, in speaking of His Father, the right appertaining to eternal equality.

69. Quibus aptissime respondit Dei Filius, ut et Dei se Filium, et aequalem probaret: Quaecumque, inquit, Pater fecerit, eadem et Filius facit similiter (Ibid., 19). Filius igitur Patri et dicitur et probatur aequalis. Bona aequalitas, quae et differentiam divinitatis excludit, et cum Filio Patrem signat, cui Filius sit aequalis; non est enim diversa, nec singularis aequalitas; quia nemo aequalis ipse sibi solus est. Ergo Evangelista interpretatus est quid sit proprium Filium Dei se dicere, hoc est, aequalem se facere Deo.

69. Most fitting was the answer which the Son of God made to these Jews, proving Himself the Son and equal of God. Whatsoever things, He said, the Father has done, the Son does also in like wise. John 5:19 The Son, therefore, is both entitled and proved the equal of the Father — a true equality, which both excludes difference of Godhead, and discovers, together with the Son, the Father also, to Whom the Son is equal; for there is no equality where there is difference, nor again where there is but one person, inasmuch as none is by himself equal to himself. Thus has the Evangelist shown why it is fitting that Christ should call Himself the Son of God, that is, make Himself equal with God.

70. Unde id secutus Apostolus dixit: Non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo (Phil. II, 6). Quod enim quis non habet, rapere conatur. Ergo non quasi rapinam habebat aequalitatem cum Patre quam in substantia sui tamquam Deus et Dominus possidebat. Unde addidit: Formam servi accepit (Ibid. 7). Contrarium utique servus, et aequalis. Aequalis ergo in Dei forma; minor in susceptione carnis, et hominis passione. Nam quomodo eadem posset minor esse aequalisque natura? Quomodo autem, si minor est, eadem similiter facit, quae Pater facit? Nam quemadmodum eadem operatio diversae esset potestatis? Numquid sic potest minor, quemadmodum major operari? aut una operatio potest esse, ubi diversa substantia est?

70. Hence the Apostle, following this revelation, has said: He thought it not a prey that He should be equal with God. For that which a man has not he seeks to carry off as a prey. Equality with the Father, therefore, which, as God and Lord, He possessed in His own substance, He had not as a spoil wrongfully seized. Wherefore the Apostle added [the words]: He took the form of a servant. Now surely a servant is the opposite of an equal. Equal, therefore, is the Son, in the form of God, but inferior in taking upon Him of the flesh and in His sufferings as a man. For how could the same nature be both lower and equal? And how, if [the Son] be inferior, can He do the same things, in like manner, as the Father does? How, indeed, can there be sameness of operation with diversity of power? Can the inferior ever work such effects as the greater, or can there be unity of operation where there is diversity of substance?

71. Itaque accipe Christum secundum divinitatem minorem non posse dici. Ipse loquitur ad Abraham: Per me ipsum juravi (Gen. XXII, 16). Ostendit autem Apostolus eum qui per se jurat, minorem 484 esse non posse. Itaque sic ait: Abrahae cum repromisisset Deus, quoniam nullum alium majorem habebat, juravit per seipsum, dicens: Nisi benedicendo benedixero te, et multiplicando multiplicavero te (Hebr. VI, 13, 14). Ergo majorem non habuit Christus, et ideo per se juravit. Et bene addidit: Homines enim per majorem se jurant; quia homines majorem habent, Deus non habet (Ibid., 16).

71. Admit, therefore, that Christ, as touching His Godhead, cannot be called inferior [to the Father]. Christ speaks to Abraham: By Myself have I sworn. Genesis 22:16 Now the Apostle shows that He Who swears by Himself cannot be lower than any. Thus he says, When God rewarded Abraham with His promise, He swore by Himself, forasmuch as He had none other that was greater, saying, Surely with blessing will I bless you, and with multiplying will I multiply you. Hebrews 6:13-14 Christ had, therefore, none greater, and for that cause swore He by Himself. Moreover, the Apostle has rightly added, for men swear by one greater than themselves, forasmuch as men have one who is greater than themselves, but God has none.

72. Aut si volunt de Patre dictum videri, reliqua non cohaerent; neque enim Pater visus est Abrahae, nec Deo Patri pedes lavit, sed ei in quo futuri hominis est figura. Denique Filius Dei dicit: Abraham diem meum vidit, et gravisus est (Joan. VIII, 56). Ipse est ergo qui per se juravit, quem Abraham vidit.

72. Otherwise, if our adversaries will understand this passage as referred to the Father, then the rest of the record does not agree with it. For the Father did not appear to Abraham, nor did Abraham wash the feet of God the Father, but the feet of Him in Whom is the image of the man that shall be. Moreover, the Son of God says, Abraham saw My day, and rejoiced. John 8:56 It is He, therefore, Who swore by Himself, [and] Whom Abraham saw.

73. Et revera quomodo majorem habet, qui divinitate cum Patre unum est (Joan. X, 30)? Quod enim unum est, dissimile non est: inter majorem autem minoremque discretio est. Ergo de Filio, et Patre praesentis docet lectionis exemplum, quia nec Pater minorem habet, nec majorem Dei Filius; cum in Patre et Filio nulla distantia divinitatis sit, sed una majestas.

73. And how, indeed, has He any greater than Himself Who is one with the Father in Godhead? John 10:30 Where there is unity, there is no dissimilarity, whereas between greater and less there is a distinction. The teaching, therefore, of the instance from Scripture before us, with regard to the Father and the Son, is that neither is the Father greater, nor has the Son any that is above Him, inasmuch as in Father and Son there is no difference of Godhead parting them, but one majesty.

CAPUT IX.

OBJICIENTIBUS FILIUM CUM a Patre sit missus, eo utique minorem esse; respondetur illum etiam a Spiritu missum, quo tamen minor non habeatur. Additur etiam Spiritum mitti a Patre et Filio, ut utriusque operationum unitas designetur: Hinc admonemur sedulo distinguendum quae locutiones Christo ut Deo, quaeve eidem ut homini conveniant: quarum exempla non pauca subjiciuntur exponunturque.

CHAPTER 9.

The objection that the Son, being sent by the Father, is, in that regard at least, inferior, is met by the answer that He was also sent by the Spirit, Who is yet not considered greater than the Son. Furthermore, the Spirit, in His turn, is sent by the Father to the Son, in order that Their unity in action might be shown forth. It is our duty, therefore, carefully to distinguish what utterances are to be fitly ascribed to Christ as God, and what to be ascribed to Him as man.

74. Nec illud sane metuo, quod solent obtendere minorem esse, quia missus est. Si enim et minor non docetur, et honorificentiae docetur aequalitas; cum ita omnes honorificent Filium, sicut honorificant Patrem (Joan. V, 23), constat eo minorem non esse, quod missus est.

74. I have no fears in the matter of that commonly advanced objection, that Christ is inferior because He was sent. For even if He be inferior, yet this is not so proved; on the other hand, His equal title to honour is in truth proved. Since all honour the Son as they honour the Father, John 5:23 it is certain that the Son is not, in so far as being sent, inferior.

75. Non ergo humani sermonis angustias, sed verborum claritatem intuere, operibus crede. Considera quia Dominus noster Jesus Christus in Esaia locutus est ab Spiritu sancto esse se missum (Esa. LXI, 1). Numquid ergo Spiritu minor Filius, quia missus ab Spiritu est? Habes igitur scriptum quod Filius a Patre et Spiritu ejus dicat esse se missum: Ego sum, inquit, primus, et ego in aeternum, et manus mea fundavit terram, dextera mea solidavit coelum (Esai. XLVIII, 12, 13); et infra: Ego locutus sum, et ego vocavi; adduxi eum, et prosperum iter ejus feci. Accedite ad me, et audite haec: non in occulto ab initio locutus sum. Cum fierent, illic eram: et nunc Dominus misit me, et Spiritus ejus (Ibid., 15, 16). Utique qui coelum fecit et terram, ipse dicit a Domino et a Spiritu ejus esse se missum. Videtis ergo quod simplicitas sermonis, non injuria 485 missionis sit. Ipse igitur missus a Patre, ipse est missus ab Spiritu.

75. Regard not, therefore, the narrow bounds of human language, but the plain meaning of the words, and believe facts accomplished. Bethink you that our Lord Jesus Christ said in Isaiah that He had been sent by the Spirit. Is the Son, therefore, less than the Spirit because He was sent by the Spirit? Thus you have the record, that the Son declares Himself sent by the Father and His Spirit. I am the beginning, He says, Isaiah 48:12 and I live for ever, and My hand has laid the foundations of the earth, My right hand has made the heaven to stand abidingly; and further on: I have spoken, and I have called; I have brought him, and have made his way to prosper. Draw near to Me, and hear these things: not in secret have I spoken from the beginning. When they were made, I was there: and now has the Lord and His Spirit sent Me. Isaiah 48:15-16 Here, indeed, He Who made the heaven and the earth Himself says that He is sent by the Lord and His Spirit. You see, then, that the poverty of language takes not from the honour of His mission. He, then, is sent by the Father; by the Spirit also is He sent.

76. Et ut cognoscas nullam majestatis esse distantiam, etiam Filius Spiritum mittit, sicut ipse dixit: Cum venerit autem Paraclitus, quem ego mittam vobis a Patre meo, Spiritus veritatis, qui a Patre meo procedit (Joan. XV, 26). Hunc eumdem Paraclitum et a Patre esse mittendum supra docuit dicens: Paraclitus autem ille Spiritus sanctus, quem mittet Pater in nomine meo (Joan. XIV, 26). Vide unitatem, quia quem Deus Pater mittit, mittit et Filius: et quem mittit Pater, mittit et Spiritus. Aut si nolunt Filium missum, quia dexteram Patris Filium legimus; ipsi de Patre quod de Filio abnuunt, fatebuntur: nisi forte aut alterum sibi Patrem, aut alterum sibi Filium inveniant Ariani.

76. And that you may gather that there is no separating difference of majesty, the Son in turn sends the Spirit, even as He Himself has said: But when the Comforter has come, whom I will send you from My Father — the Spirit of truth, who comes forth from My Father. John 15:26 That this same Comforter is also to be sent by the Father He has already taught, saying, But the Comforter, that Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in My name. John 14:26 Behold their unity, inasmuch as whom God the Father sends, the Son sends also, and Whom the Father sends, the Spirit sends also. Else, if the Arians will not admit that the Son was sent, because we read that the Son is the right hand of the Father, then they themselves will confess with respect to the Father, what they deny concerning the Son, unless perchance they discover for themselves either another Father or another Son.

77. Sileant igitur inanes de sermonibus quaestiones; quia regnum Dei, sicut scriptum est (I Cor. II, 4), non in persuasione verbi est, sed in ostensione virtutis. Servemus distinctionem divinitatis et carnis. Unus in utraque loquitur Dei Flius; quia in eodem utraque natura est: et si idem loquitur, non uno semper loquitur modo. Intende in eo nunc gloriam Dei, nunc hominis passiones. Quasi Deus loquitur quae sunt divina, quia Verbum est: quasi homo dicit quae sunt humana, quia in mea substantia loquebatur.

77. A truce, then, to vain wranglings over words, for the kingdom of God, as it is written, consists not in persuasive words, but in power plainly shown forth. Let us take heed to the distinction of the Godhead from the flesh. In each there speaks one and the same Son of God, for each nature is present in Him; yet while it is the same Person Who speaks, He speaks not always in the same manner. Behold in Him, now the glory of God, now the affections of man. As God He speaks the things of God, because He is the Word; as man He speaks the things of man, because He speaks in my nature.

78. Hic est panis vivus, qui descendit de coelo (Joan. VI, 51). Panis hic caro est, sicut ipse dixit: Hic panis quem ego dabo, caro mea est (Ibid., 52). Hic est qui descendit de coelo, hic est quem Pater sanctificavit, et misit in hunc mundum. Nec ipsa littera nos docet sanctificatione divinitatem eguisse, sed carnem. Denique ipse Dominus dixit: Et ego memetipsum sanctifico pro ipsis (Joan. XVII, 19); ut agnoscas quod et sanctificatur in carne pro nobis, et divinitate sanctificat.

78. This is the living bread, which came down from heaven. John 6:51 This bread is His flesh, even as He Himself said: This bread which I will give is My flesh. John 7:52 This is He Who came down from heaven, this is He Whom the Father has sanctified and sent into this world. Even the letter itself teaches us that not the Godhead but the flesh needed sanctification, for the Lord Himself said, And I sanctify Myself for them, John 17:19 in order that you may acknowledge that He is both sanctified in the flesh for us, and sanctifies by virtue of His Divinity.

79. Hic idem est quem Pater misit, sed factum ex muliere, factum sub Lege, ut Apostolus dixit (Galat. IV, 4). Hic est, qui ait: Spiritus Domini super me, propter quod unxit me: evangelizare pauperibus misit me (Luc. IV, 18). Hic est qui dicit: Mea doctrina non est mea, sed ejus qui misit me. Si quis voluerit voluntatem ejus facere, cognoscet de doctrina, utrum ex Deo est, an ego a me ipso loquar (Joan. VII, 16, 17). Alia ergo ex Deo doctrina, alia ex homine. Itaque Judaei cum doctrinam ejus secundum hominem quaererent, et dicerent: Quomodo hic litteras novit, cum non didicerit (Joan. VII, 15)? respondit Jesus, et dixit: Mea doctrina, non est mea; nam cum sine 486 eruditione litterarum doceat, non quasi homo, sed potius ut Deus videtur docere, qui doctrinam non didicerit, sed invenerit.

79. This is the same One Whom the Father sent, but born of a woman, born under the law, Galatians 4:4 as the Apostle has said. This is He Who says: The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me; wherefore He has anointed Me, to bring good tidings to the poor has He sent Me: This is He Who says: My doctrine is not Mine, but His, Who sent Me. If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of Myself. John 7:16 Doctrine that is of God, then, is one thing; doctrine that is of man, another; and so when the Jews, regarding Him as man, called in question His teaching, and said, How knows this man letters, having never learned? Jesus answered and said, My doctrine is not Mine, for, in teaching without elegance of letters, He seems to teach not as man, but rather as God, having not learned, but devised His doctrine.

80. Adinvenit enim omnem viam disciplinae, ut supra lectum est; nam utique de Filio Dei dictum est: Hic est Deus noster, et non aestimabitur alius ad eum qui adinvenit omnem viam disciplinae. Post haec in terris visus est, et cum hominibus conversatus est (Baruc. III, 36 et seq). Quomodo ergo secundum divinitatem doctrinam suam non habet, qui adinvenit omnem viam disciplinae, antequam videretur in terris? Aut quomodo minor, de quo dictum est: Non aestimabitur alius ad eum? Utique incomparabilis dicitur, ad quam nemo alius aestimari potest: sed ita incomparabilis, ut Patri nequeat anteferri. Quod si de Patre dictum putant, impietatem Sabellii non evadent, ut Patri susceptionem humanae carnis attribuant.

80. For He has found and devised all the way of discipline, as we read above, inasmuch as of the Son of God it has been said: This is our God, and none other shall be accounted of in comparison with Him, Who has found all the way of discipline. After these things He was seen on earth, and conversed with men. How, then, could He, as divine, not have His own doctrine — He Who has found all the way of discipline before He was seen on earth? Or how is He inferior, of Whom it is said, None shall be accounted of in comparison with Him? Surely He is entitled incomparable, in comparison of Whom none other can be accounted of — yet so that He cannot be accounted of before the Father. Now if men suppose that the Father is spoken of, they shall not escape running into the blasphemy of Sabellius, of ascribing the assumption of human nature to the Father.

81. Persequamur sequentia: Qui a semetipso, inquit, loquitur, gloriam suam quaerit (Joan. VII, 18). Vide unitatem, quae et Patrem signat et Filium. Non potest non esse, qui loquitur: sed non potest a semetipso esse quod loquitur, in quo naturaliter ex Patre sunt omnia.

81. Let us proceed with what follows. He who speaks of himself, seeks his own glory. John 7:18 See the unity wherein Father and Son are plainly revealed. He who speaks cannot but be; yet that which He speaks cannot be solely from Him, for in Him all that is, is naturally derived from the Father.

82. Quid est autem: Gloriam suam quaerit? Hoc est, non divisam a Patre gloriam; nam utique et Verbum Deus habet gloriam. Denique dicit: Ut videant gloriam meam (Joan. XVII, 24). Sed illa verbi gloria eadem Patris gloria est, sicut scriptum est: Dominus Jesus Christus in gloria est Dei Patris (Philip. II, 11). Ita igitur secundum divinitatem Dei Filius suam gloriam habet, ut Patris et Filii una sit gloria. Non est ergo minor in claritate, quia una gloria: non minor divinitate, quia plenitudo divinitatis in Christo est.

82. What now is the meaning of the words seeks his own glory? That is, not a glory in which the Father has no part — for indeed the Word of God is His glory. Again, our Lord says: that they may see My glory. John 17:24 But that glory of the Word is also the glory of the Father, even as it is written: The Lord Jesus Christ is in the glory of God the Father. In regard of His Godhead, therefore, the Son of God so has His own glory, that the glory of Father and Son is one: He is not, therefore, inferior in splendour, for the glory is one, nor lower in Godhead, for the fullness of the Godhead is in Christ.

83. Et quomodo, inquis, scriptum est: Pater, venit hora, clarifica Filium tuum (Joan. XVII, 1)? Qui hoc dicit, clarificatione, inquis, indiget. Hucusque oculos habes: quod reliquum est non legisti; sequitur enim: Ut Filius tuus clarificet te (Ibid.). Numquid et Pater indiget, qui clarificandus a Filio est?

83. How, then, you ask, is it written, Father, the hour has come; glorify Your Son? John 17:1 He Who says these words needs to be glorified, say you. Thus far you have eyes to see; the remainder of the Scripture you have not read, for it proceeds: that Your Son may glorify You. Hath ever the Father need of any, in that He is to be glorified by the Son?

CAPUT X.

OBJECTIONEM A FILII obedientia desumptam solvit, ostensoque Trinitatis unam potentiam, divinitatem atque operationem esse, addit Christum etiam matri, qua minor dici neutiquam potest, obedientiam exhibuisse.

CHAPTER 10.

The objection taken on the ground of the Son's obedience is disproved, and the unity of power, Godhead, and operation in the Trinity set forth, Christ's obedience to His mother, to whom He certainly cannot be called inferior, is noticed.

84. Pari modo obedientiam Filii objicere solent, quia scriptum est: Et specie inventus 487 ut homo, humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Phil. II, 7, 8). Et hominem praemisit, et usque ad mortem dixit; ut intelligeremus obedientiam mortis non divinitatis fuisse, sed incarnationis: in qua et officia nostra suscepit et nomina.

84. In like manner our adversaries commonly make a difficulty of the Son's obedience, forasmuch as it is written: And being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient even unto death. Philippians 2:7-8 The writer has not only told us that the Son was obedient even unto death, but also first shown that He was man, in order that we might understand that obedience unto death was the part not of His Godhead but of His Incarnation, whereby He took upon Himself both the functions and the names belonging to our nature.

85. Didicimus itaque unam esse potentiam Trinitatis, quam nos in ipsa atque post ipsam docuit passionem; Filius enim patitur per corporis sacramentum, apostolis Spiritus sanctus infunditur: in manus Patris commendatur spiritus, Deus quoque Pater maxima voce signatur. Didicimus unam Patris et Filii esse imaginem, unam similitudinem, unam sanctificationem. Didicimus unam esse operationem, unam gloriam, unam quoque divinitatem.

85. Thus we have learned that the power of the Trinity is one, as we are taught both in and after the Passion itself: for the Son suffers through His body, which is the earnest of it; the Holy Spirit is poured upon the apostles: into the Father's hands the spirit is commended; furthermore, God is with a mighty voice proclaimed the Father. We have learned that there is one form, one likeness, one sanctification, of the Father and of the Son, one activity, one glory, finally, one Godhead.

86. Unus ergo et solus Deus; quia scriptum est: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et illi soli servies (Deut. VI, 13). Unus Deus, non ut ipse sit Pater et Filius, sicut impius Sabellius asserit: sed quia Patris et Filii, Spiritusque sancti una divinitas sit: ubi autem una divinitas, una voluntas, una praeceptio.

86. There is, therefore, but one only God, for it is written: You shall worship the Lord your God, and Him only shall you serve. Deuteronomy 6:13 One God, not in the sense that the Father and the Son are the same Person, as the ungodly Sabellius affirms — but forasmuch as there is one Godhead of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. But where there is one Godhead, there is one will, one purpose.

87. Denique ut scias et Patrem esse, et Filium esse, et unum opus Patris ac Filii esse, Apostolum sequere, qui dixit: Ipse autem Deus, et Pater noster, et Dominus noster Jesus dirigat viam nostram ad vos (I Thess. III, 11). Et Patrem loquitur, et Filium loquitur: sed unitas directionis est; quia unitas potestatis est. Sic et alibi habes: Ipse autem Dominus noster Jesus Christus, et Deus, et Pater noster qui dilexit nos, et dedit consolationem aeternam, et spem bonam in gratia; consoletur corda vestra, et confirmet (II Thess. II, 16, 17). Quantam unitatem ostendit, ut consolationis unitas, non pluralitas sit! Conticescat ergo perfidia, aut si ratione non vincitur, morali humanitate flectatur.

87. Again, that you may know that the Father is, and the Son is, and that the work of the Father and of the Son is one, follow the saying of the Apostle: Now may God Himself, and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ direct our way unto you. 1 Thessalonians 3:11 Both Father and Son are named, but there is unity of direction, because unity of power. So also in another place we read: Now may our Lord Himself, Jesus Christ, and God and our Father, Who has loved us, and given us eternal consolation, and good hope in grace, console and strengthen your hearts. 2 Thessalonians 2:15-16 How perfect a unity it is that the Apostle presents to us, insomuch that the fount of consolation is not many, but one. Let doubt be dumb, then, or, if it will not be overcome by reason, let the thought of our Lord’s gracious kindliness bend it.

88. Consideremus quam moraliter egerit Dominus; ut nos non solum fidem, sed etiam mores doceret. Namque in forma hominis constitutus, subditus erat Joseph et Mariae (Luc. II, 51). Numquid ergo minor et hominibus, quia subditus? Aliud pietatis, aliud potestatis est: sed non praejudicat pietas potestati. In quo ergo legis subditum Patri? In corpore scilicet, in quo erat subditus matri.

88. Let us call to mind how kindly our Lord has dealt with us, in that He taught us not only faith but manners also. For, having taken His place in the form of man, He was subject to Joseph and Mary. Luke 2:51 Was He less than all mankind, then, because He was subject? The part of dutifulness is one, that of sovereignty is another, but dutifulness does not exclude sovereignty. Wherein, then, was He subject to the Father's law? In His body, surely, wherein He was subject to His mother.

CAPUT XI.

PROPONIT CUM ARIANIS humaniter agere Christi exemplo vulnera vino et oleo curantis: ad quod coeleste medicamentum omnes invitans, quo consilio is carnem induerit, et qua utilitate, tradit. Hinc aperit quantum prosit fidem habere, qua Christum propter nos omnem infirmitatem suscepisse cognoscimus, cujus divinitas in passione erumpebat. Ex quibus intelligere est Dei Filium sine subjectione ulla missum fuisse: nec metuendum ne fides haec displiceat Patri; quippe qui in filio sibi complacere significet.

CHAPTER 11.

The purpose and healing effects of the Incarnation. The profitableness of faith, whereby we know that Christ bore all infirmities for our sakes — Christ, Whose Godhead revealed Itself in His Passion; whence we understand that the mission of the Son of God entailed no subservience, which belief we need not fear lest it displease the Father, Who declares Himself to be well pleased in His Son.

89. Agamus et nos moraliter, persuadeamus illis quod sibi prosit, obsecremus et ploremus ante Dominum qui fecit nos (Psal. XCIV, 6). Non enim 488 vincere volumus, sed sanare: non insidiose agimus, sed religiose monemus. Saepe flectit humanitas, quos nec virtus potuerit superare, nec ratio. Denique Dominus illum hominem qui ex Hiericho descendens, incidit in latrones, quem non asperioribus Legis medicamentis, non prophetico rigore curaverat, oleo curavit et vino (Luc. X, 30 et seq.).

89. Let us likewise deal kindly, let us persuade our adversaries of that which is to their profit, let us worship and lament before the Lord our Maker. For we would not overthrow, but rather heal; we lay no ambush for them, but warn them as in duty bound. Kindliness often bends those whom neither force nor argument will avail to overcome. Again, our Lord cured with oil and wine the man who, going down from Jerusalem to Jericho, fell among thieves; having forborne to treat him with the harsh remedies of the Law or the sternness of Prophecy.

90. Veniant ergo ad hunc omnes qui sanari volunt; accipiant medicamentum, quod et a Patre detulit, et praeparavit in coelo, ex illis confectum immortalibus succis. Hoc ex terra non pullulat; expers enim est omnis natura hujus confectionis. Divino enim consilio suscepit hanc carnem, ut ostenderet legem carnis legi esse subditam mentis. Suscepit carnem, ut quasi homo vinceret, qui homines erudiret.

90. To Him, therefore, let all come who would be made whole. Let them receive the medicine which He has brought down from His Father and made in heaven, preparing it of the juices of those celestial fruits that wither not. This is of no earthly growth, for nature nowhere possesses this compound. Of wondrous purpose took He our flesh, to the end that He might show that the law of the flesh had been subjected to the law of the mind. He was incarnate, that He, the Teacher of men, might overcome as man.

91. Quid mihi prodesset, si quasi Deus exerta potestate divinitatem suam tantummodo inviolabilem demonstrasset? Aut cur susciperet carnem, nisi ut tentari se naturae atque infirmitatis meae conditione pateretur? Tentari debuit, compati mihi debuit; ut scirem quemadmodum tentatus vincerem, compassus evaderem. Vicit per continentiam, vicit per contemptum divitiarum, vicit per fidem: calcavit ambitionem, fugavit intemperantiam, lasciviam relegavit.

91. Of what profit would it have been to me, had He, as God, bared the arm of His power, and only displayed His Godhead inviolate? Why should He take human nature upon Him, but to suffer Himself to be tempted under the conditions of my nature and my weakness? It was right that He should be tempted, that He should suffer with me, to the end that I might know how to conquer when tempted, how to escape when hard pressed. He overcame by force of continence, of contempt of riches, of faith; He trampled upon ambition, fled from intemperance, bade wantonness be far from Him.

92. Hoc medicamentum Petrus vidit, et retia sua, instrumenta videlicet quaestus et subsidia dereliquit, renuntians carnis concupiscentiae tamquam corruptae navi, in quam quasi sentina quaedam multarum ingreditur passionum. Magnum ergo medicamentum, quod non solum cicatricem vetusti vulneris amputavit, sed etiam causam passionis incidit. O fides thesauris omnibus opulentior! o vulnerum nostrorum, peccatorumque medicina praestantior!

92. This medicine Peter beheld, and left His nets, that is to say, the instruments and security of gain, renouncing the lust of the flesh as a leaky ship, that receives the bilge, as it were, of multitudinous passions. Truly a mighty remedy, that not only removed the scar of an old wound, but even cut the root and source of passion. O Faith, richer than all treasure-houses; O excellent remedy, healing our wounds and sins!

93. Consideremus quia nobis prodest bene credere. Mihi enim prodest scire quia propter me Christus suscepit meas infirmitates, mei corporis subiit passiones (Esai. LIII, 4): pro me peccatum, hoc est, pro omni homine, pro me maledictum factus est, pro me atque in me subditus atque subjectus, pro me agnus, pro me vitis, pro me lapis, pro me servus, pro me filius ancillae, pro me diem judicii ignorans, pro nobis nesciens diem aut horam.

93. Let us bethink ourselves of the profitableness of right belief. It is profitable to me to know that for my sake Christ bore my infirmities, submitted to the affections of my body, that for me, that is to say, for every man, He was made sin, and a curse, that for me and in me was He humbled and made subject, that for me He is the Lamb, the Vine, the Rock, the Servant, the Son of an handmaid, knowing not the day of judgment, for my sake ignorant of the day and the hour.

94. Nam quomodo posset diem nescire, qui dies fecit et tempora? Quomodo posset diem ignorare judicii, qui et horam futuri judicii expressit et causam? Factus ergo maledictum non secundum divinitatem, sed secundum carnem; scriptum est enim: Maledictus omnis qui pendet in ligno (Deut. XXI, 23). Secundum carnem utique pependit; et ideo maledictum, qui nostra maledicta suscepit. Ille flevit, ne tu homo diu fleres: ille injurias passus est, ne tu injuriam tuam doleres.

94. For how could He, Who has made days and times, be ignorant of the day? How could He not know the day, Who has declared both the season of Judgment to come, and the cause? A curse, then, He was made not in respect of His Godhead, but of His flesh; for it is written: Cursed is every one that hangs on a tree. In and after the flesh, therefore, He hung, and for this cause He, Who bore our curses, became a curse. He wept that thou, man, might not weep long. He endured insult, that you might not grieve over the wrong done to you.

dubitatio illa nos firmat; ne tu si coeperis dubitare, desperes. Quanto major est injuria, tanto uberior debetur gratia.

95. A glorious remedy — to have consolation of Christ! For He bore these things with surpassing patience for our sakes — and we forsooth cannot bear them with common patience for the glory of His Name! Who may not learn to forgive, when assailed, seeing that Christ, even on the Cross, prayed — yea, for them that persecuted Him? See you not that those weaknesses, as you please to call them, of Christ's are your strength? Why question Him in the matter of remedies for us? His tears wash us, His weeping cleanses us — and there is strength in this doubt, at least, that if you begin to doubt, you will despair. The greater the insult, the greater is the gratitude due.

96. Sed in ipsis injuriis cognosce divinitatem. In cruce pendebat, et elementa ei omnia serviebant. Sol refugit, dies occidit, offusae et circumfusae tenebrae, terra tremuit: non tremuit qui pependit (Matth. XXVII, 51). Quid aliud haec, quam Auctoris reverentiam signant? Quia in cruce est, vides: quia regnum Dei donat, non vides. Quia mortem gustavit, legis: quia latronem quoque ad paradisum invitavit (Luc. XXIII, 43), non legis. Mulieres flentes intueris ad tumulum, non intueris angelos excubantes (Joan. XX, 12). Quid dixerit legis, quid gesserit non legis. Dicis Chananaeae mulieri dixisse Dominum: Non sum missus nisi ad oves quae perierunt domus Israel (Matth. XV, 24): non dicis, quoniam id quod ab ea rogatus est, fecit.

96. Even in the very hour of mockery and insult, acknowledge His Godhead. He hung upon the Cross, and all the elements did Him homage. Matthew 27:51 The sun withdrew his rays, the daylight vanished, darkness came down and covered the land, the earth trembled; yet He Who hung there trembled not. What was it that these signs betokened, but reverence for the Creator? That He hangs upon the Cross — this, thou Arian, you regard, that He gives the kingdom of God — this, you regard not. That He tasted of death, you read, but that He also invited the robber into paradise, Luke 23:43 to this you give no heed. You gaze at the women weeping by the tomb, but not upon the angels keeping watch by it. John 20:11-12 What He said, you read, what He did, thou dost not read. You say that the Lord said to the Canaanitish woman: I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Matthew 15:24 thou dost not say that He did what He was besought by her to do.

97. Unde intelligere te convenit, quia missus non id significat, quod alieno sit coactus imperio, sed quod voluntario functus sit arbitratu: alioquin contemptum ostendis Patris. Si enim, ut tu interpretaris, paternorum famulus praeceptorum Christus venerat in Judaeam, ut solis ejus incolis mederetur, et Chananaeae prius filiam, ut legimus, liberavit; non utique alieni fuit exsecutor imperii, sed voluntarii liber arbitrii. Ubi autem libertas voluntatis, ibi nulla praevaricatio missionis.

97. You should hereby understand that His being sent means not that He was compelled, at the command of another, but that He acted, of free will, according to His own judgment, otherwise thou dost accuse Him of despising His Father. For if, according to your expounding, Christ had come into Jewry, as one executing the Father's commands, to relieve the inhabitants of Jewry, and none besides, and yet before that was accomplished, set free the Canaanitish woman's daughter from her complaint, surely He was not only the executor of another's instruction, but was free to exercise His own judgment. But where there is freedom to act as one will, there can be no transgressing the terms of one's mission.

98. Nec vereare ne displiceat Patri, quod fecit Filius; cum ipse dicat. Quaecumque placita sunt ei, facio semper (Joan. VIII, 29); et alibi: Opera quae ego facio, ipse facit (Joan. XIV, 12). Quomodo ergo Patri potuit displicere, quod ipse fecit per Filium? Unus enim Deus, sicut scriptum est, qui justificavit circumcisionem ex fide, et praeputium per fidem (Rom. III, 30).

98. Fear not that the Son's act displeased the Father, seeing that the Son Himself says: Whatsoever things are His good pleasure, I do always, and The works that I do, He Himself does. How, then, could the Father be displeased with that which He Himself did through the Son? For it is One God, Who, as it is written, has justified circumcision in consequence of faith, and uncircumcision through faith. Romans 3:30

99. Omnia lege, omnia diligenter adverte; invenies sic demonstrasse se Christum, ut Deus in homine cerneretur: nec malitiose accipias de Patre Filium gloriantem, cum audias Patrem in Filio complacentem (Matth. XVII, 5).

99. Read all the Scriptures, mark all diligently, you will then find that Christ so manifested Himself that God might be discerned in man. Misunderstand not maliciously the Son's exultation in the Father, when you hear the Father declaring His pleasure in the Son.

CAPUT XII.

CHRISTUM IN PERSONA judicis consideratum Catholici an Ariani melius sibi concilient, inquiritur. Objectio propter judicis sessionem ac Patris voces exorta dissolvitur; demonstraturque nullam in Filio nec subjectionem significari, quod sedeat a Patre invitatus: nec praelationem, quod ad ejus dextram sedeat. Denique ex Angelico Trisagio personarum in Deo Trinitatem, ac simul unitatem naturae significari declaratur.

Do the Catholics or the Arians take the better course to assure themselves of the favour of Christ as their Judge? An objection grounded on Psalm 110:1 is disposed of, it being shown that when the Son is invited by the Father to sit at His right hand, no subjection is intended to be signified — nor yet any preferment, in that the Son sits at the Father's right hand. The truth of the Trinity of Persons in God, and of the Unity of their Nature, is shown to be proved by the angelic Trisagion.

100. Sed si moralibus flecti non queunt, provocemus ad judicem. Ad quem tandem ibimus? Nempe ad eum qui judicium habet. Numquid ad Patrem? Sed Pater non judicat quemquam; omne enim judicium dedit Filio (Joan. V, 22). Dedit utique generando, non largiendo. Vide quam te noluerit Filio suo derogare, ut tibi ipsum judicem daret. 490

100. Howbeit, if our adversaries cannot be turned by kindness, let us summon them before the Judge. To what Judge, then, shall we go? Surely to Him Who has the Judgment. To the Father, then? Nay, but the Father judges no man, for He has given all judgment to the Son. John 5:22 He has given, that is to say, not as of largess, but in the act of generation. See, then, how unwilling He was that you should dishonour His Son — even so that He gave Him to be your Judge.

101. Videamus ergo ante judicium quis causam meliorem habeat; ego, an tu. Nempe prudentis actoris est prius conciliare sibi judicem. Hominem honoras, Deum non honoras? Quid ergo conciliat cognitorem, honorificentia, an injuria? Pone me peccasse, quod non est; num offenditur honore suo Christus? Peccamus omnes: quis ergo veniam promerebitur, qui defert honorificentiam, an qui irrogat contumeliam?

101. Let us see, then, before the judgment which has the better cause, thou or I? Surely it is the care of a prudent party to a suit to gain first the favourable regard of the judge. You honour man — do you not honour God? Which of the two, I ask, wins the favour of the magistrate — respect or contempt? Suppose that I am in error — as I certainly am not: is Christ displeased with the honour shown Him? We are all sinners — who, then, will deserve forgiveness, he who renders worship, or he who displays insolence?

102. Aut si te ratio non movet, species saltem judicii ipsa commoveat. Attolle oculos ad judicem tuos, intuere qui sedeat, cum quo sedeat, ubi sedeat. Sedet Christus ad dexteram Patris. Aut si oculis hoc non potes comprehendere, audi dicentem Prophetam: Dixit Dominus Domino meo, sede ad dexteram meam (Psal. CIX, 1). Sedet ergo ad dexteram Patris Filius. Dic nunc qui de saecularibus arbitraris aestimanda divina, num tibi videatur inferior qui ad dexteram sedet? num injuria Patris, quia ad sinistram sedet? Pater honorat, et tu injuriam putas? Pater mavult id esse pietatis exemplum, et tu putas praeceptionis imperium? De morte surrexit, et ad dexteram Dei sedet.

102. If reasoning move you not, at least let the plain aspect of the judgment move you! Raise your eyes to the Judge, see Who it is that is seated, with Whom He is seated, and where. Christ sits at the right hand of the Father. If with your eyes you can not perceive this, hear the words of the prophet: The Lord said to my Lord, Sit on My right hand. The Son, therefore, sits at the right hand of the Father. Tell me now, thou who holdest that the things of God are to be judged of from the things of this world — say whether you think Him Who sits at the right hand to be lower? Is it any dishonour to the Father that He sits at the Son's left hand? The Father honours the Son, and you make it to be insult! The Father would have this invitation to be a sign of love and esteem, and you would make it an overlord's command! Christ has risen from the dead, and sits at the right hand of God.

103. Sed dixit, inquis, Pater. Accipe etiam ubi non dicit Pater, et praedicit Filius: Amodo videbitis Filium hominis sedentem ad dexteram virtutis (Matth. XXVI, 64). Et hoc de assumptione corporis dicit; huic dicit: Sede ad dexteram meam (Psal. CIX, 1). Nam si de aeterna sede divinitatis inquiris, interrogatus a Pilato si ipse esset rex Judaeorum, ait: In hoc sum natus (Joan. XVIII, 37). Unde et Apostolus monet hoc esse nobis utile, si Christum non ex praecepto, neque ex gratia, sed quasi dilectissimum Filium ad dexteram Dei sedere credamus. Sic enim habes: Quae sursum sunt, quaerite, ubi Christus est ad dexteram Dei sedens: quae sursum sunt, sapite (Coloss. III, 1, 2). Hoc est enim superiora sapere, credere quia Christus ut sedeat, non quasi jussus obsequitur, sed quasi Filius dilectissimus honoratur. Propter rationem ergo corporis dicit: Sede ad dexteram meam, donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum (Psal. CIX, 1, 2.)

103. But, you object, the Father said. Good, hear now a passage where the Father does not speak, and the Son prophesies: Hereafter you shall see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of power. Matthew 26:64 This He said with regard to taking back to Himself His body — to Him the Father said: Sit at My right hand. If indeed you ask of the eternal abode of the Godhead, He said — when Pilate asked Him whether He were the King of the Jews — For this I was born. And so indeed the Apostle shows that it is good for us to believe that Christ sits at the right hand of God, not by command, nor of any boon, but as God's most dearly beloved Son. For it is written for you: Seek the things that are above, where Christ is, sitting at the right hand of God; savour the things that are above. Colossians 3:2 This is to savour the things that be above — to believe that Christ, in His sitting, does not obey as one who receives a command, but is honoured as the well-beloved Son. It is with regard, then, to Christ's Body that the Father says: Sit at My right hand, until I make Your enemies Your footstool.

104. Quod si et hoc ad calumniam trahis, quia Pater dixit: Ponam inimicos tuos; etiam Pater trahit ad Filium, quos Filius suscitet atque vivificet: Nemo enim, inquit, potest venire ad me, nisi Pater qui misit me, attraxerit eum: et ego resuscitabo eum in novissimo die (Joan. VI, 44). Et tu Filium Dei pro infirmitate dicis esse subjectum, cui Pater attrahit, quos ille in novissimo die suscitet? Haeccine tibi videtur esse subjectio, in qua regnum Patri paratur, cum Pater ad Filium trahat, et calumniae locus non sit, cum Patri regnum Filius tradat, nec aliquid praeferatur? Haec enim documenta pietatis sunt, quod et Pater Filio, et Filius Patri tradat; ita enim sibi tradunt, ut neque ille qui accipit, quasi alienum acquirat: nec qui tradit, amittat.

104. If, again, you seek to pervert the sense of these words, I will make Your enemies Your footstool, I answer that the Father also brings to the Son such as the Son raises up and quickens. For No man, says Christ, can come to Me, except the Father, Which has sent Me, draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day. John 6:44 And you say that the Son of God is subject by reason of weakness — the Son, to Whom the Father brings men that He may raise them up in the last day. Seems this in your eyes to be subjection, I pray you, where the kingdom is prepared for the Father, and the Father brings to the Son and there is no place for perversion of words, since the Son gives the kingdom to the Father, and none is preferred before Him? For inasmuch as the Father renders to the Son, and the Son, again, to the Father, here are plain proofs of love and regard: seeing that They so render, the One to the Other, that neither He Who receives obtains as it were what was another's, nor He That renders loses.

105. Ad dexteram quoque sedere nulla praelatio est, neque ad sinistram injuria; divinitas enim gradum nescit, nec loco aliquo circumscribitur, nec temporibus definitur. Angustis animis homines ista pensamus. Nulla differentia charitatis, nullum discrimen est unitatis. 491

105. Moreover, the sitting at the right hand is no preferment, nor does that at the left hand betoken dishonour, for there are no degrees in the Godhead, Which is bound by no limits of space or time, which are the weights and measures of our puny human minds. There is no difference of love, nothing that divides the Unity.

106. Sed cur longius evagamur? Circumspectasti omnia, vidisti judicem, advertisti Angelos praedicantes. Illi laudant, et tu vituperas! Dominationes et Potestates venerantur, et tu calumniaris! Adorant omnes sancti ejus: non adorat Dei Filius, non adorat Spiritus sanctus. Seraphim dicunt: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus (Esai. VI, 3).

106. But wherefore roam so far afield? You have looked upon all around you, you have seen the Judge, you have remarked the angels proclaiming Him. They praise, and thou revilest Him! Dominations and powers fall down before Him — you speak evil of His Name! All His Saints adore

Him, but the Son of God adores not, nor the Holy Spirit. The seraphim say: Holy, Holy, Holy! Isaiah 6:3

107. Quid sibi vult sub uno nomine sanctitatis trina repetitio? Si trina repetitio, cur una laudatio? Si una laudatio, cur trina repetitio? Trina repetitio cur, nisi quia Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus sanctitate unum sunt? Non dixit semel, ne Filium sequestraret: non bis, ne Spiritum praeteriret: non quater, ne creaturas conjungeret. Et ut ostenderet Trinitatis unam esse deitatem, cum tertio dixisset: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus; addidit singulariter: Dominus Deus sabaoth (Esai. VI, 3). Sanctus igitur Pater, sanctus Filius, sanctus et Dei Spiritus. Adoratur igitur Trinitas, non adorat: laudatur Trinitas, non laudat. Ego malo sicut Seraphim credere, et sicut omnes Potestates Virtutesque coelestes adorare.

107. What means this threefold utterance of the same name Holy? If thrice repeated, why is it but one act of praise? If one act of praise, why a threefold repetition? Why the threefold repetition, unless that the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit are one in holiness? The seraph spoke the name, not once, lest he should exclude the Son; not twice, lest he should pass by the Holy Spirit; not four times, lest he should conjoin created beings [in the praise of the Creator]. Furthermore, to show that the Godhead of the Trinity is One, he, after the threefold Holy, added in the singular number the Lord God of Sabaoth. Holy, therefore, is the Father, holy the Son, holy likewise the Spirit of God, and therefore is the Trinity adored, but adores not, and is praised, but praises not. As for me, I will rather believe as the seraphim, and adore after the manner of all the principalities and powers of heaven.

CAPUT XIII.

CONTINUATA JUDICII DOMINICI allegoria, blasphemas Arianorum, Sabellianorum, et Manichaeorum de suo judice opiniones Ambrosius paucis refellit. Deinde propositis Christi de caeteris suis adversariis expostulationibus, judicium sibi mitius futurum sperat.

CHAPTER 13.

The wicked and dishonourable opinions held by Arians, Sabellians, and Manichæans as concerning their Judge are shortly refuted. Christ's remonstrances regarding the rest of His adversaries being set forth, St. Ambrose expresses a hope of milder judgment for himself.

108. Igitur prosecutionem tuam videamus, quemadmodum concilies tibi judicem. Dic sane, dic, inquam: Ego te, Christe, puto esse dissimilem Patri. Respondebit et ille: Discerne, si potes; discerne, inquam, in quo putes esse dissimilem.

108. Let us proceed, then, with your accusations, and see how you gain the favour of your Judge. Speak now, speak, I say, and tell Him: I consider You, O Christ, to be unlike Your Father; and He will answer: Mark, if you can, mark, I say, and tell Me wherein you hold Me to differ.

109. Dic aliud: Creaturam, inquies, te arbitror. Respondebit et Christus: Si duorum hominum testimonium verum est, tu nec mihi, nec Patri saltem credere debuisti, qui genitum nominavit?

109. Say again: I judge You to be a created being; and Christ will reply: If the witness of two men is true, ought you not to have believed both Me and

My Father, Who has called Me His Son?

110. Bonum, inquies, nego. Dicet et ille: Fiat tibi secundum fidem tuam, ut tibi bonus non sim.

110. Then you will say: I deny Your [perfect] goodness; and He will answer: Be it unto you according to your faith; so will I not be good to you.

111. Omnipotentem non arbitror. Respondebit et ipse: Non possum ergo tibi tua peccata donare.

111. That You are Almighty, I hold not; and He will answer, in turn: Then can I not forgive you your sins.

112. Subjectum dico. Referet ad hoc: Cur igitur libertatem ac veniam ab eo petis, quem putas pro servitio esse subjectum?

112. You are a subject being. Whereto He will reply: Why, then, do you seek freedom and pardon of Him Whom you think to be subject as a slave?

113. Video haerere prosecutionem tuam: non urgeo, quia peccatorum meorum ipse sum conscius. Non invideo veniam, quia ipse opto indulgentiam: votum tuum scire desidero. En allego apud judicem desideria tua: non prodo crimina, seriem tuorum exspecto votorum.

113. I see your accusation halt here. I press you not, forasmuch as I myself know my own sins. I grudge you not pardon, for I myself would obtain indulgence, but I would know the object of your prayers. Look, then, while I recite before the Judge your desires. I betray not your sins, but look to behold your prayers and wishes set forth in their order.

114. Dic itaque ea quae in communi voto sunt; dic, inquam: Domine, fac me ad imaginem Dei. Respondebit ille: Ad quam imaginem? Quam negasti?

114. Speak, therefore, those desires, which all alike would have granted to them. Lord, make me in the image of God. Whereto He will answer: In what image? The image which you have denied?

115. Dic: Fac me incorruptibilem. Referet utique: 492 Quomodo te incorruptibilem facere possum, quem tu creaturam dicendo, capacem corruptibilitatis esse voluisti? Mortui resurgent incorrupti, et tu corruptibilem dicis quem Deum cernis (I Cor. XV, 52)?

115. Make me incorruptible. Surely His reply will be: How can I make you incorruptible, I, Whom you call a created being, and so would make out to be corruptible? The dead shall rise purified from corruption — do you call Him corruptible Whom you see to be God?

116. Dic: Bonus esto mihi. Dicet tibi: Quid postulas, quod negasti? Ego te bonum esse volui, ego dixi: Estote sancti, quoniam ipse sanctus sum (Levit. XIX); et tu mihi id negare contendis? et tu exspectas veniam peccatorum? Sed nemo potest donare peccata, nisi solus Deus. Itaque cum verus et solus tibi Deus non sim, non possum utique tua peccata donare.

116. Be good to me. Why do you ask what you have denied [to Me]? I would have had you to be good, and I said ‘Be holy, for I Myself am holy,’ Leviticus 19:2 and you set yourself to deny that I am good? Do you then look for forgiveness of sins? Nay, none can forgive sins, but God alone. Mark 2:7 Seeing, then, that to you I am not the true and only God, I cannot by any means forgive you your sins.

117. Haec Arianus dicat, et Photinianus: Nego te, inquit, Deum. Respondebit ei Dominus: Dixit insipiens in corde suo: Non est Deus (Psal. LII, 1). De quo dictum putas, de Judaeo, de gentili, an de diabolo? De quovis dictum sit, Photiniane, tolerabilior est ille, qui tacuit: tu vero et voce ausus es dicere, ut insipiente insipientior probareris. Negas ergo, inquit, Deum; cum ego dixerim: Dii estis, et filii excelsi omnes (Psal. LXXXI, 6). Et tu Deum negas, cujus opera divina circumspicis?

117. Thus let the followers of Arius and Photinus speak. I deny Your Godhead. To whom the Lord will make answer: ‘The fool has said in his heart: There is no God?’ Of whom, think you, is this said? — of Jew or Gentile, or of the devil. Whosoever he be of whom it is said, O disciple of Photinus, he is more to be borne with, who held his peace; thou, nevertheless, hast dared to lift up your voice to utter it, that you might be proved more foolish than the fool. You deny My Godhead, whereas I said, ‘You are gods, and you are all the children of the Most High?’ And you deny Him to be God, Whose godlike works you see around you.

118. Dicat et Sabellianus: Ego teipsum Patrem et Filium et Spiritum sanctum arbitror. Respondebit et Dominus: Non audis Patrem, non audis Filium. Numquid hic ulla confusio est? Scriptura ipsa te docet Patrem esse, qui detulit judicium: Filium esse, qui judicat. Non audisti me dicentem: Solus non sum; sed ego, et qui misit me Pater (Joan. VIII, 29).

118. Let the Sabellian speak in his turn. I consider You, by Yourself, to be at once Father and Son and Holy Spirit. To whom the Lord: You hear neither the Father nor the Son. Is there any doubt on this matter? The Scripture itself teaches you that it is the Father Who gives over the judgment, and the Son Who judges. John 5:22 You have not given ear to My words: ‘I am not alone, but I and the Father, Who sent Me.’

119. Dicat et Manichaeus: Ego auctorem carnis nostrae diabolum credo. Respondebit ei: Ergo quid facies in coelestibus? Vade ad auctorem tuum. Ego eos volo mecum esse, quos dedit mihi Pater. Tu te a diabolo creatum, Manichaee, arbitraris: ad illius ergo festina sedem; ubi ignis et sulphur, ubi non restinguitur ejus incendium, ne umquam poena moriatur.

119. Now let the Manichæan have his word. I hold that the devil is the creator of our flesh. The Lord will answer him: What, then, are you doing in the heavenly places? Depart, go your way to your creator. ‘My will is that they be with Me, whom my Father has given Me.’ John 17:24 You, Manichæan, hold yourself for a creature of the devil; hasten, then, to his abode, the place of fire and brimstone, where the fire thereof is not quenched, lest ever the punishment have an end.

120. Mitto alia haereticorum portenta, non nomina; quid eis erit judicii, quae erit forma sententiae? Respondebit his omnibus et ille moraliter: Populus meus, quid feci tibi, aut quid constristavi te (Mich. VI, 3)? Nonne ex Aegypto eduxi te, et ex domo servitutis liberavi te?

120. I set aside other heretical — not persons, but portents. What manner of judgment awaits them, what shall be the form of their sentence? To all these He will, indeed, reply, rather in sorrow than in anger: O My people, what have I done unto you, wherein have I vexed you? Did I not bring you up out of Egypt, and lead you out of the house of bondage into liberty?

121. Sed parum est ex Aegypto liberasse, et ex domo servitutis eripuisse: plus est te ipsum dedisse pro nobis. Dices ergo: Nonne vestras omnes suscepi injurias? Nonne corpus meum pro vobis obtuli? Nonne mortem appetivi, quod non erat divinitatis meae, sed vestrae redemptionis? Haeccine referuntur gratiae? Hoc profecit sanguis meus, sicut in Propheta ipse jam dixi: Quae utilitas in sanguine meo; quia descendi in corruptionem (Psal. XXIX, 10)? Hoc ergo profecit, ut me impie negaretis, pro quibus ista sustinui.

121. But it is not enough to have brought us out of Egypt into freedom, and to have saved us from the house of bondage: a greater boon than this, You have given Yourself for us. You will say then: Have I not borne all your sufferings? Isaiah 53:4 Have I not given My Body for you? Have I not sought death, which had no part in My Godhead, but was necessary for your redemption? Are these the thanks I am to receive? Is it this that My Blood has gained, even as I spoke in times past by the mouth of the prophet: ‘What profit is there in My Blood, for that I have gone down to corruption?’ Is this the profit, that you should wickedly deny Me — you, for whom I endured those things?

122. Ego vero tunc, Domine Jesu, et si gravium peccatorum mihi ipse sim conscius, dicam tamen: Non te negavi; habes quod ignoscas fragilitati carnis. Delictum fateor, peccatum non abnuo: Si vis, potes me mundare (Matth. VIII, 2); quia hoc dixit, emeruit. 493 Ne, quaeso, in judicium intres cum servo tuo (Psal. CXLII, 2). Non quaero ut judices, sed ut ignoscas.

122. As for me, Lord Jesu, though I am conscious within myself of great sin, yet will I say: I have not denied You; You may pardon the infirmity of my flesh. My transgression I confess; my sin I deny not. If You will You can make me clean. Matthew 8:2 For this saying, the leper obtained his request. Enter not, I pray, into judgment with Your servant. I ask, not that You may judge, but that You may forgive.

CAPUT XIV.

JUDICIS EXPONIT SENTENTIAM; discussisque adversariorum cavillis, ab ea provocationem non dari planum facit.

CHAPTER 14.

The sentence of the Judge is set forth, the counterpleas of the opposers are considered, and the finality of the sentence, from which there is no appeal, proved.

123. Quid putamus Christum judicaturum? Ego scio, judicaturum dico? Immo jam judicavit. Tenemus ejus sententiam: Omnes, inquit, honorificent Filium, sicut honorificant Patrem. Qui non honorificat Filium, non honorificat Patrem, qui misit illum (Joan. V, 23).

123. What verdict do we look for from Christ? That do I know. Do I say, what verdict will He give? Nay, He has already pronounced sentence. We have it in our hands. Let all, says He, honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honours not the Son, honours not the Father, Who has sent Him. John 5:23

124. Si displicet sententia, appella ad Patrem, rescinde judicium, quod Pater detulit. Dic quia dissimilem habet Filium. Respondebit tibi: Ego ergo mentitus sum, qui dixi Filio: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram (Gen. I, 26).

124. If the sentence please you not, appeal to the Father, cancel the judgment that the Father has given. Say that He has a Son Who is unlike

Him. He will reply: Then have I lied, I, Who said to the Son, ‘Let us make man in Our image and likeness.’ Genesis 1:26

125. Dic quia creavit. Respondebit tibi: Cur ergo adorasti, quem creaturam putasti?

125. Tell the Father that He has created the Son, and He will answer: Why, then, have you worshipped One Whom you thought to be a created being?

126. Dic quia minorem generavit Filium. Respondebit: Metire, videamus.

126. Tell Him that He has begotten a Son Who is inferior to Himself, and He will reply: Compare Us, and let Us see.

127. Dic quia ei non debuisti credere. Referet ad hoc: Non tibi dixeram: Hic est filius meus dilectissimus, in quo complacui, ipsum audite (Matth. XVII, 5)? Quid est, ipsum audite? Dicentem utique: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVII, 10). Hoc audierunt apostoli, sicut scriptum est: Et ceciderunt in faciem suam, et timuerunt valde (Matt. XVII, 6). Si ceciderunt qui confessi sunt, quid facient qui negarunt? Sed illos Jesus tetigit et levavit: vos jacere patietur; ne videatis gloriam, quam negastis.

127. Tell Him that you owed no credence to the Son, whereto He will answer: Did I not say to you, ‘This is My well-beloved Son, in Whom I am well pleased: hear Him’? Matthew 17:5 What mean these words hear Him, if not Hear Him when He says: ‘All things that the Father has are Mine’? This did the apostles hear, even as it is written: And they fell upon their faces, and were greatly afraid. Matthew 17:6 If they who confessed Him fell to the earth, what shall they do who have denied Him? But Jesus laid His hand upon His apostles, and raised them up — you He will suffer to lie prone, that you may see not the glory you have denied.

128. Videamus ergo quoniam quem Filius damnat, et Pater damnat. Et ideo honorificemus Filium, sicut honorificamus Patrem; ut per Filium ad Patrem pervenire possimus.

128. Let us look to it, then, forasmuch as whom the Son condemns, the Father condemns also, and therefore let us honour the Son, even as we honour the Father, that by the Son we may be able to come to the Father.

CAPUT XV.

MODESTE SENTIT DE Opere suo: dicit tamen ad fidem illud sufficere; cum divinae generationi tot locis Scriptura suffragetur, cui obsurdescunt Ariani. Horum pervicaciam Judaicae plane similem patefaciens, adprecatur illis veritatis amorem. Postremo deserendos eos, utpote haereticos et Antichristos, docet.

CHAPTER 15.

St. Ambrose deprecates any praise of his own merits: in any case, the Faith is sufficiently defended by the authoritative support of holy Scripture, to whose voice the Arians, stubborn as the Jews, are deaf. He prays that they may be moved to love the truth; meanwhile, they are to be avoided, as heretics and enemies of Christ.

129. Haec ego, Imperator auguste, carptim ac breviter impolita magis proposui, quam enodata digessi. Quod si qua Ariani inconsummata arbitrantur, ego vix fateor inchoata: si qua adhuc superesse opinantur, ego prope omnia; infidelibus enim totum deest, abundat fidelibus. Denique una confessio Petri abundavit ad fidem Christo: Tu es Christus Filius Dei vivi (Matth. XVI, 16); sat est enim generationem scire divinam, non divisam, non diminutam, non derivatoriam, non creatam. 494

129. These arguments, your Majesty, I have set forth, briefly and summarily, in the rough, rather than in any form of full explanation and exact order. If indeed the Arians regard them as imperfect and unfinished, I indeed confess that they are scarce even begun; if they think that there be any still to be brought forward, I allow that there be nearly all; for whereas the unbelievers are in uttermost need of arguments, the faithful have enough and to spare. Indeed, Peter's single confession was abundant to warrant faith in Christ: You are the Christ, the Son of the living God; for it is enough to know His Divine Generation, without division or diminution, being neither derivation nor creation.

130. Hoc etiam totis Scripturarum exponitur libris, nec adhuc ab impiis creditur: Incrassatum est enim, ut scriptum est, cor populi hujus, et auribus graviter audierunt, et oculos suos gravaverunt; ne quando oculis suis videant, et auribus audiant, et corde intelligant (Esai. 6, 10). Namque, more Judaico, aures suas Ariani claudere solent, aut serere tumultus, quotiescumque verbum salutis auditur.

130. This, indeed, is declared in the books of Holy Writ, one and all, and yet is still doubted by misbelievers: For, as it is written, the heart of this people has become gross, and with their ears they have been dull of hearing, and their eyes have they darkened, lest ever they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand in their heart. Isaiah 6:10 For, like the Jews, the Arians' wont is to stop their ears, or make an uproar, as often as the Word of salvation is heard.

131. Et quid mirum si humanis vocibus credere non soleant infideles, qui non credunt divinis? Filius Dei dicebat, sicut habes in Evangelio: Pater, clarifica nomen tuum. Vox Patris de coelo audita est dicentis: Et clarificavi, et iterum clarificabo (Act. IX, 4). Infideles haec audiebant, sed non credebant. Dicebat Filius, respondebat Pater; et dicebant Judaei: Tonitruum factum est illi (Ibid., 29); alii dicebant: Angelus locutus est ei (Joan. 12. 29).

131. And what wonder, if unbelievers doubt the word of man, when they refuse to believe the Word of God? The Son of God, as you will find it written in the Gospel, said: Father, glorify Your Name, and from heaven was heard the voice of the Father, saying: I have both glorified it, and again will glorify. John 12:28 These words the unbelievers heard, but believed not. The Son spoke, the Father answered, and the Jews said: A peal of thunder answered Him; others said: An angel spoke to Him. John 12:29

132. Paulus quoque, sicut scriptum est in Actibus Apostolorum, cum voce Christi vocaretur ad gratiam, pluresque comites pariter incederent, solus vocem Christi audisse se dixit. Adeo, sancte Imperator, qui credit, audit; et audit, ut credat: qui non credit, non audit; sed nec vult, nec potest audire, ne credat!

132. Paul, moreover, as it is written in the Acts of the Apostles, Acts 22:9 when by the Voice of Christ he received the call of grace, several companions journeying with him at the same time, alone said that he had heard Christ's Voice. Thus, your sacred Majesty, he who believes, hears — and he hears, that he may believe, while he who believes not, hears not, nay, he will not, he cannot hear, lest he should believe!

133. Atque utinam, quod in me est, audire vellent, ut crederent: audire cum bona charitate et mansuetudine, ut verum quaerentes, non veritatem impugnantes. Scriptum est enim, ut non intendamus fabulis et genealogiis interminabilibus, quae quaestiones magis praestant quam aedificationem Dei, quae in fide est. Finis autem praecepti est charitas de corde puro, et conscientia bona, et fide non ficta. A quibus quidam aberrantes, conversi sunt in vaniloquium, volentes esse legis doctores, non intelligentes neque quae loquuntur, neque de quibus affirmant (I Tim. I, 4 et seq.). Alibi quoque idem Apostolus dicit: Stultas autem et sine disciplina quaestiones devita (II Tim. II, 23).

133. As for me, indeed, would that they might have a will to hear, that they might believe — to hear with true love and meekness, as men seeking what is true, and not assailing all truth. For it is written that we pay no heed to endless fables and genealogies, which do rather raise disputes than set forward the godly edification, which is in faith. But the aim of the charge is love from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and faith unfeigned, whence some have erred and betaken themselves to empty babbling, desirous of being teachers of the law, without understanding the words they say, nor the things whereof they speak with assurance. In another place also the same Apostle says: But foolish and ignorant questionings do thou avoid. 2 Timothy 2:23

134. Tales deserendos Apostolus dicit, qui quaestiones serunt, hoc est, haereticos: de quibus et alibi dicit quod discedent quidam a fide, intendentes spiritibus erroris et doctrinis daemoniorum (I Tim. IV, 1).

134. Such men, who sow disputes — that is to say, heretics — the Apostle bids us leave alone. Of them he says in yet another place, that certain shall depart from the faith, giving heed to deceitful spirits, and the doctrines of devils. 1 Timothy 4:1

135. Et Joannes dicit haereticos esse Antichristos, Arianos utique designans (I Joan. II, 18). Haec enim haeresis post omnes haereses coepit, et ex omni haeresi venena collegit. Sicut enim de Antichristo scriptum est, quia aperuit os suum in blasphemiam ad Deum, blasphemare nomen ejus, et bellum facere cum sanctis ejus (Apoc. XIII, 6): ita et isti Filio Dei derogant, nec martyribus pepercerunt; et, quod fortasse ille non faciet, Scripturas falsavere divinas. Itaque qui dicit quia Jesus non est Christus, hic est Antichristus: qui negat Salvatorem mundi, negat Jesum: qui negat Filium, negat et Patrem; quia scriptum est: 495 Omnis qui negat Filium, negat et Patrem (I Joan. II, 23).

135. John, likewise, says that heretics are Antichrists, plainly marking out the Arians. For this [Arian] heresy began to be after all other heresies, and has gathered the poisons of all. As it is written of the Antichrist, that he opened his mouth to blasphemy against God, to blaspheme His Name, and to make war with His saints, Revelation 13:6 so do they also dishonour the Son of God, and His martyrs have they not spared. Moreover, that which perchance Antichrist will not do, they have falsified the holy Scriptures. And thus he who says that Jesus is not the Christ, the same is Antichrist; he who denies the Saviour of the world, denies Jesus; he who denies the Son, denies the Father also, for it is written; Every one which denies the Son, denies the Father likewise. 1 John 2:23

CAPUT XVI.

GRATIANO VICTORIAM SPONDENS, eam ab Ezechiele praedictam narrat. Ex pietate Imperatoris hanc spem confirmat, superiores clades haeresi Orientalium acceptas ferens. Deum tandem obsecrat, ut jam placatus, fideli exercitui, regioni, ac duci ferat auxilium.

CHAPTER 16.

St. Ambrose assures Gratian of victory, declaring that it has been foretold in the prophecies of Ezekiel. This hope is further stayed upon the emperor's piety, the former disasters being the punishment of Eastern heresy. The book closes with a prayer to God, that He will now show His mercy, and save the army, the land, and the sovereign of the faithful.

136. Neque vero te, Imperator, pluribus tenere debeo bello intentum, et victricia de barbaris trophaea meditantem. Progredere plane scuto fidei septus, et gladium spiritus habens: progredere ad victoriam superioribus promissam temporibus, et divinis oraculis prophetatam.

136. I must no further detain your Majesty, in this season of preparation for war, and the achievement of victory over the Barbarians. Go forth, sheltered, indeed, under the shield of faith, and girt with the sword of the Spirit; go forth to the victory, promised of old time, and foretold in oracles given by God.

137. Namque et futuram nostri depopulationem, et bella Gothorum Ezechiel illo jam tempore prophetavit; sic enim habes: Propterea prophetiza, fili hominis, et dic: O Gog, haec dicit Dominus: Nonne in die illa cum constituetur habitare populus meus Israel in pace, surges et venies de loco tuo, ab extremo Aquilone: et gentes tecum multae, sessores equorum omnes, congregatio multa et magna, et virtus copiosa; et ascende ad populum meum Israel ut nubes operire terram in novissimis diebus, etc. (Ezech. XXXVIII, 14 et seq.).

137. For Ezekiel, in those far-off days, already prophesied the minishing of our people, and the Gothic wars, saying: Prophesy, therefore, Son of Man, and say: O Gog, thus says the Lord — Shall you not, in that day when My people Israel shall be established to dwell in peace, rise up and come forth from your place, from the far north, and many nations with you, all riders upon horses, a great and mighty gathering, and the valour of many hosts? Yea, go up against my people Israel, as clouds to cover the land, in the last days.

138. Gog iste Gothus est, quem jam videmus exisse, de quo promittitur nobis futura victoria, dicente Domino: Et depraedabuntur eos, qui depraedati eos fuerant, et despoliabunt eos, qui sibi spolia detraxerant, dicit Dominus. Eritque in die illa, dabo Gog, hoc est, Gothis, locum nominatum, monumentum Israel multorum virorum congestum, qui supervenerunt ad mare: et per circuitum struet os vallis, et obruet illic Gog et totam multitudinem ejus, et vocabitur Ge Polyandrium Gog; et obruet eos domus Israel, ut purgetur terra (Ezech. XXXIX, 10 et seq.). 496

138. That Gog is the Goth, whose coming forth we have already seen, and over whom victory in days to come is promised, according to the word of the Lord: And they shall spoil them, who had been their despoilers, and plunder them, who had carried off their goods for a prey, says the Lord. And it shall be in that day, that I will give to Gog — that is, to the Goths — a place that is famous, for Israel an high-heaped tomb of many men, of men who have made their way to the sea, and it shall reach round about, and close the mouth of the valley, and there [the house of Israel shall] overthrow Gog and all his multitude, and it shall be called the valley of the multitude of Gog: and the house of Israel shall overwhelm them, that the land may be cleansed.

139. Nec ambiguum, sancte Imperator, quod qui perfidiae alienae pugnam excepimus, fidei catholicae in te vigentis habituri simus auxilium. Evidens enim antehac divinae indignationis causa praecessit; ut ibi primum fides Romano imperio frangeretur, ubi fracta est Deo.

139. Nor, furthermore, may we doubt, your sacred Majesty, that we, who have undertaken the contest with alien unbelief, shall enjoy the aid of the Catholic Faith that is strong in you. Plainly indeed the reason of God's wrath has been already made manifest, so that belief in the Roman Empire was first overthrown, where faith in God gave way.

140. Non libet confessorum neces, tormenta, exsilia recordari, piorum sacerdotia proditorum munera. Nonne de Thraciae partibus per Ripensem Daciam et Mysiam, omnemque Valeriam Pannoniorum, totum illum limitem sacrilegis pariter vocibus et Barbaricis motibus audivimus inhorrentem? Quid poterat nobis vicinia tam feralis invehere? aut quemadmodum res Romana tali tuta poterat esse custodia?

140. No desire have I to recount the deaths, tortures, and banishments of confessors, the offices of the faithful made into presents for traitors. Have we not heard, from all along the border — from Thrace, and through Dacia by the river, Mœsia, and all Valeria of the Pannonians — a mingled tumult of blasphemers preaching and barbarians invading? What profit could neighbours so bloodthirsty bring us, or how could the Roman State be safe with such defenders?

141. Sed jam satis superque, omnipotens Deus, nostro exsilio, nostroque sanguine, confessorum neces, exsilia sacerdotum, et nefas tantae impietatis eluimus: satis claruit eos qui violaverint fidem, tutos esse non posse. Convertere, Domine, fideique tuae attolle vexilla.

141. Enough, yea, more than enough, Almighty God, have we now atoned for the deaths of confessors, the banishment of priests, and the guilt of wickedness so overweening, by our own blood, our own banishment — sufficiently plain is it that they, who have broken faith, cannot be safe. Turn again, O Lord, and set up the banners of Your faith.

142. Non hic aquilae militares, neque volatus avium exercitum ducunt: sed tuum, Domine Jesu, nomen et cultus. Non hic infidelis aliqua regio, sed ea quae confessores mittere solet Italia; Italia aliquando tentata, mutata numquam: quam dudum ab hoste barbaro defendisti, nunc etiam vindicasti. Non hic in Imperatore mens lubrica, sed fides fixa.

142. No military eagles, no flight of birds, here lead the van of our army, but Your Name, Lord Jesus, and Your worship. This is no land of unbelievers, but the land whose custom it is to send forth confessors — Italy; Italy, ofttimes tempted, but never drawn away; Italy, which your Majesty has long defended, and now again rescued from the barbarian. No wavering mind in our emperor, but faith firm fixed.

143. Ostende nunc evidens tuae majestatis indicium; ut is qui te verum virtutum Dominum et coelestis militiae ducem: is qui te veram Dei virtutem credit esse atque sapientiam, non temporalem utique nec creatam, sed sempiternam, sicut scriptum est, Dei virtutem et divinitatem, tuae majestatis fultus auxilio, fidei suae tropaea mereatur (I Cor. I, 24).

143. Show forth now a plain sign of Your Majesty, that he who believes You to be the true Lord of Hosts, and Captain of the armies of heaven; he who believes that You are the true Power and Wisdom of God, no being of time nor of creation, but even as it is written, the eternal Power and Divinity of God, 1 Corinthians 1:24 may, upheld by the aid of your Might Supreme, win the prize of victory for his Faith.

LIBER TERTIUS.

BOOK III.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

UBI PRAEMISIT AMBROSIUS quamobrem strictius tractata in prioribus libris, in his uberius tractanda suscipiat; objectum sibi fabularum usum exemplo Scripturae diluit cum alia poetica memorantis, tum maxime Sirenas, quae figurae sunt voluptatum: a quibus et Pauli verba et Christi facta oportet avocent Christianos.

CHAPTER 1.

Statement of the reasons wherefore the matters, treated of shortly in the two former, are dealt with more at length in the three later books. Defence of the employment of fables, which is supported by the example of Holy Writ, wherein are found various figures of poetic fable, in particular the Sirens, which are figures of sensual pleasures, and which Christians ought to be taught to avoid, by the words of Paul and the deeds of Christ.

1. Quoniam, clementissime Imperator, instruendi tui gratia, aliqua de fide mihi scribenda mandaveras, et verecundantem coram etiam ipse fueras adhortatus; ideo quasi in procinctu positus, duos tantum conscripsi libellos, quibus vias quasdam fidei et semitas demonstrarem.

1. Forasmuch as your most gracious Majesty had laid command upon me to write for your own instruction some treatise concerning the Faith, and had yourself called me to your presence and encouraged my timidity, I, being as one on the eve of battle, composed but two books only, for the pointing out of certain ways and paths by which our faith progresses.

2. Sed quoniam mens prava quorumdam serendis intenta quaestionibus, stylo lacessit uberiore confici; tuae quoque pia me cura clementiae ad caetera vocat, volens in pluribus experiri, quem in paucis probasti; ea quae perstricta paucis superius sunt, placuit mihi paulo latius exsequi; ne ea quasi diffidentia assertionis deseruisse potius, quam securitate fiduciae proposuisse videamur.

2. Seeing, however, that certain malicious minds, bent on sowing disputes, have not yet exhausted the force of their assaults, while your gracious Majesty's pious anxiety calls me to further labours, inasmuch as you desire to try in more things him whom you have proved in a few, I am resolved to deal somewhat more particularly with the matters whereof I have already treated in a few words, lest it should be thought, not that I have advanced those propositions in quietness and confidence, but that I, having asserted them, doubted and so abandoned their defense.

3. Et quia Hydraei nominis, et Scyllaei littoris comparationem induximus (Sup. lib. I, ca), ut ostenderemus vel rediviva plantaria cavenda perfidiae, vel famosa naufragia: si quis contra licitum putat colorem disputationis ejusmodi a poeticis fabulis derivatum, et cum in fide nihil quod vituperare possit invenerit, aliquid in sermone reprehendit; agnoscat non solum sententias, sed etiam versiculos poetarum Scripturis insertos esse divinis.

3. Again, seeing that we spoke of the Hydra and Scylla (I. vi. 46), and brought them in by way of comparison, to show how we must beware, whether of the ever-renewed outgrowths of infidelity, or the ill-omened shipwrecks made upon its shallows, if any one holds that such embellishments of an argument, borrowed from the romances of poets, are unlawful, and, from lack of opportunity to speak evil of my faith, assails something in my language, then let him know that not only phrases but complete verses of poetry have been woven into the text of Holy Writ.

4. Unde enim illud: Hujus et genus sumus (Act. XVII, 8), quod Paulus usu prophetico doctus usurpat? Nam et gigantes (Num. XIII, 34), et vallem Titanum (II Reg. V, 18) prophetici sermonis series non refugit. Et Esaias Sirenas, et filias passerum dixit (Esai. XLIII, 20). Et Hieremias de Babylonia memoravit quod habitabunt in ea filiae Sirenum (Jerem. XXVII, 39); ut ostenderet Babylonis, hoc est, saecularis confusionis illecebras, vetustae lasciviae fabulis comparandas; quae velut scopuloso in istius vitae littore, dulcem resonare quamdam, sed mortiferam cantilenam ad capiendos animos adolescentium viderentur: quam sapiens etiam ab ipso poeta Graeco inducitur (Hom. XII Odyss.), quasi quibusdam prudentiae suae circumdatus vinculis praeteriisse. Ita difficile judicatum est ante adventum Christi etiam fortiores non posse capi speciosae deliciis voluptatis!

4. Whence, for instance, came that verse, His offspring truly are we, Acts 17:28 whereof Paul, by prophetic experience, taught, makes use? The course of prophetic speech avoids neither the Giants nor the Valley of the Titans, and Isaiah spoke of sirens and the daughters of ostriches. Jeremiah also has prophesied concerning Babylon, that the daughters of sirens shall dwell therein, in order to show that the snares of Babylon, that is, of the tumult of this world, are to be likened to stories of old-time lust, that seemed upon this life’s rocky shores to sing some tuneful song, but deadly withal, to catch the souls of youth — which the Greek poet himself tells us that the wise man escaped through being bound, as it were, in the chains of his own prudence. So hard a thing, before Christ’s coming, was it esteemed, even for the stronger, to save themselves from the deceitful shows and allurements of pleasure.

5. [Alias cap. II.] Quod si poeta ille perniciosam mentibus hominum, et subeundis obnoxiam naufragiis, lasciviae saecularis illecebram judicavit; quid nos aestimare oportet, quibus scriptum est: Carnis curam ne feceritis in concupiscentia (Rom. XIII, 14)? Et alibi: Castigo corpus meum et servituti redigo: ne aliis praedicans, ipse reprobus efficiar (I Cor. IX, 27). 498

5. But if the poet judged the enticement of worldly pleasure and licence destructive of men's minds and a sure cause of shipwreck, what ought we to think, for whom it has been written: Train not the flesh in concupiscence? And again: I chastise my body and bring it into servitude, lest while I preach to others, I myself become a castaway. 1 Corinthians 9:27

6. Non enim per luxuriam nobis Christus, sed per jejunium salutem attulit. Neque ille emerendae gratiae suae causa, sed nostrae eruditionis gratia jejunavit. Neque infirmitate corporis victus est, ut esuriret: sed esuriendo suscepti corporis fidem praestitit; ut non solum corpus, sed etiam infirmitates nostri corporis doceret a se esse susceptas, sicut scriptum est: Quoniam infirmitates nostras suscepit, et aegritudines nostras portavit (Esai. LIII, 4).

6. Truly, Christ won salvation for us, not by luxury but by fasting. Moreover, it was not to obtain favour for Himself, but to instruct us, that He fasted. Nor yet did He hunger because He was overcome by the weakness of the body, but by His hunger He proved that He had verily taken upon Himself a body; that so He might teach us that He had taken not only our body, but also the weaknesses of that body, even as it is written: Surely He has taken our infirmities and borne our sicknesses.

CAPUT II.

QUAE CORPORIS SUNT a Christo pro nobis suscepti, divinitati non tribuenda: secundum hanc illum altissimum; quod qui neget, eum Patri ascribere incarnationem. Cum Deus legitur solus esse, aut solus habere immortalitatem, id etiam intelligendum de Christo, tum ut memorata impietas declinetur, tum quia eadem Filii ac Patris asseritur operatio.

CHAPTER 2.

The incidents properly affecting the body which Christ for our sake took upon Him are not to be accounted to His Godhead, in respect whereof He is the Most Highest. To deny which is to say that the Father was incarnate. When we read that God is one, and that there is none other beside Him, or that He alone has immortality, this must be understood as true of Christ also, not only to avoid the sinful heresy above-mentioned (Patripassianism), but also because the activity of the Father and the Son is declared to be one and the same.

7. Corporis est igitur, hoc est, nostrum est, quod esurivit: nostrum est, quod flevit, quod tristis fuit usque ad mortem. Cur ad divinitatem quae sunt nostra referuntur? Corporis est, quod etiam factus asseritur. Denique sic habes: Mater Sion dicet: Homo, et homo factus est in ea, et ipse fundavit eam Altissimus (Psal. LXXXVI, 5). Homo, inquit, factus est, non Deus factus est.

7. It was a bodily weakness, then, that is to say, a weakness of ours, that He hungered; when He wept, and was sorrowful even unto death, it was of our nature. Why ascribe the properties and incidents of our nature to the Godhead? That He was even, as we are told, made, is a property of a body. Thus, indeed, we read: Sion our mother shall say: ‘He is a man,’ and in her He was made man, and the Most High Himself laid her foundations. He was made man, mark you, not He was made God.

8. Qui autem idem altissimus, idem homo, nisi Mediator Dei, et hominum, homo Christus Jesus, qui dedit semetipsum redemptionem pro nobis (I Tim. II, 5, 6)? Et hoc utique ad incarnationem pertinet; redemptio enim nostra per sanguinem, remissio per potestatem, vita per gratiam. Quasi altissimus donat, quasi homo precatur: aliud creatoris, aliud redemptoris est. Distincta licet, unius tamen auctoris beneficia sunt; decuit enim ut ille nos redimeret, qui creavit.

8. But what is He Who is at once the Most High and man, what but the Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus Who gave Himself as a ransom for us? 1 Timothy 2:5 This place indeed refers properly to His Incarnation, for our redemption was made by His Blood, our pardon comes through His Power, our life is secured through His Grace. He gives as the Most High, He prays as man. The one is the office of the Creator, the other of a Redeemer. Be the gifts as distinct as they may, yet the Giver is one, for it was fitting that our Maker should be our Redeemer.

9. Quis autem neget Christum esse altissimum significatum? Nam qui aliter sentit, Deo Patri sacramentum incarnationis ascribit. Sed hinc dubitari non potest quod altissimus Christus sit; cum etiam alibi dixerit de mysterio passionis: Dedit vocem suam Altissimus, et mota est terra (Psal. XVII, 14). Et in Evangelio habes: Et tu, puer, propheta Altissimi vocaberis; praeibis enim ante faciem Domini parare vias ejus (Luc. I, 76). Qui altissimus? Dei Filius. Ergo qui altissimus Deus, Christus est.

9. Who indeed can deny that we have plain evidence that Christ is the Most High? He who knows otherwise makes the sacrament of Incarnation to be the work of God the Father. But that Christ is the Most High is removed beyond doubt by what Scripture has said in another place, concerning the mystery of the Passion: The Most High sent forth His Voice, and the earth was shaken. And in the Gospel you may read: And thou, child, shall be called the Prophet of the Highest; for you shall go before the face of the Lord, to prepare His ways. Luke 1:76 Who is the Highest? The Son of God. He, then, Who is the Most High God is Christ.

10. Et solus utique cum dicitur Deus, non separatur etiam Dei Filius. Qui enim altissimus, solus, sicut scriptum est: Et cognoscant quoniam nomen tibi Dominus, tu solus altissimus super omnem terram (Psal. LXXXII, 19).

10. Again, while God is everywhere said to be One God, the Son of God is not separated from this Unity. For He Who is the Most High is alone, as it is written: And let them know that Your Name is the Lord: You alone are Most High over all the earth.

11. Unde etiam illud explosum est, quod solent ad calumniam derivare, quia de Deo scriptum est: Qui solus habet immortalitatem, et lucem habitat inaccessibilem (I Tim. VI, 16); de Deo enim scriptum est, quod est commune nomen Patri et Filio. 499

11. And so the adversaries' injurious conclusion is rejected with contempt and disgrace, which they drew from the Scripture speaking of God: Who alone has immortality and dwells in light unapproachable; 1 Timothy 6:16 for these words are written of God, which Name belongs equally to Father and to Son.

12. Nam si ubicumque Deum legunt, negant etiam Filium designari; et impii sunt, divinitatis potentiam Filio denegando, et incarnatum Patrem Sabelliana impietate astruere videbuntur. Dicant enim quomodo illud non impie de Patre intelligere possint, quod Apostolus ait: In quo et consurrexistis per fidem operationis Dei, qui suscitavit illum a mortuis (Coloss. II, 12); et advertant de sequentibus quid incurrant; sequitur enim: Et cum mortui essetis delictis et praeputio carnis vestrae, vivificavit nos cum illo, donans nobis omnia delicta, delens quod adversum nos erat chirographum decreti, quod erat contrarium nobis: et ipsum tulit de medio, affigens illud cruci, exuens se carne (Ibid., 13, 14).

12. If, indeed, wheresoever they read the Name of God, they deny that there is any thought of the Son [as well as the Father], they blaspheme, inasmuch as they deny the Son's Divine Sovereignty, and they shall appear as though they shared the sinful error of the Sabellians in teaching the Incarnation of the Father. Let them, indeed explain how they can fail to interpret in a sense blasphemous to the Father the words of the Apostle: In Whom you also rose again, by faith in the working of God, Who raised Him from the dead. Colossians 2:12 Let them also take warning from what follows of what they are running upon — for this is what comes after: And though you were dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, He quickened us with Him, pardoning us all our offenses, blotting out the handwriting of the Ordinance, which was opposed to us, and removed it from our midst, nailing it to His Cross, divesting Himself of the flesh. Colossians 2:13-14

13. Ergo non Deus Pater solus intelligendus est, qui suscitavit carnem: et non etiam Filius, cujus templum resuscitatum est. Qui suscitavit, utique et vivificavit: qui vivificavit, et delicta donavit: qui delicta donavit, et chirographum tulit: qui chirographum tulit, affixit illud cruci: qui affixit illud cruci, carnem se exuit. Sed Pater non se exuit carnem; non enim Pater caro factus est, sed Verbum, sicut legimus, caro factum est (Joan. I, 14).

Videtis ergo quod Ariani dum separant a Patre Filium, in id periculum incidant, ut Patrem passum esse commemorent.

13. We are not, then, to suppose that the Father Who raised the flesh is alone [God]; nor, again, are we to suppose the like of the Son, Whose Body was raised again. He Who raised, did surely also quicken; and He who quickened, also pardoned sins; He who pardoned sins, also blotted out the handwriting; He Who blotted out the handwriting, also nailed it to the Cross: He who nailed it to the Cross, divested Himself of the flesh. But it was not the Father Who divested Himself of the flesh; for not the Father, but, as we read, the Word was made flesh. John 1:14 You see, then, that the Arians, in dividing the Father from the Son, run into danger of saying that the Father endured the Passion.

14. Nos autem facile docemus de Filii dictum operatione; nam et ipse corpus suum resuscitavit, sicut ipse dixit: Solvite templum hoc, et in triduo resuscitabo illud (Joan. II, 19). Et ipse vivificat nos cum suo corpore: Sicut enim Pater suscitat mortuos et vivificat; sic et Filius quos vult, vivificat (Joan. V, 21). Et ipse delicta donavit dicens: Dimissa sunt tibi peccata tua (Luc. V, 20). Et ipse chirographum affixit cruci, qui crucifixus est per corporis passionem. Nec alius se carnem exuit, nisi Dei Filius, qui carnem se induit. Ipse ergo significatur Deus, qui opus nostrae resurrectionis operatus est.

14. We, however, can easily show that the words treat of the Son's action, for the Son Himself indeed raised His own Body again, as He Himself said: Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it again. John 2:19 And He Himself quickens us together with His Body: For as the Father raises the dead and quickens them, so also the Son quickens Whom He will. John 5:21 And He Himself has granted forgiveness for sins, saying, Your sins be forgiven you. Luke 5:20 He too has nailed the handwriting of the record to

His Cross, in that He was crucified, and suffered in the body. Nor did any divest Himself of the flesh, save the Son of God, Who invested Himself therewith. He, therefore, Who has achieved the work of our resurrection is plainly pointed out to be very God.

CAPUT III.

FILIUM A PATRE non separandum ex Apostolo confirmari, cum Filio quoque conveniat beatum esse, solum potentem ac immortalem, natura videlicet, non gratia qua ipsi etiam angeli sunt immortales; et lucem habitare inaccessibilem: quo ultimo qua ratione fiat explicato, quo pacto Pater solus, ac Filius pariter solus dicantur, ostenditur.

CHAPTER 3.

That the Father and the Son must not be divided is proved by the words of the Apostle, seeing that it is befitting to the Son that He should be blessed, only Potentate, and immortal, by nature, that is, and not by grace, as even the angels themselves are immortal, and that He should dwell in the unapproachable light. How it is that the Father and the Son are alike and equally said to be alone.

15. Ergo cum legis Deum, non separes Patrem, non separes Filium; quia deitas et Patris et Filii una eademque est. Et ideo nec ibi separes, ubi legis quia beatus et solus potens; de Deo enim dictum est, sicut habes: Praecipio coram Deo, qui vivificat omnia (I Tim. VI, 13); sed etiam Christus vivificat: convenit ergo et Patri et Filio Dei nomen; quando convenit et operationis effectus. 500 Persequamur et caetera. Praecipio, inquit, coram Deo qui vivificat omnia, et Christo Jesu.

15. When, therefore, you read the Name God, separate neither Father nor Son, for the Godhead of the Father and the Son is one and the same, and therefore separate them not, when you read the words blessed and only Potentate, 1 Timothy 6:15 for the words are spoken of God, even as you may read: I charge you before God, Who quickens all things. 1 Timothy 6:13 Christ also indeed does quicken, and therefore the Name of God is meetly given both to the Father and to the Son, inasmuch as the effect of their activity is in agreement. Let us go on to the words following: I charge you, he says, before God, Who quickens all things, and Jesus Christ.

16. In Deo est etiam Verbum, sicut scriptum est: In Deo laudabo Verbum (Psal. LV, 11). In Deo sempiterna sua virtus est Jesus: in Deo igitur unitatem divinitatis, in Christi autem nomine incarnationis testificatus est sacramentum.

16. The Word is in God, even as it is written: In God will I praise His Word. In God is His Eternal Power, even Jesus; in [speaking of] God, therefore, the Apostle has witnessed to the unity of the Godhead, while by the Name of Christ he has witnessed to the sacrament of the Incarnation.

17. Denique ut de incarnatione Christi se dixisse ostenderet, subdidit: Qui testimonium reddidit sub Pontio Pilato bonam confessionem; ut serves mandatum sine macula usque in adventum Domini nostri Jesu Christi: quem suis temporibus ostendet beatus et solus potens, rex regum, et Dominus dominantium; qui solus habet immortalitatem, et lucem habitat inaccessibilem: quem vidit hominum nemo, sed nec videre potest (I Tim. VI, 13 et seq.). Ergo de Deo haec scripta sunt, cujus nominis et dignitas et veritas communis est Filio.

17. Furthermore, to show that he has spoken of the Incarnation of Christ, he added: Who bore witness under Pontius Pilate with the good confession, [I charge you] keep undefiled the commandment, until the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, Which in His own good time the blessed and only Potentate shall manifest, the King of kings and Lord of lords, Who alone has immortality, and dwells in light unapproachable, Whom no man has seen, nor can see. 1 Timothy 6:13-16 Those words, then, are written with regard to God, of which Name the dignity and truth are common to [both the Father and] the Son.

18. Cur igitur hoc loco Filius separatur, cum etiam Filio haec cuncta conveniant? Aut si non conveniant, nega Deum; ut neges quae Deo sunt convenientia. Beatus negari non potest, qui beatitudines donat: Beati enim quibus remissae sunt iniquitates (Psal. XXXI, 1). Beatus negari non potest, qui sanam doctrinam tribuit, sicut scriptum est: quae est secundum Evangelium claritatis beati Dei (I Tim. I, 11). Potens abnui non potest, de quo Pater dicit: Posui adjutorium super potentem (Psal. LXXXVIII, 20). Immortalitatem autem ejus quis audeat diffiteri, cum etiam aliis immortalitatem ipse largitus sit, sicut scriptum est de sapientia Dei: Per hanc habebo immortalitatem (Sap. VIII, 13).

18. Why, then, should there be no thought of the Son in this place, seeing that all these things hold good of the Son also? If they do not so, then deny His Godhead, and so may thou deny what is proper to be said of God. His Blessedness cannot be denied, Who bestows blessings, for Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven. He cannot but be called Blessed, Who has given us wholesome teaching, even as it is written: Which is according to the Gospel of the beauty of the Blessed God. 1 Timothy 1:11 His Power cannot be denied, of Whom the Father says: I have laid help upon One that is mighty. And who dare refuse to acknowledge Him to be immortal, when He Himself has made others also immortal, as it is written of the Wisdom of God: By her shall I possess immortality. Wisdom 8:13

19. Sed alia immortalitas suae naturae, alia nostrae. Non sunt fragilia comparanda divinis: una sola substantia divinitatis est, quae mori nescit. Unde et Apostolus, cum sciret et animam et angelos immortales, quod solus Deus immortalitatem habeat praedicavit. Nam et anima moritur: Anima enim quae peccat, ipsa morietur (Ezech. XVIII, 20); nec Angelus immortalis est naturaliter, cujus immortalitas in voluntate est Creatoris.

19. But the immortality of His Nature is one thing, that of ours is another. Things perishable are not to be compared to things divine. The Godhead is the one only Substance that death cannot touch, and therefore it is that the Apostle, though knowing both the [human] soul and angels to be immortal, declared that God only had immortality. In truth, even the soul may die: The soul that sins, it shall die, Ezekiel 18:20 and an angel is not absolutely immortal, his immortality depending on the will of the Creator.

20. Neque ad praejudicium trahas, quod non moritur Gabriel, non moritur Raphael, non moritur Uriel; et in ipsis enim naturae capacitas vitio obnoxia, sed non obnoxia disciplinae. Omnis enim rationabilis creatura accidentia recipit, et subjecta judicio est. In accidentibus autem et poena judicii, et corruptela est, et profectus. Unde et Ecclesiastes ait: Quoniam omne opus suum Deus adducet in judicium (Eccl. XII, 14). Ergo corruptelae et mortis, etiamsi non moriatur aut peccel, capax tamen omnis est creatura: nec ex immortali natura habet, sed ex disciplina vel gratia, si se in aliquibus ad vitia non mutat. Alia ergo immortalitas quae donatur, alia quae sine capacitate mutabilitatis est semper.

20. Do not hastily reject this, because Gabriel dies not, nor Raphaël, nor Uriel. Even in their nature there is a capacity of sin, though not one of improvement by discipline, for every reasonable creature is exposed to influences from without itself, and liable to judgment. It is on the influences which work upon us that the award of judgment, and corruption, or advance to perfection, do depend, and therefore Ecclesiastes says: For God shall bring all His work to judgment. Every creature, then, has within it the possibility of corruption and death, even though it do not [at present] die or commit sin; nor, if in anything it deliver not itself over to sin, has it this boon of its immortal nature, but of discipline or of grace. Immortality, then, that is of a gift is one thing: immortality without the possibility of change is another.

21. An negatur immortalis divinitas Christi, quia in carne pro omnibus mortem gustavit? 501 Jam ergo melior Gabriel quam Christus; quia ille non est defunctus, hic mortuus est. Sed non est servus supra dominum (Matth. X, 24); alia enim carnis infirmitas, alia divinitatis aeternitas: mors carnis est, immortalitas potestatis. Quod si divinitas fecit ne caro videret corruptionem, quae utique corruptelae erat obnoxia per naturam; quomodo mori posset ipsa divinitas?

21. Do we deny the immortality of Christ's Godhead, because He tasted death for all in the flesh? Then is Gabriel better than Christ, for Gabriel never died, but Christ gave up the ghost. But the servant is not above his lord, Matthew 10:24 and we must discern the weakness of flesh from the eternity of Godhead. Christ's Death had its source in the flesh, immortality is of the nature of Christ's sovereignty. But if the Godhead brought it to pass that the flesh saw not corruption, the flesh being surely by nature liable to corruption, how could the Godhead itself have died?

22. Quomodo autem lucem inaccessibilem non habitat Filius, cum in sinu Patris Filius sit: lux autem Pater, lux etiam ipse sit Filius; quia Deus lux est (Joan. I, 9)? Aut si aliam lucem inaccessibilem nisi deitatis putamus, numquid melior Patre lux est; ut non sit in luce, qui sicut scriptum est, et apud Patrem est, et in Patre (Ibid., 2)? Non ergo separent Filium, cum legunt solum Deum: nec Patrem separent, cum legunt Filium solum.

22. And how is it that the Son dwells not in light unapproachable, if He is in the bosom of the Father, if the Father is Light, and the Son also is Light, because God is Light? 1 John 1:5 Or, if we suppose some other light, beside the Light of the Godhead, to be the unapproachable Light, is, then, this Light better than the Father, so that He is not in that Light, Who, as it is written, is both with the Father and in the Father? Let men, therefore, not exclude the thought of the Son, when they read only of God — and let them not exclude that of the Father, when they read of the Son only. John 16:32

23. In terris Filius sine Patre non est, et putas quia Pater sine Filio sit in coelo? In carne est Filius, cum dico in carne est, vel in terris, secundum Evangelii tempora loquor; nunc enim secundum carnem jam non novimus Christum (II Cor. V, 16): ergo in carne est Filius, et solus non est, secundum quod scriptum est: Et non sum solus, quia Pater mecum est (Joan. VIII, 16); et putas quod sit Pater solus in luce?

23. On earth, the Son is not without *l.c.*John 10:30 the Father, and you think that the Father is without the Son in heaven? The Son is in the flesh — (when I say He is in the flesh or He is on earth, I speak as though we lived in the days whose story is in the Gospel, for now we no longer know Christ after the flesh 2 Corinthians 5:16) — He is in the flesh, and He is not alone, as it is written: And I am not alone, because the Father is with Me, John 8:16 and think you that the Father dwells alone in the Light?

24. At ne hoc argumentum putes, accipe etiam testimonium: Deum, inquit, nemo vidit umquam, nisi unigenitus Filius, qui est in sinu Patris, ipse enarravit (Joan. I, 18). Quomodo solus Pater, si in sinu Patris Filius est? quomodo enarrat, quem non videt? Non ergo solus Pater.

24. Lest you should regard this argument as mere speculation take this sentence of authority. No man, says the Scripture, John 1:18 has seen God at any time, save the Only-begotten Son, Who is in the bosom of the Father; He has revealed Him. How can the Father be in solitude, if the Son be in the bosom of the Father? How does the Son reveal Him, Whom He sees not? The Father, then, exists not alone.

25. Accipe nunc et solum Patrem, et solum Filium. Solus Pater, quia alius Pater non est: solus Filius, quia alius Filius non est: solus Deus, quia una divinitas Trinitatis est.

25. Observe now what the solitude of the Father and of the Son is. The Father is alone, because there is no other Father; the Son is alone, because there is no other Son; God is alone, because the Godhead of the Trinity is One.

CAPUT IV.

CHRISTUM NON NISI secundum carnem factum narrari; quippe qui ut homines redimeret, non eguerit adjutorio, sicut nec ut se resuscitaret; cum aliis ut mortuos resuscitarent, oratione opus fuerit. Etsi autem ipse oraverit, hoc referendum ad humanitatem: divinitatem vero ex eo quod imperaverit, aestimandam; in quo diabolus Arianis anteponitur. Tum exposito cur Filius hominis potens dicatur, argumenti ponitur conclusio.

CHAPTER 4.

We are told that Christ was only made so far as regards the flesh. For the redemption of mankind He needed no means of aid, even as He needed none in order to His Resurrection, whereas others, in order to raise the dead, had need of recourse to prayer. Even when Christ prayed, the prayer was offered by Him in His capacity as human; while He must be accounted divine from the fact that He commanded (that such and such things should be done). On this point the devil's testimony is truer than the Arians' arguments. The discussion concludes with an explanation of the reason why the title of mighty is given to the Son of Man.

26. [Alias, cap. III.] Satis ergo claret et solum Deum non esse Patrem sine Filio, et solum Deum non intelligi Filium sine Patre; quia secundum carnem factus legitur Dei Filius, non secundum divinam generationem.

26. It is now sufficiently made plain that the Father is not God in solitude, without the Son, and that the Son cannot be thought of as God alone, without the Father, for it is in respect of His flesh that we read that the Son of God was made, not in respect of His generation from God the Father.

27. In quo autem factus sit, per os sancti patriarchae locutus asseruit, dicens: Quia repleta est malis anima mea, et vita mea inferno appropinquavit. Aestimatus sum cum descendentibus in lacum: factus sicut homo sine adjutorio inter mortuos liber (Psal. LXXXVII, 4 et seq.). Et hic sicut homo, inquit, non sicut Deus, factus sum. Et repleta est malis anima mea: anima utique, non divinitas. Factus est 502 in eo, in quo erat infernis debitus: factus est in eo, in quo cum aliis aestimatus est; divinitas enim similitudinem collationis abjurat. Et tamen in ipsa carne morti obnoxia majestatem adverte divinitatis in Christo. Et si factus est sicut homo, et sicut caro factus est; factus est tamen inter mortuos liber, et liber sine adjutorio.

27. Indeed, in what sense He was made He has declared by the mouth of the holy patriarch, saying: For My soul is filled with sorrow to overflowing, and My life has drawn near unto hell. I have been counted with them that go down into the pit; I have been made as a man free, without help, among the dead. Here, then, we read: I have been made as a man, not I have been made as God; and again: My soul overflows with sorrows. My soul, mark you, not My Godhead. He was made in so far as that was concerned wherein He was due to hell, wherein He was reckoned with others, for the Godhead admits of no likeness which may be ground for classing it with others. Yet mark how the majesty of Godhead shows itself in Christ, even in that flesh which was appointed to death. Although He was made as a man, and made as flesh, yet He was made free among the dead, free, without help.

28. Sed quomodo hic sine adjutorio fuisse se Filius dicit, cum supra (ca) dictum sit: Posui adjutorium super potentem (Psal. LXXXVIII, 20)? Ergo et hic distingue naturas. Adjutorium caro habet, divinitas non habet. Liber igitur est, quia mortis vincula nescivit; non captus ab inferis, sed qui operatus sit in infernis: sine adjutorio est, quia neque per nuntium, neque per legatum, sed ipse per se Dominus salvum fecit populum suum.

Quomodo enim potuit adjutorium sui corporis quaerere suscitandi, qui alios suscitavit?

28. But how can the Son say here that He was without help, when it has already been said: I have laid help upon One that is mighty? Distinguish here also the two natures present. The flesh has need of help, the Godhead has no need. He is free, then, because the chains of death had no hold upon Him. He was not made prisoner by the powers of darkness, it is He Who exerted power among them. He is without help, because He Himself, the Lord, has by no office of messenger or ambassador, but by His own might, saved His people. How could He, Who raised others to life, require any help in order to raise His own body?

29. Ac licet homines quoque suscitaverint mortuos; non in sua tamen virtute fecerunt, sed in Christi nomine. Aliud est rogare, aliud imperare: aliud mereri, aliud donare.

29. And though men also have raised the dead, still they did this not of their own power, but in the Name of Christ. To ask is one thing, to command is another; to obtain is different from bestowing.

30. Elias ergo suscitavit, sed oravit, non imperavit (III Reg. XVII, 21, 22). Elisaeus suscitavit configuratus mortuo: suscitavit etiam ipsius mortui corporis tactus; ut esset typus venturum eum qui missus in similitudinem carnis peccati, etiam sepultus mortuos suscitaret (IV Reg. XIII et XIV).

30. Elijah, then, raised the dead, but he prayed — he did not command. Elisha raised one to life after laying himself upon the dead body, in accordance with its posture; 2 Kings 4:34 and, again, the very contact of Elisha’s corpse gave life to the dead, that the prophet might foreshow the coming of Him, Who, being sent in the likeness of sinful flesh, should, even after His burial, raise the dead to life.

31. Petrus quoque, cum Aeneam curaret, ait: In nomine Jesu Nazareni surge et ambula (Act. II, 6): non in suo ait, sed in Christi nomine. Surge autem verbum est imperantis: sed fiducia de merito est, non praesumptio de potestate; et de nominis operatione, non de sua virtute praeceptionis auctoritas. Quid igitur Ariani dicunt? In nomine Christi et Petrus imperat, et illi nolunt imperasse Dei Filium, sed rogasse.

31. Peter, again, when he healed Aeneas, said: In the Name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise and walk. Not in his own name, but in the Name of Christ. But rise is a command; on the other hand, it is an instance of confidence in one's right, SeeMark 16:17-18 not an arrogant claim to power, and the authority of the command stood in the effective influence of the Name, not in its own might. What answer, then, make the Arians? Peter commands in the Name of Christ — this on the one hand: on the other, they will have it that the Son of God did not command, but requested.

32. Sed lectum est quia rogavit. Disce distantiam. Rogat quasi filius hominis, imperat quasi Dei Filius. Annon defertis hoc Dei Filio, quod etiam diabolus detulit, et vos majore sacrilegio derogatis? Ille dicit: Si Filius Dei es, dic lapidi huic ut fiat panis (Luc. IV, 3). Ille dicit, impera: vos dicitis, obsecra. Ille credit quod, jubente Dei Filio, elementorum rerumque natura in adversum vertatur: vos creditis quod nisi roget Dei Filius, nec voluntas ipsius impleatur. Et diabolus de potestate aestimandum putat Dei Filium, vos de infirmitate. Tolerabiliora sunt tentamenta diaboli, quam argumenta Arii.

32. We read, they objected, of His uttering a prayer. John 11:41 But take note of the difference. He prays as Son of Man, He commands as Son of God. Will you not ascribe unto the Son of God what even the devil has ascribed? Will you accuse yourselves of greater wickedness than Satan's? The devil says: If You be the Son of God, command this stone that it become bread. Luke 4:3 Satan says command, you say entreat. The devil believes that, at the word of God's Son, the nature of an elementary substance may be exchanged for that of a composite one; you think that, unless the Son of God prefers a request, even His Will cannot be done. Again, the devil thinks that the Son of God is to be esteemed from His power, Romans 1:4 you that He is to be esteemed from His infirmity. The devil's temptations are more tolerable than the Arians' disputings.

33. Nec moveat quia potentem Filium dixit hominis, cum Dominum majestatis legeris crucifixum (I Cor. II, 2). Quae autem major potentia, quam supra coelestes potestates habere dominatum (Ephes. I, 21)? Habebat autem qui Thronis, Dominationibus, Angelis imperabat. Nam etsi erat inter bestias, sicut scriptum est (Marc. I, 13), tamen angeli ministrabant ei; ut agnoscas aliud incarnationis esse, aliud potestatis. Secundum carnem itaque tentatur a bestiis, secundum dignitatem ab angelis adoratur. 503

33. Let us not, then, be troubled if we find the Son of Man entitled mighty in one place, and yet in another, that the Lord of glory was crucified. 1 Corinthians 2:8 What might is greater than sovereignty over the powers of heaven? But this was in the hands of Him Who ruled over thrones, principalities, angels; for, although He was among the wild beasts, as it is written, yet angels ministered to Him, that you may perceive the difference between what is proper to the Incarnation, and what is proper to Sovereignty. So far as His flesh is concerned, then, He endures the assault of wild beasts; in regard of His Godhead, He is adored by angels.

34. Didicimus igitur factum esse hominem et ad hominem hoc esse referendum. Denique et alibi habes: Qui factus est ei ex semine David (Rom. I, 3), secundum carnem utique ex semine David factus est: Deus autem ante saecula ex Deo natus est.

34. We have learned, then, that He was made man, and that His being made must be referred to His manhood. Furthermore, in another passage of Scripture, you may read: Who was made for Him of the seed of David, Romans 1:3 that is to say, in respect of the flesh He was made of the seed of David, but He was God begotten of God before the worlds.

CAPUT V.

FACTUM IN SCRIPTURA non semper idem esse ac creatum exemplis ex ipsa petitis docet. Inde colligit non cavillandum ex littera more Judaeorum, quibus tamen haereticos pejores probat; atque iterum propositam confirmat sententiam.

CHAPTER 5.

Passages brought forward from Scripture to show that made does not always mean the same as created; whence it is concluded that the letter of Holy Writ should not be made the ground of captious arguments, after the manner of the Jews, who, however, are shown to be not so bad as the heretics, and thus the principle already set forth is confirmed anew.

35. Nec semper tamen factum esse ad creationem refertur; scriptum est enim: Domine, refugium factus es nobis (Ps. LXXXIX, 1); et: Factus es mihi in salutem (Ps. CXVII, 14). Non utique creationis definitio vel editio declaratur: sed refugium factus mihi, et conversus mihi dicitur ad salutem, sicut et Apostolus dixit: Qui factus est nobis sapientia a Deo, et justitia, et sanctificatio, et redemptio (I Cor. I, 30). Nobis factum non creatum ex Patre dixit. Denique quomodo dicat factum nobis esse sapientiam, in posterioribus exposuit dicens: Sed loquimur Dei sapientiam in mysterio, quae abscondita est, quam praedestinavit Deus ante tempora saecularia in gloriam nostram, quam nemo principum hujus saeculi cognovit. Si enim cognovissent, numquam Dominum majestatis crucifixissent (I Cor. II, 7, 8). Ubi mysterium passionis exprimitur, non utique generationis aeternae series declaratur.

35. At the same time, becoming does not always imply creation; for we read: Lord, You have become our refuge, and You have become my salvation. Plainly, here is no statement of the fact or purpose of a creation, but God is said to have become my refuge and have turned to my salvation, even as the Apostle has said: Who became for us 1 Corinthians 1:30 Wisdom from God, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption, that is, that Christ was made for us, of the Father, not created. Again, the writer has explained in the sequel in what sense he says that Christ was made Wisdom for us: But we preach the Wisdom of God in doctrine of mystery, which Wisdom is hidden, foreordained by God before the existence of the world for our glory, and which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known they would never have crucified the Lord of glory. When the mystery of the Passion is set forth, surely there is no speaking of an eternal process of generation.

36. Sapientia igitur mea crux Domini est, redemptio mea mors Domini est; sanguine enim pretioso redempti sumus, ut apostolus Petrus dixit (I Petr. I, 19). Sanguine igitur suo, quasi homo, Dominus nos redemit; idemque, quasi Deus, peccata donavit.

36. The Lord’s Cross, then, is my wisdom; the Lord’s Death my redemption; for we are redeemed with His precious blood, as the Apostle Peter has said. 1 Peter 1:19 With His blood, then, as man, the Lord redeemed us, Who also, as God, has forgiven sins. Mark 2:8-12

37. Non ergo in verbis quasdam constituamus insidias, et verborum tendiculas aucupemur; ut quia et aliud secundum impios significare putatur sermo qui legitur, non id quod sensus exprimat, sed quod littera ostendat, interpretemur. Sic perierunt Judaei, dum sensuum profunda despiciunt, et sequuntur nuda verborum; Littera enim occidit, spiritus autem vivificat (II Cor. III, 6).

37. Let us not, therefore, lay snares as it were in words, and eagerly seek out entanglements therein; let us not, because misbelievers make out the written word to mean that it means not, set forth only what this letter bears on the face of it, instead of the underlying sense. This way went the Jews to destruction, despising the deep-hidden meaning, and following only after the bare form of the word, for the letter kills, but the Spirit makes alive. 2 Corinthians 3:6

38. Et tamen inter duo gravia sacrilegia fortasse detestabilius sit ad divinitatem referre quae carnis sunt, quam ad litteram referre quae spiritus sunt. Illi timuerunt in Deo carnem credere; et ideo redemptionis gratiam perdiderunt, quia causam salutis abjurant: isti divinitatis majestatem usque ad carnis infirma deducunt. Detestandi Judaei, qui carnem Domini crucifixerunt: detestabiliores tamen eos arbitror, qui divinitatem Christi cruci subditam crediderunt. Denique qui cum Judaeis saepe tractabat: 504 Haereticum, inquit, post unam correptionem devita (Tit. III, 10).

38. And yet, of these two grievous impieties, to ascribe to the Godhead what is true only of manhood is perchance more detestable than to attribute to spirit what belongs only to letter. The Jews feared to believe in manhood taken up into God, and therefore have lost the grace of redemption, because they reject that on which salvation depends; the Arians degrade the majesty of Godhead to the weakness of humanity. Detestable as are the Jews, who crucified the Lord’s flesh, more detestable still do I hold them who have believed that the Godhead of Christ was nailed to the Cross. So one who ofttimes had dealings with Jews said: Avoid a heretic, after once reproving him Titus 3:10

39. Nec tamen sine injuria Patris factum nobis esse sapientiam, ad illam inenarrabilem, nec ullis temporibus momentisque obnoxiam Christi generationem sacrilega interpretatione derivant. Nam praeter id quod Filii

injuria Patris est contumelia, etiam in Patrem sacrilegia ista procedunt, de quo scriptum est: Fiat autem Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax (Rom. III, 4). Aut si de Filio putant dictum, generationi quidem non praejudicant: Deum autem et Deum verum hujus lectionis auctoritate quod abnuunt, confitentur.

39. Nor, again, are these men careful to avoid doing dishonour to the Father, in their impious application of the fact, that Christ was made Wisdom for us, to His incomprehensible generation, that transcends all limits and divisions of time; for, leaving it out of account that dishonour done to the Son is an insult to the Father, they do even carry their blasphemy in assault upon the Father, of Whom it is written: Let God be made truthful, but every man a liar. Romans 3:4 If indeed they think that the Son is spoken of, they do not foreclose against His generation, but in that they rest on the authority of this text they do confess that which they reject, namely, that Christ is God, and true God.

40. Prolixum est si velim singula recensere, quoties factum legerimus, non utique per naturam, sed per gratiam. Nam et Moyses dicit: Adjutor et protector factus est mihi in salutem (Exod.XV, 2). Et David dicit: Esto mihi in Deum protectorem, et in domum refugii, ut salvum me facias (Ps. XXX, 3). Et Esaias dicit: Factus est omni civitati humili adjutor (Esai. XXV, 4). Non utique sancti Deo dicunt: Creatus es, sed protector et adjutor per gratiam tuam factus es nobis.

40. It would be a lengthy matter were I to pass in review each several place where we read of His being made, not indeed by nature, but by way of gracious dispensation. Moses, for example, says: You are made my Helper and Protector, to save me; Exodus 15:2 and David: Be unto me for a God of salvation, and a house of refuge, that You may save me; and Isaiah: He has become an Helper for every city that is lowly. Isaiah 25:4 Of a surety the holy men say not to God: You have been created, but By Your grace You are made a Protector and Helper unto us.

CAPUT VI.

OBJECTIONEM EX JOANNE desumptam ut diluat, primo demonstrat Manichaeis patrocinari Arianum sensum: deinde varia distinguendorum verborum ejusdem loci exposita ratione, ipsum nullo modo ad substantiam divinam sine Patris injuria referri posse aperte probat, verumque illius exponit intellectum.

CHAPTER 6.

In order to dispose of an objection grounded on a text in St. John, St. Ambrose first shows that the Arian interpretation lends countenance to the Manichæans; then, after setting forth the different ways of dividing the words in this same passage, he shows plainly that it cannot, without dishonour to the Father, be understood with such reference to the Godhead as the Arians give it, and expounds the true meaning thereon.

41. Unde nec illud verendum est, quod solent Ariani saeva interpretatione componere, dicentes factum esse Dei Verbum; quia scriptum est, inquiunt: Quod factum est in ipso, vita est (Joan. I, 4).

41. We have no reason, therefore, to fear the argument which the Arians, in their reckless manner of expounding, use to construct, showing that the Word of God was made, for, say they, it is written: That which has been made in Him is life.

42. Primum intelligant si ad substantiam divinam referant, quod factum est; Manichaeorum se quaestionibus implicari. Objiciunt enim Manichaei: Si quod in ipso factum est, vita est: est ergo aliquid quod in ipso factum non sit, et mors sit; ut duo impie inducant principia. Sed hoc damnat Ecclesia.

42. First of all, let them understand that if they make the words That which has been made to refer to the Godhead, they entangle themselves in the difficulties raised by the Manichæans, for these people argue: If that which has been made in Him is life, then there is something which has not been made in Him, and is death, so that they may impiously bring in two principles. But this teaching the Church condemns.

43. Deinde unde possunt docere sic pronuntiasse Evangelistam? Plerique enim docti et fideles sic pronuntiant: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil quod factum est; alii sic: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil; denique: Quod factum est, pronuntiant et subjungunt: in ipso, hoc est: Quidquid autem factum, est in ipso. Quid est, In ipso? Apostolus docet dicens: In ipso enim sumus, et vivimus et movemur (Act. XVII, 28).

43. Again, how can the Arians prove that the Evangelist actually said this? The most part of those who are learned in the Faith read the passage as follows: All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that has been made. Others read thus: All things were made by Him, and without Him was nothing made. Then they proceed: What has been made, and to this they join the words in Him; that is to say, But whatsover is has been made in Him. But what mean the words in Him? The Apostle tells us, when he says: In Him we have our being, and live, and move. Acts 17:28

44. Tamen etiamsi quemadmodum velint, pronuntient, non possunt hic calumniari Deo 505 Verbo, si ad substantiam ejus velint referre: Quod factum est; quin calumnientur et Patri Deo, de quo scriptum est: Qui autem

facit veritatem, venit ad lucem; ut manifestentur opera ejus, quia in Deo sunt facta (Joan. III, 21). Ecce hic opera hominis in Deo facta legimus, et ad substantiam tamen divinam referre non possumus: sed aut per ipsum facta cognoscimus, ut est etiam illud Apostolicum, quod omnia per ipsum, et in ipso creata sunt; et ipse est ante omnes, et omnia in ipso constant (Coloss. I, 16): aut, ut docet praesentis lectionis testimonium, virtutes quibus vitae aeternae fructus acquiritur, in Deo factas aestimare debemus, castitatem, pietatem, religionem, fidem et alia hujusmodi, quae in voluntate Dei facta sunt.

44. Howbeit, let them read the passage as they will, they cannot diminish the majesty of God the Word, in referring to His Person, as subject, the words That which was made, without also doing dishonour to God the Father, of Whom it is written: But he who does the truth comes to the light, that his works may be made manifest that they are wrought in God. John 3:21 See then — here we read of man's works being wrought in God, and yet for all that we cannot understand the Godhead as the subject of them. We must either recognize the works as wrought through Him, as the Apostle's affirmation shows that all things are through Him, and were created in Him, and He is before all, and all things exist together in Him, or, as the witness of the text here cited teaches us, we ought to regard the virtues whereby the fruit of life eternal is gained, as wrought in God — chastity, piety, devoutness, faith, and others of this kind, whereby the will of God is expressed.

45. Ergo sicut in Dei Patris, ita etiam in Christi voluntate et virtute facta sunt, sicut legimus: Creati in Christo in operibus bonis (Ephes. II, 10); et in psalmo: Fiat pax in virtute tua (Ps. CXXI, 7); et alibi: Omnia in sapientia fecisti (Ps. CIII, 24). In sapientia, inquit, fecisti, non sapientiam fecisti. Nam cum omnia in sapientia facta sint, Christus autem Dei sapientia sit (I Cor. I, 24), non accidens utique, sed subsistens et permanens in aeternum; si facta est sapientia, jam deteriore conditione facta est quam omnia; quia sapientia fieri per se ipsam non potuit. Ergo si factum esse frequenter ad aliquid, non ad naturam refertur, etiam creatum esse ad causam refertur.

45. Just as the works, then, are the expression of the will and power of God the Father, so are they of Christ's, even as we read: Created in Christ in good works; Ephesians 2:10 and in the psalm: Peace be made in Your power; and again: In wisdom have You made them all. In wisdom have You made, mark you — not You have made wisdom; for since all things have been made in wisdom, and Christ is the Wisdom of God, then this Wisdom is plainly not an accident, but a substance, and an everlasting one, but if the Wisdom has been made, then is it made in a worse condition than all things, forasmuch as it could not, by itself, be made Wisdom. If, then, being made is oftentimes referred to something accidental, not to the essence of a thing, so may creation also be referred to some end had in view.

CAPUT VII.

QUOD A SALOMONE dictum est: Dominus creavit me, etc., incarnationem Christi ad redimenda Patris opera factam signare; quo ex ipsius Filii verbis declarato, principium ostendit etiam accipi posse de documentis virtutum, quarum omnium vias nobis Dominus aperuisse, ac vere principium exstitisse demonstratur.

CHAPTER 7.

Solomon's words, The Lord created Me, etc., mean that Christ's Incarnation was done for the redemption of the Father's creation, as is shown by the Son's own words. That He is the beginning may be understood from the visible proofs of His virtuousness, and it is shown how the Lord opened the ways of all virtues, and was their true beginning.

46. [Alias cap. IV.] Unde intelligimus illud quod de incarnatione Domini scriptum est: Dominus creavit me principium viarum suarum in opera sua (Prov. VIII, 22), id significare quod ad redimenda opera Patris Dominus Jesus ex Virgine sit creatus. Neque enim dubitari potest de incarnationis dictum esse mysterio, cum propter opera sua a corruptelae servitio liberanda Dominus susceperit carnem; ut illum qui imperium habebat mortis, per sui corporis destrueret passionem. Caro enim Christi propter opera, divinitas ante opera; quia ipse ante omnia, sed et omnia in ipso constant.

46. Hereby we are brought to understand that the prophecy of the Incarnation, The Lord created me the beginning of His ways for His works, Proverbs 8:22 means that the Lord Jesus was created of the Virgin for the redeeming of the Father's works. Truly, we cannot doubt that this is spoken of the mystery of the Incarnation, forasmuch as the Lord took upon Him our flesh, in order to save the works of His hands from the slavery of corruption, so that He might, by the sufferings of His own body, overthrow him who had the power of death. For Christ's flesh is for the sake of things created, but His Godhead existed before them, seeing that He is before all things, while all things exist together in Him. Colossians 1:16

47. Non ergo divinitas propter opera, sed propter divinitatem opera; sicut Apostolus declaravit, dicens quod propter Filium Dei omnia. Sic enim habes: Decebat autem eum per quem omnia, et propter quem omnia, multis filiis in gloriam adductis, ducem salutis eorum per passionem consummari (Hebr. II, 10). Nonne evidenter exposuit quia Dei Filius qui propter divinitatem suam omnia creavit, is postea propter populi salutem et carnis suceptionem, et mortis assumpserit passionem?

47. His Godhead, then, is not by reason of creation, but creation exists because of the Godhead; even as the Apostle showed, saying that all things exist because of the Son of God, for we read as follows: But it was fitting that He, through Whom and because of Whom are all things, after bringing many sons to glory, should, as Captain of their salvation, be made perfect through suffering. Hebrews 2:10 Has he not plainly declared that the Son of God, Who, by reason of His Godhead, was the Creator of all, did in after time, for the salvation of His people, submit to the taking on of the flesh and the suffering of death?

48. Propter quae autem opera sit creatus ex Virgine, 506 ipse Dominus cum illum caecum curaret, ostendit dicens: In illo me oportet operari opera ejus, qui misit me (Joan. IX, 4). Et addidit, ut de incarnatione ejus dictum crederemus: Cum in hoc mundo sum, lux sum hujus mundi (Ibid., 5). Etenim quasi homo in hoc mundo pro tempore est; nam quasi Deus semper

est. Denique et alibi ait: Ecce ego vobiscum sum usque ad consummationem mundi (Matth. XXVIII, 20).

48. Now for the sake of what works the Lord was created of a virgin, He Himself, while healing the blind man, has shown, saying: In Him must I work the works of Him that sent Me. Furthermore He said in the same Scripture, that we might believe Him to speak of the Incarnation: As long as I am in this world, I am the Light of this world, John 9:5 for, so far as He is man, He is in this world for a season, but as God He exists at all times. In another place, too, He says: Lo, I am with you even unto the end of the world. Matthew 28:20

49. Nec de principio residet aliquid quaestionis, cum interrogatus in carne: Tu qui es? responderit: Principium quod et loquor vobis (Joan. VIII, 25). Quod non solum ad substantiam divinitatis aeternae refertur, sed etiam ad documenta virtutum. Ex hoc enim et Deum se probavit aeternum; quia omnium ipse principium est, et uniuscujusque virtutis auctor, quia Ecclesiae caput est, sicut scriptum est: Quia ipse est caput corporis Ecclesiae, qui est principium, primogenitus ex mortuis (Coloss. I, 18).

49. Nor is there any room for questioning with respect to the beginning, seeing that when, during His earthly life, He was asked, Who are You? He answered: The beginning, even as I tell you. This refers not only to the essential nature of the eternal Godhead, but also to the visible proofs of virtues, for hereby has He proved Himself the eternal God, in that He is the beginning of all things, and the Author of each several virtue, in that He is the Head of the Church, as it is written: Because He is the Head of the Body, of the Church; Colossians 1:18 Who is the beginning, first-begotten from the dead. Ephesians 4:15-16

50. Liquet igitur et de incarnatione dictum esse principium viarum suarum, quod ad sacramentum suscepti corporis videtur esse referendum. Ideo enim carnem suscepit, ut ad coelum nobis sterneret iter. Denique ait: Ascendo ad Patrem meum, et Patrem vestrum: Deum meum, et Deum vestrum (Joan. XX, 17). Denique ut scias quod vias suas omnipotens Pater secundum incarnationem praescripserit Filio, habes in Zacharia ad Jesum indutum vestimenta sordida ab Angelo dictum: Haec dicit Dominus omnipotens: Si in viis meis ambulaveris, et praecepta mea custodieris (Zach. III, 7). Quod est vestimentum illud sordidum, nisi carnis assumptio?

50. It is clear, then, that the words beginning of His ways, which, as it seems, we must refer to the mystery of the putting on of His body, are a prophecy of the Incarnation. For Christ's purpose in the Incarnation was to pave for us the road to heaven. Mark how He says: I go up to My Father and your Father, to My God and your God. John 20:17 Then, to give you to know that the Almighty Father appointed His ways to the Son, after the Incarnation, you have in Zechariah the words of the angel speaking to Joshua clothed in filthy garments: Thus says the Lord Almighty: If you will walk in My ways and observe My precepts. Zechariah 3:7 What is the meaning of that filthy garb save the putting on of the flesh?

51. Viae igitur Domini velut quidam tramites bonae vitae sunt, quae diriguntur a Christo, qui ait: Ego sum via, et veritas, et vita (Joan. XIV, 6). Via ergo superna est Dei virtus; Christus enim nobis via est. Et bona via, quae credentibus coeli regna patefecit. Viae autem Domini viae rectae sunt, sicut scriptum est: Vias tuas, Domine, notas fac mihi (Ps. XXIV, 4). Via castitas, via fides, via est abstinentia. Est namque via virtutis, est et via iniquitatis; scriptum est enim: Et vide si est via iniquitatis in me (Ps. CXXXVIII, 24).

51. Now the ways of the Lord are, we may say, certain courses taken in a good life, guided by Christ, Who says, I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life. John 14:6 The way, then, is the surpassing power of God, for Christ, is our way, and a good way, too, is He, a way which has opened the kingdom of heaven to believers. Moreover, the ways of the Lord are straight, as it is written: Make Your ways known unto me, O Lord. Chastity is a way, faith is a way, abstinence is a way. There is, indeed, a way of virtue, and there is a way of wickedness; for it is written: And see if there be any way of wickedness in me.

52. Principium itaque nostrae virtutis est Christus. Principium integritatis, qui docuit virgines non viriles exspectare concubitus, sed integritatem mentis et corporis sancto magis dicare Spiritui, quam marito (II Cor. XI, 2). Principium parcimoniae Christus, qui pauper factus est, cum esset dives (II Cor. VIII, 9). Principium patientiae Christus, qui cum malediceretur, non remaledixit; cum percuteretur, non repercussit (I Petr. II, 23). Principium humilitatis Christus, qui formam servi accepit (Philip. II, 7); cum Patrem Deum majestate virtutis aequaret. Ex illo enim accepit virtus unaquaeque principium.

52. Christ, then, is the beginning of our virtue. He is the beginning of purity, Who taught maidens not to look for the embraces of men, but to yield the purity of their bodies and minds to the service of the Holy Spirit rather than to a husband. Christ is the beginning of frugality, for He became poor, though He was rich. 1 Corinthians 8:9 Christ is the beginning of patience, for when He was reviled, He reviled not again, when He was struck, He did not strike back. Christ is the beginning of humility, for He took the form of a servant, though in the majesty of His power He was equal with God the Father. From Him each several virtue has taken its origin.

53. Et ideo ut haec virtutum genera disceremus: Filius datus est nobis, cujus principium super humeros ejus (Esai. IX, 6). Principium illud crux Domini est; principium fortitudinis, quo via sanctis est reserata martyribus ad sacri certaminis passionem.

53. For this cause, then, that we might learn these various virtues, a Son was given us, Whose beginning was upon His shoulder. That beginning is the Lord’s Cross — the beginning of strong courage, wherewith a way has been opened for the holy martyrs to enter the sufferings of the Holy War.

CAPUT VIII.

VERSICULUS IN ESAIA proxime citatus de Christi humanitate ac divinitate explicatur, eoque varias haereses jugulari evincitur.

CHAPTER 8.

The prophecy of Christ's Godhead and Manhood, contained in the verse of Isaiah just now cited, is unfolded, and its force in refuting various heresies demonstrated.

54. Vidit hoc principium Esaias, et ideo ait: Puer natus est, Filius datus est nobis. Viderunt et Magi, et ideo cum parvalum in praesepi cernerent, adoraverunt dicentes: Puer natus est; cum stellam conspicerent, praedicantes: Filius datus est nobis (Matth. II, 11). Aliud munus e terris, aliud munus e coelo, et utrumque unus in utroque perfectus, et sine mutabilitate divinitatis, et sine humanae imminutione naturae. Unum adoraverunt, eidemque munera obtulerunt; ut ostenderent ipsum esse coeli Dominum, qui in praesepibus videretur.

54. This beginning did Isaiah see, and therefore he says: A Child is born, a Son is given to us, as also did the Magi, and therefore worshipped they, when they saw the little One in the stable, and said: A Child is born, and, when they saw the star, declared, A Son is given to us. On the one hand, a gift from earth — on the other, a gift from heaven — and both are One Person, perfect in respect of each, without any changeableness in the Godhead, as without any taking away from the fullness of the Manhood. One Person did the Magi adore, to one and the same they offered their gifts, to show that He Who was seen in the stall was the very Lord of heaven.

55. Distingue singulorum momenta verborum: Puer natus est, Filius datus est nobis. Etsi ex Patre natus, non tamen nobis natus, sed datus est; quia non Filius propter nos, sed nos propter Filium. Neque enim nobis natus est, qui et ante nos natus est, et totius est conditor creaturae: neque nunc primum nascitur, qui erat semper, et erat in principio: sed illud quod non erat, nobis nascitur. Quod etiam angelus pastoribus cum loqueretur, dixit esse generatum, sicut habes scriptum: Quia natus est nobis hodie Salvator, qui est Christus Dominus, in civitate David (Luc. II, 11). Nobis ergo quod non erat, natum est: hoc est, puer ex Virgine, corpus ex Maria; hoc enim post nos, illud ante nos.

55. Mark how the two verbs differ in their import: A Child is born, a Son is given. Though born of the Father, yet is He not born, but given to us, forasmuch as the Son is not for our sakes, but we for the Son's. For indeed He was not born to us, being born before us, and the maker of all things created: nor is He now brought to life for the first time, Who was always, and was in the beginning; John 1:1 on the other hand, that which before-time was not is born to us. Again we find it thus recorded, how that the angel, when he spoke to the shepherds, said that He had been born: Who is this day born to us a Saviour, Who is Christ the Lord, in the city of David. Luke 2:11 To us, then, was born that which was not before — that is, a child of the Virgin, a body from Mary — for this was made after man had been created, whereas [the Godhead] was before us.

56. Alii codices sic habent: Puer natus est nobis, Filius datus est nobis; hoc est, qui erat Filius Dei, hic ex Maria puer natus est nobis, et datus est nobis. Quia datus sit, audi Prophetam dicentem: Et salutare tuum da nobis (Psal. LXXXIV, 8). Quod enim supra nos est, datur: quod de coelo est, datur; sicut etiam de Spiritu legimus quod, Charitas Dei effusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum sanctum, qui datus est nobis (Rom. V, 5).

56. Some manuscripts read as follows: A Child is born to us a Son is given to us; that is to say, He, Who is Son of God, is born as Mary's child for us, and given to us. As for the fact that He is given, listen to the prophet's words: And grant us Your salvation. But that which is above us is given: what is from heaven is given: even as indeed we read concerning the Spirit, that the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, Who is given unto us. Romans 5:5

57. Sed videte quemadmodum hic locus multas haereses exstinguat. Puer natus est nobis, non Judaeis: nobis, non Manichaeis: nobis, non Marcionitis. Propheta dicit: Nobis, hoc est credentibus, non incredulis. Et ille quidem misericordia sua omnibus natus est, sed perfidia haereticorum fecit, ut non omnibus nasceretur, qui omnibus natus est. Nam et lumen diei oriri jubetur super bonos et malos: sed oriri non videntibus non videtur (Matth. V, 15).

57. But note how this passage is as water upon fire to a crowd of heresies. A Child is born to us, not to the Jews; to us, not to the Manichæans; to us, not to the Marcionites. The prophet says to us, that is, to those who believe, not to unbelievers. And He indeed, in His pitifulness, was born for all, but it is the disloyalty of heretics that has brought it to pass that the birth of Him Who was born for all should not profit all. For the sun is bidden to rise upon the good and the bad, but to them that see not there is no appearance of sunrise.

58. Sicut ergo puer non omnibus natus est, sed fidelibus: sic Filius non infidelibus datus est, sed fidelibus. Nobis datus est, non Photinianis; illi enim non datum nobis Dei Filium dicunt esse, sed ab initio inter nos natum: nobis datus est, non Sabellianis; illi enim nolunt Filium datum, eumdem asserentes Patrem esse quem Filium: nobis, non Arianis; et ipsi enim non habent Filium pro salute datum, sed pro infirmitate transmissum: non habent consiliarium, quem putant futura nescisse: non habent Filium, quem sempiternum non putant; cum 508 scriptum sit de Verbo Dei, quod erat in principio; et alibi: In principio, erat Verbum (Joan. I, 2). Denique ut ad propositum revertamur exemplum: In principio, inquit, antequam terram faceret, antequam abyssos faceret, et antequam produceret fontes aquarum, ante omnes colles genuit me (Prov. VIII, 23 et seq.).

58. Even as the Child, then, is born not unto all, but unto the faithful: so the Son is given to the faithful and not to the unbelieving. He is given to us, not to the Photinians; for they affirm that the Son of God was not given unto us, but was born and first began to exist among us. To us is He given, not to the Sabellians, who will not hear of a Son being given, maintaining that Father and Son are one and the same. Unto us is He given, not unto the Arians, in whose judgment the Son was not given for salvation, but sent over subject and inferior, to whom, moreover, He is no Counsellor, inasmuch as they hold that He knows nought of the future, no Son, since they believe not in His eternity, though of the Word of God it is written: That which was in the beginning; and again: In the beginning was the Word. John 1:1-2 To return to the passage we set before us to discuss. In the beginning, says the Scripture, before He made the earth, before He made the deeps, before He brought forth the springs of water, before all the hills He begot Me.

CAPUT IX.

DIFFICULTATEM EX LOCO Salomonis supra laudato exorientem solvit Ambrosius, illic et praeteritum sumi pro futuro, et geminam in Christo naturam designari patefaciens.

CHAPTER 9.

The preceding quotation from Solomon's Proverbs receives further explanation.

59. Fortasse dices, quomodo de incarnatione Christi dictum esse memoraverim: Dominus creavit me, cum ante incarnationem Christi creatura sit mundi? Sed considera quia moris est Scripturis divinis, et futura pro praeteritis dicere, et geminam in Christo significare substantiam divinitatis, et carnis; ne quis aut divinitatem neget ejus, aut carnem.

59. Perchance you will ask how I came to cite, as referring to the Incarnation of Christ, the place, The Lord created Me, seeing that the creation of the universe took place before the Incarnation of Christ? But consider that the use of holy Scripture is to speak of things to come as though already past, and to make intimation of the union of two natures, Godhead and Manhood, in Christ, lest any should deny either His Godhead or His Manhood.

60. Nam sicut in Esaia habes: Puer natus est nobis, et Filius datus est nobis (Esai. IX, 6); ita hic quoque ante praemisit creaturam carnis, et subtexuit assertionem divinitatis; ut scires non duos Christos, sed unum esse: qui et ante saecula generatus sit ex Patre, et ultimis temporibus creatus ex Virgine, hoc est: Ego sum ille creatus ex homine, creatus ad causam, qui sum generatus ante saecula.

60. In Isaiah, for example, you may read: A Child is born unto us, and a Son is given unto us; so here also [in the Proverbs] the prophet sets forth first the creation of the flesh, and joined thereto the declaration of the Godhead, that you might know that Christ is not two, but One, being both begotten of the Father before the worlds, and in the last times created of the Virgin. And thus the meaning is: I, Who am begotten before the worlds, am He Who was created of mortal woman, created for a set purpose.

61. Denique dicturus: Dominus creavit me, praemisit: Commemorabo quae a saeculo sunt. Dicturus: Genuit, praemisit: In principio antequam terram faceret, ante omnes colles genuit me. Ante, cum dicitur, in infinitum retro sine aliqua definitione porrigitur. Denique, ante Abraham, inquit, ego sum (Joan. VIII, 58), non utique post Adam: et ante Luciferum (Psal. CIX, 3), non utique post angelos. Sed ante, cum dixit, non se intra aliquem, sed omnia intra se dixit; sic enim moris est aeternitatem Dei Scripturis significare divinis. Denique alibi habes: Priusquam montes fierent, et formaretur orbis terrae, a saeculo et usque in saeculum tu es (Psal. LXXXIX, 2).

61. Again, immediately before the declaration, The Lord created Me, He says, I will tell of the things which are from eternity, and before saying, He begot, He premised, In the beginning, before He made the earth, before all hills. In its extent, the preposition before reaches back into the past without end or limit, and so Before Abraham was, I am, John 8:58 clearly need not mean after Adam, just as before the Morning Star need not mean after the angels. But when He said before, He intended, not that He was included in any one’s existence, but that all things are included in His, for thus it is the custom of Holy Writ to show the eternity of God. Finally, in another passage you may read: Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever the earth and the world were made, You are from everlasting to everlasting.

62. Ante omnia ergo generatio, inter omnia et propter omnia creatura. Natus ex Patre supra Legem, factus ex Maria sub Lege.

62. Before all created things, then, is the Son begotten; within all and for the good of all is He made; begotten of the Father, above the Law, Mark 2:28 brought forth of Mary, under the Law. Galatians 4:4

CAPUT X.

BAPTISTAE VERBA EX quibus Christum etiam ante incarnationem factum disputabant, soluturus, ubi praemisit ea referri posse ad praedestinationem; intelligenda tamen de incarnatione ab antecedentibus probat. Hinc progrediens ad mystica, ipsum dignitate ac merito ante Joannem fuisse declarat: maxime cum Ecclesiae, cujus typus in historia Ruth expressus fuerat, sponsus, etiam excluso Moyse, solus exstiterit: quam licet Synagoga non omnino neglecta, solus vocavit.

CHAPTER 10.

Observations on the words of John the Baptist (John 1:30), which may be referred to divine fore-ordinance, but at any rate, as explained by the foregoing considerations, must be understood of the Incarnation. The precedence of Christ is mystically expounded, with reference to the history of Ruth.

63. [Alias. cap. V.] Sed scriptum est: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est; quia prior me erat. Unde dicunt: Ecce qui erat, factus est. Ipsa verba perpendamus. Post me, inquit, venit vir (Joan. I, 30). Vir ergo est qui venit, ipse qui factus est. Vir 509 autem nomen est sexus: sexus autem non utique divinitati, sed naturae deputatur humanae.

63. But [say they] it is written: After me comes a Man, Who is made before me, because He was before me; John 1:30 and so they argue: See, He Who was aforetime is ‘made.’ Let us take the words by themselves. After me comes a Man. He, then, Who came is a Man, and this is the Man Who was made. But the word man connotes sex, and sex is attributed to human nature, but never to the Godhead.

64. Possem ergo dicere: Erat in praecognitione quidem corporis, sed aeternitate virtutis; nam et Ecclesia erat, et sancti erant praedestinati ante saecula: sed non id hoc loco dico, at illud assero, factum esse non ad divinitatem, sed ad incarnationis pertinere naturam, sicut ipse Joannes dixit: Hic est de quo dixi: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est.

64. I might argue: The Man [Christ Jesus] was in pre-existence so far as His body was foreknown, though His power is from everlasting — for both the Church and the Saints were foreordained before the worlds began. But here I lay aside this argument, and urge that the being made concerns not the Godhead, but the nature of the Incarnation, even as John himself said: This is He of Whom I said: After me comes a Man, Who was made before me.

65. Itaque cum geminam, sicut supra dixi, in Christo substantiam proposuisset, ut utramque intelligas et divinitatis et carnis, hoc loco coepit a carne. Est enim Scripturis promiscua consuetudo divinis, ut interdum a divinitate Christi incipiant, et ad incarnationis sacramenta descendant; interdum ab humilitate incarnationis exordium sumant, et ad gloriam divinitatis assurgant, ut in prophetis, et in evangelistis frequenter, et in Paulo. Ergo et hic juxta memoratam consuetudinem ab incarnatione Domini coepit de ejus divinitate dicturus; non ut confunderet humana atque divina, sed ut distingueret. Verum Ariani, velut Judaici caupones, miscent aquam cum vino; quia divinam generationem humanamque confundunt, ad deitatem referentes, quod de carne sit dictum.

65. The Scripture, then, having, as I showed above, discovered the twofold nature in Christ, that you might understand the presence of both Godhead and Manhood, here begins with the flesh; for it is the custom of Holy Writ to begin without fixed rule sometimes with the Godhead of Christ, and descend to the visible tokens of Incarnation; sometimes, on the other hand, to start from its humility, and rise to the glory of the Godhead, as oftentimes in the Prophets and Evangelists, and in St. Paul. Here, then, after this use, the writer begins with the Incarnation of our Lord, and then proclaims His Divinity, not to confound, but to distinguish, the human and the divine. But Arians, like Jew vintners, mix water with the wine, confounding the divine generation with the human, and ascribing to the majesty of God what is properly said only of the lowliness of the flesh.

66. Nec metuo quod objecturi videntur quia in superioribus non habet, Virum; sic enim habet: Qui post me venit. Sed videant et ibi quid praemiserit: Verbum, inquit, caro factum est (Joan. I, 14). Et ideo non addidit, Virum; quia carnem dixerat: per carnem autem istic virum intelligimus, et per virum carnem. Ergo quia dixerat: Verbum caro factum est, virum hoc loco nominare superfluum fuit, quem jam carnis expressione signaverat.

66. I have no fears of a certain objection they are likely to put forward, namely, that in the words cited we have a man — for some have, Who comes after me. But here, too, let them observe what precedes. The Word, it is said, was made flesh. John 1:14 Having said that the Word was made flesh, the Evangelist added no mention of man. We understand man there in the mention of flesh, and flesh by the mention of man. After the statement made, then, that the Word was made flesh, there was no need here to particularly mention man, whom he already intended by using the name flesh.

67. Quo exemplo in posterioribus quoque et agnum praemisit, qui tolleret peccata mundi; et ut incarnatum intelligeres, quem ante memoraverat, ait: Hic est de quo ante dixi: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est (Ibid., 29), hoc est, virum dixi, non Deum factum. Sed ut ipsum incarnatum declararet esse, quia ante saecula erat; ne duos filios crederemus, ait: Quia prior me erat. Nam si, Factus est, ad divinam generationem retulisset, quid opus erat ut adhuc adderet tertium, atque iteraret quod supra dixerat? Sed quia ante de incarnatione tantum dixerat: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est; ideo addidit: Quia prior me erat, quoniam divinitatis aeternitas fuerat exprimenda. Et haec est causa praelationis, ut merito antelatus videatur, qui proprii Patris sempiterna virtus est.

67. Later on, St. John uses the lamb, that takes away the sins of the world, as an example; and to teach you plainly the Incarnation of Him, of Whom he had spoken before, he says: This is He of Whom I said before: After me comes a Man, Who is made before me, to wit, of Whom I said that He was made as being man, not as being God. However, to show that it was He Who was before the worlds, and none other, that became flesh, lest we should suppose two Sons of God, he adds: because He was before me. If the words was made had referred to the divine generation, what need was there that the writer should add this, and repeat himself? But, having first said, with regard to the Incarnation only, After me comes a Man, Who is made before me, he added: because He was before me, because it was needful to teach the eternity of [Christ's] Godhead; and this is the reason why St. John acknowledged Christ's priority, that He, Who is His own Father's eternal Power, may be presented as on that account duly preferred.

68. Dat tamen intellectus spiritalis ubertas, ut excurrere et evagari ad concludendos libeat Arianos, qui volunt factum hoc loco non ad virum, sed ad divinitatem referre. Quid est enim tenere quod possint; cum dixerit Baptista: Post me venit, qui ante me factus est; hoc est, supra meritum meum factus, supra meam gratiam, tempore carnis posterior, divinitatis honore venerabilis? Post me enim venit, temporis 510 est: prior me erat, aeternitatis: ante me factus est, honoris; quia etiam Incarnationis mysterium supra humanam est gratiam.

68. But the abounding activity of the spiritual understanding makes it a pleasing exercise to sally forth and drive into a corner the Arians, who will understand the term made in this passage, not of the manhood, but of the Godhead [of Christ]. What ground, indeed, is left for them to take their stand upon, when the Baptist has declared that after me comes One Who is made before me, that is, Who, though in the course of earthly life He comes after me, yet is placed above the degree of my worth and grace, and Who has title to be worshipped as God. For the words comes after me belong to an event in time, but was before me signify Christ's eternity; and is made before me refer to His pre-eminence, forasmuch as, indeed, the mystery of the Incarnation is above human deserving.

69. Denique in inferioribus quid supra contexuisset expressit dicens: Post me venit vir, cujus non sum dignus calciamenta portare (Joan. I, 27); praestantiam utique dignitatis, non aeternitatem divinae generationis exponens. Quod eousque ad incarnationem pertinet, ut typum in hominibus mystici calciamenti ante praemiserit. Lege enim proximo defuncti vel fratri copula deferebatur ejus uxoris; ut semen fratris vel proximi resuscitaret (Num. XXXVI, 6). Unde quod Ruth, licet ipsa alienigena; tamen quia maritum habuerat ex Judaeis, qui reliquerat superstitem proximum, eamque colligentem manipulos suae messis, quibus alebat et se et socrum, Booz vidit et amavit: non aliter eam accipit uxorem, nisi calciamentum ejus ante solvisset, cui uxor debebatur ex Lege (Ruth. IV, 5-7).

69. Again, St. John Baptist also taught in less weighty language what ideas they were he had combined, saying: After me comes a Man, Whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, setting forth at least the more excellent dignity [of Christ], though not the eternity of His Divine Generation. Now these words are so fully intended of the Incarnation, that Scripture has given us, in an earlier book, a human counterpart of the mystic sandal. For, by the Law, when a man died, the marriage bond with his wife was passed on to his brother, or other man next of kin, in order that the seed of the brother or next of kin might renew the life of the house, and thus it was that Ruth, though she was foreign-born, but yet had possessed a husband of the Jewish people, who had left a kinsman of near relation, being seen and loved of Boaz while gleaning and maintaining herself and her mother-in-law with that she gleaned, was yet not taken of Boaz to wife, until she had first loosed the shoe from [the foot of] him whose wife she ought, by the Law, to have become.

70. Historia simplex, sed alta mysteria; aliud enim gerebatur, aliud figurabatur. Nam si secundum litteram sensum torqueamus, prope quidam pudor et horror in verbo est, si ad commixtionis corporeae consuetudinem sententiam intellectumque referamus. Designabatur autem futurus ex Judaeis, ex quibus Christus secundum carnem, qui proximi sui, hoc est, populi mortui semen doctrinae coelestis semine suscitaret, cui calciamentum nuptiale Ecclesiae copulandae praescripta Legis spiritalia deferebant.

70. The story is a simple one, but deep are its hidden meanings, for that which was done was the outward betokening of somewhat further. If indeed we should rack the sense so as to fit the letter exactly, we should almost find the words an occasion of a certain shame and horror, that we should regard them as intending and conveying the thought of common bodily intercourse; but it was the foreshadowing of One Who was to arise from Jewry — whence Christ was, after the flesh — Who should, with the seed of heavenly teaching, revive the seed of his dead kinsman, that is to say, the people, and to Whom the precepts of the Law, in their spiritual significance, assigned the sandal of marriage, for the espousals of the Church.

71. Non Moyses sponsus; illi enim dicitur: Solve calciamentum pedum tuorum (Exod. III, 5); ut Domino suo cedat. Non Jesus Nave filius sponsus; nam et ipsi dicitur: Solve calciamentum pedum tuorum (Josue V, 16); ne ex similitudine nominis sponsus Ecclesiae crederetur. Non alius sponsus, sed solus Christus est sponsus, de quo dixit Joannes: Qui habet sponsam sponsus est (Joan. III, 29). Illis igitur calciamentum solvitur, huic solvi non potest, sicut dixit Joannes: Non sum dignus solvere corrigiam calciamenti ejus (Joan. I, 27).

71. Moses was not the Bridegroom, for to him comes the word, Loose your shoe from off your foot, Exodus 3:5 that he might give place to his Lord. Nor was Joshua, the son of Nun, the Bridegroom, for to him also it was told, saying, Loose your shoe from off your foot, Joshua 5:16 lest, by reason of the likeness of his name, he should be thought the spouse of the Church. None other is the Bridegroom but Christ alone, of Whom St. John said: He Who has the bride is the Bridegroom. John 3:29 They, therefore, loose their shoes, but His shoe cannot be loosed, even as St. John said: I am not worthy to loose the latchet of His shoe. John 1:27

72. Solus ergo Christus est sponsus, cui illa veniens ex gentibus sponsa, ante inops atque jejuna, sed jam Christi messe dives, innubat: quae manipulos fecundae segetis, Verbique reliquias gremio legat mentis interno; ut exhaustam illam viduam morte filii, atque inopem defuncti populi matrem novis pascat alimentis, non relinquens destitutam viduam, et novos quaerens.

72. Christ alone, then, is the Bridegroom to Whom the Church, His bride, comes from the nations, and gives herself in wedlock; aforetime poor and starving, but now rich with Christ's harvest; gathering in the hidden bosom of her mind handfuls of the rich crop and gleanings of the Word, that so she may nourish with fresh food her who is worn out, bereaved by the death of her son, and starving, even the mother of the dead people — leaving not the widow and destitute, while she seeks new children.

73. Solus ergo Christus est sponsus, qui nec Synagogae ipsi manipulos suae messis invideat. Utinam se non ipsa excluderet! Habuit quos per se colligeret: sed quia populus ejus est mortuus, quasi filio egena defuncto, per Ecclesiam manipulos, quibus viveret, colligebat; quos venientes in exsultatione portabunt, sicut scriptum est: Venientes autem venient in exsultatione, tollentes manipulos suos (Psal. CXXV, 6).

73. Christ, then, alone is the Bridegroom, grudging not even to the synagogue the sheaves of His harvest. Would that the synagogue had not of her own will shut herself out! She had sheaves that she might herself have gathered, but, her people being dead, she, like one bereaved by the death of her son, began to gather sheaves, whereby she might live, by the hand of the Church — the which sheaves they who come in joyfulness shall carry, even as it is written: Yet surely shall they come with joy, bringing their sheaves with them.

74. Quis enim sibi alius sponsam audeat Ecclesiam vindicare, quam a Libano unus et solus vocavit dicens: Ades huc a Libano, sponsa; 511 ades huc a Libano (Cant. IV, 8). Aut de quo alio potuit Ecclesia dicere: Fauces ejus dulcedines, et totus desiderium (Cant. V, 16)? Et quia de calciamento pedum tractatum sumpsimus, cui alii nisi Verbo Dei incarnato convenit dictum: Crura ejus columnae marmoreae, fundatae super bases aureas (Ibid., 13)? Solus enim Christus inambulat animis, et graditur in mente sanctorum, in quibus velut aureis basibus, fundamentisque pretiosis solidata vestigia Verbi coelestis haeserunt.

74. Who, indeed, but Christ could dare to claim the Church as His bride, whom He alone, and none other, has called from Libanus, saying: Come hither from Libanus, my bride; come hither from Libanus? Song of Songs 4:8 Or of Whom else could the Church have said: His throat is sweetness, and He is altogether desirable? Song of Songs 5:26 And seeing that we entered upon this discussion from speaking of the shoes of His feet — to Whom else but the Word of God incarnate can those words apply? His legs are pillars of marble, set upon bases of gold. Song of Songs 5:15 For Christ alone walks in the souls and makes His path in the minds of His saints, in which, as upon bases of gold and foundations of precious stone the heavenly Word has left His footprints ineffaceably impressed.

75. Claret igitur et virum et typum ad incarnationis spectare mysterium.

75. Clearly we see, then, that both the man and the type point to the mystery of the Incarnation.

CAPUT XI.

REDIT AD LOCUM propositum, et ubi Christus dicitur factus, hoc vel ad incarnationem vel ad causam sive adjunctum aliquod referri docet. Ad eum sensum plurima sacrorum codicum et Pauli imprimis testimonia edisserit: maxime autem in eo immoratur, ut Christum verum sacerdotem esse atque in Melchisedech praefiguratum, eique cum Patre operationis unitatem, non vero solam similitudinem inesse persuadeat.

CHAPTER 11.

St. Ambrose returns to the main question, and shows that whenever Christ is said to have been made (or become), this must be understood with reference to His Incarnation, or to certain limitations. In this sense several passages of Scripture — especially of St. Paul — are expounded. The eternal Priesthood of Christ, prefigured in Melchizedek. Christ possesses not only likeness, but oneness with the Father.

76. Non ergo ad substantiam divinitatis, sed ad incarnationem saepe, nonnumquam etiam ad causam pertinet, cum dicitur factus. Nam si ad divinitatem refers, ergo et in opprobrium Deus factus est; sic enim habes: Tu autem repulisti, et ad nihilum redegisti, dispulisti Christum tuum (Psal. LXXXVIII, 39); et infra: Et factus est in opprobrium vicinis suis (Ibid., 42). Vicinis, inquit, non civibus, non domesticis, non adhaerentibus; quoniam qui adhaeret Domino, unus spiritus est (I Cor. VI, 17): qui vicinus est, non adhaeret. Et, Factus est in opprobrium; quia crux Domini Judaeis scandalum, Graecis stultitia (I Cor. I, 23). Nam sapientibus per eamdem crucem excelsior factus est coelis, excelsior angelis, et melioris testamenti factus est sponsor, ipse qui erat prioris.

76. When, therefore, Christ is said to have been made, to have become, the phrase relates, not to the substance of the Godhead, but often to the Incarnation — sometimes indeed to a particular office; for if you understand it of His Godhead, then God was made into an object of insult and derision inasmuch as it is written: But you have rejected your Christ, and brought Him to nought; you have driven Him to wander; and again: And He was made the derision of His neighbours. Of His neighbours, mark you — not of them of His household, not of them who clave to Him, for he who cleaves to the Lord is one Spirit; 1 Corinthians 6:17 he who is neighbour does not cleave to Him. Again, He was made a derision, because the Lord's Cross is to Jews a stumbling-block, and to Greeks is foolishness: 1 Corinthians 1:23 for to them that are wise He is, by that same Cross, made higher than the heavens, higher than angels, and is made the Mediator of the better covenant, even as He was Mediator of the former.

77. Vide quam non defugiam ista, ut etiam congeram: sed quomodo factus sit, considera.

77. Mark how I repeat the phrase; so far am I from seeking to avoid it. Yet take notice in what sense He is made.

78. Primum quod purificatione facta, considet in dextera magnitudinis in excelsis, tanto melior factus angelis (Hebr. I, 3, 4). Ubi purificatio, hostia: ubi hostia, corpus: ubi corpus, oblatio: ubi munus oblationis, ibi sacrificium passionis.

78. In the first place, having made purification, He sits on the right hand of Majesty on high, being made so much better than the angels. Hebrews 1:3-4 Now where purification is, there is a victim; where there is a victim, there is also a body; where a body is, there is oblation; where there is the office of oblation, there also is sacrifice made with suffering.

79. Deinde sponsor melioris testamenti (Hebr. VII, 22). Ubi testamentum, mors necesse est praecedat testatoris (Hebr. IX, 16), sicut subter est scriptum: mors autem non ad divinitatis aeternitatem, sed ad fragilitatem refertur humanam.

79. In the next place, He is the Mediator of a better covenant. But where there is testamentary disposition, the death of the testator must first come to pass, as it is written a little further on. Howbeit, the death is not the death of His eternal Godhead, but of His weak human frame.

80. Excelsior quoque coelis factus quomodo sit, ostenditur: Immaculatus, inquit, segregatus a peccatoribus, et excelsior coelis factus: qui non habet quotidie necessitatem, sicut sacerdotes, prius pro suis delictis hostiam offerre, deinde pro populi. Hoc enim fecit semel se offerendo, sicut scriptum est (Hebr. VII, 26, 27). 512 Nemo excelsior factus dicitur, nisi qui in aliquo fuerit humilior: in eo igitur excelsior factus est, sedendo ad dexteram Patris, in quo se minor angelis factus, obtulit passioni (Hebr. II, 9).

80. Furthermore, we are taught how He is made higher than the heavens. Unspotted, says the Scripture, Hebrews 7:26-27 separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; not having daily need, as the priests have need, to offer a victim first for his own sins, and then for those of the people. For this He did by sacrificing Himself once and for all. None is said to be made higher, save he who has in some respect been lower; Christ, then, is, by His sitting at the right hand of the Father, made higher in regard of that wherein, being made lower than the angels, He offered Himself to suffer.

81. Postremo ipse Apostolus ad Philippenses ait, quia in similitudine hominis factus, et specie inventus ut homo, humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Phil. II, 7, 8). Vide ubi factus sit: In similitudine, inquit, hominis, non in potestate Dei: et factus abediens usque ad mortem; ut obedientiam quidem hominis habuerit, regnum divinitatis.

81. Finally, the Apostle himself says to the Philippians, that being made in the likeness of man, and found in outward appearance as a man, He humbled Himself, being made obedient even unto death. Philippians 2:7-8 Mark that, in regard whereof He is made, He is made, the Apostle says, in the likeness of man, not in respect of Divine Sovereignty, and He was made obedient unto death, so that He displayed the obedience proper to man, and obtained the kingdom appertaining of right to Godhead.

82. Quantis igitur adhuc utemur exemplis ad incarnationem, vel ad aliquid referendum esse quod factus est! Quod autem et factum est, idem est et creatum: Dixit enim, et facta sunt: ipse mandavit, et creata sunt (Psal. CXLVIII, 5). Dominus creavit me (Prov. VIII, 22), secundum carnem dictum: creatum quoque supra ostendimus in libro primo (Ca et seq.) de incarnatione dictum videri.

82. How many passages need we cite further in evidence that His being made must be understood with reference to His Incarnation, or to some particular dispensation? Now whatsoever is made, the same is also created, for He spoke and they were made; He gave also the word, and they were created. The Lord created me. These words are spoken with regard to His Manhood; and we have also shown, in our First Book, that the word created appears to have reference to the Incarnation.

83. Ipse etiam Apostolus asserendo serviendum non esse creaturae, significavit ex Deo Filium non creatum esse, sed genitum (Rom. I, 25).

Tamen etiam alibi, ut manifestaret quomodo in Salomone sit lectum: Dominus creavit me; quid in Christo creatum esset, ostendit.

83. Again, the Apostle himself, by declaring that no worship is to be rendered to a created existence, has shown that the Son has not been created, but begotten, of God. Romans 1:25 At the same time he shows in other places what there was in Christ that was created, in order to make plain in what sense he has read in Solomon's book: The Lord created Me.

84. Itaque totius seriem capitis recenseamus; sic enim habes: Ergo quia filii participes sunt carnis et sanguinis, et ipse similiter particeps factus est eorumdem; ut per mortem destrueret hunc qui mortis habebat imperium (Hebr. II, 14). Quis ergo est qui nos participes suae voluit esse carnis et sanguinis? Utique Dei Filius. Quomodo nisi per carnem particeps factus est noster? aut per quam, nisi per corporis mortem mortis vincula dissolvit? Mortis enim mors facta est susceptio mortis in Christo. Ergo de incarnatione proposuit.

84. Let us now review a whole passage in order. Seeing, then, that the sons have parts of flesh and blood, He too likewise was made to have part in the same, to the end that by death He might overthrow him who had the power of death. Hebrews 2:14 Who, then, is He Who would have us to be partakers in His own flesh and blood? Surely the Son of God. How, save by means of the flesh, was He made partaker with us, or by what, save by bodily death, broke He the chains of death? For Christ's endurance of death was made the death of Death. 1 Corinthians 15:54-55 This text, then, speaks of the Incarnation.

85. Videamus sequentia: Nec enim statim Angelos, inquit, assumpsit, sed semen Abrahae. Unde habuit per omnia fratribus similari; ut misericors fieret et fidelis princeps, sacerdos ad Deum, ut expiaret peccata populi. In quo enim passus est ipse; et tentatus, potest et tentatos juvare (Ibid., 16, 17). Propter quod, fratres sanctissimi, vocationis coelestis participes, intuemini apostolum et principem sacerdotum confessionis nostrae Jesum fidelem esse creatori suo, sicut et Moyses in domo ejus (Hebr. III, 1, 2). Haec nempe verba sunt Apostoli.

85. Let us see what follows: For He did not indeed [straightway] put on Him the nature of angels, but that of Abraham's seed. And thus was He able to be made like to His brethren in all things throughout, that He might become a compassionate and faithful Prince, a Priest unto God, to make propitiation for the sins of the people; for in that He Himself suffered He is able also to help them that are tempted. Wherefore, brethren most holy, you who have each his share in a heavenly calling, look upon the Apostle and High Priest of our confession, Jesus, regard His faithfulness to His Creator, even as Moses was in his house. These, then, are the Apostle's words.

86. Videtis in quo creatum dicat: in quo assumpsit, inquit, semen Abrahae, corporalem utique generationem asserit. In quo autem, nisi in corpore expiavit populi peccata? In quo passus est, nisi in corpore; sicut et supra diximus: Christo passo secundum carnem? In quo sacerdos, nisi in eo quod sacerdotali assumpsit ex genere?

86. You see what it is in respect whereof the writer calls Him created: In so far as He took upon Him the seed of Abraham; plainly asserting the begetting of a body. How, indeed, but in His body did He expiate the sins of the people? In what did He suffer, save in His body — even as we said above: Christ having suffered in the flesh? In what is He a priest, save in that which He took to Himself from the priestly nation?

87. Sacerdos enim aliquid debet offerre, et secundum Legem in sancta intrare per sanguinem (Hebr. IX, 25): 513 ergo quia sanguinem taurorum, hircorumque repudiaverat Deus, hunc utique sacerdotem per suum sanguinem, sicut legisti, in sancta sanctorum coeli summa penetrantem oportebat intrare (Ibid. 12); ut aeterna nostrorum esset oblatio peccatorum. Idem ergo sacerdos, idem et hostia: et sacerdotium tamen, et sacrificium humanae conditionis officium est; nam et agnus ad immolandum ductus est, et sacerdos est secundum ordinem Melchisedech.

87. It is a priest's duty to offer something, and, according to the Law, to enter into the holy places by means of blood; seeing, then, that God had rejected the blood of bulls and goats, this High Priest was indeed bound to make passage and entry into the holy of holies in heaven through His own blood, in order that He might be the everlasting propitiation for our sins. Priest and victim, then, are one; the priesthood and sacrifice are, however, exercised under the conditions of humanity, for He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and He is a priest after the order of Melchizedek.

88. Nemo igitur ubi ordinem cernit humanae conditionis, ibi jus divinitatis asserat. Nam et illum Melchisedech per quem Abraham hostias suas obtulit (Gen. XIV, 18), non angelum utique secundum Judaica ludibria intelligit Ecclesia, sed virum sanctum, ac sacerdotem Dei, qui typum gerens Domini, et sine Patre, et sine matre, et sine generationis enarratione, et sine initio, et sine fine describitur; ut ostenderet sempiternum Filium Dei in hunc mundum esse venturum, qui et sine Patre secundum incarnationem natus est, et sine matre secundum divinam generationem, et sine enarratione generationis; quia scriptum est: Generationem autem ejus quis enarrabit (Esa. LIII, 8)?

88. Let no man, therefore, when he beholds an order of human establishment, contend that in it resides the claim of Divinity; for even that Melchizedek, by whose office Abraham offered sacrifice, the Church does certainly not hold to be an angel (as some Jewish triflers do), but a holy man and priest of God, who, prefiguring our Lord, is described as without father or mother, without history of his descent, without beginning and without end, in order to show beforehand the coming into this world of the eternal Son of God, Who likewise was incarnate and then brought forth without any father, begotten as God without mother, and was without history of descent, for it is written: His generation who shall declare? Isaiah 53:8

89. Ergo illum Melchisedech in Christi typo sacerdotem Dei accepimus: sed illum in typo, hunc in veritate: typus autem umbra est veritatis: illum in nomine unius civitatis, hunc regem in reconciliatione totius mundi; quia scriptum est: Deus erat in Christo, mundum reconcilians sibi (II Cor. V, 19); hoc est, sempiterna divinitas; aut, si Pater in Filio, sicut Filius in Patre, et substantiae utique et operationis unitas non negatur.

89. This Melchizedek, then, have we received as a priest of God made upon the model of Christ, but the one we regard as the type, the other as the original. Now a type is a shadow of the truth, and we have accepted the royalty of the one in the name of a single city, but that of the other as shown in the reconciliation of the whole world; for it is written: God was in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself; 2 Corinthians 5:19 that is to say, [in Christ was] eternal Godhead: or, if the Father is in the Son, even as the Son is in the Father, then Their unity in both nature and operation is plainly not denied.

90. Quomodo autem negare merito possunt, etiam si velint, cum scriptum sit: Pater autem qui in me manet, ipse facit opera; et: Opera quae ego facio, ipse facit (Joan. XIV, 10)? Non dixit: Et ipse facit; ne similitudinem magis, quam unitatem operis aestimares: sed dicendo: Quae ego facio, ipse facit, manifestum reliquit quod unum opus Patris et Filii credere debeamus.

90. But how, indeed, could our adversaries justly deny this, even if they would, when the Scripture says: But the Father, Who abides in Me, even He does the works; and The works that I do, He Himself works? John 14:10 Not He also does the works, but one should regard it as similarity rather than unity of work; in saying, The things that I do, He Himself does, the Apostle has left it clear that we ought to believe that the work of the Father and the work of the Son is one.

91. Denique ubi similitudinem operum, non unitatem voluit intelligi: Qui credit, inquit, in me, opera quae ego facio, et ipse faciet (Ibid., 12). Bene hic et interponendo, similitudinem nobis donavit; et tamen unitatem naturalem negavit. Unum est igitur opus Patris et Filii, etiamsi non placeat Arianis.

91. On the other hand, when He would have similarity, not unity, of works, to be understood, He said: He that believes in Me, the works which I do, shall he do also. John 14:12 Skilfully inserting here the word also, He has allowed us similarity, and yet has not ascribed natural unity. One, therefore, is the work of the Father and the work of the Son, whether the Arians please so to think or not.

CAPUT XII.

REGNUM PATRIS ATQUE Filii unum esse ac indivisum; et unam similiter utriusque divinitatem.

CHAPTER 12.

The kingdom of the Father and of the Son is one and undivided, so likewise is the Godhead of each.

92. Quaero autem quomodo regnum velint Patris et Filii esse divisum; cum Dominus dixerit, ut supra ostendimus; Omne regnum in se divisum, facile destruetur (Matth. XII, 25) ?

92. I would now ask how they suppose the kingdom of the Father and the Son to be divided, when the Lord has said, as we showed above: Every kingdom divided against itself shall be speedily overthrown. Matthew 12:25

93. Et ideo ad excludendum Arianae sacrilegium saevitatis, unum imperium Patris et Filii etiam 514 Petrus sanctus asseruit dicens: Quapropter satagite, fratres, certam vestram vocationem et electionem facere. Haec enim facientes non errabitis; sic enim abundantius ministrabitur vobis introitus in aeternum imperium Dei, et Domini nostri conservatoris Jesu Christi (II Petr. I, 10, 11).

93. Indeed, it was to debar the impious teaching of Arian enmity that Saint Peter himself asserted the dominion of the Father and the Son to be one, saying: Wherefore, my brethren, labour to make your calling and election sure, for so doing you shall not go astray, for thus your entrance into the eternal realm of God and our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ shall be granted with the greater abundance of grace. 1 Peter 2:10-11

94. Aut si quis de Christi tantum imperio dictum putat, et hoc ideo sic accipit, ut Patrem Filiumque potestate secernat; is tamen et regnum Filii fatebitur, et aeternum. Itaque non solum duo inducent regna divisa, ut obnoxia sint defectui; sed etiam cum regna comparabilia nulla sint Dei regno, quod Filii esse, etiamsi velint negare non possunt: aut contra suam sententiam redibunt, ut idem Patris et Filii regnum esse fateantur: aut, quod sacrilegium est dicere, jus Patri regni minoris ascribent: aut, quod contrarium est, quem minorem divinitate impie memorant, ejus regnum fatebuntur aequale.

94. Now, if it be thought that Christ's dominion alone is spoken of, and the place be therefore understood in such sense that the Father and the Son are regarded as divided in authority — yet it will be still acknowledged that it is the dominion of the Son, and that an eternal one, and thus not only will two kingdoms, separate, and so liable to fail, be brought in, but, furthermore, inasmuch as no kingdom is to be compared with God's kingdom, which they cannot, however greatly they may desire to, deny to be the kingdom of the Son, they must either turn back upon their opinion, and acknowledge the kingdom of the Father and the Son to be one and the same; or they must ascribe to the Father the government of a lesser kingdom — which is blasphemy; or they must acknowledge Him, Whom they wickedly declare to be inferior in respect of Godhead, to possess an equal kingdom, which is inconsistent.

95. Sed hoc non quadrat, non congruit, non cohaeret. Dicant igitur unum esse regnum, sicut nos dicimus, et probamus: probamus autem non nostris, sed coelestibus testimoniis.

95. But this [their teaching] squares not, agrees not, holds not [with its premisses]. Let them confess, then, that the kingdom is one, even as we confess and prove, not indeed on our own evidence, but upon testimony vouchsafed from heaven.

96. Primum enim etiam aliis exemplis disce regnum coelorum, regnum etiam Filii esse: ipse enim dixit: Amen, amen, dico vobis quoniam sunt aliqui dehic astantibus, qui non gustabunt mortem, donec videant Filium hominis venientem in regnum suum (Matth. XVI, 28). Dubitari ergo non potest quod sit regnum Filii Dei.

96. To begin with, learn, from further testimonies [of Scripture], how that the kingdom of heaven is also the kingdom of the Son: Verily, verily, I say unto you, that there are some among those which stand here with us, who shall not taste death, until they see the Son of Man coming into His kingdom. Matthew 16:28 There is therefore no room for doubt that the kingdom appertains to the Son of God.

97. Sed accipe ipsum esse regnum Filii, quod Patris est: Amen dico vobis quod sunt quidam circumstantium, qui non gustabunt mortem, donec videant regnum Dei veniens in virtute (Marc. VIII, 39). Eo enim usque unum regnum est, ut unum sit praemium, idem haeres, eadem merita, idem sponsor.

97. Now learn that the kingdom of the Son is the very same as the kingdom of the Father: Verily, I say unto you that there be some of those which stand around us, who shall not taste death until they see the kingdom of God coming in power. Mark 8:39 So far, indeed, is it one kingdom, that the reward is one, the inheritor is one and the same, and so also the merit, and He Who promises [the reward].

98. Quomodo non idem regnum, cum praesertim ipse de se Filius dixerit : Tunc justi fulgebunt sicut sol in regno Patris mei (Matth. XIII, 43). Quod enim Patris est per majestatis proprietatem, id etiam Filii est per ejusdem claritudinis unitatem. Ergo et Patris regnum Scriptura dixit, et Filii (Joan. XVII, 5).

98. How can it but be one kingdom, above all when the Son Himself has said of Himself: Then shall the righteous shine like the sun in the kingdom of My Father? Matthew 13:43 For that which is the Father's, by fitness to His majesty, is also the Son's, by unity in the same glory. John 17:5 The Scripture, therefore, has declared the kingdom to be the kingdom both of the Father and of the Son.

99. Accipe nunc quia ubi regnum Dei dicit, nec Patris nec Filii separat potestatem; quia et paternum et Filii regnum uno Dei nomine comprehendit, sicut habes: Cum videritis Abraham, Isaac, et Jacob, et omnes prophetas in regno Dei (Luc. XIII, 28). An negamus in regno Filii prophetas esse, cum et latroni dicenti: Memento mei, cum veneris in regnum tuum; responderit Dominus: Amen dico tibi, hodie mecum eris in paradiso (Luc. XXIII, 42, 43)? Aut quid est esse in regno Dei, nisi aeternam nescire mortem? Qui autem nesciunt aeternam mortem, vident Filium hominis venientem in regnum suum.

99. Now learn that where the kingdom of God is named, there is no putting aside of the authority either of the Father or of the Son, because both the kingdom of the Father and the kingdom of the Son is included under the single name of God, saying: When you shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God. Luke 13:28 Do we deny that the prophets are in the kingdom of the Son, when even to a dying robber who said, Remember me, when You come into Your kingdom, the Lord made answer: Verily, I say unto you, today shall you be with Me in paradise. Luke 23:42-43 What, indeed, do we understand by being in the kingdom of God, if not the having escaped eternal death? But they who have escaped eternal death see the Son of Man coming into His kingdom.

100. Quomodo ergo potest non in potestate habere quod donat dicens: Tibi dabo claves regni coelorum (Matth. XVI, 19)? Et videto distantiam. Servus 515 aperit, Dominus largitur: iste per se, ille per Christum: famulus claves accipit, Dominus ordinat potestates: aliud jus donantis, aliud dispensantis obsequium est.

100. How, then, can He not have in His power that which He gives, saying: To you will I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven? Matthew 16:19 See the gulf between [the one and the other]. The servant opens, the Lord bestows; the One through Himself, the other through Christ; the minister receives the keys, the Lord appoints powers: the one is the right of a giver, the other the duty of a steward.

101. Accipe adhuc unum regnum, unum imperium esse Patris et Filii. Habes ad Timotheum: Paulus apostolus Jesu Christi secundum imperium Dei Salvatoris nostri, et Christi Jesu spei nostrae (I Tim. I, 1). Unum igitur Patris et Filii regnum evidenter est declaratum, sicut et apostolus Paulus asseruit dicens: Hoc enim scitote quod omnis impudicus, aut immundus, aut avarus, quod est idololatria, non habet haereditatem in regno Christi et Dei (Ephes. V, 5). Ergo unum regnum, et una divinitas.

101. See now yet another proof that the kingdom, the government, of the Father and the Son is one. It is written in the Epistle to Timothy: Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the government of God, our Saviour, and Christ Jesus, our Hope. 1 Timothy 1:1 One, therefore, the kingdom of the Father and the Son is plainly declared to be, even as Paul the Apostle also asserted, saying: For know this, that no shameless person, none that is impure, or covetous (which means idolatry), has inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Ephesians 5:5 It is, therefore, one kingdom, one Godhead.

102. Unam divinitatem lex probavit, quae dicit unum Deum (Deut. VI, 4). Probavit et Apostolus, dicendo de Christo: In quo habitat omnis plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter (Coloss. II, 9). Si enim juxta Apostolum plenitudo omnis corporaliter divinitatis in Christo est, aut unius divinitatis Patrem et Filium fatebuntur: aut si Patris et Filii divinitatem cupiunt separare, cum omnem plenitudinem divinitatis corporaliter Filius habeat; quid est quod existimant amplius reservandum, cum amplius nihil sit plenitudine perfectionis? Ergo una divinitas.

102. Oneness in Godhead the Law has proved, which speaks of one God, Deuteronomy 6:4 as also the Apostle, by saying of Christ; In Whom dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. For if, as the Apostle says, all the fullness of the Godhead, bodily, is in Christ, then must the Father and the Son be confessed to be of one Godhead; or if it is desired to sunder the Godhead of the Son from the Godhead of the Father, while the Son possesses all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, what is supposed to be further reserved, seeing that nothing remains over and above the fullness of perfection? Therefore the Godhead is one.

CAPUT XIII.

FILIO MAJESTATEM SUAM esse, ac paternae aequalem: cujus socii non sint angeli, sed spectatores.

CHAPTER 13.

The majesty of the Son is His own, and equal to that of the Father, and the angels are not partakers, but beholders thereof.

103. [Alias cap. VI.] Imaginem autem unam, et similitudinem unam supra diximus (Lib. 1, ca), superest ut unius quoque majestatis Patrem Filiumque doceamus. Nec longe aberit; cum enim ipse dixerit de se Filius: Cum venerit Filius hominis in majestate sua, et omnes angeli cum eo, tunc sedebit super sedem majestatis suae (Matth. XXV, 31). Ecce Filii expressa majestas est: quid ei deest, cujus increatam majestatem negare non possunt? Est ergo Filii majestas.

103. Now, we having already laid down that the Father and the Son are of one image and likeness, it remains for us to show that They are also of one majesty. And we need not go far afield for proof, inasmuch as the Son Himself has said of Himself: When the Son of Man shall come in His majesty, and all the angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His majesty. Matthew 25:31 Behold, then, the majesty of the Son declared! What lacks He yet, Whose uncreated majesty cannot be denied? Majesty, then, belongs to the Son.

104. Accipiant nunc, ut dubitare non possint, quod Patris et Filii una majestas sit; ipse enim Dominus dixit: Nam qui me erubuerit et meos sermones, hunc Filius hominis erubescet; cum venerit in majestate sua, et Patris, et sanctorum angelorum (Luc. IX, 26). Quid est: Et sanctorum angelorum, nisi quia honorantur et servi dignitate domini sui?

104. Let our adversaries now hold it proved beyond doubt that the majesty of the Father and of the Son is one, forasmuch as the Lord Himself has said: For he who shall be ashamed of Me and of My words, of Him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when He comes in His majesty and His Father's, and the majesty of the holy angels. Luke 9:26 What is the force of the words and the majesty of the holy angels, but that the servants derive honour from the worship of their Lord?

105. Dignitatem ergo suam ad Filium et Patrem retulit; non ut angeli habeant cum Patre et Filio aequale consortium, sed ut praeeminentem gloriam Dei cernant. Neque enim suam majestatem angeli habent, sicut lectum est de Filio: Cum sederit in sede majestatis suae (Matth. XXV, 31); sed assistunt, ut Patris et Filii gloriam videant, quibus aut possunt aut merentur aspectibus.

105. The Son, therefore, ascribed His majesty to His Father as well as to Himself, not, indeed, in such sort that the angels should share in that majesty on equal terms with the Father and the Son, but that they should behold the surpassing glory of God; for truly not even angels possess a majesty of their own, after the manner in which Scripture speaks of the Son: When He shall sit upon the throne of His majesty, but they stand in the presence, that they may see the glory of the Father and the Son, in such degrees of vision as they are either worthy of or able to bear.

106. Denique ipsa se explanant verba divina, ut intelligas illam gloriam Patris et Filii cum 516 angeli non esse communem; sic enim habes: Cum autem venerit Filius hominis in majestate sua, et omnes angelis cum eo. Et ut doceret unam majestatem et unam gloriam esse Patris et suam, ipse in alio libro ait: Et Filius hominis confundet eum, cum venerit in gloria Patris sui cum angelis sanctis (Marc. VIII, 38). Illi in obsequio, hic in gloria: illi in comitatu, hic in suggestu: illi stant, hic sedet; ut verbo tamen usus utamur humani, hic judicat, hi ministrant.

106. Furthermore, the God-given words themselves declare their own meaning, that you may understand that glory of the Father and the Son not to be held in common with them by angels, for thus they run: But when the Son of Man shall come in His majesty, and all the angels with Him. Again, to show that His Father's majesty and glory and His own majesty and glory are one and the same, our Lord Himself says in another book: And the Son of Man shall confound him, when He shall come in the glory of His Father, with the holy angels. Mark 8:38 The angels come in obedience, He comes in glory: they are His retainers, He sits upon His throne: they stand, He is seated — to borrow terms of the daily dealings of human life, He is the Judge: they are the officers of the court.

107. Divinam autem non praemisit majestatem Patris, et subdidit suam et angelorum; ne de superioribus ad inferiora fecisse gradum quemdam et ordinem videretur. Sed quia Pater inferior videri non poterat, praemisit majestatem suam, et addidit Patris et angelorum; ne se medium inter Patrem et angelos nominando, aut ab angelis ad Patrem per sui quoque incrementa fecisse quemdam videretur ascensum, aut a Patre rursus ad angelos per ordinem cum sui etiam diminutione crederetur fecisse descensum. Nam nos qui unam divinitatem Patris et Filii confitemur, diversum, ut Ariani, ordinem non putamus.

107. Note that He did not place first His Father's divine majesty, and then, in the second place, His own and the angels', lest He should seem to have made out a sort of descending order, from the highest to lower natures. He placed His own majesty first, and then spoke of His Father's, and the majesty of the angels (because the Father could not appear lower than they), in order that He might not, by placing mention of Himself between that of His Father and that of the angels, seem to have made out some ascending scale, leading from angels to the Father through increase of His own dignity; nor, again, be believed to have, contrariwise, shown a descent from the Father to angels, entailing diminution of that dignity. Now we who confess one Godhead of the Father and the Son suppose no such order of distinction as the Arians do.

CAPUT XIV.

UNIUS SUBSTANTIAE CUM Patre Filium esse; hanc autem etiam secundum divinitatem sumi debere in multis Scripturarum testimoniis, tametsi in aliis nonnullis hoc verbum aut de possessionibus aut de incarnatione intelligatur.

CHAPTER 14.

The Son is of one substance with the Father.

108. De substantia autem, Imperator auguste, quid loquar unius Filium cum Patre esse substantiae; cum imaginem Paternae substantiae Filium legerimus (Sap. VII, 26); ut in nullo secundum divinitatem a Patre intelligas discrepare?

108. And now, your Majesty, with regard to the question of the substance, why need I tell you that the Son is of one substance with the Father, when we have read that the Son is the image of the Father's substance, that you may understand that there is nothing wherein, so far as Godhead is regarded, the Son differs from the Father.

109. Juxta hanc imaginem dixit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15). Ergo nec substantiam in Deo possumus denegare; neque enim insubstantivus est, qui aliis dedit habere substantiam: licet alia sit substantia Dei, alia creaturae. Nec posset insubstantivus Filius Dei esse, per quem cuncta subsistunt.

109. In virtue of this likeness Christ said: All things that the Father has are Mine. John 16:15 We cannot, then, deny substance to God, for indeed He is not unsubstantial, Who has given to others the ground of their being, though this be different in God from what it is in the creature. The Son of God, by Whose agency all things endure, could not be unsubstantial.

110. Et ideo ait: Non est occultatum os meum quod fecisti in abscondito, et substantia mea in inferioribus terrae (Psal. CXXXVIII, 15). Virtuti enim et divinitati ea, quae ante constitutionem mundi, vel imperspicabili majestate sunt gesta, abscondita esse non poterant. Legimus ergo substantiam.

110. And therefore, the Psalmist says: My bones are not hidden, which You made in secret, and my substance in the underworld. For to His power and Godhead, the things that before the foundation of the world were done, though their magnificence was [as yet] invisible, could not be hidden. Here, then, we find mention of substance.

111. Sed dices de incarnatione dictam esse substantiam. Interim nomen substantiae lectum probavi, et lectum non pro patrimoniis, ut dicitis. Jam, si placet, accipiamus secundum mysterium in inferioribus Christi fuisse substantiam. Etenim ut defunctorum animas in sui corporis anima liberaret, vincula mortis solveret, peccata donaret, operatus est in inferno. 517

111. But it may be objected that the mention of His substance is the consequence of His Incarnation. I have shown that the word substance is used more than once, and that not in the sense of inherited possessions, as you would construe it. Now, if it please you, let us grant that, in accordance with the mystic prophecy, the substance of Christ was present in the underworld — for truly He did exert His power in the lower world to set free, in the soul which animated His own body, the souls of the dead, to loose the bands of death, to remit sins. 1 Peter 3:19

112. Et tamen quid obstat quominus illam divinam intelligas esse substantiam, cum Deus ita ubique sit, ut ei dictum sit: Si ascendero in coelum, tu illic es: si descendero ad infernum, ades (Ibid., 8).

112. And, indeed, what hinders you from understanding, by that substance, His divine substance, seeing that God is everywhere, so that it has been said to Him: If I go up into heaven, You are there; if I go down into hell, You are present.

113. Denique ad substantiam divinam derivandum esse intellectum sequentibus declaravit dicens: Inoperatum meum viderunt oculi tui (Ibid., 16); eo quod non operis factura sit Filius, sed Verbum genitum potestatis aeternae: ἀκατέργαστον enim dixit, hoc est, inoperatum atque increatum Verbum sine alicujus creaturae testimonio ex Patre natum: et tamen abundamus aliis substantiae testimoniis. Sit ista hoc loco substantia corporalis, dummodo non opus Dei Filium, sed inoperatam ejus divinitatem et ipse fatearis.

113. Furthermore, the Psalmist has in the words following made it plain that we must understand the divine substance to be mentioned when he says: Your eyes did see My being, [as] not the effect of working; inasmuch as the Son is not made, nor one of God's works, but the begotten Word of eternal power. He called Him ἀχατέργαστον, meaning that the Word neither made nor created, is begotten of the Father without the witnessing presence of any created being. Howbeit, we have abundance of testimony besides this. Let us grant that the substance here spoken of is the bodily substance, provided you also yourself say not that the Son of God is something effected by working, but confess His uncreated Godhead.

114. Scio autem aliquos dicere inoperatum esse etiam incarnationis mysterium, quod non sit virilis copulae usus operatus; quia partus est Virginis. Si ergo plerique hoc loco nec Mariae partus opus esse dixerunt, tu, Ariane, opus putas esse Dei Verbum?

114. Now I know that some assert that the mystic incarnate form was uncreated, forasmuch as nothing was done therein through intercourse with a man, because our Lord was the offspring of a virgin. If, then, many have, on the strength of this passage, asserted that neither that which was brought forth of Mary was produced by creative operation, dare you, disciple of Arius, think that the Word of God is something so produced?

115. Aut hic tantum substantiam legimus? Nonne et alibi dixit: Portae civitatum effractae sunt, montes ceciderunt, et revelata est substantia (Nahum. II, 6)? Numquid hic quoque creatura signatur? Solent enim aliqui dicere pecuniariam esse substantiam. Ergo si ad hunc sensum refers, ideo occiderunt montes, ut pecuniarium patrimonium cerneretur.

115. But is this the only place where we read of substance? Hath it not also been said in another passage: The gates of the cities are broken down, the mountains are fallen, and His substance is revealed? What, does the word mean something created here also? Some, I know, are accustomed to say that the substance is substance in money. Then, if you give this meaning to the word, the mountains fell, in order that some one’s possessions of money might be seen.

116. Sed meminerimus qui montes ceciderunt, illi utique de quibus dictum est: Si habueritis fidem sicut granum sinapis, dicetis huic monti: Tollere, et jactare in mare (Matth. XVII, 19). Montes ergo sunt altitudines se extollentes.

116. But let us remember what mountains fell, those, namely, of which it has been said: If you shall have faith as a grain of mustard seed you shall say to this mountain: Be removed, and be cast into the sea! Matthew 17:19 By mountains, then, are meant high things that exalt themselves. 2 Corinthians 10:5

117. Denique in Graeco, regna ceciderunt, habetur. Quae regna, nisi satanae, de quo dixit Dominus: Quomodo stabit regnum ipsius (Matth. XII, 26)? Ipsos ergo legimus montes, quae regna sunt diaboli. Ideoque istis cadentibus regnis de corde fidelium, revelatum est paternae Dei Filium Christum esse substantiae. Qui sunt etiam illi ipsi montes aerei, de quorum medio quatuor currus procedunt (Zach. VI, 1)?

117. Moreover, in the Greek, the rendering is this: The palaces are fallen. What palaces, save the palace of Satan, of whom the Lord said: How shall His kingdom stand? We are reading, therefore, of the things which are the devil's palaces as being very mountains, and therefore in the fall of those palaces from the hearts of the faithful, the truth stands revealed, that Christ, the Son of God, is of the Father's eternal substance. What, again, are those mountains of bronze, from the midst of which four chariots come forth? Zechariah 6:1

118. Advertimus altitudinem illam extollentem se adversus scientiam Dei verbo Domini corruisse; cum diceret Dei Filius: Obmulesce, et exi, immunde spiritus (Marc. I, 25). De quo et propheta dixit: Ecce ego ad te, mons corrupte (Jerem. LI, 25).

118. We behold that height, lifting up itself against the knowledge of God, cast down by the word of the Lord, when the Son of God said: Hold your peace, and come forth, you foul spirit. Mark 1:25 Concerning whom the prophet also said: Behold, I have come to you, you mount of corruption!

119. Isti ergo ceciderunt montes, et revelatum est quod esset in Christo divina substantia, dicentibus iis, qui viderant: Vere Filius Dei est (Luc. IV, 41); non enim humana, sed divina potestate daemoniis imperabat. Jeremias quoque dicit: Super montes accipite luctum, et super semitas desertas planctum, quia defecerunt; eo quod non sint homines, non acceperunt vocem substantiae: a volatilibus usque ad jumenta expaverunt et defecerunt (Jerem. IX, 10).

119. Those mountains, then, are fallen, and it is revealed that in Christ was the substance of God, in the words of those who had seen Him: Truly You are the Son of God, Luke 4:41 for it was in virtue of divine, not human power, that He commanded devils. Jeremiah also says: Make mourning upon the mountains, and beat your breasts upon the desert tracks, for they have failed; forasmuch as there are no men, they have not heard the word of substance: from flying fowl to beasts of burden, they trembled, they have failed.

120. Nec praeteriit etiam alibi, cum fragilitates exponeret conditionis humanae, ut susceptam a se 518 infirmitatem carnis, et affectum nostrae mentis ostenderet, dixisse Dominum per Prophetam: Memento, Domine, quae est substantia mea (Psalm. LXXXVIII, 48); quia in natura fragilitatis humanae Dei Filius loquebatur.

120. Nor has it escaped us, that in another place also, setting forth the frailties of man's estate, in order to show that He had taken upon Himself the infirmity of the flesh, and the affections of our minds, the Lord said, by the mouth of His prophet: Remember, O Lord, what My substance is, because it was the Son of God speaking in the nature of human frailty.

121. De quo supra, ut incarnationis mysteria revelaret, ait: Tu vero repulisti, Domine, et pro nihilo habuisti: dispulisti Christum tuum, evertisti testamentum servi tui, profanasti in terra sanctitatem ejus (Ibid. 39, 40). In quo utique servum dixit, nisi in carne, quia non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo, sed semetipsum exinanivit formam servi accipiens, in similitudinem hominum factus, et specie inventus ut homo (Philip. II, 6, 7)? Mea ergo susceptione servus, sua Dominus potestate.

121. Of Him the Scripture says, in the passage cited, in order to discover the mysteries of the Incarnation: But You have rejected, O Lord, and counted for nought — You have cast out Your Christ. You have overthrown the covenant made with Your Servant, and trampled His holiness in the earth. What was it, in regard whereof the Scripture called Him Servant, but His flesh? — seeing that He did not hold equality with God as a prey, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made into the likeness of men, and found in fashion as a man. Philippians 2:6-7 So, then, in that He took upon Himself My nature, He was a servant, but by virtue of His own power He is the Lord.

122. Quid illud quod habes? Quoniam quis stetit in substantia Domini (Jerem. XXIII, 18); et alibi: Et si stetissent in substantia mea, et audissent verba mea, et si docuissent plebem meam; avertissem eos a nequitiis et adinventionibus suis (Ibid., 22).

122. Furthermore, what means it that you read, Who has stood in the truth (substantia) of the Lord? and again: Now if they had stood in My truth, and had given ear to My words, and had taught My people, I would have turned them from their follies and transgressions?

CAPUT XV.

CUM FILIUM PATRI ἑτεροούσιον Ariani dicant, eos in Deo substantiam aperte agnoscere: nec ob aliud hanc vocem defugere, nisi quod illum verum Dei Filium fateri nolint, ut significavit Eusebius Nicomediensis. Recte igitur constitutum a Nicaenis PP. verbum ὁμοούσιον, utpote haeresi oppositum et in Scriptura firmatum; proindeque neglectis, quae isti fingunt de Sabellianis, retinendum.

CHAPTER 15.

The Arians, inasmuch as they assert the Son to be of another substance, plainly acknowledge substance in God. The only reason why they avoid the use of this term is that they will not, as Eusebius of Nicomedia has made it evident, confess Christ to be the true Son of God.

123. Quomodo negant Dei esse substantiam? Quomodo verbum substantiae, quod creberrimum in Scripturis est, putant esse vitandum; cum ipsi ex alia substantia, hoc est, ἑτεροούσιον dicendo Filium, substantiam tamen in Deo esse non abnuant?

123. How can the Arians deny the substance of God? How can they suppose that the word substance which is found in many places of Scripture ought to be debarred from use, when they themselves do yet, by saying that the Son is ἑτεροούσιος, that is, of another substance, admit substance in God?

124. Non igitur verbum, sed vim verbi fugiunt; quia nolunt verum esse Dei Filium. Nam licet humano verbo non possit divinae generationis series comprehendi; tamen judicarunt Patres fidem suam tali proprie contra ἑτεροούσιον sermone signandam, auctoritatem secuti prophetae, qui ait: Quis stetit in substantia Domini, et vidit Verbum ejus? Secundum impietatem igitur suam positum substantiae verbum recipiunt Ariani, secundum pietatem autem fidelium comprobatum repudiant et refutant.

124. It is not the term itself, then, but its force and consequences, that they shun, because they will not confess the Son of God to be true [God]. For though the process of the divine generation cannot be comprehended in human language, still the Fathers judged that their faith might be fitly distinguished by the use of such a term, as against that of ἑτεροούσιος, following the authority of the prophet, who says: Who has stood in the truth (substantia) of the Lord, and seen His Word? Jeremiah 23:18 Arians, therefore, admit the term substance when it is used so as to square with their blasphemy; contrariwise, when it is adopted in accordance with the pious devotion of the faithful, they reject and dispute against it.

125. Nam quid est aliud, cur ὁμοούσιον Patri nolint Filium dici, nisi quia nolunt verum Dei Filium confiteri? sicut auctor ipsorum Eusebius Nicomediensis epistola sua prodidit scribens: Si verum, inquit, Dei Filium et increatum dicimus, ὁμοούσιον cum Patre incipimus confiteri. Haec cum lecta esset epistola in concilio Nicaeno, hoc verbum in tractatu Fidei posuerunt Patres, quia id viderunt adversariis esse formidini; ut tamquam evaginato ab ipsis gladio ipsorum nefandae caput haereseos amputarent. 519

125. What other reason can there be for their unwillingness to have the Son spoken of as ὁ μοούσιος, of the same substance, with the Father, but that they are unwilling to confess Him the true Son of God? This is betrayed in the letter of Eusebius of Nicomedia. If, writes he, we say that the Son is true God and uncreate, then we are in the way to confess Him to be of one substance (ὁμοούσιος) with the Father. When this letter had been read before the Council assembled at Nicæa, the Fathers put this word in their exposition of the Faith, because they saw that it daunted their adversaries; in order that they might take the sword, which their opponents had drawn, to smite off the head of those opponents' own blasphemous heresy. 1 Samuel 17:51

126. Frustra autem verbum istud propter Sabellianos declinare sedicunt, et in eo suam imperitiam produnt; ὁμοούσιον enim aliud alii, non ipsum est sibi. Recte ergo ὁμοούσιον Patri Filium dicimus, quia verbo eo et personarum distinctio et naturae unitas significatur.

126. Vain, however, is their plea, that they avoid the use of the term, because of the Sabellians; whereby they betray their own ignorance, for a being is of the same substance (ὁ μοούσιον) with another, not with itself. Rightly, then, do we call the Son ὁ μοούσιος (of the same substance), with the Father, forasmuch as that term expresses both the distinction of Persons and the unity of nature.

127. An negare possunt οὐσίαν lectam, cum et panem ἐπιούσιον Dominus dixerit (Matth. VI); et Moyses scripserit: ὑμεῖς ἔσεσθέ μοι λαὸς περιούσιος (Exod. XIX)? Aut quid est οὐσία, vel unde dicta, nisi οὖσα ἀεί, quod semper maneat? Qui enim est, et est semper, Deus est; et ideo manens semper ουσία dicitur divina substantia. Propterea ἐπιούσιος panis, quod ex Verbi substantia substantiam virtutis manentis cordi et animae subministret; scriptum est enim: Et panis confirmat cor hominis (Psal. CIII, 15).

127. Can they deny that the term οὐσία is met with in Scripture, when the Lord has spoken of bread, that is, ἐ πιούσιος, and Moses has written ὑμεῖς ἔσεσθέ μοι λαὸς περιούσιος ? Exodus 19:6 What does οὐσία mean, whence comes the name, but from οὖσα ἀεί, that which endures for ever? For He

Who is, and is for ever, is God; and therefore the Divine Substance, abiding everlastingly, is called οὐσία . Bread is ἐπιούσιος, because, taking the substance of abiding power from the substance of the Word, it supplies this to heart and soul, for it is written: And bread strengthens man's heart.

128. Servemus igitur praecepta majorum, nec haereditaria signacula ausi rudis temeritate violemus. Librum signatum illum propheti cum non Seniores, non Potestates, non Angeli, non Archangeli aperire ausi sunt: soli Christo explanandi ejus praerogativa est servata. Librum sacerdotalem quis nostrum resignare audeat, signatum a confessoribus, et multorum jam martyrio consecratum? Quem qui resignare coacti sunt, postea tamen damnata fraude, signarunt: qui violare non ausi sunt, confessores et martyres exstiterunt. Quomodo fidem eorum possumus denegare, quorum victoriam praedicamus?

128. Let us, then, keep the precepts of our forefathers, nor with rude and reckless daring profane the symbols bequeathed to us. That sealed book of prophecy, whereof we have heard, neither elders, nor powers, nor angels, nor archangels, ventured to open; for Christ alone is reserved the peculiar right of opening it. Revelation 5:5 Who among us dare unseal the book of the priesthood, sealed by confessors, and long hallowed by the testimony of many? They who have been constrained to unseal, nevertheless have since, respecting the deceit put upon them, sealed again; they who dared not lay sacrilegious hands upon it, have stood forth as martyrs and confessors. How can we deny the Faith held by those whose victory we proclaim?

CAPUT XVI.

UT CATHOLICI CONTRA fraudes Arianorum praemuniantur, subdolas quasdam eorum confessiones exponit: nec sufficere quod Filium nonnumquam Deum vocitent, nisi eum admittant Patri aequalem, collectis argumentis probat.

CHAPTER 16.

In order to forearm the orthodox against the stratagems of the Arians, St. Ambrose discloses some of the deceitful confessions used by the latter, and shows by various arguments, that though they sometimes call the Son God, it is not enough, unless they also admit His equality with the Father.

129. Nemo metuat, nemo formidet: plus confert fidelibus, qui minatur. Venenatae sunt blanditiae perfidorum, tunc cavendae cum id quod negant, praedicare se simulant. Sic decepti sunt et ante, qui facile crediderunt; ut ibi perfidiae laqueos inciderent, ubi fidem esse credebant.

129. Let none fear, let none tremble; he who threatens gives the advantage to the faithful. The soothing balms of deceitful men are poisoned — then must we be on our guard against them, when they pretend to preach that they do deny. Thus were those aforetime, who lightly trusted to them, deceived, so that they fell into the snares of treachery, when they thought all was good faith.

130. Qui dicit, inquiunt, Christum creaturam secundum caeteras creaturas, anathema sit. Audierunt simplices, et crediderunt: Innocens enim, sicut scriptum est, credit omni verbo (Prov. XIV, 15). Audierunt ergo, et crediderunt, primo decepti sono; ac velut aves intenti ad escam fidei, extentum sibi laqueum non caverunt. Ita dum fidem sequuntur, hamum nefandae fraudis attrectaverunt. Et ideo: Estote, inquit, astuti sicut serpentes, et simplices sicut columbae (Matth., X, 16); praemittitur astutia, ut sit tuta simplicitas. 520

130. Let him be accursed, say they, who says that Christ is a creature, after the manner of the rest of created beings. Plain folks have heard this, and put faith in it, for, as it is written, the simple man believes every word. Proverbs 14:15 Thus have they heard and believed, being taken in by the first sound thereof, and, like birds, eager for the bait of faith, have not noted the net spread for them, and so, pursuing after faith, have caught the hook of ungodly deceit. Wherefore be wise as serpents, says the Lord, and harmless as doves. Matthew 10:16 Wisdom is put foremost, in order that harmlessness may be unharmed.

131. Sunt enim serpentes Evangelici, qui exuunt veterem usum, ut induant novos mores, sicut scriptum est: Exspoliantes veterem hominem cum actibus ejus, et induentes novum secundum imaginem ejus, qui creavit eum (Coloss. III, 9, 10). Discamus ergo depositis vetusti hominis exuviis, Evangelicorum serpentium vias; ut more serpentium servare caput, fraudem cavere noscamus.

131. For those are serpents, such as the Gospel intends, who put off old habits, in order to put on new manners: Putting off the old man, together with his acts, and putting on the new man, made in the image of Him Who created him. Colossians 3:9-10 Let us learn then, the ways of those whom the Gospel calls the serpents, throwing off the slough of the old man, that so, like serpents, we may know how to preserve our life and beware of fraud.

132. Satis fuerat dicere: Qui dicit creaturam Christum, anathema sit. Cur bono confessionis, Ariane, venena permisces, ut totum corpus contamines? Addendo enim: Secundum caeteras creaturas, non creaturam Christum negas, sed creaturam dicis esse dissimilem; creaturam enim dicis, etsi praestantiorem caeteris asseras creaturis. Denique Arius hujus impietatis magister Dei Filium creaturam dixit esse perfectam, sed non sicut caeteras creaturas. Videtis igitur haereditario patris vestri vos usos esse sermone? Sat est creaturam negare, quid opus fuit addere: Sed non sicut caeteras creaturas? Recide quod putruit, ne serpat contagio: venenum habet; mortem affert.

132. It would have been sufficient to say, Accursed be he who says that Christ is a created being. Why, then, Arian, do you mingle poison with the good that is in your confession, and so defile the whole body of it? For by addition of after the manner of the rest of created beings, you deny not that Christ is a being created, but that He is a created being like [all] others — for created being you do entitle Him, albeit you assign to Him dignity transcending the rest of creation. Furthermore, Arius, the first teacher of this ungodly doctrine, said that the Son of God was a perfect created being, and not as the rest of created beings. See you, then, how that you have adopted language bequeathed you from your father. To deny that Christ is a being created is enough: why add but not as the rest of beings created? Cut away the gangrened part, lest the contagion spread — it is poisonous, deadly.

133. Deinde dicis interdum Deum Christum: sed ita dic Deum verum, ut plenitudinem ei paternae divinitatis assignes; sunt enim qui dicuntur dii sive in coelo, sive in terra. Non ergo perfunctorie nuncupandus Deus, sed ita ut eamdem divinitatem praedices in Filio, quam Pater habet, sicut scriptum est, Sicut enim Pater vitam habet in semetipso, sic dedit et Filio vitam habere in semetipso (Joan. V, 26). Dedit utique quasi Filio per generationem, non quasi inopi per gratiam.

133. Again, you say sometimes that Christ is God. Nay, but so call Him true God, as meaning, that you acknowledge Him to possess the fullness of the Father's Godhead — for there are gods, so called, alike in heaven or upon earth. The name God, then, is not to be used as a mere manner of address and mention, but with the understanding that you affirm, of the Son, that same Godhead which the Father has, as it is written: For as the Father has life in Himself, so has He given to the Son also to have life in Himself; John 5:26 that is to say, He has given it to Him, as to His Son, through begetting Him — not by grace, as to one indigent.

134. Et potestatem dedit ei judicium facere, quia Filius hominis est. Vide quid addidit, ne tu calumnieris ex verbo. Filium hominis legis, et accipientem arguis? Nega ergo Deum, si non omnia Filio quae Dei sunt, deferuntur; cum enim dixerit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15); cur tu non omnia quae divinae naturae sunt, etiam in Filio confiteris? Nam qui dicit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt; quid excipit quod non habet?

134. And He has given Him power to execute judgment, because He is the Son of Man. John 5:27 Note well this addition, that you may not take occasion, upon a word, to preach falsehood. You read that He is the Son of Man; do you therefore deny that He accepts [the power given]? Deny God, then, if all things proper to God are not given to the Son, for whereas He has said, All things that the Father has are Mine, John 16:15 why not acknowledge that all the properties and attributes of Divinity are in the Son [as they are in the Father]? For He who says, All things that the Father has are Mine, what does He except as having not?

135. Quid est quod ἐμφατικῶς, quam fideli magis sermone commemores, quod mortuos suscitaverit, maria pedes transmiserit, infirmitates hominum curaverit? Haec enim etiam servulis suis praestitit. Plus ista miror in hominibus, quod tantam eis dederit potestatem. Aliquid de Christo audire desidero, quod speciale sit Christi, quod cum iis quae creata sunt, non possit esse commune; quia genitus, quia unicus est Dei Filius, quia Deus verus ex Deo vero, quia ad dexteram Patris sedet.

135. Why is it that you recount with insistence and in such sincere language, Christ's raising the dead to life, walking upon the waters, healing the sicknesses of men? These powers, indeed, He has given to His bondmen to display as well as Himself. They do the more arouse my wonder when seen present in men, forasmuch as God has given them power so great. I would hear somewhat concerning Christ that is His distinctly and peculiarly, and cannot be held in common with Him by created beings, now that He is begotten, the only Son of God, very God of very God, sitting at the Father's right hand.

136. Ubicumque lego consessum Patris et Filii, 521 semper ad dexteram Filius sedet. Numquid melior Filius Patre? Non hoc dicimus: sed quem charitas Dei honorat, humana iniquitas derogat. Scivit Pater serendas esse de Filio quaestiones, praebuit nobis quod sequeremur, pietatis exemplum, ne Filio derogemus.

136. Wheresoever I read of the Father and Son sitting side by side, I find the Son always upon the right hand. Is that because the Son is above the Father? Nay, we say not so; but He Whom God's love honours is dishonoured by man's ungodliness. The Father knew that doubts as concerning the Son must needs be sown, and He has given us an example of reverence for us to follow after, lest we dishonour the Son.

CAPUT XVII.

OBJECTIONI QUAE HIC nasci poterat, occurrens, cur Dominus Stephano stare visus sit, explicat: et ex hujus ad Filium precibus ejusdem ac Patris aequalitate confirmata, librum terminat.

CHAPTER 17.

An objection based on St. Stephen's vision of the Lord standing is disposed of, and from the prayers of the same saint, addressed to the Son of God, the equality of the Son with the Father is shown.

137. Uno tantum loco stantem ad dexteram Dei Jesum Stephanus vidisse se dixit (Act. VII, 55). Et hoc disce, ne quam hinc moveas quaestionem. Cur enim ubique ad dexteram sedere ostenditur, uno legitur in loco stare? Sedet quasi judex vivorum et mortuorum: stat quasi advocatus suorum. Stabat ergo quasi sacerdos, quando Patri hostiam boni martyris offerebat: stabat quasi bono luctatori bravium tanti praesul certaminis redditurus.

137. There is just one place, in which Stephen has said that he saw the Lord Jesus standing at the right hand of God. Acts 7:55 Learn now the import of these words, that you may not use them to raise a question upon. Why (you would ask) do we read every where else of the Son as sitting at the right hand of God, but in one place of His standing? He sits as Judge of quick and dead; He stands as His people's Advocate. He stood, then, as a Priest, while He was offering to His Father the sacrifice of a good martyr; He stood, as the Umpire, to bestow, as it were, upon a good wrestler the prize of so mighty a contest.

138. Accipe et tu spiritum Dei, ut ista distinguas, sicut accepit et Stephanus; et dicas sicut dixit et martyr: Ecce video coelos apertos, et Filium hominis stantem ad dexteram Dei. Qui coelos apertos habet, Jesum ad dexteram Dei cernit: qui clausos oculos habet mentis, Jesum ad dexteram Dei non videt. Confiteamur ergo Jesum ad dexteram, ut coelum et nobis aperiatur. Claudunt sibi coelum, qui aliter confitentur. 522

138. Receive also the Spirit of God, that you may discern those things, even as Stephen received the Spirit; and you may say, as the martyr said: Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God. Acts 7:55 He who has the heavens opened to him, sees Jesus at the right hand of God: he whose soul's eye is closed, sees not Jesus at the right hand of God. Let us, then, confess Jesus at God's right hand, that to us also the heavens may be opened. They who confess otherwise close the gates of heaven against themselves.

139. Quod si qui objiciunt quod Filius stabat, ostendant hoc loco quod Pater sedebat. Nam licet Filium hominis stare dixerit; tamen hoc loco nec Patrem sedere commemoravit.

139. But if any urge in objection that the Son was standing, let them show upon this passage that the Father was seated, for though Stephen said that the Son of Man was standing, still he did not further say here that the Father was sitting.

140. Ut autem evidentius cognosceretur nulla esse stantis injuria, sed potestas, Filium Stephanus obsecrabat, ut se amplius commendaret Patri, dicens: Domine Jesu, recipe spiritum meum (Act. VII, 58). Et ut eamdem Patris et Filii potestatem esse ostenderet, repetivit dicens: Domine, ne statuas illis hoc peccatum (Ibid., 59). Hoc Dominus in passione propria quasi Filius hominis Patri dicit: hoc et Stephanus Filium Dei in suo martyrio deprecatur. Cum eadem gratia a Patre Filioque deposcitur, eadem potentia declaratur.

140. Howbeit, to make it more abundantly clear and known that the standing implied no dishonour, but rather sovereignty, Stephen prayed to the Son, being desirous to commend himself the more to the Father, saying: Lord Jesu, receive my spirit. Acts 7:58 Again, to show that the sovereignty of the Father and of the Son is one and the same, he prayed again, saying, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. Acts 7:51 These are the words that the Lord, in His own Passion, speaks to the Father, as the Son of Man — these the words of Stephen's prayer, in his own martyrdom to the Son of God. When the same grace is sought of both the Father and the Son, the same power is affirmed of each.

141. Aut si volunt Stephanum Patri dixisse, videant quid propria testificatione significent. Licet nos ista non moveant, advertant tamen qui totum in littera constituunt et in ordine, quod Filius prius sit rogatus. Nos autem et secundum eorum interpretationem ostendimus unitatem Paternae majestatis et Filii; nam cum Pater rogatur et Filius, aequalitas precationis operationis indicat unitatem. Si autem illis non placet Filio dictum, Domine, videmus quod etiam Dominum eum negare conantur.

141. Otherwise, if our opponents will have it that Stephen addressed himself to the Father, let them consider what, on their own showing, they affirm. We indeed are unmoved by their arguments; howbeit, let them, to whom the letter and sequence is all important, take notice that the first petition is addressed to the Son. Now we, even on their understanding of the passage, prove from it the unity of the Father's and the Son's majesty; for when the Son is addressed in prayer as well as the Father, the equality which the prayer assigns points to unity in action. But if they will not allow that the Son was addressed with the title Lord, we see that they do indeed seek to deny that He is Lord.

142. Sed jam quia martyris tanti corona processit studia certaminis relaxemus, ferias hodierni sermonis habeamus. Prosequamur sanctum martyrem laudibus, sicut post magna decebat certamina, vulneribus quidem adversarii cruentatum, sed Christi praemiis coronatum.

142. Seeing, however, that so great a martyr's crown has been brought forth, let us abate the eagerness of disputation, and bring today's discourse to a close. Let us sing the praises of the holy martyr, as is fitting always after a mighty conflict — the martyr bleeding indeed from the enemy's blows, but rewarded with the crown bestowed by Christ.

LIBER QUARTUS.

BOOK IV.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

HAUD MIRUM ESSE quod homines in Christi cognitione erraverint, sed quod Scripturae non obtemperaverint: illum quoque nec ab angelis nisi revelatione fuisse cognitum, sicut nec ab ipso Praecursore. Ejusdem Christi in coelum ascendentis triumphus qualis, et raptu prophetarum quorumdam quanto praestantior? Tum descripto angelorum hac de re colloquio, contra Arianos Filius omnipotens esse ostenditur.

CHAPTER 1.

The marvel is, not that men have failed to know Christ, but that they have not listened to the words of the Scriptures. Christ, indeed, was not known, even of angels, save by revelation, nor again, by His forerunner. Follows a description of Christ's triumphal ascent into heaven, and the excellence of its glory over the assumption of certain prophets. Lastly, from exposition of the conversation with angels upon this occasion, the omnipotence of the Son is proved, as against the Arians.

1. Consideranti mihi, Imperator auguste, qua ratione sic erraverit genus hominum, ut de Dei Filio plerique, vae mihi, diversa sequerentur; nequaquam satis mirum videtur quia erravit humana scientia de supernis, sed quod Scripturis non detulit obedientiam.

1. On consideration, your Majesty, of the reason wherefore men have so far gone astray, or that many — alas! — should follow diverse ways of belief concerning the Son of God, the marvel seems to be, not at all that human knowledge has been baffled in dealing with superhuman things, but that it has not submitted to the authority of the Scriptures.

2. Quid enim mirum, si mysterium Dei Patris et Domini Jesu Christi, in quo sunt omnes thesauri sapientiae et scientiae absconditi (Coloss., II, 3), per sapientiam mundi non potuerunt homines comprehendere, quod nec angeli cognoscere, nisi ex revelatione, potuerunt? 522

2. What reason, indeed, is there to wonder, if by their worldly wisdom men failed to comprehend the mystery of God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, in Whom all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hidden, Colossians 2:3 that mystery of which not even angels have been able to take knowledge, save by revelation?

3. Quis enim potuit opinione magis quam fide sequi Dominum Jesum, nunc de coeli altissimis inferna penetrantem, nunc ab inferis ad coelestia resurgentem: subito exinanitum, ut habitaret in nobis; nec umquam imminutum, cum semper Filius in Patre, et in Filio Pater esset?

3. For who could by force of imagination, and not by faith, follow the Lord Jesus, now descending from the highest heaven to the shades below, now rising again from Hades to the heavenly places; in a moment self-emptied, that He might dwell among us, and yet never made less than He was, the Son being ever in the Father and the Father in the Son?

4. Dubitavit in eo ipse Praenuntius, licet per Synagogae typum, dubitavit ipse ante Domini faciem destinatus. Denique missis discipulis, interrogat: Tu es qui venturus es, an alium exspectamus (Matth. XI, 3)?

4. Even Christ’s forerunner, though only in so far as representing the synagogue, doubted concerning Him, even he who was appointed to go before the face of the Lord, and at last sending messengers, enquired: Are You He that should come, or do we look for another? Matthew 11:3

5. Obstupuerunt et angeli coeleste mysterium. Unde cum resurgeret Dominus, atque illum quem dudum secundum carnem angustus sepulcri locus texerat, resurgentem ab inferis coeli alta sustinere non possent, haeserunt etiam coelestia opinionis incerto.

5. Angels, too, stood spellbound in wonder at the heavenly mystery. And so, when the Lord rose again, and the heights of heaven could not bear the glory of His rising from the dead, Who of late, so far as regarded His flesh, had been confined in the narrow bounds of a sepulchre, even the heavenly hosts doubted and were amazed.

6. Veniebat enim novis victor redimitus exuviis, Dominus in templo sancto suo; praeibant angeli et archangeli, mirantes spolium ex morte quaesitum: et quamvis scirent nihil Deo accedere ex carne potuisse, quia infra Deum 523 omnia sunt, tamen tropaea crucis, cujus principium super humeros ejus, et triumphatoris aeterni manubias intuentes, quasi eum quem emiserant coeli portae, capere non possent; licet numquam ejus capiant majestatem, majorem viam quaerebant aliquam revertenti: adeo nihil exinanitus amiserat!

6. For a Conqueror came, adorned with wondrous spoils, the Lord was in His holy Temple, before Him went angels and archangels, marvelling at the prey wrested from death, and though they knew that nothing can be added to God from the flesh, because all things are lower than God, nevertheless, beholding the trophy of the Cross, whereof the government was upon His shoulder, and the spoils borne by the everlasting Conqueror, they, as if the gates could not afford passage for Him Who had gone forth from them, though indeed they can never o'erspan His greatness — they sought some broader and more lofty passage for Him on His return — so entirely had He remained undiminished by His self-emptying.

7. Debuit tamen novo victori novum iter parari; semper enim victor tamquam major et praecelsior est: sed quia aeternae sunt justitiae portae, eaedemque novi et veteris Testamenti, quibus coelum aperitur, non mutantur utique, sed elevantur; quia non unus homo, sed totus in omnium redemptore mundus intrabat.

7. However, it was meet that a new way should be prepared before the face of the new Conqueror — for a Conqueror is always, as it were, taller and greater in person than others; but, forasmuch as the Gates of Righteousness, which are the Gates of the Old and the New Testament, wherewith heaven is opened, are eternal, they are not indeed changed, but raised, for it was not merely one man but the whole world that entered, in the person of the All-Redeemer.

8. Translatus erat Enoch (Gen. V, 11), raptus Elias (IV Reg. II, 12): sed non est servus supra Dominum. Nullus enim ascendit in coelum, nisi qui descendit de coelo (Joan. III, 13). Nam et Moysen, licet corpus ejus non apparuerit in terris, nusquam tamen in gloria coelesti legimus, nisi posteaquam Dominus resurrectionis suae pignore vincula solvit inferni, et piorum animas elevavit. Translatas ergo Enoch, raptus Elias; ambo famuli, ambo cum corpore: sed non post resurrectionem, non cum manubiis mortis, et triumpho crucis viderant illos angeli.

8. Enoch had been translated, Elias caught up, but the servant is not above his Master. For No man has ascended into heaven, but He Who came down from heaven; John 3:13 and even of Moses, though his corpse was never seen on earth, we do nowhere read as of one abiding in celestial glory, unless it was after that the Lord, by the earnest of His own Resurrection, burst the bonds of hell and exalted the souls of the godly. Enoch, then, was translated, and Elias caught up; both as servants, both in the body, but not after resurrection from the dead, nor with the spoils of death and the triumphal train of the Cross, had they been seen of angels.

9. Et ideo Dominum omnium primum ac solum de morte triumphantem venire cernentes, tolli portas principibus imperabant, cum admiratione dicentes: Tollite portas, principes, vestri; et elevamini, portae aeternales: et introibit rex gloriae (Psal. XXIII, 7).

9. And therefore [the angels] descrying the approach of the Lord of all, first and only Vanquisher of Death, bade their princes that the gates should be lifted up, saying in adoration, Lift up the gates, such as are princes among you, and be lifted up, O everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in.

10. Erant tamen adhuc et in coelestibus qui stuperent, qui admirarentur novam pompam, novam gloriam; et ideo requirebant: Quis est iste rex gloriae (Ibid., 8)? Sed quia et angeli processus habent scientiae, et capacitatem profectus, habent utique discretionem virtutis, atque prudentiae: solus enim sine processu Deus; quia in omni perfectione semper aeternus est.

10. Yet there were still, even among the hosts of heaven, some that were amazed, overcome with astonishment at such pomp and glory as they had never yet beheld, and therefore they asked: Who is the King of glory? Howbeit, seeing that the angels (as well as ourselves) acquire their knowledge step by step, and are capable of advancement, they certainly must display differences of power and understanding, for God alone is above and beyond the limits imposed by gradual advance, possessing, as He does, every perfection from everlasting.

11. Dicebant alii, illi utique qui adfuerant resurgenti, illi qui viderant vel jam cognoverant: Dominus fortis et potens, Dominus potens in praelio.

11. Others, again — those, to wit, who had been present at His rising again, those who had seen or who already recognized Him — made reply: It is the Lord, strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle.

12. Iterum multitudo Angelorum triumphali agmine praecinebant: Tollite portas, principes, vestri; et elevamini, portae aeternales: et introibit rex gloriae.

12. Then, again, sang the multitude of angels, in triumphal chorus: Lift up the gates, O you that are their princes, and be lifted up, you everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in.

13. Rursus alii stupentes dicebant: Quis est iste rex gloriae (Ibid., 10)? Vidimus eum non habentem speciem neque decorem (Esai. LIII, 2): si ergo ipse non est, Quis est iste rex gloriae?

13. And back again came the challenge of them that stood astonished: Who is that King of glory? For we saw Him having neither form nor comeliness; Isaiah 53:2 if then it be not He, who is that King of glory?

14. Respondetur a scientibus: Dominus virtutum, ipse est rex gloriae. Ergo Dominus virtutum ipse est Filius. Et quomodo infirmum Ariani dicunt, quem Dominum virtutum, sicut et Patrem, credimus? Quomodo Ariani discretionem faciunt potestatis, cum Dominum sabaoth Patrem, Dominum sabaoth Filium legerimus? 524 Nam et hic sic positum plerique codices habent, quod Dominus sabaoth ipse sit rex gloriae: sabaoth autem interpretes alicubi Dominum virtutum, alicubi regem, alicubi omnipotentem interpretati sunt. Ergo quoniam qui ascendit Filius est: qui ascendit autem, Dominus est sabaoth; omnipotens utique Dei Filius est.

14. Whereto answer they which know: The Lord of Hosts, He is the King of glory. Therefore, the Lord of Hosts, He is the Son. How then do the Arians call Him fallible, Whom we believe to be Lord of Hosts, even as we believe of the Father? How can they draw distinctions between the sovereign powers of Each, when we have found the Son, even as also the Father, entitled Lord of Saboath? For, in this very passage, the reading in many copies is: The Lord of Sabaoth, He is the King of glory. Now the translators have, for the Lord of Sabaoth, rendered in some places the Lord of Hosts, in others the Lord the King, and in others the Lord Omnipotent. Therefore, since He Who ascended is the Son, and, again, He Who ascended is the Lord of Sabaoth, it surely follows that the Son of God is omnipotent!

CAPUT II.

IN COELUM SINE fide ascensurum neminem, vel si quis ascenderit, ejiciendum: illam itaque sedulo conservari debere. Esse etiam in nobis coelos, quorum portae aperiendae, ac per Christi divinitatis confessionem elevandae sunt. Has ab Arianis non elevari, nec ab iis qui requirunt Filium inter terrena; proindeque illos cum Magdalena remittendos ad Apostolos, in quos portae inferi non praevalebunt. Colligitur ex dictis a servo Domini dignitati non derogandum.

CHAPTER 2.

None can ascend to heaven without faith; in any case, he who has so ascended there will be cast out wherefore, faith must be zealously preserved. We ourselves each have a heaven within, the gates whereof must be opened and be raised by confession of the Godhead of Christ, which gates are not raised by Arians, nor by those who seek the Son amongst earthly things, and who must therefore, like the Magdalene, be sent back to the apostles, against whom the gates of hell shall not prevail. Scriptures are cited to show that the servant of the Lord must not diminish any of his Master's honour.

14. Quid igitur agemus? Quomodo ascendemus ad coelum? Sunt illic dispositae potestates, ordinati principes, qui coeli januas servant, qui ascendentem interrogant: quis me admittet, nisi omnipotentem annuntiem Christum? Clausae sunt portae, non cuicumque aperiuntur: non quicumque vult, nisi qui fideliter credit, ingredietur. Custoditur aula imperialis.

15. What shall we do, then? How shall we ascend unto heaven? There, powers are stationed, principalities drawn up in order, who keep the doors of heaven, and challenge him who ascends. Who shall give me passage, unless I proclaim that Christ is Almighty? The gates are shut — they are not opened to any and every one; not every one who will shall enter, unless he also believes according to the true Faith. The Sovereign's court is kept under guard.

15. Sed esto, indignus obrepserit, latuerit principes portarum coelestium, discubuerit in coena Domini; ingressus Dominus convivii, videns non indutum nuptiale fidei vestimentum, projiciet eum in tenebras exteriores, ubi sit fletus et stridor dentium, si fidem pacemque non servet (Matth. XXII, 11 et seq.).

16. Suppose, however, that one who is unworthy has crept up, has stolen past the principalities who keep the gates of heaven, has sat down at the supper of the Lord; when the Lord of the banquet enters, and sees one not clad in the wedding garment of the Faith, He will cast him into outer darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth, Matthew 22:11 if he keep not the Faith and peace.

16. Servemus igitur nuptiale quod accepimus vestimentum, nec Christo propria denegemus, quem omnipotentem annuntiant angeli, prophetae significant, apostoli testificantur, sicut jam supra ostendimus (Lib. II, ca).

17. Let us, therefore, keep the wedding garment which we have received, and not deny Christ that which is His own, Whose omnipotence angels announce, prophets foretel, apostles witness to, even as we have already shown above.

17. Et fortasse non de istius tantummodo coeli portis propheta dixerit quod praeteribit; et alios enim coelos Dei Verbum penetrat, de quibus dictum est:

Habemus enim sacerdotem magnum, principem sacerdotum, qui pertransivit coelos, Jesum Filium Dei (Hebr. IV, 14). Qui sunt isti coeli, nisi et hi de quibus dicit Propheta: Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei (Psal. XVIII, 1)?

18. Perchance, indeed, the prophet has spoken of His entering in not only with regard to the gates of the universal heaven; for there be other heavens also whereinto the Word of God passes, whereof it is said: We have a great Priest, a High Priest, Who has passed through the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God. Hebrews 4:14 What are those heavens, but even the heavens whereof the prophet says that the heavens declare the glory of God?

18. Stat enim Christus ad januam mentis tuae, audi cum dicentem: Ecce sto ad januam, et pulso; si quis mihi aperuerit, ingrediar ad illum; et coenabo cum eo, et ipse mecum (Apoc. III, 20). Et Ecclesia de eo dicit: Vox fratris mei pulsat ad januam (Cant. V, 2).

19. For Christ stands at the door of your soul. Hear Him speaking. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man open to Me, I will come in to him, and I will sup with him, and he with Me. Revelation 3:20 And the Church says, speaking of Him: The voice of my brother sounds at the door. Song of Songs 5:2

19. Stat ergo, et non solus stat; sed praecedunt eum angeli, qui dicunt: Tollite portas, principes, vestri (Psal. XXIII, 7). Quas portas? Illas utique de quibus et alibi dicit: Aperite mihi portas justitiae (Psal. CXVII, 19). Aperi ergo Christo portas tuas, ut ingrediatur in te: aperi portas justitiae, aperi portas 525 pudicitiae, aperi portas fortitudinis atque sapientiae.

20. He stands, then — but not alone, for before Him go angels, saying: Lift up the gates, O you the princes. What gates? Even those of the which the Psalmist sings in another place also: Open to me the gates of righteousness. Open, then, your gates to Christ, that He may come into you — open the gates of righteousness, the gates of chastity, the gates of courage and wisdom.

20. Crede angelis dicentibus: Et clevamini portae aeternales, et introibit rex gloriae, Dominus sabaoth (Psal. XXIII, 7). Porta tua vocis fidelis canora confessio est: porta tua ostium verbi est, quam sibi Apostolus optat aperiri, dicens: Ut aperiatur mihi ostium verbi ad eloquendum mysterium Christi (Coloss. IV, 3).

21. Believe the message of the angels: Be lift up, you everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in, the Lord of Sabaoth. Your gate is the loud confession made with faithful voice; it is the door of the Lord, which the Apostle desires to have opened for him, as he says: That a door of the word may be opened for me, to proclaim the mystery of Christ. Colossians 4:3

21. Aperiatur igitur Christo porta tua, nec solum aperiatur, sed etiam elevetur; si tamen aeternalis, est, non caduca; scriptum est enim: Et elevamini portae aeternales. Elevatum est super limen Esaiae, quando Seraphim labia ejus tetigit, et vidit regem Dominum sabaoth (Esai. VI, 7).

22. Let your gate, then, be opened to Christ, and let it be not only opened, but lifted up, if, indeed, it be eternal and not condemned to ruin; for it is written: And be lifted up, you everlasting doors. The lintel was lift up for Isaiah, when the seraph touched his lips and he saw the Lord of Sabaoth.

22. Tuae ergo portae elevabuntur, si sempiternum, si omnipotentem, si inaestimabilem, si incomprehensibilem, si eum qui et praeterita omnia et futura noverit, Filium Dei credas. Quod si praefinitae potestatis et scientiae, subjectumque opinaris, non elevas portas aeternales.

23. Your gates shall be lifted up, then, if you believe the Son of God to be eternal, omnipotent, above and beyond all praise and understanding, knowing all things, both past and to come, while if you judge Him to be of limited power and knowledge, and subordinate, you lift not up the everlasting doors.

23. Eleventur ergo portae tuae, ut non Ariano sensu parvulus, non pusillus, non subditus ad te Christus introeat; sed intret in Dei forma, intret cum Patre, intret talis, qualis est et coelum et omnia supergressus, emittat tibi Spiritum sanctum. Expedit tibi ut credas quia ascendit, et sedet ad dexteram Patris. Nam si eum inter creaturas et terrena impia cogitatione detineas, si non tibi abeat, non tibi ascendat, nec Paraclitus ad te veniet, sicut ipse dixit: Nam si ego non abiero, Paraclitus non veniet ad vos: si autem abiero, mittam illum ad vos (Joan. XVI, 7).

24. Be your gates lifted up, then, that Christ may come in unto you, not such a Christ as the Arians take Him to be — petty, and weak, and menial — but Christ in the form of God, Christ with the Father; that He may enter such as He is, exalted above the heaven and all things; and that He may send forth upon you His Holy Spirit. It is expedient for you that you should believe that He has ascended and is sitting at the right hand of the Father, for if in impious thought you detain Him among things created and earthly, if He depart not for you, ascend not for you, then to you the Comforter shall not come, even as Christ Himself has told us: For if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send Him unto you. John 16:7

24. Quod si inter terrena eum requiras, sicut Maria Magdalene requirebat, cave ne et tibi dicat: Noli me tangere; nondum enim ascendi ad Patrem meum (Joan. XX, 17). Portae enim tuae angustae sunt, capere me non queunt: elevari non queunt, intrare non possum.

25. But if you should seek Him among earthly beings, even as Mary of Magdala sought Him, take heed lest He say to you, as unto her: Touch Me not, for I am not yet ascended unto My Father. John 20:17 For your gates are narrow — they give me no passage — they cannot be lifted up, and therefore I cannot come in.

25. Vade ergo ad fratres meos, hoc est, ad illas portas aeternales, quae cum Jesum viderint, elevantur (Ibid.). Aeternalis porta est Petrus, cui portae inferi non praevalebunt (Matth. XVI, 18). Aeternales portae Joannes et Jacobus, utpote filii tonitrui (Marc. III, 17). Aeternales portae sunt Ecclesiae, ubi laudes Christi annuntiare Propheta desiderans, dicit: Ut annuntiem omnes laudationes tuas in portis filiae Sion (Psal. IX, 15).

26. Go your way, therefore, to my brethren — that is, to those everlasting doors, which, as soon as they see Jesus, are lifted up. Peter is an everlasting door, against whom the gates of hell shall not prevail. Matthew 16:18 John and James, the sons of thunder, to wit, Mark 3:17 are everlasting doom. Everlasting are the doors of the Church, where the prophet, desirous to proclaim the praises of Christ, says: That I may tell all your praises in the gates of the daughter of Sion.

26. Grande ergo mysterium Christi, quod stupuerunt et angeli; et ideo venerari debes, et Domino famulus derogare non debes. Ignorare non licet; propterea enim descendit ut credas: si non credis, non descendit tibi, non tibi passus est. Si non venissem, inquit, et locutus non fuissem his, peccatum non haberent: nunc autem excusationem non habent de peccato suo. Qui me odit, et Patrem meum odit (Joan. XV, 22, 23). Quis igitur odit Christum, nisi qui derogat? Sicut enim amoris est deferre, ita odii est derogare. Qui odit, quaestiones movet; qui amat, reverentiam defert.

27. Great, therefore, is the mystery of Christ, before which even angels stood amazed and bewildered. For this cause, then, it is your duty to worship Him, and, being a servant, you ought not to detract from your Lord. Ignorance you may not plead, for to this end He came down, that you may believe; if you believe not, He has not come down for you, has not suffered for you. If I had not come, says the Scripture, and spoken with them, they would have no sin: but now have they no excuse for their sin. He that hates Me, hates My Father also. John 15:22-23 Who, then, hates Christ, if not he who speaks to His dishonour? — for as it is love's part to render, so it is hate's to withdraw honour. He who hates, calls in question; he who loves, pays reverence.

CAPUT III.

VERBA ILLA: OMNIS viri caput Christus. . . . caput autem Christi Deus, primo in Arianos ipsos retorquet: deinde Christi tantum secundum naturam humanam considerati Deum caput esse ex alio Scripturae loco, quem objicere solebant iidem haeretici, probat: nec prudentius quoque oppositum ab ipsis textum illum: Qui autem plantat, et qui rigat, unum sunt. Quibus explicatis, quo pacto Pater in Filio, et Filius in Patre, nec non in utroque fideles esse dicantur, aperitur.

CHAPTER 3.

The words, The head of every man is Christ...and the head of Christ is God misused by the Arians, are now turned back against them, to their confutation. Next, another passage of Scripture, commonly taken by the same heretics as a ground of objection, is called in to show that God is the Head of Christ, in so far as Christ is human, in regard of His Manhood, and the unwisdom of their opposition upon the text, He who plants and He who waters are one, is displayed. After which explanations, the meaning of the doctrine that the Father is in the Son, and the Son in the Father, and that the faithful are in Both, is expounded.

27. [Alias cap. II.] Itaque discutiamus eorum alias quaestiones. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Omnis viri caput Christus est, caput autem mulieris vir, caput autem Christi Deus (I Cor. XI, 3). Qua in quaestione dicant mihi, velim, utrum conjungere, an dividere haec quatuor velint. Si enim conjungere, atque ita dicunt Deum caput esse Christi, sicut vir est mulieris caput, videte quid incidant. Nam si haec tamquam ex paribus sumpta est comparatio, et haec quatuor, id est, mulier, vir, Christus, et Deus, quasi ex unius atque ejusdem naturae similitudine comparantur, ergo mulier et Deus unius incipient esse naturae.

28. Now let us examine some other objections raised by the Arians. It is written, say they, that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of woman is man, and the head of Christ is God. 1 Corinthians 11:3 Let them, if they please, tell me what they mean by this objection — whether to join together, or to dissociate, these four terms. Suppose they mean to join them, and say that God is the Head of Christ in the same sense and manner as man is the head of woman. Mark what a conclusion they fall into. For if this comparison proceeds on the supposed equality of the terms of it, and these four — woman, man, Christ, and God — are viewed together as in virtue of a likeness resulting from their being of one and the same nature, then woman and God will begin to come under one definition.

28. Quod si hoc displicet, quia sacrilegum est dicere, ut volunt dividant. Itaque si Christum apud Deum Patrem ita volunt esse, sicut est mulier apud virum; unius utique Christum et Deum dicunt esse substantiae, quoniam mulier et vir unius sunt in carne naturae (Gen. II, 24): nam quod distat, in sexu est. Cum vero inter Christum et Patrem sexus non interveniat, quod unum inter Filium et Patrem in natura est, fatebuntur: quod diversum in sexu est, denegabunt.

29. But if this conclusion be not satisfactory, by reason of its impiety, let them divide, on what principle they will. Thus, if they will have it that Christ stands to God the Father in the same relation as woman to man, then surely they pronounce Christ and God to be of one substance, inasmuch as woman and man are of one nature in respect of the flesh, for their difference is in respect of sex. But, seeing that there is no difference of sex between Christ and His Father, they will acknowledge then that which is one, and common to the Son and the Father, in respect of nature, whereas they will deny the difference lying in sex.

29. Placetne ista divisio? An mulierem, virum et Christum unius volunt esse substantiae, et Patrem separant? Raeccine igitur divisio placet? Si ita est, videte quid incidant. Aut enim non solum Arianos, sed etiam Photinianos se necesse est confiteantur; quia Christum hominem tantum fatentur, quem humanae tantummodo naturae aestimant copulandum: aut vel invitos acquiescere par est nostrae sententiae, per quam id quod impie cogitarunt, pie religioseque defendimus; ut sit Christus quidem secundum generationem divinam Dei virtus, secundum assumptionem autem carnis, unius cum omnibus hominibus in carne substantiae: salva tamen incarnationis suae gloriae; quia veritatem suscepit, non imaginem carnis.

30. Does this conclusion content them? Or will they have woman, man, and Christ to be of one substance, and distinguish the Father from them? Will this, then, serve their turn? Suppose that it will, then observe what they are brought to. They must either confess themselves not merely Arians, but very Photinians, because they acknowledge only the Manhood of Christ, Whom they judge fit only to be placed on the same scale with human beings. Or else they must, however contrary to their leanings, subscribe to our belief, by which we dutifully and in godly fashion maintain that which they have come at by an impious course of thought, that Christ is indeed, after His divine generation, the power of God, while after His putting on of the flesh, He is of one substance with all men in regard of His flesh, excepting indeed the proper glory of His Incarnation, because He took upon Himself the reality, not a phantom likeness, of flesh.

30. Sit ergo juxta humanam conditionem caput Christi Deus; non enim dixit caput Christi Pater, sed caput Christi Deus; quia divinitas, ut pote creatrix, caput est creaturae. Et bene dixit: Caput Christi Deus; ut et divinitatem Christi significaret, et carnem, hoc est, incarnationem in Christi nomine: in Deo autem unitatem divinitatis, et magnitudinem potestatis.

31. Let God, then, be the Head of Christ, with regard to the conditions of Manhood. Observe that the Scripture says not that the Father is the Head of Christ; but that God is the Head of Christ, because the Godhead, as the creating power, is the Head of the being created. And well said [the Apostle] the Head of Christ is God; to bring before our thoughts both the Godhead of Christ and His flesh, implying, that is to say, the Incarnation in the mention of the name of Christ, and, in that of the name of God, oneness of Godhead and grandeur of sovereignty.

31. Eousque autem caput Christi Deus secundum incarnationem dictum est, ut et caput viri 527 Christus secundum incarnationem Verbi dictum sit. Quod alibi Apostolus evidenter exposuit dicens: Quoniam vir caput est mulieris, sicut et Christus caput Ecclesiae (Ephes. V, 23). Et in consequentibus addidit: Qui se tradidit pro ea (Ibid., 25). Secundum incarnationem igitur caput viri Christus, quia secundum incarnationem facta traditio est.

32. But the saying, that in respect of the Incarnation God is the Head of Christ, leads on to the principle that Christ, as Incarnate, is the Head of man, as the Apostle has clearly expressed in another passage, where he says: Since man is the head of woman, even as Christ is the Head of the Church; Ephesians 5:23 while in the words following he has added: Who gave Himself for her. Ephesians 5:25 After His Incarnation, then, is Christ the head of man, for His self-surrender issued from His Incarnation.

32. Est ergo caput Christi Deus; ubi servi, hoc est, hominis, non Dei, forma tractatur. Sed nihil praejudicat Dei Filio, si secundum carnis veritatem similis sit hominibus, qui in divinitate cum Patre unum est (Joan. X, 30); non enim potestas hac interpretatione minuitur, sed misericordia praedicatur.

33. The Head of Christ, then, is God, in so far as His form of a servant, that is, of man, not of God, is considered. But it is nothing against the Son of God, if, in accordance with the reality of His flesh, He is like men, while in regard of His Godhead He is one with the Father, for by this account of Him we do not take anything from His sovereignty, but attribute compassion to Him.

33. Quis autem unam divinitatem Patris et Filii pie abneget; cum ipse Dominus consummaturus praecepta, discipulis suis dixerit: Ut sint unum, sicut et nos unum sumus (Joan. XVII, 11)? Pro testimonio enim fidei positum est, licet ab Arianis ad argumentum perfidiae derivetur. Etenim quoniam toties lectam negare non queunt unitatem, extenuare conantur; ut talis videatur divinitatis unitas inter Patrem et Filium, qualis est inter homines unitas devotionis et fidei: licet etiam inter ipsos homines unitas naturae sit ex communitate naturae.

34. But who can with a good conscience deny the one Godhead of the Father and the Son, when our Lord, to complete His teaching for His disciples, said: That they may be one, even as we also are one. John 17:11 The record stands for witness to the Faith, though Arians turn it aside to suit their heresy; for, inasmuch as they cannot deny the Unity so often spoken of, they endeavour to diminish it, in order that the Unity of Godhead subsisting between the Father and the Son may seem to be such as is unity of devotion and faith among men, though even among men themselves community of nature makes unity thereof.

34. Unde et illud apertissime solvitur, quod ad extenuationem Dominicae unitatis objicere consuerunt, quia scriptum est: Qui autem plantat, et qui rigat, unum sunt (I. Cor. III, 8). Hoc Ariani, si saperent, non objicerent. Quomodo enim negare conantur quia Pater et Filius unum sunt, cum Paulus et Apollo et natura unum sint et fide? Sed tamen per omnia unum esse non possunt, quia nequeunt comparari humana divinis.

35. Thus with abundant clearness we disprove the objection commonly raised by Arians, in order to loosen the Divine Unity, on the ground that it is written: But he who plants and he who waters are one. This passage the Arians, if they were wise, would not quote against us; for how can they deny that the Father and the Son are One, if Paul and Apollos are one, both in nature and in faith? At the same time, we do grant that these cannot be one throughout, in all relations, because things human cannot bear comparison with things divine.

35. Inseparabilis ergo Deus Pater Verbo, inseparabilis virtute, inseparabilis sapientia per divinae unitatem substantiae; et est in Filio, sicut frequenter est scriptum: est vero non ut egentem sanctificans, nec ut vacuum implens; quia non vacua Dei virtus. Nec enim virtus virtute augetur; quia non duae virtutes, sed una virtus: nec divinitas divinitatem accipit; quia non duae divinitates, sed una divinitas: nos autem per acceptam et inhabitantem in nobis virtutem unum erimus in Christo.

36. No separation, then, is to be made of the Word from God the Father, no separation in power, no separation in wisdom, by reason of the Unity of the Divine Substance. Again, God the Father is in the Son, as we ofttimes find it written, yet [He dwells in the Son] not as sanctifying one who lacks sanctification, nor as filling a void, for the power of God knows no void. Nor, again, is the power of the one increased by the power of the other, for there are not two powers, but one Power; nor does Godhead entertain Godhead, for there are not two Godheads, but one Godhead. We, contrariwise, shall be One in Christ through Power received [from another] and dwelling in us.

36. Communis ergo littera, sed discrepans divina, humanaque substantia. Nos unum erimus, Pater et Filius unum sunt: nos secundum gratiam, Filius secundum substantiam. Alia autem per conjunctionem, alia per naturam unitas. Denique vide quid ante praemiserit: Ut omnes unum sint, sicut tu, Pater, in me, et ego in te (Joan. XVII, 21).

37. The letter [of the unity] is common, but the Substance of God and the substance of man are different. We shall be, the Father and the Son [already] are, one; we shall be one by grace, the Son is so by substance. Again, unity by conjunction is one thing, unity by nature another. Finally, observe what it is that Scripture has already recorded: That they may all be one, as You, Father, are in Me, and I in You. John 17:21

37. Considera ergo quia non dixit: Tu in nobis, et nos in te: sed tu in me, et ego in te; ut se a creaturis separaret. Et addidit: Et isti in nobis (Ibid.), ut etiam hic suam potentiam et Patris a nobis 528 secerneret, ut quod nos in Patre et Filio unum sumus, non naturae videatur esse, sed gratiae: quod autem Filius et Pater unum sunt, non hoc Filius accepisse per gratiam, sed naturaliter ut Filius possidere credatur.

38. Mark now that He said not You in us, and we in You, but You in Me, and I in You, to place Himself apart from His creatures. Further He added: that they also may be in Us, in order to separate here His dignity and His Father’s from us, that our union in the Father and the Son may appear the issue, not of nature, but of grace, while with regard to the unity of the Father and the Son it may be believed that the Son has not received this by grace, but possesses by natural right of His Sonship.

CAPUT IV.

OBJECTUM AB HAERETICIS locum illum: Non potest Filius facere a se quidquam, etc., primo e subsequentibus verbis exponit: deinde singulas integri textus voces expendens, eas Ariana interpretatione sumi sine impietate aut absurditate haudquaquam posse, potissimum creationis mundi et quorumdam Christi miraculorum exemplis docet.

CHAPTER 4.

The passage quoted adversely by heretics, namely, The Son can do nothing of Himself, is first explained from the words which follow; then, the text being examined, word by word, their acceptation in the Arian sense is shown to be impossible without incurring the charge of impiety or absurdity, the proof resting chiefly on the creation of the world and certain miracles of Christ.

38. [Alias cap. III.] Aliud rursus objiciunt, asserentes unam atque eamdem potestatem Filii et Patris esse non posse, quia ipse dixit: Amen, amen, dico vobis, non potest Filius facere a se quidquam, nisi quod viderit Patrem facientem (Joan. V, 19). Itaque nihil ex se fecisse Filium dicunt, nec facere posse, nisi quod viderit facientem Patrem.

39. Again, another objection that the Arians bring up, denying that the Power of the Father and the Son can be one and the same, is rested on His saying: Verily, verily, I say unto you; the Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He has seen the Father doing. John 5:19 And therefore they affirm that the Son has done nothing of Himself, and can do nothing, save what He has seen the Father doing.

39. O praescia sapientia infidelium argumentorum! quae subjecit quod solveret, quaestionem, addendo quod sequitur: Quia quaecumque ille fecerit, eadem et Filius facit similiter (Ibid.); hoc nempe sequitur. Cur ergo scriptum est: Eadem facit Filius, et non talia; nisi ut in Filio unitatem, non imitationem paterni operis aestimares?

40. O wise foreknowledge of the arguments of unbelievers, which made further provision of means whereby to answer questions, by adding the words that follow: For whatsoever the Father does, the same does the Son also, in like fashion, John 5:19 for this indeed is the sequel. Why, then, is it written: The Son does the same things, and not such like things, but that you might judge that in the Son there is unity in the Father's works, not imitation of them?

40. Sed tamen ut illorum quoque argumenta discutiamus, quaero ut respondeant, utrum videat Filius opera Patris. Videt itaque, an non? Si videt, ergo et facit: si facit, desinant omnipotentem negare, quem omnia posse facere, quae Patrem facientem viderit, confitentur.

41. But to put their proofs in turn upon trial: I would have them answer the question, whether the Son sees the works of the Father. Does He see, I ask, or not? If He sees them, then He also does them; if He does them, let heretics cease to deny the omnipotence of Him Whom they confess able to do all things that He has seen the Father doing.

41. Quid est autem, viderit? Corporaliumne aliquis usus oculorum est? Sed si hoc de Filio velint dicere, corporalis etiam in Patre usum operationis ostendent; ut facientem videat, quod ipse facturus est.

42. But what are we to understand by has seen? Has the Son any need of bodily eyes? Nay, if they will affirm this of the Son, they will make out in the Father also a need of bodily activity, in order that the Son may see that which He Himself is to do.

42. Quid est autem: Non potest Filius facere a se quidquam? Hoc interrogemus, hoc consideremus. Est ergo aliquid impossibile Dei virtuti atque sapientiae? Hoc est enim Dei Filius, qui utique non alienam accepit fortitudinem, sed quemadmodum vita est, non aliena vivificatione subnixus, sed alios vivificans; quia ipse vita est: ita etiam sapientia est, non quasi insipiens accipiens sapientiam, sed qui de suo alios faciat esse sapientes: ita etiam virtus est, non quasi per infirmitatem consecutus incrementa virtutis, sed ipse virtus, qui virtutem fortibus largiatur.

43. Furthermore, what mean the words: The Son can do nothing of Himself? Let us put this question, and debate it. Now is there anything impossible to God's Power and Wisdom? These, observe, are names of the Son of God, Whose Might is certainly not a gift received from another, but just as He is the Life, John 14:6 not depending upon another's quickening action, but Himself quickening others, because He is the Life; so also He is Wisdom, 1 Corinthians 1:24 not as one that is ignorant acquiring wisdom, but making others wise from His own store; so, too, He is Power, 1 Corinthians 1:24 not as having through weakness obtained increase of strength, but being Himself Power, and bestowing power upon the strong.

43. Quomodo ergo virtus quasi cum jurisjurandi attestatione dicit: Amen, amen dico vobis (Joan. V, 19), quod est: Fideliter, fideliter dico? Fideliter 529 ergo dicis, Domine Jesu, et cum sacramenti quadam repetitione confirmas quod nihil facere potes, nisi quod facientem Patrem videris. Fecisti mundum, numquid alterum mundum Patrem tuus fecit, quem quasi ad exemplar acceperis? Ergo necesse est fateantur impii aut duos, aut certe multos esse mundos, quod philosophi asserunt; ut se etiam in hoc errore gentilitatis involvant. Aut si velint verum sequi, dicant sine exemplari te fecisse, quod feceris.

44. How, then, does Power assert, as it were, under oath: Verily, verily I say unto you, which means: Of a truth, of a truth, I tell you? John 5:19 Truly, then, You speak, Lord Jesus, and affirm, repeating indeed your solemn declaration, that You can do nothing, save what You have seen the Father doing. You made the universe. Did Your Father then make another universe, for You to take as a model? So must Your blasphemers confess that there are two, or a multitude of universes, as philosophers affirm, and thus also entangle themselves in this heathen error, or, if they will follow the truth, let them say that what You have made, You made, without any pattern.

44. Dic mihi, Domine, quando in mari Patrem incarnatum videris ambulantem (Marc. VI, 48)? Ego enim nescio, ego hoc de Patre credere sacrilegum puto, qui te solum carnem assumpsisse cognovi. Quando videris in nuptiis Patrem aquam in vina vertentem (Joan. II, 9)? Sed solum te unigenitum Filium legi ex Patre natum, solum te ex Spiritu sancto accepi et Virgine secundum incarnationis sacramenta generatum (Matth. I, 25). Ergo ista, quae memoravimus a te gesta, non fecit Pater: sed sine exemplari paterni operis, ad redimendam tuo sanguine salutem mundi, solus immaculatus ex alvo Virginis processisti.

45. Tell me, Lord, when You saw Your Father incarnate, and walking upon the sea, for I know not, I hold it impious to believe this thing of the Father, knowing that You only have taken our flesh upon You. When did You see the Father at a marriage-feast, turning water into wine? Nay, but I have read that You alone are the only Son, begotten of the Father. I have been taught that You alone, in the mystery of the Incarnation, were born of the Holy Ghost and the Virgin. The things, then, which we have cited as Your doings, the Father did not, but You alone, without guidance of any work done by

Your Father, for the purchase of the world's salvation with Your Blood, came forth spotless from the Virgin's womb.

45. Ac ne forte incarnationis tantummodo putent sequestrandum esse mysterium (licet cum dicunt: Non potest Filius a se facere quidquam (Joan. V, 19), nihil excipiant, ita ut et quidam impius dixerit: Nec culicem facere potest, tam temerario ausu, petulantique sermone majestatem supernae virtutis irridens), dic, Domine Jesu, quam terram sine te Pater fecerit? Coelum enim sine te non fecit, quia scriptum est: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt (Psal. XXXII, 6).

46. When they say, The Son can do nothing of Himself, they indeed except nothing, so that one blasphemer has even said: He cannot make even a gnat, mocking with so headstrong profanity and with insolence so overweening the majesty of Supreme Power; yet perhaps they may think the mystery of Your Incarnate Life a needful exception. But say, Lord Jesu, what earth the Father made without You. For without You He made no heaven, seeing that it is written: By the Word of the Lord were the heavens established.

46. Sed nec terram sine te fecit, quia scriptum est: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil (Joan. I, 3). Nam si aliquid sine te Deo Verbo Pater fecit, non ergo omnia facta per Verbum, et evangelista mentitur. Quod si omnia facta per Verbum, et omnia per te coeperunt esse, quae non erant, utique quae non vidisti a Patre facta, a te ipse fecisti. Nisi forte philosophicas tibi ideas Platonica illa disputatione praestituunt, quas ab ipsis tamen philosophis scimus irrisas. Si autem ex te ipse fecisti, vana est assertio perfidorum, quae auctori omnium, cui suppetit ex se faciendi magisterium, tribuit discendi profectum.

47. But neither did the Father make the earth without You, for it is written: All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made. For if the Father made anything without You, God the Word, then not all things were made by the Word, and the Evangelist lies. Whereas if all things were made by the Word, and if by You all things begin to be, which before were not, then surely You Yourself, of Yourself, hast made what You did not see made by the Father; though perchance our adversaries may have recourse to that theory of Plato, and place before You the ideas supposed by philosophers, which, indeed, we know have been exploded by philosophers themselves. On the other hand, if You Yourself hast of Yourself made all things, vain are the assertions of the unbelieving, which ascribe progress in learning to the Maker of all, Who of Himself supplies the teaching of His craft.

47. Quod si per te negant coelum esse factum, vel terram, considerent impii quo se suo furore praecipitent, cum scriptum sit: Dii qui non fecerunt coelum et terram, pereant (Jerem. X, 11). Peribit ergo, Ariane, qui quod perierat, et reperit et redemit? Sed ad proposita revertamur. 530

48. But if heretics deny that either the heavens or the earth were made by You, let them take heed into what a gulf they are by their own madness hurling themselves, seeing that it is written: Perish the gods, which have not made heaven and earth. Jeremiah 10:11 Shall He then perish, O Arian, Who has found and saved that which had perished? But to purpose.

CAPUT V.

CAEPTAM OBJECTI LOCI expositionem urgens, rationes quatuor quibus aliquid fieri non posse affirmamus, explicat, et earum primas tres in Christum non cadere, solutis quibusdam objectiunculis, demonstrat, et Filium propter solam potestatis cum Patre unitatem nihil a se facere posse deducit.

CHAPTER 5.

Continuing the exposition of the disputed passage, which he had begun, Ambrose brings forward four reasons why we affirm that something cannot be, and shows that the first three fail to apply to Christ, and infers that the only reason why the Son can do nothing of Himself is His Unity in Power with the Father.

48. Quomodo non potest Filius facere a se quidquam? Quaeramus quid sit quod facere non possit. Multae sunt impossibilitatum differentiae. Est aliquid natura impossibile, et est aliquid quod est possibile per naturam, impossibile per infirmitatem. Est etiam tertium quod sit possibile per corporis et animi firmitatem, impossibile per imperitiam aut impotentiam. Est etiam quod per definitionem immutabilis propositi, et constantis perseverantiam voluntatis atque amicitiae fidem sit impossibile mutari.

49. In what sense can the Son do nothing of Himself? Let us ask what it is that He cannot do. There are many different sorts of impossibilities. One thing is naturally impossible, another is naturally possible, but impossible by reason of some weakness. Again, there are things which are rendered possible by strength, impossible by unskilfulness or weakness, of body and mind. Further, there are things which it is impossible to change, by reason of the law of an unchangeable purpose, the endurance of a firm will, and, again, faithfulness in friendship.

49. Sed haec ut evidentius possimus advertere, per exempla nobis disputatio dirigatur. Impossibile est ut avis sapientiae disciplinam aliquam assequatur aut artem: impossibile est et lapidem prodire quoquam; impossibile est enim lapidem moveri, nisi motu moveatur alterius: non potest ergo lapis per se ipsum moveri, et transire de loco. Non potest etiam aquila humanis imbui disciplinis. Habes unam speciem, cui impossibilitatis causa natura est.

50. To make this clearer, let us consider the matter in the light of examples. It is impossible for a bird to pursue a course of learning in any science or become trained to any art: it is impossible for a stone to move in any direction, inasmuch as it can only be moved by the motion of another body. Of itself, then, a stone is incapable of moving, and passing from its place. Again, an eagle cannot be taught in the ways of human learning.

50. Impossibile est et debili facere opera robusti; sed huic alia impossibilitatis causa est; quod enim facere potest per naturam, per infirmitatem non potest. Causa igitur huic quoque impossibilitati infirmitas. Alia ergo impossibilitatis haec species; quoniam a faciendi possibilitate, corporis infirmitate revocatur.

51. It is, to take another example, impossible for a sick man to do a strong man’s work; but in this case the reason of the impossibility is of a different kind, for the man is rendered unable, by sickness, to do what he is naturally capable of doing. In this case, then, the cause of the impossibility is sickness, and this kind of impossibility is different from the first, since the man is hindered by bodily weakness from the possibility of doing.

51. Tertia quoque impossibilitatis est causa, qua etiamsi per naturam quis, et firmitatem corporis facere aliquid possit; non potest tamen facere per imperitiam vel impotentiam, ut aut indoctus, aut servus.

52. Again, there is a third cause of impossibility. A man may be naturally capable, and his bodily health may allow of his doing some work, which he is yet unable to do by reason of want of skill, or because his rank in life disqualifies him; because, that is, he lacks the required learning or is a slave.

52. Quis igitur harum, quas enumeravimus, impossibilitatum causas, ut quartam interim sequestremus, Filio Dei existimas convenire? Numquid in sensibilis per naturam, et immobilis, sicut lapis? Lapis quidem est impiis in ruinam, fidelibus angularis. Sed non insensibilis, supra quem sensibilium populorum fideles aedificantur affectus. Non immobilis petra: Bibebant enim ex consequenti petra; petra autem erat Christus (I Cor. X, 4). Non ergo paternum opus per naturae distantiam impossibile Christo.

53. Which of these three different causes of impossibility, think you, which we have enumerated (setting aside the fourth) can we meetly assign to the case of the Son of God? Is He naturally insensible and immovable, like a stone? He is indeed a stone of stumbling to the wicked, a cornerstone for the faithful; but He is not insensible, upon Whom the faithful affection of sentient peoples are stayed. He is not an immovable rock, for they drank of a Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ. 1 Corinthians 10:4 The work of the Father, then, is not rendered impossible to Christ by diversity of nature.

53. Numquid forte per debilitatem impossibile ei aliquid existimamus? Sed non ille debilis, 531 qui aliorum debilitates imperiali sermone sanabat. An debilis videbatur, cum paralytico praecipiens: Tolle grabatum tuum, et ambula (Marc. II, 11), sanitatis jam mandabat officium, cum adhuc ille remedium debilitatis oraret? Num debilis Dominus virtutum, cum illuminaret caecos, inclinatos erigeret (Psal. CXLV, 8), mortuos suscitaret (Matth. XI, 5), votis nostris medicinae praecurreret effectus, orantes curaret, et fimbriae mundaret attactus (Marc. VI, 56) ?

54. Perchance we may suppose some things were made impossible for Him by reason of weakness. But He was not weakly Who could heal the weaknesses of others by His word of authority. Seemed He weak when bidding the paralytic take up his bed and walk? Mark 2:11 He charged the man to perform an action of which health was the necessary condition, even while the patient was yet praying a remedy for his disease. Not weak was the Lord of hosts when He gave sight to the blind, made the crooked to stand upright, raised the dead to life, Matthew 11:5 anticipated the effects of medicine at our prayers, and cured them that besought Him, and when to touch the fringe of His robe was to be purified. Mark 6:56

54. Nisi forte debilitatem illam, impii, putabatis, quando vulnera videbatis. Erant quidem illa corporis vulnera, sed non erat vulneris illius ulla debilitas, ex quo omnium vita profluebat. Unde et propheta dixit: Livore ejus nos sanati sumus (Esai. LII, 5). An qui in vulnere debilis non erat, erat in majestate? Quomodo quaere. Cum daemoniis imperaret, et reis peccata dimitteret; an cum rogaret Patrem?

55. Unless, perhaps, you thought it was weakness, you wretches, when you saw His wounds. Truly, they were wounds piercing His Body, but there was no weakness betokened by that wound, whence flowed the Life of all, and therefore was it that the prophet said: By His stripes we are healed. Isaiah 53:5 Was He, then, Who was not weak in the hour when He was wounded, weak in regard of His Sovereignty? How, then, I ask? When He commanded the devils, and forgave the offenses of sinners? Luke 5:20 Or when He made entreaty to the Father?

55. Quo loco fortasse dicant: Quomodo Pater et Filius unum sunt, si Filius nunc imperat, nunc precatur? Et unum sunt, et imperat, et precatur: sed neque cum imperat, solus; nec cum precatur, infirmus. Solus non est, quia quaecumque Pater facit, eadem similiter et Filius facit: infirmus non est, quia etsi in carne infirmatus est propter peccata nostra, tamen illud nostrae erat in eo pacis eruditio, sicut scriptum est, non suae majestatis infirmitas.

56. Here, indeed, our adversaries may perchance enquire: How can the Father and the Son be One, if the Son at one time commands, at another entreats? True, They are One; true also, He both commands and prays: yet while in the hour when He commands He is not alone, so also in the hour of prayer He is not weak. He is not alone, for whatsoever things the Father does, the same things does the Son also, in like manner. He is not weak, for though in the flesh He suffered weakness for our sins yet that was the chastisement of our peace upon Him, Isaiah 53:5 not lack of sovereign Power in Himself.

56. Denique ut scias quia secundum bominem rogat, divinitate imperat, habes in Evangelio quia Petro dixit: Rogavi pro te, ut non deficiat fides tua (Luc. XXII, 32). Eidem autem supra dicenti: Tu es Christus Filius Dei vivi, respondit: Tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam; et tibi dabo claves regni coelorum (Matth. XVI, 18). Ergo cui propria auctoritate regnum dabat, hujus fidem firmare non poterat; quem cum petram dicit, firmamentum Ecclesiae indicavit? Quando igitur roget, quando imperet, considera. Rogat quando passurus ostenditur, imperat quando Filius Dei creditur.

57. Moreover, that you may know that it is after His Manhood that He entreats, and in virtue of His Godhead that He commands, it is written for you in the Gospel that He said to Peter: I have prayed for you, that your faith fail not. Luke 22:32 To the same Apostle, again, when on a former occasion he said, You are the Christ, the Son of the living God, He made answer: You are Peter, and upon this Rock will I build My Church, and I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Matthew 16:18 Could He not, then, strengthen the faith of the man to whom, acting on His own authority, He gave the kingdom, whom He called the Rock, thereby declaring him to be the foundation of the Church? Consider, then, the manner of His entreaty, the occasions of His commanding. He entreats, when He is shown to us as on the eve of suffering: He commands, when He is believed to be the Son of God.

57. Duas igitur species impossibilitatis vacare jam cernimus, quod neque insensibilis, neque infirma potest esse Dei virtus. Numquid tertium profertis in medium, quod quasi imperitus sine magistro facere nihil possit, aut servus sine domino? Ergo mentitus es, Domine Jesu, qui te et magistrum, et dominum ipse dixisti; et fefellisti discipulos tuos, dicens: Vos vocatis me magistrum et dominum, et bene dicitis; sum etenim (Joan. XIII, 13). Sed non falleres, veritas, eos praesertim quos amicos vocasti.

58. We see, then, that two sorts of impossibility furnish no explanation, inasmuch as the Power of God can be neither insensible nor weakly. Will you then proffer the third kind [as an account of the matter], namely, that He can do nothing, just as an unskilled apprentice can do nothing without his master’s instructions, or a slave can do nothing without his lord. Then did You speak falsely, Lord Jesus, in calling Yourself Master and Lord, and You deceived Your disciples by Your words: You call Me Master and Lord, and you say well, for so I am. John 13:13 Nay, but You, O Truth, would never have deceived men, least of all them whom You called friends. John 15:14-15

58. Tamen si ut imperitum te ab artifice secernunt, viderint ut tibi, hoc est, Dei sapientiae dicant peritiam defuisse; unitatem tamen substantiae inter te et Patrem separare non possunt. Artificem namque ab imperito imprudentia, non natura secernit: sed non in Patre artificium, neque in te insipientia; non est enim insipiens sapientia.

59. Yet if our enemies sunder You from the Creator, as being unskilled, let them see how they affirm that skill was lacking to You, that is to say, to the Divine Wisdom; for all that, however, they cannot divide the unity of substance that You have with the Father. It is not, indeed, by nature, but by reason of ignorance, that the difference exists between the craftsman and the unskilled; but neither is handicraft attributable to the Father, nor ignorance to You, for there is no such thing as ignorant wisdom.

59. Ergo si neque insensibilis in Filio natura, 532 neque debilitas, neque imperitia, neque servitus potest esse; considerent quod et per naturam et majestatem unum sit cum Patre Filius, et per operationem non discrepet a Patre virtus; cum omnia quae Pater fecerit, eadem Filius faciat similiter: neque enim similiter potest quisquam facere idem opus, quod alius fecerit; nisi qui et inaequalitatem non habeat operationis, et naturae ejusdem habeat unitatem.

60. Therefore, if insensibility is no attribute of the Son, and if neither weakness, nor ignorance, nor servility, let unbelievers put it to their minds for meditation that both by nature and sovereignty the Son is One with the Father, and by its working His power is not at cross-purpose with the Father, inasmuch as all things that the Father has done, the Son does likewise, for no one can do in like fashion the same work that another has done, unless he shares in the unity of the same nature, while he is also not inferior in method of working.

60. Adhuc tamen requiro, quid sit quod non possit facere a se Filius, nisi viderit facientem Patrem (Joan. V, 19); et insipienter aliqua de vilioribus exempla propono: Factus sum insipiens, vos me coegistis (II Cor. XII, 11). Nam quid insipientius, quam de majestate Dei argumenta discutere, quae quaestiones magis praestant, quam aedificationem Dei, quae est in fide (I Tim. I, 4, 5)? Sed argumentis argumenta respondeant: illis verba, nobis charitas, quae in Deo est, de corde puro et conscientia bona, et fide non ficta. Ergo ad infirmationem tam ineptae propositionis, non piget etiam ridicula derivare.

61. Yet I would still enquire what it is that the Son cannot do, unless He see the Father doing it. I will take the fool's line, and propound some examples drawn from things of a lower world. I have become a fool; you have compelled me. 2 Corinthians 12:11 What indeed is more foolish than to debate over the majesty of God, which rather occasions questionings, than godly instruction which is in faith. But to arguments let arguments reply; let words make answer to them, but love to us, the love which is in God, issuing of a pure heart and good conscience and faith unfeigned. And so I stickle not to introduce even the ludicrous for the confutation of so vain a thesis.

61. Quomodo ergo videt Filius Patrem? Videt equus picturam, quam per naturam imitari non potest: non utique sic videt Filius. Videt parvulus viri opera majoris, sed imitari non potest: nec utique sic videt Dei Filius.

62. How, then, does the Son see the Father? A horse sees a painting, which naturally it is unable to imitate. Not thus does the Son behold the Father. A child sees the work of a grown man, but he cannot reproduce it; certainly not thus, again, does the Son see the Father.

62. Ergo si Filius per ejusdem cum Patre arcanum commune naturae invisibiliter et videre et facere potest, et per plenitudinem divinitatis quod voluerit exsequi: quid superest, nisi ut per unitatem inseparabilem potestatis nihil credamus Filium facere, nisi quod viderit Patrem facientem; quia per incomparabilem charitatem nihil a se facit Filius; quoniam nihil vult, quod Pater nolit? Quod utique non infirmitatis, sed unitatis est.

63. If, then, the Son can, by virtue of a common hidden power of the same nature which He has with the Father, both see and act in an invisible manner, and by the fullness of His Godhead execute every decree of His Will, what remains for us but to believe that the Son, by reason of indivisible unity of power, does nothing, save what He has seen the Father doing, forasmuch as because of His incomparable love the Son does nothing of Himself, since He wills nothing that is against His Father’s Will? Which truly is the proof not of weakness but of unity.

CAPUT VI.

ACCEDIT AD QUARTAM e rationibus supra memoratis; et Filium nihil facere quod non probetur a Patre, cum sit utriusque perfecta voluntatis atque potestatis unitas, liquido probans, nonnullas difficultates subinde tollit.

CHAPTER 6.

The fourth kind of impossibility (§49) is now taken into consideration, and it is shown that the Son does nothing that the Father approves not, there being between Them perfect unity of will and power.

63. Ergo nec contumax Filius, ut etiam de quarta propositione dicamus; nihil enim consiliarius Filius fecit, quod cum Patris non conveniat voluntate. Denique vidit Pater quae fecit Filius, et probavit quia bona valde. Sic enim habes in Genesi: Et dixit Deus: Fiat lux, et facta est lux; et vidit Deus lucem, quia bona est (Gen. I, 3, 4).

64. The Son, moreover — to consider now our fourth premiss — is not self-assertive, for He, the Divine Assessor, has done nought that is not in agreement with His Father's Will. Further, the Father has seen the things that the Son made, and pronounced them very good; for so it is written in Genesis: And God said, Let there be light; and there was light. And God saw the light that it was good. Genesis 1:3-4

64. Numquid hic dixit Pater: Fiat talis lux, qualem ipse feci: aut fiat lux, quae ante non fuerat: aut Filius qualem faceret, interrogavit? Sed fecit, ut voluit, qualem Pater usque eo voluit, ut probaret. Ergo novum opus Filii est.

65. Now, did the Father say on that occasion, Let there be such light as I Myself have made, or Let there be light — light having as yet not existed; or did the Son ask what sort of light the Father made? Nay, the Son made light, according to His own Will, and so far in accordance with the Father's good pleasure, that He approved. It is of new, original work by the Son that the place speaks.

65. Deinde si reprehenditur in Filio secundum interpretationes Arianorum quia quod viderit, fecit, qui utique secundum Scripturas quod non vidit, et fecit, et dedit esse quae non erant: quid dicunt de Patre, qui quod viderat 533 praedicavit, quasi ea quae facienda forent, non potuerit praevidere?

66. Again, if, as Arian, expositions of the Scriptures make out, it is a discredit to the Son to have made what He saw, whereas the Scriptures present Him as having made what He [before] saw not, and to have given being to things which as yet were not, what should they say of the Father, Who praised that He had seen, as though He could not have foreseen the things that were to be made?

66. Similiter ergo videt Filius Patris opus, sicut Pater opus Filii: nec quasi alienum laudat, sed quasi proprium recognoscit: Quaecumque enim Pater fecerit, eadem Filius facit similiter (Joan. V, 19); ut idem opus Patris Filiique sentires. Nihil ergo facit Filius, nisi quod Pater probet, Pater laudet, Pater velit; quia ex Patre totus est: non ut creatura, quae multa committit, dum studio lapsuque peccati, voluntatem frequenter offendit auctoris. Nihil ergo Filius facit, nisi quod placeat Patri; quia una voluntas, una sententia est, una est vera charitas, unius operationis effectus.

67. The Son, therefore, sees the Father's work in like manner as the Father sees the Son's, and the Father praises not the work as one would praise work of another's doing, but recognizes it as His own, for whatsoever things the Father has done, the same does the Son, in like manner. [So was it written, that] you might understand one and the same work to be the work both of the Father and of the Son. And thus the Son does nothing save what is approved of by the Father, praised by the Father, willed by the Father, because His whole Being is of the Father; and He is not as the created being, which commits many faults, ofttimes offending the Will of its Creator, in lusting after and falling into sin. Nought, then, is of the Son's doing, save what is pleasing to the Father, forasmuch as one Will, one Purpose, is Theirs, one true Love, one effect of action.

67. Denique ut scias charitatis esse quod non potest Filius a se facere quidquam, nisi quod viderit facientem Patrem, cum praemisisset: Quaecumque ille fecerit, eadem et Filius facit similiter, subjecit: Pater enim diligit Filium. Ergo quod dixit Scriptura quia non potest, ad inseparabilis et individuae charitatis retulit unitatem.

68. Furthermore, to prove to you that it comes of Love, that the Son can do nothing of Himself save what He has seen the Father doing, the Apostle has added to the words, Whatsoever the Father has done, the same things does the Son also, in like manner, this reason: For the Father loves the Son, and thus Scripture refers the Son's inability to do, whereof it testifies, to unity in Love that suffers no separation or disagreement.

68. Quod si naturaliter est, ut vere est, inseparabilis charitas; inseparabilis utique est etiam operatio naturaliter: et impossibile ut opus Filii cum Patris non conveniat voluntate (Joan. XII, 50); quando id quod Filius operatur, operatur et Pater: et quod Pater operatur, operatur et Filius: et quod loquitur Filius, loquitur et Pater, sicut scriptum est (Joan. XIV, 10): Pater meus qui in me manet, ipse loquitur; et opera quae ego facio, ipse facit. Nihil enim Pater sine virtute atque sapientia sua condidit; quia omnia in sapientia fecit, sicut scriptum est: Omnia in sapientia fecisti (Psal. CIII, 24). Nihil etiam Deus Verbum sine Patre fecit.

69. But if the inseparableness of the Persons in Love rest, as it truly does, upon [identity of] nature, then surely they are also inseparable, for the same reason, in action, and it is impossible that the work of the Son should not be in agreement with the Father's Will, when what the Son works, the Father works also, and what the Father works, the Son works also, and what the Son speaks, the Father speaks also, as it is written: My Father, Who dwells in Me, He it is that speaks, and the works that I do He Himself does. John 14:10 For the Father appointed nought save by the exercise of His Power and Wisdom, forasmuch as He made all things wisely, as it is written: In wisdom have You made them all; and likewise, God the Word made nought without the Father's participation.

69. Non operatur sine Patre, non sine patria voluntate sacrosanctae illi se obtulit salutaris mundi totius hostia passioni, non sine patria voluntate mortuos suscitavit (Hebr. X, 10). Denique Lazarum suscitaturus levavit oculos sursum, et dixit: Pater, gratias ago tibi, quia audisti me: et ego sciebam quia semper me audis: sed propter turbam quae circumstat, dixi; ut credant quia tu me misisti (Joan. XI, 41, 42): ut quamvis ex personae hominis incarnati susceptione loqueretur, unitatem tamen paternae voluntatis et operationis exprimeret; quia Pater omnia audit, omnia videt quae vult Filius. Videt ergo et Pater facientem Filium, audit volentem. Denique non rogavit, et exauditum se esse dixit.

70. Not without the Father does He work; not without His Father's Will did He offer Himself for that most holy Passion, the Victim slain for the salvation of the whole world; not without His Father's Will concurring did He raise the dead to life. For example, when He was at the point to raise Lazarus to life, He lifted up His eyes and said, Father, I thank You, for that

You have heard Me. And I know that You always hear Me, but for the sake of the multitude that stands round I spoke, that they may believe that You have sent Me, John 11:40 in order that, though speaking agreeably to His assumed character of man, in the flesh, He might still express His oneness with the Father in will and operation, in that the Father hears all and sees all that the Son wills, and therefore also the Father sees the Son's doings, hears the utterances of His Will, for the Son made no request, and yet said that He had been heard.

70. Nec existimari potest quia non audit Pater, quod velit Filius: et ut scias quia semper auditur a Patre, non quasi servus, nec quasi propheta, sed quasi Filius: Et ego, inquit, sciebam quia semper me audis: sed propter turbam quae circumstat, dixi; ut credant quia tu me misisti. 534

71. Again, we cannot suppose that the Father hears not all, whatsoever the Son's will resolves; and to show that He is always heard by the Father, not as a servant, not as a prophet, but as Son, He said: And I know that Thou dost always hear Me, but for the sake of the multitude which stands round I spoke, that they may believe that You have sent Me.

71. Propter nos igitur gratias agit; ne eumdem Patrem, eumdemque Filium esse credamus, cum idem opus Patris audimus et Filii. Nam ut cognosceres non quasi infirmum gratias egisse, sed quasi Dei Filium semper sibi divinam potentiam vindicare, clamavit: Lazare, veni foras. Imperantis utique vox ista est, non precantis.

72. It is for our sakes, therefore, that He renders thanks, lest we should suppose that the Father and the Son are one and the same Person, when we hear of one and the same work being wrought by the Father and the Son. Further, to show us that His rendering of thanks had not been the tribute due from one wanting in power, that, on the contrary, He, as Son of God, ever claimed for Himself the possession of divine authority, He cried, Lazarus, come forth. Here, surely, is the voice of command, not of prayer.

CAPUT VII.

PROPOSITA DOCTRINA HINC confirmatur, quod Filius sit Patris Verbum, non quale nostrum, sed vivum et operatorium; atque adeo non possit negari ejusdem cum Patre voluntatis, potestatis ac substantiae.

CHAPTER 7.

The doctrine had in view for enforcement is corroborated by the truth that the Son is the Word of the Father — the Word, not in the sense in which we understand the term, but a living and active Word. This being so, we cannot deny Him to be of the same Will, Power, and Substance with the Father.

72. Sed ut ad superiora redeamus, et proposita concludamus, facit quasi Verbum Filius voluntatem Patris. Verbum hoc nostrum utique prolativum est, syllabae sunt, sonus est; et tamen a sensu nostro, et mente non discrepat, et quae interiori tenemus affectu, ea tamquam operantis Verbi testificatione signamus. Sed non sermo noster operatur, solum est Verbum Dei, quod nec prolativum est, nec quod ἐνδιάθετον dicunt; sed quod operatur, et vivit, et sanat.

73. To return, however, to what we had in hand before, and finish the task set before us. The Son, as the Word, carries out His Father's Will. Now, a word, as we understand and use it, is an utterance. There are syllables and sounds, which, however, are not at variance with the thought of our mind, and what we apprehend and are affected by inwardly we give token of by the testimony of the spoken word, which, as it were, works [for us]. But the words we speak have no direct efficacy in themselves, it is the Word of God alone, which is neither an utterance, nor an inward concept, as they call it, but works efficaciously, is living, and has healing power.

73. Vis scire quale Verbum? Audi dicentem: Vivum est enim Verbum Dei, et validum atque operatorium et acutum, et penetrabilius omni gladio acutissimo, penetrans usque ad divisionem animae et spiritus, artuumque et medullarum (Hebr. IV, 12).

74. Would you know what is the nature of the Word — hear the Scriptures. For the Word of God is living and mighty, yea, working effectually, sharp and keener than any the sharpest sword, piercing even to the sundering of soul and spirit, of limbs and marrow. Hebrews 4:12

74. Verbum igitur audis Dei Filium, et a patria voluntate et potestate secernis? Audis quia vivit, audis quia sanat: noli ergo nostro comparare verbo. Si enim verbum nostrum quae non obtutu viderit, non auditu audierit, loquitur; et loquitur tamen cognita per quaedam naturae humanae interna mysteria: quomodo non impius, qui secundum divinitatem in Dei Verbo et obtutum quemdam corporeum exigit, et auditum: et putat quod non possit a se quidquam facere Filius, nisi quod Patrem facientem viderit; cum per unitatem, ut diximus, ejusdem substantiae, idem velle atque idem nolle et idem posse et in Patre sit et in Filio et in Spiritu sancto?

75. Do you hear, then, the Word of God, and will you separate Him from the Father’s Will and Power? You hear Him called the living Word, the healing Word — seek not then to compare Him with the word of our mouth; for if the word we utter, though it have not eyes to see, nor ears to hear, yet speaks, and still the knowledge of what it speaks is wrought by virtue of hidden mysteries of man’s nature, how can he escape the charge of blasphemy, who requires that some sort of bodily vision and hearing shall go along with the Godhead in the Word of God, and thinks that the Son can do nothing of Himself, save what He shall have seen the Father doing, though (as we have said) there is in the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit the same Will, both to do and not to do, and the same Power, by reason of unity in the same substance.

75. Quod si homines plerumque sensuum qualitate discreti, tamen unius propositi intentione concordant; quid de Patre nos et Dei Filio congruit aestimare: cum id quod humana imitatur charitas, substantia divina possideat?

76. But if, though men are, as a rule, different in respect of their thoughts and feelings, they yet agree as to the meaning of a single proposition, what ought we to think as concerning the Father and the Son of God, seeing that in the Substance of the Godhead there is that is imitated by human love?

76. Ponamus tamen, sicut ipsi volunt, quia quasi in exemplari, quod viderit Patrem facientem, Filius faciat. Et hoc utique ejusdem substantiae est; nullus enim potest alterius imitationem operationis implere nisi qui ejusdem naturae habeat unitatem.

77. Let us, however, suppose — as our adversaries would have it — that the Son does, as it were, copy the pattern of that which He has seen His Father doing. But even this, we must confess, means that He is of the same substance, for none can completely imitate the working of another, unless he be one with him in the same nature.

CAPUT VIII.

HAERETICORUM OBJECTIONEM, QUA Filium quod alium generare non possit, Patri negabant esse aequalem, primo in adversarios ipsos retorquet: deinde hominum ostendit exemplis quod quispiam generet aut secus, ad potentiam non pertinere; maxime cum alioqui ipsemet Pater minus potens dicendus esset. Inde colligit divina ex humanis non esse judicanda, sed standum Scripturae auctoritate. Postremo omnipotentiam vel Patri abjudicandam, vel adjudicandam Filio ubi demonstravit, ipsos si filios non genuerint, propriis servis qui sobolem procreaverint, minus potentes fore inducit, proindeque totam eorum disputationem ineptam esse.

CHAPTER 8.

The heretical objection, that the Son cannot be equal to the Father, because He cannot beget a Son, is turned back upon the authors of it. From the case of human nature it is shown that whether a person begets offspring or not, has nothing to do with his power. Most of all must this be true since, otherwise, the Father Himself would have to be pronounced wanting in power. Whence it follows that we have no right to judge of divine things by human, and must take our stand upon the authority of Holy Writ, otherwise we must deny all power either to the Father or to the Son.

[Alias cap. VI.] Illud ridiculum est, Imperator auguste, quod quidam hoc etiam ad inaequalitatem Dei Patris et Filii objiciendum usurpare consuerunt, quod dicant omnipotentem Patrem esse, quod generavit Filium: negent autem omnipotentem Filium, dicentes quia generare non potuit.

78. There is a fool’s demurrer, your Majesty, which certain persons are given to raising, in order to show the Father and the Son to be not equal together, saying that the Father is Almighty, because He has begotten the Son, but that the Son is not Almighty, because He has not been able to beget.

78. Sed vide quemadmodum saeva impietas; ut dialectica philosophorum se ipsa convincat. Hac enim quaestione aut coaeternum Patri Filium necesse est sua voce fateantur, aut si principium temporis Filio aliquod ascribunt, principium potentiae necesse est tribuant etiam Patri. Ita cum omnipotentem Filium negant, incipiunt, quod nefas dictu est, asserere per Filium Patrem omnipotentem esse coepisse.

79. But see how wild is their blasphemy, how their philosophers' logic confutes itself. For the raising of this question must lead either to their confessing with their own mouths that the Son is co-eternal with the Father, or, if they impose a beginning upon the Son's existence, to their assigning of necessity a beginning to the Father's power. When, therefore, they deny that the Son is Almighty, they are on the road to assert — which is impious — that the Father began to be Almighty by help of the Son.

79. Nam si per generationem omnipotens Pater, utique aut coaeternus Patri Filius est; quia si semper omnipotens Pater, sempiternus et Filius: aut si fuit, quando non erat Filius sempiternus; fuit ergo quando non erat omnipotens Pater. Nam cum volunt dicere Filium aliquando coepisse, in illud recidunt, ut et Patris potentiam dicant non semper fuisse, sed ex Filii generatione coepisse. Ita dum Filio Dei cupiunt derogare, plus tribuunt; ut contra fas omne auctorem paternae potentiae declarare videantur; cum Filius dicat: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15). hoc est, non quae Patri ipse tradiderit, sed quae a Patre jure generationis acceperit.

80. For if the Father is Almighty by reason of begetting the Son, then, certainly, either the Son is co-eternal with the Father, because if the Father is eternally Almighty, then the Son also is eternal, or, if there was a time when there was not an eternal Son, there was by consequence a time when there was not an Almighty Father. For when they would make out that there was a time when the Son began to be, they are sliding back into [the error of] saying that the Father's Power also has not been from everlasting, but began to be in consequence of the generation of the Son. So, in their desire to do dishonour to the Son of God, they do so increase His honour as to seem to make Him, contrary to all right belief, the source of His Father's Power, though the Son says, All things that the Father has are Mine John 16:15 — that is to say, not the things which He has bestowed upon the Father, but which He has received from the Father, by right as the Son Whom the Father has begotten.

80. Et ideo Filium sempiternam dicimus esse virtutem: si ergo sempiterna ejus virtus atque divinitas, utique et potentia ejus est sempiterna. Filio igitur qui derogat, Patri derogat, pietatem offendit, violat charitatem. Nos honorificemus Filium, in quo Pater complacet; placet enim Patri ut laudetur Filius, in quo ipse complacuit.

81. And therefore we do declare the Son to be Eternal Power; Romans 1:20 if, then, His Power and Godhead be eternal, surely His Sovereignty is eternal also. He, then, who dishonours the Son dishonours the Father, and is an enemy and offender against duty and love. Let us honour the Son, in Whom the Father is well pleased, for it is the Father's pleasure that praise be given to the Son, in Whom He Himself is well pleased.

81. Respondeamus tamen intentioni eorum, ne epilogo quodam invidiam quaestionis declinasse videamur. Generavit, inquiunt, Pater. 536 non generavit Filius. Quod hic argumentum est inaequalitatis? Generatio enim paternae proprietatis est, non potentiae: et pietas aequat, non separat. Denique in ipso usu nostrae infirmitatis frequenter evenire cognoscimus, ut et infirmi filios habeant, et non habeant fortiores: habeant servi, non habeant domini: habeant inopes, non habeant qui potentes sunt.

82. Let us, however, make answer to the conclusion they strive to establish; but we seem to have sought, in pursuit of a personal appeal, to escape from the difficulty of treating the question before us. The Father, they say, has begotten a Son; the Son has not. What proof is this that they are not equal? To beget is the Father's natural function, as a Father, and no necessary outcome of His Sovereign Power. Furthermore, dutiful regard places persons on an equality with each other, and does not sunder them. Again, our own experience of what holds good among us frail mortals teaches us that it may frequently happen that weak men have sons, while stronger men have not; that slaves have children, while their masters are childless; and that the poor beget offspring, while rich men are unblessed with any.

82. Sed si dicunt et hoc infirmitatis esse, quia volunt homines filios habere; nec possunt: quamvis humana non sint conferenda divinis, intelligant tamen inter ipsos quoque homines non potentiae esse, sed paternae proprietatis, habere filios, vel non habere: nec in potestate nostrae voluntatis esse generare, sed in corporis qualitate; nam si esset potentiae, utique potentior multos haberet. Ergo non est potentiae habere filios vel non habere.

83. But if our adversaries say that this too may be the result of infirmity, inasmuch as men may desire to beget children, but be unable to do so; then, though things divine are not to be judged of and determined by things human, yet let them understand that with men also, as with God, whether one has children or no, is not dependent upon or derived of his authoritative power, but upon the personal attributes of a father, and that begetting lies not in the power of our will, but is contingent upon our qualities of body; for if it were a matter of sovereign authority, then the mightier king would have the greater number of sons. To have sons, then, or to be childless, therefore, is not in necessary connection or relation to sovereign authority. Is it, then, so with nature?

83. Numquid naturae est? Si naturae infirmitatem putatis, et ad humana vos confertis exempla, eadem Patris est natura quae Filii est. Itaque aut verum Filium dicitis, et Patri in Filio derogatis per unitatem ejusdem naturae (sicut enim Pater natura Deus est, ita et Filius: deos autem ait Apostolus (I Cor. VIII, 5) non natura deos esse, sed dici); aut si negatis esse verum Filium, hoc est, ejusdem naturae, non est ergo generatus: si non est generatus Filius, non generavit Pater.

84. If you [my Arian adversaries] regard what you object as natural weakness, and rely upon examples taken from the nature of mankind, remember that the Father's nature is the same as the Son's, and therefore you do either confess the Son to be a true Son, and dishonour the Father in the Person of the Son, by reason of Their unity in one and the same Nature (for as the Father is by Nature God, so also is the Son; whereas the Apostle says that the gods many are not so by nature, but are only so called); or, if you deny Him to be a true Son, that is to say, possessing the same Nature, then He is not begotten, and if the Son is not begotten, the Father did not beget Him.

84. Colligitur itaque juxta sententiam vestram, ut non sit omnipotens Deus Pater; quia generare non potuit, si non generavit Filium, sed creavit. Sed quia omnipotens Pater, cum juxta sententiam vestram solus generator omnipotens sit, generavit utique Filium, non creavit. Verum ipsi magis quam vobis credendum est. Ille ait: Genui (Psal. CIX, 3); et frequenter ait, generationis suae testis.

85. The conclusion we come at, therefore, on the line of your persuasion, is that God the Father is not Almighty, because He could not beget, if He did not beget the Son, but created Him. But forasmuch as the Father is Almighty, He being, as you hold, the Almighty in so far as He is the only Author of Being, then surely He has begotten His Son, and not created Him. Howbeit, we ought to believe His word before yours. He says: I have begotten, and that more than once, witnessing to Himself as begetting.

85. Non est ergo naturae, non est potentiae in Christo aliqua, quia non generavit, infirmitas; quia generatio, sicut saepe jam diximus, non ad sublimitatem potentiae, sed ad proprietatem refertur naturae. Nam si ideo omnipotens Pater, quia Filium habet; omnipotentior ergo esse potuit, si plures haberet.

86. It is no sign, then, of infirmity, whether of nature or authority, in Christ, that He has not begotten, for to beget, as we have already said ofttimes, bears no relation to supremacy of authority, but to a personal property in a nature. For if the Omnipotence of the Father is thereby constituted, that He has a Son, then He might have been more Almighty had He begotten more Sons.

86. An vero potentia ejus in una generatione defecit? At ego ostendam et Christum habere filios, quos quotidie generat, sed ea generatione, vel potius regeneratione, quae potestatis est, non naturae; adoptio enim potestatis est, generatio proprietatis. Quod ipsa Scriptura nos docuit; dicit enim Joannes quia in hoc mundo erat, et mundus per ipsum factus est, et mundus eum non cognovit. In propria venit, et sui eum non receperunt. Quotquot autem receperunt eum, dedit illis potestatem filios Dei fieri, his qui credunt in nomine ejus (Joan. I, 10 et seq).

87. Then is His power exhausted in the begetting of One? Nay, but I will show that Christ also has sons, whom He begets every day, but with that generation, or rather regeneration, which is related to personal authority rather than nature, for adoption is the exercise and bestowal of authority, and generation the manifestation of a property, as Scripture itself has taught us: for John says that He was in this world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came to His own, and His own received Him not. But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become sons of God, to them which believe in His Name.

87. Didicimus itaque potestatis esse, quod 537 nos filios Dei fecit: proprietatis autem generationem esse oracula divina declarant; dicit enim Sapientia Dei: Ex ore Altissimi prodivi (Eccl. XXIV, 5), hoc est, non coacta, sed libera: non potestati obnoxia, sed nata generationis arcano, privilegio dominationis et jure potestatis. Denique de eadem Sapientia, hoc est, de Domino Jesu, alibi Pater dicit: Ex utero ante Luciferum genui te (Psal. CIX, 3).

88. We say, therefore, that it is the function and exercise of His Authority that He has made us sons of God, whereas the oracles of God discover that His generation is in relation to personal attribute, for the Wisdom of God says: I came forth out of the mouth of the Most High, Sirach 24:5 that is to say not of compulsion, but free, not under bond of authority, but born in a hidden birth, according to personal powers of Supreme Sovereignty and rightfulness of authority. Again, concerning the same Wisdom, Which is the Lord Jesus, the Father says in another place: Out of the womb I begot You, before the morning star.

88. Quod utique ideo dixit, non ut corporalem alvum declararet, sed ut proprietatem verae generationis ostenderet. Nam si ad corporalem referas, ergo omnipotens Pater cum dolore et conceptione generavit. Sed absit, ut Deum ex infirmitate corporis metiamur. Est quidam uterus paternae arcanum substantiae, interiusque secretum, quod non Angeli, non Archangeli, non Potestates, non Dominationes, non aliqua creaturarum potuit penetrare natura. Cum Patre enim semper, et in Patre semper est Filius: cum Patre per distinctionem indissociabilem Trinitatis aeternae, in Patre per divinae unitatem naturae.

89. Now this He said, not to make us think of a bodily womb, but to show that true generation is His proper activity, for if we understand the words as speaking of generation from a body, then [we imply] the Father Almighty conceived and brought forth in travail. But far be it from us that we should make this weak bodily frame the measure of God's greatness. The word womb represents the hidden mystery, the inner sanctuary of the Father's being, into which neither angels nor archangels nor powers nor dominations, nor any created nature, has been able to enter. For the Son is always with the Father, and in the Father — with the Father, by virtue of the distinction, without division, proper to the Eternal Trinity; in the Father, by reason of the essential unity of the Divine Nature.

89. Quis igitur hic arbiter divinitatis, qui discutiat Patrem ac Filium: ille, quare generaverit: iste, cur non generaverit? Servulum suum aut ancillulam cur non generaverit, nemo condemnat: isti condemnant, cur non generaverit Christus; condemnant enim sua opinione, cum derogant. Nec conjugibus inter se cur non generaverint, aut charitas minuitur, aut meritum derogatur: isti quia non generavit, Christi minuunt potestatem.

90. What room here, then, for one to sit in judgment upon the Godhead, to call in question the Father and the Son — the One for begetting, the Other for not begetting. No man condemns his servant or handmaid for begetting (or bearing) offspring; but those Arians condemn Christ for not begetting — they do condemn Him, for they privately pass sentence of condemnation upon Him, when they take from His glory and dignity. The question, why they have not begotten offspring, does not lead those who are joined in marriage into loss of their love, or denial of each other's merits, but the Arians, because Christ has not begotten a Son, make light of His sovereignty.

90. Cur, inquiunt, Filius Pater non est? Quia et Pater Filius non est. Cur non iste generavit? Quia nec ille generatus est. Nec ideo minus habet Filius, quia Pater non est: nec Pater minus habet, quia Filius non est. Dixit enim Filius: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15). Adeo generatio in paterna proprietate non in jure est potestatis.

91. Why, ask they, is the Son not a Father? Because, on the other side, the Father is not a Son. Why has not Christ begotten? Even because the Father is not begotten. Yet the Son stands none the lower, because He is not a Father; nor the Father, because He is not a Son, for the Son said: All things that the Father has are Mine John 16:15 — so truly is generation involved in the Father's personal attributes, and comes not by mere right of sovereignty.

91. Est quaedam indistincta distinctae incomprehensibilis et inenarrabilis substantia Trinitatis. Distinctionem etenim accepimus Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti, non confusionem: distinctionem, non separationem: distinctionem, non pluralitatem. Divino itaque admirandoque mysterio manentem semper accipimus Patrem, semper Filium, semper Spiritum sanctum: non duos Patres, non duos Filios, non duos Spiritus. Unus enim Deus Pater, ex quo omnia, et nos in ipso: et unus Dominus Jesus, per quem omnia, et nos per ipsum (I Cor. VIII, 6). Unus natus ex Patre Dominus Jesus, et ideo unigenitus. Unus et Spiritus sanctus (I Cor. XII, 11), ut idem Apostolus dixit: Sic accipimus, sic legimus, sic tenemus. Distinctionem scimus, secreta nescimus: causas non discutimus, sacramenta servamus.

92. The Substance of the Trinity is, so to say, a common Essence in that which is distinct, an incomprehensible, ineffable Substance. We hold the distinction, not the confusion of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; a distinction without separation; a distinction without plurality; and thus we believe in Father, Son, and Holy Spirit as each existing from and to eternity in this divine and wonderful Mystery: not in two Fathers, nor in two Sons, nor in two Spirits. For there is one God, the Father, of Whom are all things, and we in Him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by Whom are all things, and we by Him. 1 Corinthians 8:6 There is One born of the Father, the Lord Jesus, and therefore He is the Only-begotten. There is also One Holy Spirit, 1 Corinthians 12:11 as the same Apostle has said. So we believe, so we read, so we hold. We know the fact of distinction, we know nothing of the hidden mysteries; we pry not into the causes, but keep the outward signs vouchsafed unto us.

92. Facinus indignum, ut qui generationis suae facultatem non habent, divinae generationis examen sibi arrogent, vindicent potestatem: 538 Negent ergo aequalem Patri Filium, quia non generavit Filius: negent aequalem Patri Filium, quia Patrem habet. Hoc si de hominibus dicerent, quorum aliqui volunt filios habere, nec possunt, injuriam putaremus: sic etiamsi inter duos honore pares habenti filios qui non habet, negaretur aequalis. Et ideo hoc, inquam, grave et de ipsis hominibus videtur, ut quis ideo minor putetur, quod Patrem habet. Nisi forte tamquam constitutum in familia putant Christum dolere, quod emancipatus a Patre non sit, et administrandi patrimonii non habeat facultatem. Sed non est Christus in sacris, qui sacra universa destruxit.

93. O monstrous wickedness, that they who have no power over their own procreation should claim and usurp power to enquire into the Divine Generation! Let them deny, them, that the Son is equal to the Father, forasmuch as He has not begotten; let them deny that the Son is equal to the Father, because He has a Father! But if they talked after this fashion about men, who sometimes desire to beget sons, yet cannot, we should call it an insult, just as we should so call it, if of two men, one having sons and the other childless, the latter were said to be inferior to the former on that ground. So monstrous also, I say, does it seem, in regard simply to men, that one should therefore be esteemed the more lightly because he has a father. Peradventure, indeed, the Arians suppose that Christ is in the position of one in a family, and frets because He is not set free and independent of His Father's authority, and is not empowered to administer the estate. But Christ is not under tutelage; nay, rather has He abolished all tutelage.

93. Quomodo volunt tamen, respondeant, verane generatio sit, et verus Filius ex Deo Patre natus, hoc est, ex substantia Patris, an ex alia natus substantia? Si enim dicunt ex Patre, hoc est, ex Dei substantia, convenit; quia ex substantia Patris Filium dicunt. Ergo quia unius substantiae, unius utique potentiae. Si vero ex alia substantia Filius est, quomodo omnipotens Pater est, et omnipotens Filius non est? Quid enim praestantius si ex alia substantia Filium Deus fecit, cum utique et Filius ex alia nos substantia filios Dei fecerit? Ergo aut unius substantiae Filius cum Patre, aut unius potentiae.

94. How then, let them tell us, would they have these things to be? — a true generation, the true Son begotten of God the Father, that is, of the Substance of the Father, or of another substance? If they say begotten of the Father, that is, of the Substance of God, well and good, for then they acknowledge the Son as begotten of the Substance of the Father. If, then, they are of one Substance, surely they are also of one sovereign Power. Whereas, if the Son is begotten of another substance, how can the Father be Almighty, and the Son not Almighty? For what advantage has God, if He have made His Son of another substance, when confessedly the Son, on His part, has of another substance made us sons of God? The Son, therefore, is either of one Substance with the Father, or of one sovereign Power.

94. Friget igitur eorum quaestio, quia de Christo judicare non possunt; immo quia vincit ille, cum judicatur. Digni tamen sunt isti judicio suo, qui hanc objiciunt quaestionem. Si enim ideo aequalis Patri Filius non est, quia non generavit Filium, et isti utique fateantur, si non habent filios, qui serunt hujusmodi quaestiones, suos sibi etiam servulos preferendos, eo quod habentibus filios aequales esse non possunt. Si autem habent filios, non putent sibi meritum, sed filiorum juri deferri.

95. Our adversaries' question, then, falls flat, because they cannot judge Christ — or rather, because He is clear, when He is judged. They are worthy, however, to be condemned upon their own sentence, who raise this question against us, for if the Son be therefore not equal to the Father, because He has not begotten a Son, then by all means let them who sow discussions of this kind confess, if they have not children, that their very servants are to be preferred before themselves, inasmuch as they cannot be the equals of those who have children — whereas, if they have children, let them regard the merit thereof as due not to themselves, but of right to their sons.

95. Non consistit igitur haec quaestio, quia aequalis Filius Patri ideo esse non possit, quia Pater generaverit Filium, Filius nullum ex se ipse generaverit. Nam et fons fluvium generat, et fluvius fontem ex se ipse non generat: et lux splendorem generat, non splendor lucem; et una natura est splendoris et lucis.

96. The objection, then, holds not together, that the Son cannot be equal to the Father, by reason of the Father having begotten the Son, while the Son has begotten no Son of Himself, for the spring begets the stream, though the stream begets no spring out of itself, and light begets radiance, and not radiance light, yet the nature of radiance and light is one.

CAPUT IX.

VARIAS ARIANORUM CAPTIUNCULAS, queis Filium coepisse argutabantur, profert et explodit. Nam praeter quam quod eos aut contra se, aut nihil efficere constat; cum rerum omnium principio non possit esse principium, in humanis etiam eorum argumentatio vitiosa est. Tempus igitur non praecessisse auctorem suum: qui si aliquando non fuit, tunc Pater fuit sine sua virtute ac sapientia. Denique ubi humanis exemplis ostensum est aliquem priusquam nascatur, esse dici, haereticorum temeritatem detestatur.

CHAPTER 9.

Various quibbling arguments, advanced by the Arians to show that the Son had a beginning of existence, are considered and refuted, on the ground that while the Arians plainly prove nothing, or if they prove anything, prove it against themselves, (inasmuch as He Who is the beginning of all cannot Himself have a beginning), their reasonings do not even hold true with regard to facts of human existence. Time could not be before He was, Who is the Author of time — if indeed at some time He was not in existence, then the Father was without His Power and Wisdom. Again, our own human experience shows that a person is said to exist before he is born.

96. Unde cum inaequalitatem ex generationis objectu probare non potuerint, 539 intelligant etiam illam divulgatam suae calumniam quaestionis explosam. Solent enim proponere: Quomodo aequalis potest esse Filius Patri? Nam si Filius est, antequam generaretur non erat: aut si erat, cur natus est? Et Arianos se negare consuerunt, qui proponunt Arii quaestiones?

97. Now that our opponents have failed to maintain their objection against the truth of His Son's equality with the Father, on the ground of His Generation, let them see that their well known device of controversy, their stock misrepresentation, is frustrated. Their common use is to propound this riddle: How can the Son be equal with the Father? If He is a Son, then before He was begotten He was not in existence. If He was in existence, why was He begotten? And men who advance difficulties raised by Arius yet sturdily deny that they are Arians.

97. Itaque exigunt a nobis responsionem, ut si dixerimus: Antequam generaretur, erat, astute referant: Ergo antequam generaretur, creatus est, et non differt a caeteris creaturis: quia prius coepit creatura esse quam Filius. Et adjiciunt: Cur qui erat, natus est? An quia imperfectus erat, ut postea perfectior fieret? Si autem responderimus quia non erat, objiciunt statim: Ei ergo generatio contulit ut esset, qui non erat antequam nasceretur; ut hinc colligant: Erat ergo, quando non erat Filius.

98. Accordingly, they demand our answer, intending, if we say, The Son existed before He was begotten, to meet us with a subtle retort, that If so, then, before He was begotten, He was created, and there is no difference between Him and the rest of created beings, for He began to be a creature before He began to be the Son. To which they add: Why was He begotten, when He was already in existence? Because He was imperfect, and in order that He might afterwards be made more perfect? Whilst if we reply that the Son did not exist before He was begotten, they will immediately reply: Then by being begotten He was brought into existence, not having existed before He was begotten, so as to lead on from this to the conclusion that the Son existed, when He did not exist.

98. Sed qui hoc proponunt, et obscuritate volunt involvere veritatem: dicant ipsi utrum temporaliter generet Pater, an intemporaliter. Si enim temporaliter dixerint, quod Filio objiciunt, Patri ascribent; ut videatur Pater coepisse esse, quod non erat: si intemporaliter, quid superest, nisi ut ipsi solvant quam proposuerint quaestionem; ut cum generationem Patris abnuant temporalem, generationem quoque Filii temporalem non esse fateantur?

99. But let those who propound this difficulty and endeavour to enwrap the truth in a cloud tell us themselves whether the Father exerts His power of begetting within or without limits of time. If they say within limits of time, then they will attribute to the Father what they object against the Son, so as to make the Father seem to have begun to be what He was not before. If their answer is without such limits, then what is left them but to resolve for themselves the problem they have propounded, and acknowledge that the Son is not begotten under limits and conditions of time, since they deny that the Father so begets?

99. Si ergo non est generatio ejus ex tempore, aestimari datur quod nihil praecesserit ante Filium, qui non sit ex tempore. Si enim aliquid ante Filium, jam non sunt in ipso creata omnia, quae vel in coelo sunt vel in terris, et Apostolus redarguitur, qui hoc in epistola sua (Coloss. I, 16) scripserit: quod si nihil ante generationem, non adverto cur posterior asseratur, quem nemo praecessit.

100. If the Son, then, is not begotten within limits of time, we are free to judge that nothing can have existed before the Son, Whose being is not confined by time. If, indeed, there was anything in being before the Son, then it instantly follows that in Him were not created all things in heaven or in earth, and the Apostle is shown to have erred in so setting it down in his Epistle, Colossians 1:16 whereas, if before He was begotten there was nothing, I see not wherefore He, before Whom none was, should be said to have been after any.

100. Connectenda est alia eorum plena impietatis objectio, quae latentem habeat dolum, quo sensus facilium, mentesque perstringat. Interrogant enim, utrum omne quod finem habet, aliquando coeperit. Et si acceperint ejusmodi responsionem, quia quod finem habet, coepit aliquando; referunt, utrum Pater desierit generare Filium. Quod cum tenuerint, nostro aspirante consensu, contexunt: Coepit ergo generatio. Id si non abnuas, consequi videtur, ut si coepit generatio, videatur in eo coepta, qui natus est; ut natus esse dicatur, qui ante non fuerat, unde definiant: Aliquando ergo Filius non fuit.

101. With the consideration whereof we must join another most blasphemous objection of theirs, which covers a subtle purpose to confuse the sense and understanding of simple folk. They ask whether everything that comes to an end had also at any time a beginning. If they are told that what has an end also had a beginning, then they return to the charge with the question whether the Father has ceased to beget His Son. This by our consent being granted them, they conclude that the generation of the Son had a beginning. The which if you allow, it seems to follow that if the Generation had a beginning, it appears to have begun in Him Who was begotten; so that one, who had not existed before, may be called begotten — their intent being to close the inquiry by laying down as conclusive that there was a time when the Son existed not.

101. Adjiciunt alias ineptias loquacitatis suae, dicentes: Si Verbum Patris Filius est, et ideo genitus dicitur, quia Verbum est: quod autem Verbum est, opus non est: multifariam locutus est Pater (Hebr. I, 1); multos ergo generavit filios, si non operatus est, sed locutus est Verbum. Amentes homines! quasi non intelligant, quid intersit inter prolativum sermonem, et in aeternum permanens Dei Verbum ex Patre natum: 540 natum utique, non prolatum: in quo non composita syllaba, sed plenitudo divinitatis aeternae est, et vita sine fine.

102. Besides this, there are other vain objections, such as persons of their glibness of tongue would readily urge. If, say they, the Son is the Word of the Father, then He is called begotten, inasmuch as He is the Word. But then since He is the Word, He is not a work. Now the Father has spoken in various manners, Hebrews 1:1 whence it follows that He has begotten many Sons, if He has spoken His Word, not created it as a work of His hands. O fools, talking as though they knew not the difference between the word uttered and the Divine Word, abiding eternally, born of the Father — born, I say, not uttered only — in Whom is no combination of syllables, but the fullness of the eternal Godhead and life without end!

102. Subtexunt aliam impietatem, proponentes utrum volens, an invitus generaverit Pater; ut si dixerimus volentem, antiquiorem generatione voluntatem videamur fateri, et referant quia non sit Filius coaeternus Patri, quem aliquid antecessit: aut quia et ipse sit creatura; quia scriptum est: Omnia quae voluit, fecit (Psal. CXIII, 11); cum hoc ipsum non de Patre et Filio, sed de his quas Filius fecit, dictum sit creaturis. Sin autem invitum Patrem generasse responderimus, invalidum Patrem dixisse videamur.

103. Follows another blasphemy, whereby they enquire whether it was of His own free will, or on compulsion, that the Father begot [His Son], intending, if we say, Of His own free will, that we should appear as though we acknowledged that the Father's Will preceded the [Divine] Generation, and to answer that there being something that preceded the existence of the Son, the Son is not co-eternal with the Father, or that He, like the rest of the world, is a being created, forasmuch as it is written, He has made all things, as many as He would, though this is spoken, not of the Father and the Son, but of those creatures which the Son made. Whereas if we answered that the Father begot [His Son] on compulsion, we should seem to have attributed infirmity to the Father.

103. Sed mihi in sempiterna generatione praecedit, nec velle, nec nolle: ergo nec invitum dixerim, nec volentem; quia generatio non in voluntatis possibilitate est, sed in jure quodam et proprietate paterni videtur esse secreti. Nam sicut bonus Pater non aut ex voluntate est, aut necessitate, sed super utrumque, hoc est, natura; ita non generat ex voluntate aut necessitate Pater.

104. But in the eternal Generation there is no foregoing condition, neither of will, nor of unwillingness, and therefore I can neither say that the Father begot of His free Will, nor yet that He begot on compulsion, for to beget depends not upon possibility as determined by will, but rather appears to stand in a certain right and property of the hidden being of the Father. For just as the Father is not good because He wills to be so, or is compelled to be so, but is above these conditions — is good, that is, by nature, — even so the putting forth of His generative power is neither of will nor of necessity.

104. Esto tamen, sit generatio in voluntate generantis, quando hanc voluntatem fuisse dicunt? Si in principio, in principio utique Filius: si sempiterna voluntas, sempiternus et Filius: si coepit voluntas, displicuit igitur sibi quod erat Deus Pater, ut mutaret statum. Displicuit ergo sibi sine Filio, placere coepit sibi in Filio.

105. Yet let us grant their proposal. Granted that the Generation depends on the Will of Him Who generates; when do they say that this act of will took place? If it was in the beginning, then, plainly, the Son was in the beginning. If the Will is eternal, then the Son also is eternal. If the Will began to exist, then God the Father, as He was, was so displeased with Himself, that He made a change in His condition, that is to say, without His Son He was displeasing to Himself; in His Son He began to be well pleased.

105. Jam illa consequentia ut dicamus: Si studium generandi nostro more assumpsit, ergo et caetera quae generationem praecedere solent, nostro more assumpsit; nostro autem usu generationis votum est, non voluntas.

106. To follow out the consequences thereof. If the Father conceived, after the manner of human nature, a desire to beget, then did He also pass through all the experiences which befal men before the birth takes place — but we find that generation is not determined merely by will, but is an object of wish.

106. Produnt igitur impietatem suam, qui volunt generationem coepisse Christi; ut videatur non generatio illa Verbi manentis, sed prolatio fluentis esse sermonis: deinde multos inducendo filios, negent in Christo divinae proprietatem naturae; ut nec unigenitus, nec primogenitus aestimetur: postremo ut si principium credatur accepisse, etiam finem videatur habiturus.

107. Thus do they betray their own ungodliness, who would have it that Christ's generation had a beginning, in order that it may seem, not that true begetting of the Word abiding, but the utterance of words that pass and are forgotten, and that by intrusion of [the premiss of] a multitude of sons, they may [be warranted to] deny Christ's personal possession of the divine attributes, to the end that He may be regarded as neither the only-begotten nor the first-begotten Son; and lastly, that given the belief that His existence had a beginning, it may also be deemed as appointed to have an end.

107. Sed neque principium assumpsit aliquando Dei Filius, qui erat in principio (Joan. I, 1): neque finem habebit, qui est principium universitatis et finis (Joan. VIII, 20). Nam cum sit principium, quomodo quod habebat, accepit? aut quomodo sui finem habebit; cum omnium ipse sit finis, ut in illo fine sine fine maneamus? Dei enim generatio cum temporalis non sit, nec ante se, nec in se tempus invenit.

108. But neither had the Son of God any beginning, seeing that He already was at the beginning, nor shall He come to an end, Who is the Beginning and the End of the Universe; for being the Beginning, how could He take and receive that which He already had, or how shall He come to an end, being Himself the End of all things, so that in that End we have an abiding-place without end? The Divine Generation is not an event occurring in the course of time, and within its limits, and therefore before it time is not, and in it time has no place.

108. Frigida igitur eorum et vana quaestio in creaturis ipsis non habet locum; ipsa etenim quae temporalia sunt, discretionem in quibusdam habere temporis non videntur. Lux nempe splendorem generat, nec comprehendi potest quod splendor luce posterior sit, aut lux splendore antiquior; quia ubi lumen est, splendor 541 est: et ubi splendor, etiam lumen est. Itaque nec sine splendore lumen, nec splendor potest esse sine lumine; quia et in splendore lumen, et splendor in lumine est. Unde et Apostolus splendorem paternae gloriae Filium dixit (Hebr. I, 3); quia splendor paternae lucis est Filius: coaeternus, propter virtutis aeternitatem: inseparabilis, propter claritudinis unitatem.

109. Again, their aimless and futile question finds no loophole for entry, even when directed upon the creation itself; nay, indeed, temporal existences appear, in certain cases, to admit of no division of time. For instance, light generates radiance, but we can neither conceive that the radiance begins to exist after the light, nor that the light is in existence before the radiance, for where there is a light, there is radiance, and where there is radiance there is also a light; and thus we can neither have a light without radiance, nor radiance without light, because both the light is in the radiance, and the radiance in the light. Thus the Apostle was taught to call the Son the Radiance of the Father's Glory, Hebrews 1:3 for the Son is the Radiance of His Father's light, co-eternal, because of eternity of Power; inseparable, by unity of brightness.

109. Ergo si temporalia et aerea haec comprehendere et separare non possumus, quae videmus; Deum quem non videmus, qui super omnem est creaturam, in ipso suae generationis arcano possumus comprehendere? Possumus eum a Filio tempore separare, cum omne tempus opus Filii sit?

110. If then we can neither understand the mystery of, nor dissociate, these created objects in the sky above us, which we see, can we comprehend Him Whom we see not, Who is above every created existence, God, as He is in the very Holy of Holies of His own Generation? Can we make time a barrier between Him and the Son, when all time is the creation of the Son?

110. Desinant ergo dicere: Et antequam generaretur, non erat. Ante enim temporis est, generatio ante tempora; et ideo quod posterius est, prius non est: nec opus ante auctorem potest esse; cum opera ipsa principium de operatore suo sumant. Nam quomodo ante operatorem suum usus operis aestimetur; cum omne tempus opus sit, et omne opus de operatore suo ut esset, accepit?

111. Let them cease therefore, and say no more that before He was begotten the Son was not. For the word before is a mark of time, whereas the Generation is before all times, and therefore that which comes after anything comes not before it, and the work cannot be before the maker, seeing that necessarily objects made take their commencement from the craftsman who makes them. How can the customary action of any created object be regarded as existing prior to the maker of it, while all time is a creation, and every creation has taken its being from its creator?

111. Experiri igitur adhuc istos volo, qui sibi videntur astuti; ut de nostris respondeant, qui calumniantur divinis, longeque refugiunt ab inscrutabili supernae generationis arcano: quaestionem suam humanae astruant generationis exemplo. De Filio Dei dicunt quia antequam generaretur non erat, hoc est, de Dei sapientia, de virtute Dei, de Dei Verbo, cujus generatio nihil ante se novit. Quod si aliquando, ut volunt, non fuit (quod nefas dictu est) non fuit ergo in Deo perfectionis aliquando plenitudo divinae, si postea processum generationis accepit.

112. I would, therefore, further examine our opponents, who esteem themselves so cunning, and have them make good the application of their theory to human existence, seeing that they use it to disparage the glory of God's Existence, and keep far away from any confession of an inscrutable mystery in the Divine Generation. I would have them find ground for their objection in the facts of human generation. Of God's Son they assert that before He was begotten He was not — that is to say, they say this of the Wisdom, the Power, the Word of God, Whose Generation knows nothing prior to itself. But if, as they would have us believe, there was a time when the Son existed not (the which it is blasphemy to affirm), then there was a time when God lacked the fullness of Divine Perfection, if afterwards He passed through a process of begetting a Son.

112. Tamen ut sciant quam vana sit et solubilis eorum quaestio; licet nihil in eo humanis divinis ve commune, tamen docebo homines, antequam nascerentur, fuisse. Aut negent Jacob sanctum fuisse, priusquam nasceretur, qui fratrem supplantavit in materni adhuc uteri positus arcano (Gen. XXV, 23): negent Hieremiam, antequam nasceretur, fuisse, cui dicitur: Priusquam te formarem in utero matris tuae, novi te: et priusquam exires de vulva, sanctificavi te, et prophetam in gentibus posui te (Jerem. I, 5). Quid hoc evidentius tanti exemplo prophetae, qui sanctificatus est, antequam natus, et antequam formaretur, est cognitus?

113. To show them, however, the weakness and transparency of their objection, though it has no real relation to any truth, divine or human, I will prove to them that men have existed before they were born. Else, let them show that Jacob, who while yet hidden in the secret chamber of his mother's womb supplanted his brother, had not been appointed and ordained, ere ever he was born; Genesis 25:23 let them show that Jeremiah had not likewise been so, before his birth — Jeremiah, to whom the message comes: Before I formed you in your mother's womb, I knew you; and before you came forth from the belly, I sanctified you, and appointed you for a prophet among the nations. Jeremiah 1:5 What testimony can we have stronger than the case of this great prophet, who was sanctified before he was born, and known before he was shaped?

113. Quid etiam de Joanne loquar, de quo mater religiosa testatur, quia intra materna situs adhuc viscera, praesentiam Domini spiritu cognovit, exsultatione consignavit, sicut scriptum meminimus, matre dicente: Ecce enim ut facta est in auribus meis vox salutationis tuae, exsultavit in gaudio infans in utero meo (Luc. I, 41)? Erat igitur qui prophetabat, an non erat? At certe erat; erat enim qui venerabatur auctorem, erat qui loquebatur in matre. Denique Elisabeth filii spiritu replebatur, Maria filii spiritu sanctificabatur; sic enim habes, quia exsultavit 542 infans in utero ejus, et repleta est Spiritu sancto Elisabeth (Ibid.).

114. What, again, shall I say of John, of whom his holy mother testifies that, while he yet lay in her womb, he perceived in spirit the presence of his Lord, and leaped for joy, as we remember it to be written, his mother saying: For lo, as soon as the voice of the salutation entered mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy. Luke 1:44 Was he, then, who prophesied, in existence or not? Nay, surely he was — surely he was in being who worshipped his Maker; he was in being who spoke in his mother's womb. And so Elisabeth was filled with the spirit of her son, and Mary sanctified by the Spirit of hers, for thus you may find it recorded, that the babe leaped in her womb, and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost. Luke 1:41

114. Vide singulorum verborum proprietates. Vocem quidem Mariae prior Elisabeth audivit, sed Joannes prior Domini gratiam sensit. Pulchre sibi conveniunt oracula oraculis, femina mulieri, et pignus pignori. Istae gratiam loquuntur, illi intus operantur pietatisque mysterium maternis adoriuntur profectibus; duplicique miraculo, licet honore diverso, prophetant matres spiritu parvulorum. Quis igitur auctor hujus miraculi? nonne Dei Filius, qui fecit esse non natos?

115. Consider the proper force of each word. Elisabeth was indeed the first to hear the voice of Mary, but John was first to feel His Lord's gracious Presence. Sweet is the harmony of prophecy with prophecy, of woman with woman, of babe with babe. The women speak words of grace, the babes move hiddenly, and as their mothers approach one another, so do they engage in mysterious converse of love; and in a twofold miracle, though in diverse degrees of honour, the mothers prophesy in the spirit of their little ones. Who, I ask, was it that performed this miracle? Was it not the Son of God, Who made the unborn to be?

115. De rebus humanis quaestio vestra non potest convenire; potestne de divinis convenire secretis? Quid est: Antequam generaretur, non erat? Numquid Pater aliqua tempora conceptionis accepit, ut Filium tempora praevenirent? Aut femineae more naturae, generationis suae molitus est partum; ut molitio ipsa Filio esset antiquior? Quid est hoc? Cur divina secreta discutimus? Proprietatem legi divinae generationis, non qualitatem.

116. Thus your objection fails of reconcilement with the truths of human existence — can it attain thereto with divine mysteries? What mean you by your principle that before He was begotten He was not? Was the Father engaged for some time in conception, so that certain epochs passed away before the Son was begotten? Was He, like women, in travail of birth, so that just this travail? What would you? Why seek we to pry into divine mysteries? The Scriptures tell me the necessary effects of the Divine Generation, not how it is done.

116. Facinus indignum! ut ex se quidam coelestia metiantur, qui Christum non nasci potuisse, sed fieri, tamquam unum de spadonibus putant: aut tamquam unum de spadonibus Patrem Filium, quem generare non potuerit, adoptaverit.

CAPUT X.

OBJICIENTIBUS CHRISTUM, JOANNE teste, vivere propter Patrem, ac proinde ipsi aequalem non habendum, respondetur Filii vitam secundum divinitatem nec coepisse ex tempore, nec pendere ab aliquo: locum vero de humana ipsius vita intelligendum ex eo probari, quod ibidem de corpore ac sanguine suo praemiserat. Tum duarum controversi loci expositionum primam referri ad humanitatem, et secunda Filii cum Patre aequalitatem, nec non cum homine similitudinem signari docet. Deinde perstricta quam Filio inurebant, injuria, quo pacto etiam secundum divinitatem propter Patrem vivat, aperit. Ac tandem exposito quae vitae nostrae cum divina unitas sit, aliam objectionem, qua Filius per Patrem clarificari opponitur, paucis absolvit.

CHAPTER 10.

The objection that Christ, on the showing of St. John, lives because of the Father, and therefore is not to be regarded as equal with the Father, is met by the reply that for the Life of the Son, in respect of His Godhead, there has never been a time when it began; and that it is dependent upon none, while the passage in question must be understood as referring to His human life, as is shown by His speaking there of His body and blood. Two expositions of the passage are given, the one of which is shown to refer to Christ's Manhood, while the second teaches His equality with the Father, as also His likeness with men. Rebuke is administered to the Arians for the insult which they are seeking to inflict upon the Son, and the sense in which the Son can be said to live because of the Father is explained, as also the union of life with the divine Life. A further objection, based upon the Son's prayer that He may be glorified by the Father, is briefly refuted.

117. [Alias cap. V.] Plerique etiam hinc faciunt quaestionem, quia scriptum est: Sicut misit me vivus Pater, et ego vivo propter Patrem: et qui manducat me, et ipse vivit propter me; dicentes: Quomodo aequalis est Patri Filius, qui dixit quia propter Patrem vivit?

118. There are not a few who raise this further objection, that it is written: As the living Father has sent Me, and I live by the Father; so he that eats Me, lives also by Me. John 6:58 How, ask they, is the Son equal with the Father, when He has said that He lives by the Father?

118. Qui hoc proponunt, primum respondeant, cujusmodi vita sit Filii, utrum ea quam Pater largitus sit non habenti? Sed quomodo vitam aliquando potuit non habere, cum ipse sit vita, sicut ait: Ego sum via, veritas et vita (Luc. XIV, 6)? Vita utique sempiterna, sicut virtus est sempiterna (Rom. I, 20). Aliquando ergo, ut sic loquar, se vita non habuit?

119. Let those who oppose us on this ground tell us first what the Life of the Son is. Is it a life bestowed by the Father upon one lacking life? But how could the Son ever fail to possess life, He Himself being the Life, as He says, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Isaiah 14:6 Truly, His life is eternal, even as His power is eternal. Was there a time, then, when (so to speak) Life possessed not itself?

119. Considerate quid lectum sit hodie de 543 Domino Jesu, quia mortuus est pro nobis; ut sive vigilemus, sive dormiamus, simul cum illo vivamus (I Thess. V, 10). Cujus mors vita est, hujus divinitas vita non est; cum divinitas vita sit sempiterna?

120. Bethink you what is read this day concerning the Lord Jesus, that He died for our sakes, to the end that whether we wake or whether we sleep, we may live with Him. 1 Thessalonians 5:10 He Whose Death is Life, is not His Godhead Life, seeing that the Godhead is Life eternal?

120. An vero vita ejus in Patris est potestate? Sed ne corporis quidem sui vitam in alterius fuisse potestate memoravit, sicut scriptum est: Ego pono animam meam, ut iterum sumam illam. Nemo tollit eam a me, sed ego pono eam a me ipso. Potestatem habeo ponendi eam, et iterum potestatem habeo sumendi eam: hoc mandatum accepi a Patre meo (Joan. X, 17 et seq.).

121. But is His Life truly in the Father's power? Why, He showed that even His bodily life was not in the power of any other, as we have it on record: I lay down My life, that I may take it again. No man takes it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and again I have power to take it. This commandment have I received of My Father.

121. Ejus ergo vita secundum divinitatem in alterius potestate posita judicatur, cujus vita secundum corpus alienae non erat subdita potestati? Aliena enim potestas erat, si non erat unitas potestatis. Sed sicut potestatis suae esse significat ponere animam, et liberae voluntatis: ita etiam quod secundum mandatum deposuit Patris, suae ac paternae voluntatis significat unitatem.

122. Is His divine Life then to be regarded as depending upon the power of another, when His bodily life was subject to no other power but His own? For it would have been the power of another, but for the Unity of power. But just as He gives us to understand that His laying down His life was done of His own power, and of His free Will, so also He teaches us, in laying it down in obedience to His Father's command, the unity of His own with the Father's Will.

122. Ergo si vitam Filius neque aliquo accepit ex tempore, neque alienae habet potestati subditam, videamus qua ratione dixerit: Sicut misit me vivus Pater, et ego vivo propter Patrem (Joan. VI, 58). Exponamus ut possumus: imo ipse potius exponat.

123. If, then, there has neither been a time when the Life of the Son took a commencement, nor any power to which it has been subjected, let us consider what His meaning was when He said: Even as the living Father has sent Me, and I live by the Father? Let us expound His meaning as best we can; nay, rather let Him expound it Himself.

123. Considera igitur quid ante praemiserit; ais enim: Amen, amen dico vobis. Ante instruit quemadmodum audire debeas: Vere, inquit, vere dico vobis, nisi manducaveritis carnem Filii homini, et biberitis sanguinem ejus, non habebitis vitam in vobis (Joan. VI, 54). Secundum Filium hominis se dicere ante praemisit, et tu quod secundum Filium hominis de carne est locutus et sanguine, ad divinitatem putas esse referendum?

124. Take notice, then, what He said in an earlier part of His discourse. Verily, verily, I say unto you. He first teaches you how you ought to listen. Verily, verily, I say unto you, unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His blood, you shall have no life in you. John 6:54 He first premised that He was speaking as Son of Man; do you then think that what He has said, as Son of Man, concerning His Flesh and His Blood, is to be applied to His Godhead?

124. Denique addidit: Caro enim mea vere est esca, et sanguis meus est potus (Ibid., 56). Carnem audis, sanguinem audis, mortis Dominicae sacramenta cognoscis; et divinitati calumniaris? Audi dicentem ipsum: Quia spiritus carnem et ossa non habet (Luc. XXIV, 39). Nos autem quotiescumque sacramenta sumimus, quae per sacrae orationis mysterium in carnem transfigurantur et sanguinem, mortem Domini annuntiamus (I Cor. XI, 26).

125. Then He added: For My Flesh is meat indeed, and My Blood is drink [indeed]. John 6:56 You hear Him speak of His Flesh and of His Blood, you perceive the sacred pledges, [conveying to us the merits and power] of the Lord's death, John 6:52 and you dishonour His Godhead. Hear His own words: A spirit has not flesh and bones. Luke 24:39 Now we, as often as we receive the Sacramental Elements, which by the mysterious efficacy of holy prayer are transformed into the Flesh and the Blood, do show the Lord's Death.

125. Ergo posteaquam se loqui secundum hominis Filium declaravit, et carnem saepe repetivit et sanguinem, subdidit postea: Sicut misit me vivus Pater, et ego vivo propter Patrem; et qui manducat me, et ipse vivit propter me (Joan. VI, 58). Quomodo igitur hoc accipiendum putant? Potest enim duplex videri comparatio. Prima ita: Sicut misit me vivus Pater, et ego vivo propter Patrem. 544 Secunda ita: Sicut misit me vivus Pater, et ego vivo propter Patrem; ita et qui manducat me, ipse vivit propter me.

126. Then, after calling on us to take notice that He speaks as Son of Man, and frequent repeated mention of His Flesh and His Blood, He adds: Even as the living Father has sent Me, and I live by the Father, so he that eats Me, he also lives by Me. How then do they suppose that we are to understand these words? — for the comparison can be shown as a double one. The first comparison being after the following manner: Even as the living Father has sent Me, I live by the Father; the second: Even as the living Father has sent Me, and I live by the Father, so also he that eats Me, he too lives by Me.

126. Si primam eligunt, hoc significat quia sicut missus sum a Patre, et descendi a Patre, ita vivo propter Patrem. Quasi quis autem missus est, atque descendit; nisi quasi Filius hominis sicut ipse supra dixit: Nemo ascendit in coelum, nisi qui de coelo descendit Filius hominis (Joan. III, 13)? Ergo sicut quasi Filius hominis missus est, atque descendit; ita quasi Filius hominis vivit propter Patrem. Denique et qui manducat quasi filium hominis, et ipse vivit propter Filium hominis. Actum ergo incarnationis suae adventui comparavit.

127. If our adversaries choose the former, the meaning is this, that, as I am sent by the Father and have come down from the Father, so (in accordance therewith) I live by the Father. But in what character was He sent, and came down, save as Son of Man, even as He Himself said before: No man has ascended into heaven, save He that has come down from heaven as Son of Man. John 3:13 Then, just as He was sent and came down as Son of Man, so as Son of Man He lives by the Father. Furthermore, he that eats Him, as eating the Son of Man, does himself also live by the Son of Man. Thus, He has compared the effect of His Incarnation to His coming.

127. Quod si secunda complacuit, nonne et aequalitatem Filii cum Patre, et similitudinem ejus cum homine manifesta distinctione colligimus? Nam quid est: Sicut ipse vivit propter Patrem, et nos vivimus propter ipsum; nisi quia sic vivificat Filius hominem, sicut Pater in Filio carnem vivificavit humanam? Sicut enim Pater suscitat mortuos, et vivificat; sic et Filius, quos vult, vivificat, ut ipse Dominus supra dixit (Joan. V, 21).

128. But if they choose the second method, do we not infer both the equality of the Son with the Father, and His likeness to men, together, though in clear mutual distinction? For what is the meaning of the words, Even as He Himself lives by the Father, so we also live by Him, but that the Son so quickens a man, as the Father has in the Son quickened human nature? For as the Father raises the dead and quickens them, so also the Son quickens whom He will, John 5:21 as the Lord Himself has already said.

128. Aequalitas ergo filii ad Patrem per unitatem quoque vivificationis astruitur; quando sic vivificat Filius ut Pater. Agnosce ergo ejus vitam et potentiam sempiternam. Similitudo etiam nostra ad filium, et quaedam secundum carnem unitas declaratur; quoniam quemadmodum Dei Filius a Patre, sic homo est vivificatus in carne. Sic enim scriptum est (Rom. IV, 24), quia sicut Deus Jesum Christum a mortuis suscitavit, ita etiam nos quasi homines vivificamur a Dei Filio.

129. Thus the equality of the Son to the Father is established simply upon unity in the action of quickening, since the Son so quickens as the Father does. Acknowledge therefore the eternity of His Life and Sovereignty. Again, our likeness with the Son is discovered, and a certain unity with Him in the flesh, because that, like as the Son of God was quickened in the flesh by the Father, so also is man quickened; for thus it is written, that as God raised Jesus Christ from the dead, so we also, as men, are quickened by the Son of God. Romans 4:24

129. Secundum hanc ergo expositionem non solum ad conditionem humanam derivatur gratia largitatis, sed etiam divinitatis aeternitas praedicatur; divinitatis, quia ipsa vivificat: humanae autem conditionis, quia vivificata est et in Christo.

130. According to this interpretation, then, immortality is not only applied to our condition by grace of bounty, but is also proclaimed as the property of Godhead — the latter, because it is the Godhead which quickens; the former, because manhood is quickened in Christ.

130. Quod si quis utrumque ad Christi refert divinitatem: ergo Filius Dei hominibus comparatur; ut ita Filius propter Patrem vivat, sicut nos propter Filium Dei vivimus. Sed Filius Dei vitam largitur aeternam, nos autem largiri nequimus; ergo nostri comparatione nec ille largitur. Habeant igitur Ariani fidei suae praemium, ne vitam aeternam adipiscantur a Filio.

131. But if any would apply the force of either comparison to Christ's Godhead, then the Son of God is put on one footing with men, so that the Son of God lives by the Father just as we live by the Son of God. But the Son of God bestows eternal life by free gift, we cannot so do. If then He be placed on a level with us, He too does not bestow this gift. Let Arius' disciples then have the due reward of their faith — which is, not to obtain eternal life of the Son.

131. Libet jam ulterius progredi; nam si illis placet hunc locum ad divinae perpetuitatem referre substantiae, accipiant etiam tertiam expositionem. 545 Nonne evidenter videtur dicere quod sicut vivus Pater est, ita vivit et Filius? Quod utique quis non advertat ad unitatem vitae, quod eadem Patris et Filii vita sit, esse referendum? Sicut enim Pater vitam habet in semetipso, sic dedit et Filio vitam habere in semetipso (Joan. V, 26). Dedit per unitatem: dedit, non ut auferat, sed ut clarificetur in Filio: dedit, ut complaceat: dedit non ut Pater custodiret, sed ut Filius possideret.

132. I would now go further. If our opponents are pleased to apply the teaching of this passage to the principle of the eternity of the Divine Substance, let them hear a third exposition: Does not our Lord plainly appear to say that as the Father is a living Father, so too the Son also lives? — and who can but observe that here we must understand a reference to unity of Life, forasmuch as the same Life is the Life of the Father and the Life of the Son? For as the Father has Life in Himself, so has He given to the Son also to have Life in Himself. John 5:26 He has given — by reason of unity with Him. He has given, not to take away, but that He may be glorified in the Son. He has given, not that He, the Father, might keep guard over it, but that the Son might have it in possession.

132. Sed objiciendum putant quia dixerat: Ego vivo propter Patrem (Joan. VI, 58). Utique si ad divinitatem referunt, propter Patrem vivit Filius; quia ex Patre Filius est: propter Patrem; quia unius substantiae cum Patre: propter Patrem; quia eructatum est Verbum ex Patris corde (Psal. XLIV, 1), quia a Patre processit, quia ex paterno generatus est utero (Psal. CIX, 3), quia fons Pater Filii est, quia radix Pater Filii est.

133. But the Arians think that they must oppose hereto the fact that He had said, I live by the Father. Of a certainty (suppose that they conceive the words as referring to His Godhead) the Son lives by the Father, because He is the Son begotten of the Father — by the Father, because He is of one Substance with the Father — by the Father, because He is the Word given forth from the heart of the Father, because He came forth from the Father, because He is begotten of the bowels of the Father, because the Father is the Fountain and Root of the Son's being.

133. Sed dicunt fortasse: Si unitatem putas Patris ac Filii vitae esse, cum Filius dixerit: Et ego vivo propter Patrem (Joan. VI, 58), numquid unitas est Filii vitae atque hominum: cum dixerit Filius quia Qui manducat me, et ipse vivit propter me?

134. But perhaps they may urge: If you hold that the Son, in saying, 'And I live by the Father,' spoke of the unity of life subsisting between the Father and the Son, does it not follow that He discovered the unity of life between the Son and mankind in saying that 'he that eats Me, the same lives by Me'?

134. Immo plane, sicut unitatem fateor esse vitae coelestis in Patre et Filio per divinae unitatem substantiae, ita vel divinae naturae vel Dominicae incarnationis excepto privilegium, societatem nobiscum vitae spiritalis in Filio esse profiteor per humanae unitatem naturae: Qualis enim coelestis tales et coelestes (I Cor. XV, 18). Denique sicut in illo sedemus ad dextram Patris, non quia cum ipso sedemus, sed quia sedemus in Christi corpore, de quo postea dicemus plenius (Infr. lib. V): sicut, inquam, sedemus in Christo per corporis unitatem: ita et in Christo vivimus per corporis unitatem.

135. Even so. Just as I confess the unity of celestial Life subsisting in Father and Son by reason of the unity of the substance of the Godhead, so too, save as concerns the prerogatives of the Divine Nature or those which are the effect of the Incarnation of our Lord, I affirm of the Son a participation of spiritual life with us by virtue of the unity of His Manhood with ours, for as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. Further, even as in Him we sit at the right hand of the Father, not in the sense that we share His throne, but that we rest in the Body of Christ — even as, I say, we have part in Christ's session by reason of corporal unity, so too we live in Christ by reason of unity of our bodies with His Body.

135. Non solum autem non vereor quia scriptum est: Et ego vivo propter Patrem; sed etiam si per Patrem dixisset, non vererer.

136. Not only, then, have I no fears of the text, I live by the Father, but I should have none, even though Christ had said, I live by help of the Father.

136. [Alias cap. VI.] Solent enim etiam illud objicere quia dixit: Haec infirmitas non est ad mortem, sed pro claritate Dei; ut clarificetur Filius ejus per ipsum (Joan XI, 4). Non solum enim per Patrem, et a Patre Filius clarificatur, quia scriptum est: Clarifica me, Pater (Joan. XVII, 5); et alibi: Nunc clarificatus est Filius hominis, et Deus clarificatus est in eo, et Deus clarificavit eum (Joan. XIII, 31, 32): sed etiam per Filium et a Filio clarificatur Pater, quia veritas dixit: Ego te clarificavi super terram (Joan. XVII, 4).

137. Now another objection commonly urged by them starts from the text: This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, to the end that His Son may be glorified by Him. John 11:4 But not only is the Son glorified through the Father and by the Father, as it is written: Glorify Me, Father; John 17:5 and again: Now has the Son of Man been glorified, and God has been glorified in Him, and God glorifies Him, John 13:31-32 but the Father also is glorified through the Son and by the Son, for Truth has said: I have glorified You upon earth. John 17:4

137. Sicut ergo clarificatur per Patrem, ita etiam propter Patrem vivit. Unde et quidam δόξαν opinionem magis putaverunt esse, quam gloriam; et ideo sic interpretati sunt: Ego te clarificavi super terram, opus consummavi quod dedisti mihi; et nunc clarifica me, Pater, hoc est, δόξασον, ut sit hic sensus: Ego opinionem de te hominibus hujusmodi infudi, ut cognoscant te Deum verum; et tu hanc de me confirma illis opinionem, ut credant me tuum Filium et Deum verum. 546

138. Even as the Son, therefore, is glorified through the Father, so too He lives by the Father. There are some who have been led by consideration of these words to the supposition that [the Greek] δόξα means opinion, belief, rather than glory, and therefore have interpreted as follows: I have given you a δόξα upon earth, I have finished the work which You gave Me to do, and now, O Father, give me a δόξα; that is to say: I have taught men so to believe concerning You, as to know that You are the true God; do Thou also establish in them, concerning Me, the belief that I am Your Son, and very God.

CAPUT XI.

DISCRIMEN QUOD CONFLARE Ariani moliebantur e verbis Apostoli ex Patre omnia, et per Filium omnia esse docentis, irridetur. Ostenditur enim illic eamdem Patris ac Filii omnipotentiam exprimi: quod cum ex aliis locis, tum ex ipsius Pauli textu confirmatur. Hunc absurde ad Patrem referri ab haereticis, ac pertinere ad Filium ex ejusdem serie demonstrari: nec tamen quidquam Filii derogari potentiae, si de Patre intelligatur. Postremo in istis, ex quo, per quem, et in quo aliquid, nullam intercedere differentiam, et haec omnia de tribus personis dici, evincit.

CHAPTER 11.

The particular distinction which the Arians endeavoured to prove upon the Apostle's teaching that all things are of the Father and through the Son, is overthrown, it being shown that in the passage cited the same Omnipotence is ascribed both to Father and to Son, as is proved from various texts, especially from the words of St. Paul himself, in which heretics foolishly find a reference to the Father only, though indeed there is no diminution or inferiority of the Son's sovereignty proved, even by such a reference. Finally, the three phrases, of Whom, through Whom, in Whom, are shown to suppose or imply no difference (of power), and each and all to hold true of the Three Persons.

138. Jam illud ridiculum est, quod quidam ex illo Apostolico discretionem inter Patrem et Filium faciunt potestatis, quia scriptum est: Nobis tamen unus Deus Pater, ex quo omnia, et nos in ipso: et unus Dominus Jesus Christus, per quem omnia, et nos per ipsum (I Cor. VIII, 6). Aiunt enim non mediocrem divinae majestatis esse distantiam, quia dictum est: Ex illo omnia, et per hunc omnia. Nihil autem expressius, quam quod hoc loco omnipotens Filius evidenti ratione signatur; nam ut ex illo omnia, ita per hunc omnia.

139. Now we come to that laughable method, attempted by some, of showing a difference of Power to subsist between Father and Son, on the strength of apostolic testimony, it being written: But for us there is One God, the Father, of Whom are all things, and we in Him, and One Lord, Jesus Christ, through Whom are all things, and we through Him. 1 Corinthians 8:6 It is urged that no small difference in degree of Divine Majesty is signified in the affirmation that all things are of the Father, and through the Son. Whereas nothing is clearer than that here a plain reason is given of the Omnipotence of the Son, inasmuch as while all things are of the Father, none the less are they all through the Son.

139. Inter omnia Pater non est, cui dictum est: Quia universa serviunt tibi (Psal. CXVIII, 91). Inter omnia Filius non est, quia omnia per ipsum facta sunt (Joan. I, 3), et omnia in ipso constant, et ipse est super omnes coelos (Coloss. I, 17). Non ergo inter omnia Filius, sed super omnia: qui secundum carnem quidem est ex familia Judaeorum; idem tamen super omnia Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. IX, 5), cujus est nomen super omne nomen, et de quo dicitur: Omnia subjecisti sub pedibus ejus (Psal. VIII, 8). Subjiciendo autem omnia, nihil reliquit ei non subjectum, sicut Apostolus dixit (Hebr. II, 8). Quod si hoc etiam secundum incarnationis locutus est sacramentum, quemadmodum possumus de supernae generationis incomparabili majestate dubitare?

140. The Father is not among all things, for to Him it is confessed that all things serve You. Nor is the Son reckoned among all things, for all things were made by Him, John 1:3 and all things exist together in Him, and He is above all the heavens. Colossians 1:17 The Son, therefore, exists not among but above all things, being, indeed, after the flesh, of the people, of the Jews, but yet at the same time God over all, blessed for ever, having a Name which is above every name, Philippians 2:9 it being said of Him, You have put all things in subjection under His feet. But in making all things subject to Him, He left nothing that is not subject, even as the Apostle has said. Hebrews 2:8 But suppose that the Apostle's words were intended with reference to the Incarnate Lord; how then can we doubt the incomparable majesty of His Divine Generation?

140. Nihil igitur potestatis inter Patrem et Filium certum est interesse. Denique eo usque nihil interest potestatis, ut idem Apostolus ex ipso dixerit esse omnia, per quem omnia sicut habes: Quoniam ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia (Rom. XI, 33).

141. Certain it is, then, that between Father and Son there can be no difference of Power. Nay, so far is such difference from being present, that the same Apostle has said that all things are of Him, by Whom are all things, as follows: For of Him and through Him and in Him are all things. Romans 11:36

141. Si igitur Pater, sicut putant, tantummodo significatur, non potest idem et omnipotens esse, quia ex ipso omnia: et omnipotens non esse, quia per ipsum omnia. Aut igitur invalidum, nec omnipotentem Patrem sua assertione memorabunt, aut certe omnipotentem etiam Filium vel inviti voce propria fatebuntur.

142. Now if, as they suppose, it is the Father alone Who is spoken of, it cannot be that He is at once Omnipotent because all things are of Him, and not Omnipotent because all things are through Him. On their own showing, then, they will declare the Father lacking in Power, and not Omnipotent, or at the least they will be confessing with their own mouth, all against their will though it be, the Omnipotence of the Son as well as of the Father.

142. Eligant tamen utrum hic Patrem declaratum putent. Si Patrem, ergo et per ipsum omnia: si Filium, ergo et ex ipso omnia. Si autem et per Patrem omnia, nihil utique Filio derogandum: et si ex Filio omnia, similiter et Filio deferendum.

143. Howbeit, let them decide whether they will understand this affirmation as made concerning the Father. If they do so decide then all things are through Him also. If they decide that it is the Son Who is spoken of, then all things are of Him as well as of the Father. But if all things are through the Father also, then surely there is no argument for diminishing from the honour due to the Son; and if all things are of the Son, the Son must be honoured in like manner as the Father is.

143. Ac ne insidiari nos unius arbitrentur obreptione versiculi, totum caput recenseamus: O altitudo, inquit, divitiarum sapientiae et scientiae 547 Dei: quam inscrutabilia sunt judicia ejus, et investigabiles viae ejus! Quis enim cognovit sensum Domini? aut quis consiliarius ejus fuit? aut quis prior dedit illi, et retribuetur ei? Quoniam ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia, ipsi gloria in saecula (Ibid., 33 et seq.)

144. In case our opponents should suspect that we are taking advantage of some intrusion of a single spurious verse into the text, let us review the whole passage. O depth of the riches of God’s wisdom and knowledge! exclaims the Apostle, how unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out! For Who has known the mind of the Lord, or who has been His counsellor? Or who has been first to give unto Him, and shall be recompensed? For of Him and through Him and in Him are all things. To Him be glory for ever!

144. De quo igitur dictum putant, de Patre, an de Filio? Si de Patre: sed non est Sapientia Dei Pater; quia Sapientia Dei Filius est. Quid est autem quod non possit Sapientia, de qua scriptum est: Cum sit una omnipotens et permanens, in se omnia innovat (Sap. VII, 27)? Non ergo accedentem legimus, sed permanentem. Habes ergo juxta Salomonem, omnipotentem et permanentem Sapientiam. Habes etiam bonam, quia scriptum est: Sapientiam autem non vincit malitia (Ibid., 30).

145. Who, then, think they, is here spoken of — the Father or the Son? If it be the Father — then we answer that the Father is not the Wisdom of God, for the Son is. But what is there that is impossible to Wisdom, of Whom it is written: Seeing that she is almighty and abiding, she makes all things new in herself? Wisdom 7:27 We read of Wisdom, then, not as approaching, but as abiding. Thus have you the authority of Solomon to teach you of the Omnipotence and Eternity of Wisdom, and of her Goodness as well, for it is written: But malice overcomes not Wisdom. Wisdom 7:30

145. Sed ad propositum revertamur. Quam inscrutabilia sunt, inquit, judicia ejus! Si igitur omne judicium Pater dedit Filio, Filium Pater videtur declarare, qui judicat (Joan. V, 22).

146. But to purpose. How unsearchable, says the Apostle, are His judgments! Now if the Father has given all judgment to the Son, John 5:22 it seems that the Father points to the Son as Judge.

146. Denique ut scias quia non de Patre, sed de Filio dicit, addidit: Quis prior, inquit, dedit illi? Dedit enim Pater Filio: sed dedit jure generationis, non munere largitatis. Et ideo quia negari non potest a Patre accepisse Filium, secundum quod scriptum est: Omnia mihi tradita sunt a Patre meo (Matth. XI, 27): dicendo tamen: Quis prior dedit illi? non accepisse per naturam a Patre Filium denegavit, sed priorem non posse dici inter Patrem et Filium declaravit; quia etsi Pater dedit Filio, non tamen quasi posteriori dedit: quia increata et inaestimabilis Trinitas, quae unius est aeternitatis et gloriae, nec tempus, nec gradum, vel posterioris recipit, vel prioris.

147. But now, to show us that He is speaking of the Son, not of the Father, St. Paul proceeds: Who was first in giving to Him? For the Father has given to the Son, but it was as acknowledging the rights of Him Whom He has begotten, not by way of largess. Therefore, it being undeniable that the Son has received at the hands of the Father, as it is written, All things have been given unto Me of My Father, Matthew 11:27 yet, in saying, Who was first in giving to Him? the Apostle has not denied that the Son has received gifts of the Father, by virtue of His Nature, but he has indeed shown that, of Father and Son, Neither can be said to be before the Other, forasmuch as, albeit the Father has given gifts unto the Son, yet He has not so bestowed them as upon one that began to be after Him; because the uncreate and incomprehensible Trinity, Which is of One Eternity and Glory, admits neither difference of time nor degree of precedence.

147. Quod si Graecos magis codices sequendos putamus, qui habent τὶς προσέδωκεν αὐτῷ vides quoniam cui nihil addi potest, non dispar a pleno est. Ergo si Filio magis convenit hoc totum Apostolicum caput, videmus et de Filio esse credendum, quia ex ipso omnia, sicut scriptum est: Quoniam ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia.

148. If, however, we hold ourselves more bound to observe those Greek manuscripts which show τίς προσέδωχεν αὐτῳ; it is clear that He to Whom nothing can be added is not unequal to Him Who is perfect and complete. Therefore, if this passage from the Apostle, in its entirety, is better understood with reference to the Son, we see that we must also believe concerning the Son, that all things are of Him, even as it is written: For of Him and through Him and in Him are all things.

148. Esto tamen de Patre dictum putent. Itaque meminerimus quia sicut ex ipso legimus omnia, ita etiam per ipsum omnia: in universitatem quippe totius creaturae Patris et Filii profertur auctoritas. Ac licet superius omnipotentem Filium paterno probaverimus exemplo, tamen quia illis derogare studium est, considerent quia et Patri derogant. Si enim infirmus Filius, quia per ipsum omnia, numquid infirmus et Pater, quia et per Patrem omnia?

149. Be it so, nevertheless, that they suppose the passage to be intended of the Father, then let us call to mind that even as we read of all things being of Him, so too we read of all things being through Him, that is to say, the authority of the Father and of the Son is extended over the whole created universe. And, though we have already proved the Omnipotence of the Son by the Omnipotence of the Father, still — forasmuch as they are ever bent upon disparagement — let them consider that they disparage the Father as well as the Son. For if the Son be limited in might, because all things are through Him, do we say further, that the Father likewise is limited, because all things are through Him also?

149. Sed ut agnoscant nullam discretionem inter haec esse, iterum demonstrabo ejusdem esse, ex quo aliquid, et per quem aliquid; et ostendam utrumque de Patre lectum. Sic enim habemus: Fidelis Deus per quem vocati estis in communionem Filii ejus (I Cor. I, 9). Quid Apostolus dixerit, considerent. Per Patrem vocamur, et nihil est quaestionis: 548 per Filium creamur, et hoc vilius aestimarunt? Pater in communionem Filii vocavit, et religiose hoc sicut debemus, accipimus: Filius omnia creavit, et putant non liberae fuisse voluntatis arbitrium, sed coactae atque servilis operationis obsequium?

150. But to bring them to understand that these phrases involve no difference, I will once again show that it is the same person, of whom anything is, and through whom anything is, and that we read of things being related in both these ways to the Father. For we find: Faithful is God, through Whom you were called into the fellowship of His Son. Let our adversaries weigh the meaning of the Apostle's words. We are called through the Father — they raise no controversy: we are created through the Son — and this they have set down as a mark of inferiority. The Father has called us into fellowship with His Son, and this truth we, as in duty bound, devoutly receive. The Son has created all things, and Arius' followers imagine that here they have not the decree of a free Will, but a forced service, slavishly performed!

150. Ut autem agnoscas plenius nihil distare inter Patris et Filii potestatem, cum per Patrem in communionem Filii ejus vocemur; ex Filio est ipsa communio, sicut scriptum est: Quoniam de plenitudine ejus nos omnes accepimus (Joan. I, 16); licet secundum Graecum Evangelium, ex plenitudine ejus intelligere debeamus.

151. Again, to obtain fuller understanding that, forasmuch as we are called through the Father into fellowship with His Son, there is no difference of Power in the Father and the Son, [note that] the fellowship itself has its beginning of the Son, as it is written: For from His fullness have we all received, though, if we follow the Greek text of the Gospel, we ought to render of His fullness. John 1:16

151. Ecce et per Patrem communio, et ex Filio communio: sed non discrepans, sed una communio; sicut idem Joannes in epistola sua dixit: Et communicatio nostra sit cum Patre, et cum Filio ejus Jesu Christo (I Joan. I, 3).

152. See, then, how there is fellowship both through the Father and of the Son, and yet not a different fellowship, but one and the same. And that our fellowship be with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ. 1 John 1:3

152. Accipe etiam quia non solum ex Patre et Filio, sed etiam ex Spiritu sancto unam nobis communionem Scriptura commemoravit: Gratia, inquit, Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et charitas Dei, et communicatio sancti Spiritus cum omnibus vobis (II Cor. XXIII, 13).

153. Observe, further, that Scripture speaks of our having one fellowship not only of the Father and the Son, but also of the Holy Spirit. The grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ, says the Apostle, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with you all.

153. Quaero autem in quo minor videatur is per quem omnia, quam is ex quo omnia? An quia operator asseritur? Sed operatur et Pater; quia verus est, qui dixit: Pater meus usque modo operatur, et ego operor (Joan. V, 17). Sicut igitur Pater operatur, operatur et Filius. Non ergo operator infirmus aut vilis est; quoniam operatur et Pater: et ideo quod commune est Filio cum Patre, vel propter Patrem inferiore loco accipi non oportet; ne Patri potius in Filio ab haereticis derogetur.

154. Now, I ask, wherein does He, through Whom are all things, appear less than He, of Whom are all things? Is it because He is declared to be the Worker? But the Father also works, for He is true who said, My Father works hitherto, and I work. John 5:17 Therefore, even as the Father works, so works the Son also; and so He Who works is not limitary in power nor abject, for the Father also works; which being so, that which is common to the Son with the Father, or even which the Son has by the Father, ought not to be the less esteemed, lest heretics further dishonour the Father in the Person of the Son.

154. Nec mediocre illud, quod alibi etiam idem sanctus Joannes ad refellendas Arianae perfidiae quaestiones, ait: Si scitis quoniam justus est, scitote quoniam qui facit justitiam, ex ipso natus est (Joan. II, 29). Justus autem quis nisi Dominus, qui justitias dilexit (Psal. X, 8)? Aut quem, sicut superiora indicant, repromissorem vitae habemus aeternae, si Filium non habemus? Si igitur Filius Dei vitam nobis promisit aeternam, et ipse justus est, ex ipso utique nati sumus. Aut si ex Filio nos per gratiam natos negant, nec justum Filium confitentur.

155. Not to be passed over for silencing the disputings of Arian misbelief are those words of the same Saint John, which he set down in another Scripture: If you know that He is just, know that he which does righteousness is born of Him. 1 John 2:29 But who is righteous, save the Lord, Who loves righteousness? Or whom — as the foregoing texts warn us — have we to assure us of everlasting life, if we have not the Son? If, therefore, the Son of God has promised us everlasting life, and He is righteous, surely we are born of Him. Else, if our adversaries deny that we are born of the Son by grace, they likewise deny His righteousness.

155. Credas igitur necesse est etiam ex Dei Filio omnia; quia omnium sicut Deus Pater, ita et Filius et auctor est et creator. Videmus ergo inanem esse hanc quaestionem, cum et de Filio credi conveniat, quoniam ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia.

156. You must therefore believe that all things are of the Son of God [even as of God the Father, for even as God is the Father of all, so likewise is the Son the Author and Creator of all. We see, then, the vanity of this their questioning, forasmuch as it holds good of the Son [as of the Father], that of Him and through Him and in Him are all things.

156. Diximus quomodo ex ipso, quomodo etiam per ipsum. In ipso autem omnia esse quis dubitet, cum alibi scriptum sit: Quoniam in ipso condita sunt omnia in coelis, et in ipso creata sunt: et ipse est ante omnes, et omnia in ipso constant (Coloss. I, 16)? Habes ergo ex ipso gratiam, ipsum operatorem, in ipso omnium firmamentum.

157. We have shown how all things are of Him, and likewise how all things are also through Him. Who then doubts that all things are in Him, when another Scripture says: For in Him are all things founded, that are in the heavens, and in Him they were created, and He is before all things, and all things consist in Him? Colossians 1:16. Of Him, then, you have grace; Himself you have for your Creator; in Him you find the foundation of all things.

CAPUT XII.

QUOD OBJICIEBATUR EX Joanne Filium viti et Patrem agricolae comparari, de incarnatione intelligendum: qui vero secundum generationem divinam illud accipiant, Filio duas injurias inferre, quem et Paulo postponant, et aequent aliis hominibus: totidem etiam Patri, quem non solum eidem Apostolo parem, sed etiam nihili esse testificentur. Tum falsa interpretatione denuo rejecta, veraque confirmata, Filius quoque secundum divinitatem agricola esse, ac uva secundum humanitatem, astruitur; unde superior praecellentiae paternae explicatio stabilitur.

CHAPTER 12.

The comparison, found in the Gospel of St. John, of the Son to a Vine and the Father to a husbandman, must be understood with reference to the Incarnation. To understand it with reference to the Divine Generation is to doubly insult the Son, making Him inferior to St. Paul, and bringing Him down to the level of the rest of mankind, as well as in like manner the Father also, by making Him not merely to be on one footing with the same Apostle, but even of no account at all. The Son, indeed, in so far as being God, is also the husbandman, and, as regards His Manhood, a grape-cluster. True statement of the Father's pre-eminence.

157. [Alias cap. VII.] Illud quoque ad separandam Patris et Filii divinitatem objicere consueverunt, quia Dominus dixit in Evangelio: Ego sum vitis vera, et Pater meus agricola est (Joan. XV, 1); agricolam et vitem diversae dicentes esse naturae, et vitem in agricolae esse potestate.

158. There is yet another Scripture, which our opponents commonly object against us, in order to prove their division of the Godhead of the Father from the Godhead of the Son, namely, our Lord's words in the Gospel: I am the true Vine and My Father is the Husbandman. The vine and the husbandman, say they, are of different natures, and the vine is in the power of the husbandman.

158. Sic ergo vultis esse Filium secundum divinitatem, sicut vitis est; ut sine cultore nihil valeat, et possit deseri vel recidi: et ex littera calumniam comparatis, quia Dominus vitem se esse dixit, incarnationis suae significans sacramentum? Tamen si placet ut ex littera argumentemur, fateor et ego, immo profiteor quia vitem se Filius nominavit. Vae enim mihi, si sacramentum salutis publicae denegavero!

159. Thus, then, you would have us believe that the Son, as touching His Godhead, is like to a vine, so that without a vine-dresser He is nothing, and may be neglected or even rooted up. Thus you juggle up a lie from the letter of the Scripture which says that our Lord called Himself the Vine, intending thereby the mystery of His Incarnation. Howbeit, if you are bent on it that we dispute upon the letter, I too confess, yea, I proclaim, that the Son called Himself the Vine. For woe be to me, if I deny the pledge of the salvation of His people!

159. Quomodo ergo vultis accipere quod se vitem Dei Filius nominavit? Si secundum divinam substantiam dictum accipitis: et sicut inter agricolam et vitem, ita etiam inter Patrem et Filium divinitatis creditis esse distantiam, geminam Filio, geminam Patri facitis injuriam: Filio, quia si secundum divinitatem inferior est quam agricola, inferior etiam Paulo apostolo vestra assertione necesse est aestimetur; quia et Paulus agricolam se esse dixit, sicut habes: Ego plantavi, Apollo rigavit; sed Deus incrementum dedit (I Cor. III, 6). Num ergo vultis ut Paulus melior sit Dei Filio?

160. How then do you purpose to understand the truth that the Son of God called Himself the Vine? If you interpret the saying with respect to the Substance of His Godhead, and if you suppose such a diversity of Godhead between the Father and the Son as there is of nature between a husbandman and a vine, you do double insult both to Father and to Son — to the Son, because if, as you affirm, He is, as touching His Godhead, beneath a husbandman, then must He on the same showing be esteemed lower than the Apostle Paul, forasmuch as Paul indeed called himself a husbandman, as we find it written: I have planted, Apollos has watered: but God has given the increase. 1 Corinthians 3:6 Will you have Paul, then, to be better than the Son of God?

160. Habetis unam injuriam. Alteram, quia si secundum substantiam generationis aeternae, vitis est Filius, cum dixerit: Ego sum vitis, vos palmites estis (Joan. XV, 5); unius nobiscum etiam illa divina generatio videbitur esse substantiae. Sed quis similis tibi in diis, Domine, sicut scriptum est (Exod. XV, 11)? Et rursus in psalmo: Quoniam quis in nubibus aequabitur Domino? aut quis similis erit Deo inter filios Dei (Psal. LXXXVIII, 7)?

161. Thus far the one insult. As for the other, it lies herein, that if the Son is the Vine in respect of His eternally-begotten Person, then, He having said: I am the Vine, you are the branches, John 15:5 that divinely-begotten One appears to be of one substance with us. But who is like You among the gods, O Lord? Exodus 15:11 as it is written; and again, in the Psalms: For who is there among the clouds that shall be equal to the Lord? Or who among the sons of God shall be like God.

161. Nec tamen soli Filio derogatis, sed etiam Patri. Nam si in agricolae nomine omnis paternae praerogativa est potestatis, cum etiam Paulus agricola sit, Patri utique, cui Filium negatis, aequalem Apostolum comparatis.

162. Moreover, you disparage not only the Son, but the Father also. For if the term husbandman is to comprehend in its designation all the prerogative of the Father's Sovereignty, then, seeing that Paul too is a husbandman, you set the Apostle, to whom you deny that the Son is equal, on an even footing with the Father.

162. Deinde cum scriptum sit: Sed neque qui plantat, est quidquam, neque qui rigat: sed qui dat incrementum Deus (I Cor. III, 7); in eo nomine vos summam paternae majestatis locabitis, quod videtis infirmum. Si enim qui plantat, et qui rigat, nihil est, sed qui dat incrementum Deus; videte 550 quid vestra asserere moliatur impietas, ut et Pater nomine sit contemnendus agricolae; et Deus aliquis incrementum paterno operi qui tribuat, requirendus. Impie igitur ex nomine agricolae praeferendam Dei Patris existimant potestatem, in quo sit Patri Deo cum homine appellationis commune consortium.

163. Again, it being written, But neither he which plants is anything, nor he that waters; but God, Who gives the increase, you will rest the fullness of the Father's Majesty in a name which, as you see, stands for weakness. For if he that plants is nothing, and he that waters is nothing, but it is God, Who gives the increase [Who is all], observe what your blasphemy intends — even to expose the Father to contempt under the title of a husbandman, and to demand another God to provide the increase of the Father's labour. Wickedly, therefore, do they think to extol the Dignity of God the Father by this use of the term husbandman, in which God the Father is brought down to the level of man, as being designated by a common title.

163. Quid autem egregium, si ei (ut vultis, haeretici) Filio praeferatur, cujus divina substantia ab humana conditione non discrepet? Nam si vitem Filium secundum divinam substantiam appellatum putatis, non solum corruptelae, incertisque elementorum obnoxium judicatis, sed etiam humanae tantummodo consortem naturae; quia unius naturae sunt vitis et palmites; ut non per incarnationis sacramentum carnem Dei Filius assumpsisse videatur, sed principium sumpsisse de carne.

164. Yet what wonder if, as you heretics would have it, the Father is to be exalted above a Son Whose Godhead differs not a whit from the common condition of mankind? If you suppose the Son to have been entitled the Vine with respect to His Godhead, then do ye esteem Him not only as liable to corruption and subject to changes of wind and weather, but even as partaking of manhood only, forasmuch as the Vine and its branches are of one nature, so that the Son of God appears, not to have taken upon Him our flesh, through the mystery of Incarnation, but to have altogether sprung into being from the flesh.

164. Ego autem dicam plane carnem ejus, licet novo generationis mysterio, unius tamen naturae fuisse nobiscum, et hoc salutis nostrae sacramentum esse, non divinae generationis exordium. Vitis enim est, quia meas sustinet passiones; quandoquidem in illo nixa fragilis prius humana conditio fecundis redivivae fructibus pietatis adolevit.

165. But I will indeed openly confess that His flesh, though born in a new and mysterious birth, was yet of the same nature with ours, and that this is the pledge of our salvation, not the source of the Divine Generation. He indeed is the Vine, for He bears my sufferings, whenever manhood, hitherto frail, leans on Him and so matures with plenteous fruit of renewed devotion.

165. Verumtamen si te pompa delectat agricolae; dicas, velim, quis ille sit, qui locutus est in propheta: Domine, notum mihi fac, ut sciam: tunc vidi cogitationes eorum. Ego ut agnus ductus sum innocens ad immolandum, et nesciebam: adversum me cogitaverunt consilium, dicentes: Venite, injiciamus lignum in panem ejus (Jerem. XI, 19). Si enim Filius incarnationis futurae loquitur sacramentum, quia impium est ut de Patre credas, Filius est utique qui supra dicit: Ego plantavi te vitem fructiferam, quomodo conversa es in amaritudinem vitis alienae (Jerem. II, 21)?

166. Yet if the husbandman's power allures you, please tell me who it was that spoke in the prophet, saying: O Lord, make it known to me, that I may know; then saw I their thoughts. I was led as a harmless lamb to the slaughter and knew it not: they took counsel together against me, saying, Come, let us throw wood into his bread. Jeremiah 11:18 For if the Son here speaks of the mystery of His coming Incarnation — for it were blasphemy to suppose that the words are spoken concerning the Father — then surely it is the Son Who speaks in an earlier passage: I have planted you as a fruitful vine — how are You become bitter, and a wild vine? Jeremiah 2:21

166. Itaque et Filium vides esse agricolam, unius nominis cum Patre, unius operis, unius dignitatis atque substantiae. Ergo si agricola et vitis est Filius, vitem utique secundum incarnationis accipimus sacramentum.

167. And thus you see that the Son also is the husbandman — the Son, of one Name with the Father, one work, one dignity and Substance. If, then, the Son is both Vine and Husbandman, plainly we infer the meaning of the Vine with regard to the mystery of the Incarnation.

167. Sed non solum se esse vitem dixit, sed etiam botryonem voce prophetica nuncupavit, tunc quando ad vallem botryonis exploratores Moyses jussu Domini direxit (Num. XIII, 14). Quae est illa vallis, nisi humilitas incarnationis, et fecunditas passionis? Et puto botryonem ideo dictum, quia ex vinea illa translata ex Aegypto, hoc est, ex familia Judaeorum, utilis mundo fructus emicuit (Psal. LXXIX, 9). Nemo certe botryonem potest ad generationem referre divinam: aut qui refert, aliud nihil relinquit, nisi ut botryonem illum natum ex vite credamus. Itaque ascribit insipiens Patri, quod reprehendit in Filio.

168. But not only has our Lord called Himself a Vine — He has also given Himself, by the voice of the prophet, the title of a Grape-cluster — even when Moses, at the command of the Lord, sent spies to the Valley of the Cluster. Numbers 13:24 What is that valley but the humility of the Incarnation and the fruitfulness of the Passion? I indeed think that He is called the Cluster, because that from the Vine brought out of Egypt, that is, the people of the Jews, there grew a fruit for the world's good. No man, truly, can understand the Cluster as a token of the Divine Generation — or if there be any who so understand it, they leave no conclusion open but that we should believe that Cluster to have sprung from the Vine. And thus in their folly they attribute to the Father that which they refuse to believe of the Son.

168. Verum si jam dubitari non potest quod vitis secundum incarnationem Dei Filius nominatus sit, videtis secundum quod sacramentum Dominus sit, locutus; Quoniam Pater major me est (Joan. XIV, 28). Nam cum hoc in superioribus dixerit, continuo subjecit: Ego sum vitis vera, et Pater meus agricola est (Joan. XV, 1), ut agnosceres secundum id Patrem esse majorem: quia sicut agricola vitium, ita Pater Dominicae carnis est cultor: quae et augeri potuit per aetatem, et per passionem recidi; ut omne humanum genus ab aestu saecularium noxio voluptatum, diffusae salutaribus brachiis crucis umbra velaret.

169. But if there be now left no room for doubt that the Son of God is called the Vine with respect and intention to His Incarnation, you see what hidden truth it was to which our Lord had regard in saying, The Father is greater than I. John 14:28 For after this premised, He proceeded immediately: I am the true Vine, and My Father is the Husbandman, that you might know that the Father is greater in so far as He dresses and tends our Lord's flesh, as the husbandman dresses and tends his vines. Further, our Lord's flesh is that which could increase in stature with age, and be wounded through suffering, to the end that the whole human race might rest guarded from the pestilent heat of the pleasures of this world, under the shadow of the Cross whereon Its limbs are spread.

LIBER QUINTUS.

BOOK V.

PROLOGUS.

QUISNAM FIDELIS ET prudens servus? Ejus merces in Petro indicatur, item etiam in Paulo, cujus auctoritati parere Ambrosius cupiens hunc librum aliis adjectum voluit, qui non potuerit in superiore comprehendi. Quid in hoc disputaturus sit, quove consilio? Deberi sibi veniam, cum ab omnibus ministris quaerenda sit creditae sibi pecuniae usura. Hanc sibi usuram fideles esse: beatum autem fore, si mercedem sperare sibi liceat; se tamen sanctorum praemia non tam optare, quam poenarum immunitatem, ad quam merendam omnes hortatur.

PROLOGUE.

Who is a faithful and wise servant? His reward is pointed out in the case of Peter, as also in the case of Paul. Ambrose, being anxious to follow Paul's guidance, wished this book to be added to the others, for it could not be included in the preceding one. The subject for discussion is then stated, and the reason for such a discussion given. He must needs be pardoned, for usury is to be demanded from every servant for the money which has been entrusted to him. Their faithfulness is the usury desired in his own case. He will be happy if he may hope for a reward; but he does not look so much for the recompense of the saints, as for exemption from punishment. He urges all to seek to merit this.

1. Quisnam est fidelis servus et prudens, quem constituit Dominus super familiam suam, ut det illis in tempore cibum? Beatus ille servus, quem veniens Dominus ejus invenerit sic facientem (Matth. XXIV, 45, 46), Non vilis hic servus est, magnus aliquis esse debet: quis sit iste consideremus.

1. Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord has made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he comes shall find so doing. Matthew 24:45-46 Not worthless is this servant: some great one ought he to be. Let us think who he may be.

2. Est Petrus ipsius Domini ad pascendum gregem electus judicio, qui tertio meretur audire: Pasce agniculos meos, pasce agnos meos, pasce oviculas meas (Joan. XXI, 13 et seq.). Itaque pascendo bene cibo fidei gregem Christi, culpam lapsus prioris abolevit. Et ideo tertio admonetur ut pascat, tertio utrum Dominum diligat, interrogatur; ut quem tertio ante crucem negaverat, tertio fateretur (Matth. XXVI, 70 et seq.).

2. It is Peter, chosen by the Lord Himself to feed His flock, who merits thrice to hear the words: Feed My little lambs; feed My lambs; feed My sheep. And so, by feeding well the flock of Christ with the food of faith, he effaced the sin of his former fall. For this reason is he thrice admonished to feed the flock; thrice is he asked whether he loves the Lord, in order that he may thrice confess Him, Whom he had thrice denied before His Crucifixion.

3. Beatus et ille servus, qui potest dicere: Lac vos potavi, non escam; nondum enim poteratis (I Cor. III, 2); novit enim quos quemadmodum pascat. Quis nostrum hoc facere potest? Quis nostrum potest vere dicere: Factus sum infirmis infirmus, ut infirmos lucrificiam (I Cor. IX, 22)?

3. Blessed also is that servant who can say: I have fed you with milk and not with meat; for hitherto you were not able to bear it. 1 Corinthians 3:2 For he knew how to feed them. Who of us can do this? Who of us can truly say: To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak? 1 Corinthians 9:22

4. Et tamen ille tantus ad curam gregis electus a Christo, qui sanaret infirmos, curaret invalidos, haereticum a commisso sibi ovili statim post unam correptionem repellit (Tit. III, 10); ne unius erraticae ovis scabies serpenti ulcere totum gregem contaminet. Jubet praeterea stultas quaestiones et contentiones esse vitandas (Ibid., 9).

4. Yet he, being so great a man, and chosen by Christ for the care of His flock, so as to strengthen the weak and to heal the sick — he, I say, rejects immediately after one admonition Titus 3:10 a heretic from the fold entrusted to him, for fear that the taint of one erring sheep might infect the whole flock with a spreading sore. He further bids that foolish questions and contentions be avoided. Titus 3:9

5. Quid igitur nos agemus, inter messis antiquae nova zizania imprudentes accolae constituti? Si taceamus, cedere videbimur: si contendamus, verendum est ne nos quoque judicemur esse carnales. Scriptum est enim de hujusmodi quaestionibus, quae generant lites: Servum autem Domini non oportet litigare, sed mansuetum esse ad omnes, docibilem, patientem, cum modestia docentem eos qui resistunt (II Tim. II, 23, 24): et alibi: Si quis contentiosus est, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus, neque Ecclesia Dei (I Cor. XI, 16). Eoque scribere aliquid sententiae fuit, ut sine strepitu aliquo impietati haereticorum nostra pro nobis scripta respondeant.

5. How, then, shall we act, being but ignorant dwellers set among these fresh tares in the old-standing harvest field? Matthew 13:25 If we are silent, we shall seem to be giving way; and if we contend against them, there is the fear that we too shall be held to be carnal. For it is written of matters of this sort, which beget strife: The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all, apt to teach, patient, with moderation instructing those that oppose themselves. 2 Timothy 2:24-25 And in another place: If any man is contentious, we have no such custom, neither the Church of God. 1

Corinthians 11:16 For this reason it was our intention to write somewhat, in order that our writings might without any din answer the impiety of heretics on our behalf.

6. 552 Quintum itaque, Imperator auguste, hunc librum paramus ordiri: nam, et quartum librum oportuit in illa vitis disputatione finiri; ne coacervasse magis librum eumdem quodam videremur quaestionum tumultu, quam fructu spiritalis vineae replevisse: nec inconsummatam fidei vindemiam tantis adhuc superfluentibus disputationibus decuit derelinqui.

6. And so we prepare to commence this our Fifth Book, O Emperor Augustus. For it was but right that the Fourth Book should end with our discussion on the Vine, lest otherwise we should seem to have overloaded that book with a tumultuous mass of subjects, rather than to have filled it with the fruit of the spiritual vineyard. On the other hand, it was not seemly that the gathering of the vintage of the faith should be left unfinished, while there was still all abundance of such great matters for discussion.

7. Quinto igitur libro de Patris ac Filii et Spiritus sancti inseparabili divinitate digerimus, sequestrata interim pleniore disputatione de Spiritu sancto, provocati magisterio Evangelicae lectionis (Matth. XXV, 15); ut credita nobis quinque fidei talenta, quasi quadam horum quinque sorte librorum, humanis feneremus affectibus; ne forte cum venerit Dominus, et invenerit in terra absconditam pecuniam suam, dicat mihi: Serve male et piger, sciebas quia meto ubi non semino, et congrego ubi non sparsi: oportuit ergo te committere pecuniam meam nummulariis; ut veniens ego recepissem quod meum est (Ibid., 26, 27): aut quemadmodum in alio libro est: Et ego, inquit, veniens cum usuris utique exegissem illam (Luc. XIX, 23).

7. In the Fifth Book, therefore, we speak of the indivisible Godhead of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost (omitting, however, a full discussion on the Holy Ghost), being urged by the teaching of the Gospel to let out on interest to human minds the five talents of the faith entrusted to these five books being as it were the principal; lest perhaps when the Lord comes, and finds His money hidden in the earth, He may say to me: Thou wicked and slothful servant, you knew that I reap where I do not sow; and gather where I have not scattered; you ought therefore to have put My money to the exchangers, that at My coming I might have received Mine Own, Matthew 25:26-27 or as it stands in another book: And I, it says, at My coming might have received it with usury. Luke 19:23

8. Date ergo veniam, si quos prolixioris hujuscemodi sermonis offendit audacia. Officii contemplatio cogit credere quod accepimus: Dispensatores sumus mysteriorum coelestium (I Cor. IV, 1). Ministri sumus, non ex aequo omnes, sed unicuique, inquit, sicut Dominus dedit. Ego plantavi, Apollo rigavit: sed Deus incrementum dedit (I Cor. III, 3, 6). Unusquisque igitur enitatur ut mercedem possit accipere secundum suum laborem; Dei enim sumus, ut Apostolus dixit, cooperarii, Dei cultura, Dei aedificatio (Ibid., 9). Beatus itaque ille qui tales fenoris sui cernit usuras: beatus et ille qui fructus sui operis intuetur: Beatus quoque qui superaedificat supra fundamentum fidei aurum, argentum, lapides pretiosos (Ibid., 12).

8. I pray those to pardon me, whom the boldness of such a lengthy address displeases. The thought of my office compels me to entrust to others what I have received. We are stewards of the heavenly mysteries. 1 Corinthians 4:1 We are ministers, but not all alike. But, it says, even as the Lord gave to every man, I have planted; Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. 1 Corinthians 3:5-6 Let each one then strive that be may be able to receive a reward according to his labour. For we are labourers together with God, as the Apostle said; we are God’s husbandry, God’s building. 1 Corinthians 3:9 Blessed therefore is he who sees such usury on his principal; blessed too is he who beholds the fruit of his work; blessed again is he who builds upon the foundation of faith, gold, silver, precious stones. 1 Corinthians 3:12

9. Vos nobis estis omnia, qui haec auditis aut legitis: vos feneratoris usurae; verbi usurae, non pecuniae: vos agricolae redditus: vos aedificatoris aurum, argentum, lapidesque pretiosi. In vestris meritis sacerdotalis summa laboris est, in vestris animis fructus episcopalis operis enitescit; in vestris profectibus aurum Domini refulget, multiplicatur argentum, si eloquia divina teneatis: Eloquia enim Domini, eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum, probatum terrae, purgatum septuplum (Psal. XI, 7). Vos ergo facietis foeneratorem divitem, agricolam fructuosum: vos peritum probabitis architectum. Non arroganter dico; quia non tam mea sunt, quam vestra, quae voveo.

9. You who hear or read these words are all things to us. You are the usury of the money-lender — the usury on speech, not on money; you are the return given to the husbandman; you are the gold, the silver, the precious stones of the builder. In your merits lie the chief results of the labours of the priest; in your souls shines forth the fruit of a bishop’s work; in your progress glitters the gold of the Lord; the silver is increased if you hold fast the divine words. The words of the Lord are pure words, as silver tried in the fire; proved on the earth, purified seven times. You therefore will make the lender rich, the husbandman to abound in produce; you will prove the master-builder to be skilful. I do not speak boastfully; for I do not desire so much my own advantage as yours.

10. O si mihi liceat secure de vobis tunc 553 temporis dicere: Domine, quinque talenta mihi dedisti, et ecce alia quinque lucratus sum (Matth. XXV, 20), et ostendere vestrarum talenta pretiosa virtutum! Habemus enim thesaurum in vasis fictilibus (II Cor. IV, 7). Haec sunt talenta quae jubet Dominus spiritaliter fenerari: aut duo aera novi et veteris Testamenti, quae spoliato illi a latronibus Samaritanus ille Evangelicus ad curanda vulnera dereliquit (Luc, X, 35).

10. Oh that I might safely say of you at that time: Lord, You gave me five talents, behold I have gained five other talents; Matthew 25:20 and that I might show the precious talents of your virtues! For we have a treasure in earthen vessels. 2 Corinthians 4:7 These are the talents which the Lord bids us spiritually to trade with, or the two coins of the New and the Old Testament, which that Samaritan in the Gospel left for the man robbed by the thieves, for the purpose of getting his wounds healed. Luke 10:35

11. Neque ego, fratres, voti avarus ideo haec opto, ut supra multa constituar: sat est mihi praemium de vestro profectu. Utinam non indignus eo inveniar, quod accepi! Ea quae sunt me majora melioribus tribuenda, non exigo; licet soleas, Domine, dicere: Volo autem et huic novissimo dare, sicut et tibi (Matth. XX, 14). Accipiat potestatem supra decem civitates, qui meretur (Luc. XIX, 17).

11. Neither do I, my brethren, with greedy desires, long for this, so that I may be set over many things; the recompense I get from the fact of your advance is enough for me. Oh that I may not be found unworthy of that which I have received! Let those things which are too great for me be assigned to better men. I demand them not! Yet may Thou say, O Lord: I will give unto this last, even as unto you. Matthew 20:14 Let the man that deserves it receive authority over ten cities. Luke 19:17

12. Sit ille talis, qualis Moyses, qui Legis decem verba conscripsit (Deut. V, 5 et seq.). Sit ille Jesus Nave, qui subegit quinque reges, et Gabaonitas in deditionem accepit (Josue X, 22 et seq.); ut esset typus venturum ejus nominis virum, cujus imperio corporales omnes deliciae vincerentur, converterentur gentes: ut fidem Jesu Christi magis, quam pristina studia sua et vota sequerentur. Sit ille David, cui occurrerunt psallentes juvenculae dicentes: Saul triumphavit in millibus, David in decem millibus (I Reg. XVIII, 7).

12. Let him be such an one as was Moses, who wrote the Ten Words of the Law. Let him be as Joshua, the son of Nun, who subdued five kings, and brought the Gibeonites into subjection, that he might be the figure of a Man of his own name Who was to come, by Whose power all fleshly lust should be overcome, and the Gentiles should be converted, so that they might follow the faith of Jesus Christ rather than their former pursuits and desires. Let him be as David, whom the young maidens came to meet with songs, saying: Saul has triumphed over thousands, David over ten thousands. 1 Samuel 18:7

13. Mihi sat est, si non in exteriores tenebras extrudar, quemadmodum ille qui commissum sibi talentum in terra quadam suae carnis abscondit: sicut princeps Synagogae, caeterique principes Judaeorum, qui credita sibi eloquia Dei humo quadam sui corporis occuparunt: deliciisque carnis intenti, quasi in quamdam exaltati cordis foveam fenus coeleste merserunt (Matth. XXIII, 14 et seq.).

13. It is enough for me, if I am not thrust out into the outer darkness, as he was, who hid the talent entrusted to him in the earth so to speak, of his own flesh. This the ruler of the synagogue did, and the other rulers of the Jews; for they employed , the words of the Lord, which had been entrusted to them, on the ground as it were of their bodies; and, delighting in the pleasures of the flesh, sunk the heavenly trust as though into the pit of an overweening heart.

14. Nos igitur non intra latibula carnis absconditam Domini teneamus pecuniam, vel mnam illam in sudario reponamus (Luc. XIX, 20): sed tamquam boni nummularii cum sudore quodam mentis et corporis aequo et parato semper libremus affectu; ut prope sit verbum in ore tuo et in corde tuo (Deut. XXX, 14).

14. Let us then not keep the Lord's money buried and hidden in the flesh; nor let us hide our one talent in a napkin; Luke 19:20 but like good money-changers let us ever weigh it out with labour of mind and body, with an even and ready will, that the word may be near, even in your mouth and in your heart. Deuteronomy 30:14

15. Hoc verbum Dei est, pretiosum est talentum, quo redimeris. Haec est pecunia per mensas animarum saepe cernenda; ut frequenter agitando in omnem terram bonorum sonus possit exire nummorum, per quem vita paretur aeterna. Haec est autem vita aeterna, quam largiris omnipotens Pater; ut cognoscamus te solum verum Deum, et quem misisti Jesum Christum (Joan. XVII, 3).

15. This is the word of the Lord, this is the precious talent, whereby you are redeemed. This money must often be seen on the tables of souls, in order that by constant trading the sound of the good coins may be able to go forth into every land, by the means of which eternal life is purchased. This is eternal life, which You, Almighty Father, give freely, that we may know You the only true God, and Jesus Christ Whom You have sent. John 17:3

CAPUT PRIMUM.

QUAM IMPII SINT Ariani, dum illud in quo humana felicitas constat, impugnant. Joannem semper cum Patre Filium conjungere, maxime ubi ait: Ut cognoscant te solum verum, etc. Illic igitur verum Deum etiam intelligendum de Filio, quando is nec Deus negari possit, nec falsus dici; immo nec etiam nuncupativus. Quod ultimum ubi ex Apostolo demonstratum est, Christum verum Deum esse rite conficitur.

CHAPTER 1.

How impious the Arians are, in attacking that on which human happiness depends. John ever unites the Son with the Father, especially where he says: That they may know You, the only true God, etc. In that place, then, we must understand the words true God also of the Son; for it cannot be denied that He is God, and it cannot be said He is a false god, and least of all that He is God by appellation only. This last point being proved from the Apostle's words, we rightly confess that Christ is true God.

16. Unde advertant Ariani quam impii sint, qui de spe nostra et voto nobis faciunt quaestiones. Et quoniam hinc prae caeteris vociferari solent, dicentes separatum a solo 554 et vero Deo Christum, intellectus impios pro nostris viribus confutemus.

16. Wherefore let the Arians observe, how impious they are in calling in question our hope and the object of our desires. And since they are wont to cry out on this point above all others, saying that Christ is distinct from the only and true God, let us confute their impious ideas so far as lies in our power.

17. Hoc enim loco magis intelligere debent quia haec utilitas, haec merces est perfectae virtutis, hoc divinum et incomparabile munus, ut cognoscamus cum Patre Christum, nec separemus a Patre Filium, sicut Scriptura non separat. Namque hoc magis ad unitatem, quam ad distantiam divinae proficit potestatis, quod idem praemium unum honorem nobis dat Patris, Filiique cognitio: quam mercedem habere non poterit, nisi qui et Patrem cognoverit et Filium; sicut enim Patris, ita Filii cognitio vitam acquirit aeternam.

17. For on this point they ought rather to understand, that this is the benefit, this the reward of perfect virtue, namely, this divine and incomparable gift, that we may know Christ together with the Father, and not separate the Son from the Father; as also the Scriptures do not separate them. For the following tells rather for the unity than for the diversity of the Divine Majesty, namely, that the knowledge of the Father and of the Son gives us the same recompense, and one and the same honour; which reward no man will have but he that has known both the Father and the Son. For as the knowledge of the Father procures eternal life, so also does the knowledge of the Son.

18. Itaque sicut in principio statim Verbum cum Deo Patre pia confessione junxit Evangelista dicens: Et Verbum erat apud Deum (Joan. I, 1), ita et hic scribendo verba Domini: Ut cognoscant te solum verum Deum, et quem misisti Jesum Christum (Joan. XVII, 3); conjunctione illa Patrem utique copulavit, et Filium, ut Christum verum Deum a majestate Patris nemo secernat: numquam enim conjunctio separat.

18. Therefore as the Evangelist immediately at the outset joined the Word with God the Father in his devout confession of faith, saying: And the Word was with God; John 1:1 and here too, in writing the words of the Lord: That they may know You, the only true God, and Jesus Christ Whom You have sent, John 17:3 he has undoubtedly, by thus connecting Them, bound together the Father and the Son, so that no one may separate Christ as true God from the majesty of the Father, for union does not dissever.

19. Et ideo dicendo: Ut cognoscant te solum verum Deum, et quem misisti Jesum Christum, et Sabellianos interficit, et Judaeos exclusit eos utique qui audirent loquentem; ne aut illi eumdem Patrem putarent esse quem Filium, si non addidisset et Christum: aut isti a Patre Filium separarent. 20 et

19. Therefore in saying, That they may know You, the only true God, and Jesus Christ Whom You have sent, he put an end to the Sabellians, and has also put the Jews out of court — those at any rate who heard him speak; so that the former might not suppose the Same to be the Father as the Son, which they might have done if he had not added also Christ, and that the latter might not sever the Son from the Father.

21. Quaero autem cur non putent subaudiendum, et ex superioribus colligendum; ut quia praemisit solum verum Deum Patrem, subaudiamus etiam Jesum Christum solum verum Deum? Exprimendum enim aliter non fuit, ne duos deos dicere videretur; nam neque duos dicimus deos, et ejusdem cum Patre divinitatis Filium confitemur.

20. But, I ask, why do they not think we ought to gather and understand this from what has been already said; that as he has declared the Father to be only, true God, so we may understand Jesus Christ also to be only, true God? For it could not be expressed in any other way, for fear he might seem to be speaking of two Gods. For neither do we speak of two Gods; and yet we confess the Son to be of the same Godhead with the Father.

22. Itaque quaeramus qua ratione divinitatis hic putent factam esse distantiam, utrum Deum negent Christum? Sed negare non possunt. An verum Deum negent? Sed dicant, si verum negant, utrum falsum, an nuncupativum Deum judicent? Nam secundum Scripturas aut verus Deus est, aut tantummodo nuncupativus, aut falsus. Verus ut Pater, nuncupativus ut sancti, falsus ut daemones atque simulacra. Dicant igitur qua Filium Dei confessione designent, utrum falso praesumptum Dei nomen, an vero quasi nuncupativo inspirationem tantum divinitatis inesse arbitrantur.

21. May we ask, therefore, on what grounds they think a distinction is made in the Godhead, and whether they deny Christ to be God? But they cannot deny it. Do they deny Him to be true God? But if they deny Him to be true God, let them say whether they declare Him to be a false God, or God by appellation only. For according to the Scriptures the word God is used either of the true God, or by appellation only, or of a false god. True God as the Father; God by appellation as the saints; a false god like the demons and idols. Let them say then how they will acknowledge and describe the Son of God. Do they suppose the name of God to have been falsely assumed; or was there in truth merely an indwelling of God within Him, as it were by appellation only?

23. Falso praesumptum nomen non puto quod dicant, ut apertiore se crimine impietatis involvant; ne ut daemoniis et simulacris, ita etiam Christo falsum Dei inditum nomen insinuando se prodant. Sin autem ideo dictum putant Deum, quia inspirationem divinitatis habuit, sicut et multi sancti viri (eos enim Scriptura deos dixit (Joan. X, 35), ad quos sermo fiebat Dei) ergo non ultra homines eum praeferunt, sed comparandum hominibus arbitrantur; ut hoc eum putent esse quod hominibus ipse donavit, dicens ad Moysen: Posuit te in Deum Pharaoni (Exod. VII, 1). Unde et in psalmo dictum est: Ego dixi, dii estis (Psal LXXXI, 6). 555

22. I do not think they can say the name was falsely assumed, and so involve themselves in the open wickedness of blasphemy; lest they should betray themselves on the one hand to the demons and idols, and on the other to Christ, by insinuating that the name of God was falsely given to Him. But if they think He is called God because He had an indwelling of the Godhead within Him — as many holy men were (for the Scripture calls them Gods to whom the word of God came), John 10:35 — they do not place Him before other men, but think He is to be compared with them; so that they consider Him to be the same as He has granted other men to be, even as He says to Moses: I have made you a god unto Pharaoh. Exodus 7:1 Wherefore it is also said in the Psalms: I have said, you are gods.

24. Et hanc tamen sacrilegorum opinionem Paulus excludit, qui ait: Nam et si sunt qui dicantur dii, sive in coelo, sive in terra (I Cor. VIII, 5). Non dixit, sunt dii, sed sunt qui dicantur. Christus autem, sicut scriptum est, heri et hodie ipse est (Hebr. XXIII, 8). Est, inquit, hoc est, non solum nomine, sed etiam veritate.

23. This idea of these blasphemers Paul puts aside; for he said: For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth. 1 Corinthians 8:5 He said not: There be gods, but There be that are called gods. But Christ, as it is written, is the same yesterday and today. Hebrews 13:8 He is, it says; that is, not only in name but also in truth.

25. Et bene scriptum est: Heri et hodie ipse est; ut Arii impietas astruendi sacrilegii locum invenire non posset. Qui cum legeret in psalmo secundo dicentem Filio Patrem: Filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te (Psal. II, 7); annotavit hodie non heri, ad aeternitatem divinae generationis referens, quod de carnis assumptione memoratum est, sicut Paulus in Actibus apostolorum ait: Et nos vobis annuntiamus, quae ad patres nostros repromissio facta est; quoniam hanc Deus adimplevit filiis nostris, resuscitans Dominum Jesum Christum, sicut scriptum est in psalmo secundo: Filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te (Act. XIII, 32 et seq.). Sancto igitur Spiritu repletus Apostolus, ut illam elideret saevitatem, ait: Heri et hodie ipse est, et in saecula: heri, propter aeternitatem: hodie, propter corporis susceptionem.

24. And well is it written: He is the same yesterday and today, so that the impiety of Arius might find no room to pile up its profanity. For he, in reading in the second psalm of the Father saying to the Son, You are My Son, this day have I begotten You, noted the word today, not yesterday, referring this which was spoken of the assumption of our flesh to the eternity of the divine generation; of which Paul also says in the Acts of the Apostles: And we declare unto you the promise which was made to our fathers: for God has fulfilled the same to our children, in that He has raised up the Lord Jesus Christ again, as it is written in the second psalm: You are My Son, this day have I begotten You. Acts 13:32-33 Thus the Apostle, filled with the Holy Ghost, in order that he might destroy that fierce madness of his, said: The same, yesterday, today, and forever. Yesterday on account of His eternity; today on account of His taking to Himself a human body.

26. Est ergo Christus, et est semper; qui enim est, semper est. Christus autem semper est, de quo dicit Moyses: Qui est, misit me (Exod. III, 14). Erat utique Gabriel, erat Raphael, erant Angeli: sed semper esse, qui aliquando non fuerint, nequaquam pari ratione dicuntur. Christus autem, sicut legimus, non fuit, est, et non: sed est in illo fuit (II Cor. I, 19); unde vere Dei solius est esse, qui semper est.

25. Christ therefore is, and always is; for He, Who is, always is. And Christ always is, of Whom Moses says: He that is has sent me. Exodus 3:14 Gabriel indeed was, Raphael was, the angels were; but they who sometime have not been are by no means with equal reason said always to be. But Christ, as we read, was not it is, and, it is not, but, it is was in Him. 2 Corinthians 1:19 Wherefore it is the property of God alone to be, Who ever is.

27. Ergo si et nuncupativum Deum non audent dicere, et falsum cum dicere majoris est impietatis, restat ut Deus verus sit, veri Patris non dissimilis, sed aequalis. Qui cum et justificet et sanctificet quos velit, non foris assumens; sed in se habens sanctificandi potestatem, quomodo non est verus Deus? Nam Apostolus eum utique verum Deum dixit, qui naturaliter Deus esset, sicut habes: Quia tunc, inquit, nescientes Deum, servistis his qui natura non erant dii (Galat. IV, 8); hoc est, qui veri dii esse non poterant, quibus hoc naturaliter minime suppetebat.

26. Therefore if they dare not say He is God by appellation, and it is a mark of deep impiety to say He is a false god, it remains that He is true God, not unlike to the true Father, but equal to Him. And as He sanctifies and justifies whom He will, Romans 9:18 not by assuming that power from without Himself, but having within Himself the power of sanctification, how is He not true God? For the Apostle called Him indeed true God, Who according to His nature was God, as it is written: Howbeit then, when you knew not God, you serviced unto them, who by nature were not gods; Galatians 4:8 that is, who could not be true gods, for this title by no means belonged to them by nature.

CAPUT II.

CUM PROBATUM SIT Filium esse verum Deum, nec in eo minorem Patre; ostenditur per vocem solus cum in Scripturis de Patre dicitur, non excludi Filium; quin immo hanc ei vocem prae cunctis et soli ipsi convenire. Trinitatem non inter omnia, sed super omnia solam esse: Filium vero solum facere, quae facit Pater, ac solum habere immortalitatem; nec proinde in verbis controversis eum a Patre separandum; licere tamen eum locum intelligere de incarnatione: ab illis demum Patrem ab hominum redemptione secludi, qui ab hoc Filium sejunctum volunt.

CHAPTER 2.

Since it has been proved that the Son is true God, and in that is not inferior to the Father, it is shown that by the word solus (alone) when used of the Father in the Scriptures, the Son is not excluded; nay, that this expression befits Him above all, and Him alone. The Trinity is alone, not amongst all, but above all. The Son alone does what the Father does, and alone has immortality. But we must not for this reason separate Him from the Father in our controversies. We may, however, understand that passage of the Incarnation. Lastly the Father is shut out from a share in the redemption of men by those who would have the Son to be separated from Him.

28. Verum copiose jam verum Deum Christum in superioribus libris Scripturarum 556 lectionibus approbavimus. Ergo si Christus, ut edoctum est, Deus verus est, quaeramus qua ratione, cum solum verum Deum Patrem legant, a Patre Filium cupiunt separare.

27. We have fully demonstrated by passages of Scripture, in the earlier books, that Christ is true, yea, very true God. Therefore if Christ, as it has been taught, is true God, let us enquire why they desire to separate the Son from the Father, when they read that the Father is the only true God.

29. Si dicunt quia verus Deus solus Pater est, negare non possunt quia et Filius solus Deus veritas est, quia Christus veritas est. Numquid veritas vero minor est, cum secundum appellationem nominum verus plerumque a veritate dicatur, sicut sapiens a sapientia, justus a justitia? Hoc nos inter Patrem non sentimus et Filium, quia et Patri nihil deest, quia Pater est verax: et Filius quia veritas est, aequalis est vero.

28. If they say that the Father alone is true God, they cannot deny that God the Son alone is the Truth; for Christ is the Truth. Is the Truth then something inferior to Him that is true, seeing that according to the use of terms a man is called true from the word truth, as also wise from wisdom, just from justice? We do not deem it so between the Father and the Son. For there is nothing wanting to the Father, because the Father is full of truth; and the Son, because He is the Truth, is equal to Him that is true.

30. Ut sciant autem, cum solum legunt, nequaquam esse a Patre Filium separandum, meminerint in prophetis a Deo dictum: Ego extendi coelum solus (Esai. XLIV, 24). Et utique non extendit sine Filio Pater. Ipse enim Filius qui sapientia Dei est, dicit: Quando parabat coelum, cum ipso aderam (Prov. VIII, 27). Et Paulus de Filio dictum esse confirmat: Initio terram tu fundasti, Domine, et opera manuum tuarum sunt coeli (Hebr. I, 10). Sive ergo Filius coelum fecit, sicut et Apostolus voluit intelligi, et ipse utique non sine Patre coelum solus extendit, sive, ut Proverbiis habes, Deus in sapientia fundavit terram, paravit autem coelos in intellectu (Prov. III, 19), ostenditur quia nec Pater solus sine Filio coelos fecit, nec sine Patre Filius; et tamen qui coelum extendit, solus dicitur.

29. But that they may know, when they see the word alone, that the Son is in no wise to be separated from the Father, let them remember it was said by God in the Prophets: I stretched forth the heavens alone. Isaiah 44:24 The Father certainly did not stretch them forth without the Son. For the Son Himself, Who is the Wisdom of God, says: When He prepared the heavens I was present with Him. Proverbs 8:27 And Paul declares that it was said of the Son: You, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of Your hands. Whether therefore the Son made the heavens, as also the Apostle would have it understood, while He Himself certainly did not alone spread out the heavens without the Father; or as it stands in the Book of Proverbs: The Lord in wisdom has founded the earth, in understanding has He prepared the heavens; Proverbs 3:19 it is proved that neither the Father made the heavens alone without the Son, nor yet the Son without the Father. And yet He who spread out the heavens is said to be alone.

31. Quam vero id et de Filio aperte intelligendum sit, quod solus appelletur, etsi numquam, inscio Patre, aliquid fecisse credatur; etiam alibi habes, ubi scriptum est: Extendens coelum solus, et ambulans quasi in pavimento super mare (Job. IX, 8). Namque Evangelium Domini docuit nos, quod in mari non Pater, sed Filius ambulavit, quando Petrus rogavit eum dicens: Domine, jube me venire ad te (Matth. XIV, 28). Sed etiam prophetia ipsa documento est; sanctus enim Job adventum Domini prophetabat, (Job. III, 8), de quo vere dixit quia magnum cetum erat debellaturus, et factum est: nam feralem illum cetum, diabolum scilicet, ultimis temporibus venerabili corporis sui passione postratum perculit et afflixit (Esa. XXVII, 1).

30. To show indeed how plainly we must understand the expression alone of the Son (although we may never believe that He did anything without the knowledge of the Father), we have here also another passage, where it is written: Which alone spreads out the heavens, and walks as it were on a pavement over the sea. Job 9:8 For the Gospel of the Lord has taught us that it was not the Father but the Son that walked upon the sea, when Peter asked Him, saying, Lord, bid me come unto You. Matthew 14:28 But even prophecy itself gives proof of this. For holy Job prophesied of the coming of the Lord; of Whom he said in truth that He would vanquish the great Leviathan, Job 41:8 and it was done. For that dread Leviathan that is, the devil, He smote, and struck down, and laid low in the last times by the adorable Passion of His own Body. Isaiah 27:1

32. Est ergo solus et verus Deus Filius; haec enim et Filio praerogativa defertur. De nullo namque qui creatus est, proprie dici potest, quia solus est. Nam cui inest communitas creaturae, quemadmodum quasi solus potest a caeteris separari? Itaque homo rationabilis videtur inter omnia terrena animantia, sed tamen non est solus rationabilis; scimus enim rationabilia esse et coelestia opera Dei, angelos et archangelos rationabiles confitemur. Si ergo angeli rationabiles, non utique solus rationabilis homo dicitur.

31. The Son therefore is only and true God for this also is assigned to the Son as His sole right. For of no created being can it be accurately said that he is alone. How can he to whom fellowship in creation belongs be separated from the rest, as though he were alone? Thus man is seen to be a rational being among all earthly creatures, yet he is not the only rational being; for we know that the heavenly works of God also are rational, we confess that angels and archangels are rational beings. If then the angels are rational, man cannot be said to be the only rational being.

33. Sed dicunt solum dici posse solem; quia sol alter non est. At et ipse sol habet communia multa cum stellis, quod percurrit coelum (Gen. I, 14), 557 quod aethereae illius coelestisque substantiae est, quod creatura est, quod inter omnia Dei opera computatur, quod cum omnibus Deo servit, cum omnibus benedicit Deum, cum omnibus laudat. Non ergo solus proprie dicitur, quia nec a caeteris separatur (Psal. CXLVIII, 3).

32. But they say that the sun can be said to be alone, because there is no second sun. But the sun himself has many things in common with the stars, for he travels across the heavens, he is of that ethereal and heavenly substance, he is a creature, and is reckoned among all the works of God. He serves God in union with all, blesses Him with all, praises Him with all. Therefore he cannot accurately be said to be alone, for he is not set apart from the rest.

34. Itaque cum Patris et Filii Spiritusque sancti divinitati, quae sola non inter omnia, sed super omnia est, nulla possit creatura conferri, ut de Spiritu interim assertio reservetur: sicut Pater dicitur solus Deus verus, cui nihil sit commune cum caeteris; ita etiam solus est Filius imago veri Dei, solus dextera Patris, solus virtus Dei atque sapientia.

33. Wherefore since no created being can be compared with the Godhead of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, Which is alone, not among all, but over all (our declaration concerning the Spirit being meanwhile held back); as the Father is said to be the only true God, because He has nothing in common with others; so also is the Son alone the Image of the true God, He alone is the Hand of the Father, He alone is the Virtue and Wisdom of God.

35. Solus ergo Filius facit sicut et Pater, quia scriptum est: Quaecumque facio, ipse facit (Joan. V, 16). Cum enim unum opus sit Patris et Filii, bene de Patre et Filio dicitur quia Deus solus operatus est; unde etiam cum creatorem dicimus, et Patrem et Filium confitemur. Nam utique cum Paulus diceret: Qui servierunt creaturae potius quam Creatori (Rom. I, 25); nec Patrem creatorem negavit, ex quo omnia haec; nec Filium, per quem omnia.

34. Thus the Son alone does what the Father does; for it is written: Whatsoever things I do, He does. John 5:19 And since the work of the Father and of the Son is one, it is well said of the Father and the Son, that God worked alone; wherefore also when we speak of the Creator, we own both the Father and the Son. For assuredly when Paul said, Who served the creature more than the Creator, Romans 1:25 he neither denied the Father to be the Creator, from Whom are all these things, nor yet the Son, through Whom are all things. Romans 11:36

36. A quo alienum utique non videtur, quia scriptum est: Qui solus habet immortalitatem (I Tim. VI, 16). Quomodo enim immortalitatem non habet, qui vitam habet in semetipso? Habet utique in natura, habet in substantia; et habet non per gratiam temporalem, sed per sempiternam divinitatem: habet non ex dono quasi servus, sed ex generationis proprietate quasi Filius coaeternus; et habet sicut Pater: Sicut enim Pater habet vitam in semetipso, ita et Filio dedit vitam habere in semetipso (Joan. V, 16); sicut habet, inquit, sic dedit. Didicisti supra (Lib. IV, ca), quemadmodum dederit; ne putares esse gratiae largitatem, ubi generationis arcanum est. Cum ergo inter Patrem et Filium vitae nulla distantia sit, quemadmodum quod immortalitatem solus habeat Pater, Filius non habeat, aestimari potest?

35. And it does not seem out of agreement with this that it is written: Who alone has immortality. 1 Timothy 6:16 For how could He not have immortality Who has life in Himself? He has it in His nature; He has it in His essential Being; and He has it not as a temporal grace, but owing to His eternal Godhead. He has it not by way of a gift as a servant, but by peculiar right of His Generation, as the co-eternal Son. He has it, too, as has the Father. For as the Father has life in Himself, so also has He given to the Son to have life in Himself. John 5:26 As He has it, it says, so He has given it. You have learned already how He gave it, that you may not think it to be a free gift of grace, when it is a secret of His generation. Since, then, there is no divergence of life between the Father and the Son, how can it be supposed that the Father alone has immortality, while the Son has it not?

37. Unde intelligant nec hoc loco a solo vero Deo Patre Filium separandum; quia probare non possunt quod solus et verus Deus Filius non sit: cum praesertim et hic aut subaudiatur, ut diximus, et Christum verum solum Deum esse: aut certe aliud ad divinitatem Patris et Filii, aliud ad incarnationem Christi relatum intelligendum sit; quia non est perfecta cognitio, nisi quae et secundum aeternitatem unigenitum Deum verum Dei Filium Jesum Christum, et secundum carnem generatum ex Virgine confitetur. Quod alibi hic ipse Evangelista nos docuit dicens: Omnis spiritus qui confitetur Jesum Christum in carne venisse, de Deo est (I Joan. IV, 2).

36. Wherefore let them understand that in this passage the Son is not to be separated from the Father, Who is the only true God. For they cannot prove that the Son is not the only and true God, especially as here also it may be gathered, as I have said, that Christ too is true and only God; or the passage may at least be understood partly in reference to the Godhead of the Father and the Son, and partly to the Incarnation of Christ: for knowledge is not perfect unless it confesses Jesus Christ from eternity to be only-begotten God, true Son of God, and, according to the flesh, begotten of a Virgin. Which also this very Evangelist has taught us elsewhere, saying: Every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh, is of God. 1 John 4:2

38. Denique quam non alienum sit etiam incarnationis hoc loco intelligere sacramentum, docet nos ipsius series lectionis; sic enim habes: Pater, venit hora, clarifica Filium tuum (Joan. XVII, 1). Utique cum et horam venisse commemoret, et clarificari petat, quomodo nisi secundum carnis assumptionem locutum eum convenit aestimari? Nam nec ulla sibi temporum praescripta momenta divinitas habet, nec clarificatione indiget lumen aeternum. Ergo in solo vero Deo Patre et Filium Dei solum verum secundum 558 divinitatis intelligimus unitatem, et in Jesu Christi nomine, quod ex Virgine natus accepit, incarnationis agnoscimus sacramentum.

37. Lastly, the whole of our passage teaches us that it is not improper in this verse to understand a reference to the sacrament of the Incarnation. For thus it is written: Father, the hour has come, glorify Your Son. John 17:1 When, therefore, He states that the hour has come, and prays to be glorified, how can one suppose Him to have spoken but only in accordance with the assumption of our flesh? For the Godhead has no fixed moments of time, nor does eternal light stand in need of glorification. Therefore in the only true God, Who is the Father, we also understand the only true Son of God to be in accordance with the unity of the Godhead. And in the name of Jesus Christ, which He received when born of the Virgin, we acknowledge the sacrament of the Incarnation.

39. Quod si cum solum verum Deum Patrem legunt, Filium cupiunt separare; ergo cum de Filii incarnatione legunt: Hic est lapis qui reprobatus est a vobis aedificantibus, qui factus est in caput anguli; et infra: Non est aliud nomen sub coelo datum hominibus, in quo oporteat nos salvos fieri (Act. IV, 11, 12), Patrem existimant ab impertiendae nobis salutis beneficio separandum. At neque sine Patre salus, neque vita aeterna sine Filio.

38. But if they wish to separate the Son, when they read that the Father is the only true God, I suppose that when they read of the Incarnation of the Son: This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which has become the head of the corner; and further: There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved; Acts 4:11-12 then they imagine the Father is to be cut off from the benefit of imparting salvation to us. But there is neither salvation without the Father, nor eternal life without the Son.

CAPUT III.

ARIANIS CONTRA URGENTIBUS Deos induci duos ex unitate substantiae, respondetur pluralitatem ex diversitate potius inferri, proindeque in ipsos recidere suam accusationem. Diversitatem multiplicem in causa esse cur duo homines unus homo dici non possint; cum tamen omnes homines singulariter homo dicantar, ubi naturae unitas indicatur. Solam in his naturam unam esse; at omnimodam in personis divinis unitatem: a Patre igitur non separandum Filium; maxime cum ei debitam esse adorationem negare non audeant.

CHAPTER 3.

To the objection of the Arians, that two Gods are introduced by a unity of substance, the answer is that a plurality of Gods is more likely to be inferred from diversity of substance. Further, their charge recoils upon themselves. Manifold diversity is the reason why two men cannot be said to be one man, though all men are called individually man, where a unity of nature is referred to. There is one nature alone in them, but there is wholly a unity in the Divine Persons. Therefore the Son is not to be severed from the Father, especially as they dare not deny that worship is due to Him.

40. Sed asserunt Ariani: Si solum verum Deum sicut Patrem, ita et Filium dicitis, et unius substantiae Patrem et Filium confitemini, non unum Deum, sed duos deos inducitis; quia qui unius substantiae sunt, non unus Deus, sed duo dii videntur esse, sicut duo homines, aut duae oves, pluresve dicuntur: homo autem et ovis nec duo homines dicuntur, nec duae oves, sed unus homo, et una ovis.

39. But the Arians maintain the following: If you say that, as the Father is the only true God, so also is the Son, and confess that the Father and the Son are both of one substance, you introduce not one God, but two. For they who are of one substance seem not to be one God but two Gods. Just as two men or two sheep or more are spoken of, but a man and a sheep are not spoken of as two men or two sheep, but as one man and one sheep.

41. Haec Ariani dicunt, et hac disputatione versuta simpliciores capere nituntur. Tamen si legamus Scripturas divinas, inveniemus pluralitatem magis in ea cadere, quae diversae discretaeque substantiae sunt, hoc est, ἑτερουσία. Idque in Salomonis libris habemus expressum, eo loco scilicet in quo dicit: Tria sunt autem impossibilia intelligere, et quartum quod non cognosco; vestigia aquilae volantis, et vias serpentis super petram, et semitas navis navigantis, et vias viri in juventute (Prov. XXX, 18, 19). Utique aquila et navis et serpens unius non sunt generis atque naturae, sed differentis discretaeque substantiae, et tamen tria sunt. Contra se igitur sua esse intelligunt argumenta testimoniis Scripturarum.

40. This is what the Arians say; and by this cunning argument they attempt to catch the more simple-minded. However if we read the divine Scriptures we shall find that plurality occurs rather among those things which are of a diverse and different substance, that is, ἑτερούσια . We have this set forth in the books of Solomon, in that passage in which he said: There are three things impossible to understand, yea, a fourth which I know not, the track of an eagle in the air, the way of a serpent upon a rock, the path of a ship in the sea, and the way of a man in his youth. Proverbs 30:18-19 An eagle and a ship and a serpent are not of one family and nature, but of a distinguishable and different substance, and yet they are three. On the testimony of Scripture, therefore, they learn that their arguments are against themselves.

42. Itaque dicendo Patris et Filii discretam esse substantiam, differentemque deitatem, duos utique ipsi deos asserunt: nos autem cum et Patrem confitemur, et Filium; asserendo tamen unius esse deitatis non duos deos, sed unum Deum dicimus. Et hoc Dominicis eloquiis approbamus; quia ubi plures sunt, ibi aut naturae aut voluntatum et operationum est differentia. Denique ut suis sibi testimoniis revincantur, duo homines dicuntur; quia licet unius naturae sint jure nascendi, tamen et tempore et cogitatione et opere et loco distant: et ideo non potest unus homo dici in significatione et numero duorum; quia unitas non est, ubi est diversitas: unus autem Deus dicitur, et Patris 559 et Filii ac Spiritus sancti gloria et plenitudo signatur.

41. Therefore, in saying that the substance of the Father and of the Son is diverse and their Godhead distinguishable, they themselves assert there are two Gods. But we, when we confess the Father and the Son, in declaring them still to be of one Godhead, say that there are not two Gods, but one God. And this we establish by the word of the Lord. For where there are several, there is a difference either of nature or of will and work. Lastly, that they may be refuted on their own witness, two men are mentioned: But though they are of one nature by right of birth, yet in time and thought and work and place, they are apart; and so one man cannot be spoken of under the signification and number of two; for there is no unity where there is diversity. But God is said to be one, and the glory and completeness of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit is thus expressed.

43. Denique tanta veritas unitatis est, ut etiam quando natura sola generationis aut carnis significatur humanae, et unus homo de multis dicatur, sicut habes: Dominus mihi adjutor, non timebo quid faciat mihi homo (Psal. CXVII, 6), id est, non una persona hominis, sed una caro, et una fragilitas generationis humanae. Et addidit: Bonum est sperare in Domino, quam sperare in homine (Ibid., 9). Nec hic utique specialem hominem, sed generalem conditionem designavit. Denique statim subjecit de pluribus: Bonum est confidere in Domino, quam confidere in principibus (Ibid., 9). Sed ubi homo dicitur, naturae interdum, ut supra diximus, communis inter omnes unitas significatur: ubi principes, variarum quaedam differentia potestatum est.

42. Such, indeed, is the truth of unity that, when the nature alone of human birth or of human flesh is indicated, one man is the term used for the many, as it is written: The Lord is my helper, I will not fear what man can do unto me; that is, not the one person of a man, but the one flesh, the one frailty of human birth. It added also: It is better to trust in the Lord than to trust in man. Here, too, it did not denote one particular man, but a universal condition. Then, immediately after it added, speaking of many: It is better to put confidence in the Lord than to put confidence in princes. Where man is spoken of, as we have already said, there the common unity of the nature, which exists between all is indicated; but where the princes are mentioned, there is a certain distinction between their different powers.

44. Sed inter homines aut in hominibus unius alicujus rei unitas est, aut charitatis, aut cupiditatis, aut carnis, aut devotionis et fidei: generalis autem unitas, et quae in se secundum divinitatis gloriam complectitur omnia, solius est Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti.

43. Amongst men, or in men, there exists a unity in some one thing, either in love, or desire, or flesh, or devotion, or faith. But a universal unity, that embraces within itself all things agreeably to the divine glory, is the property of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit alone.

45. Unde et Dominus cum diversitatem inter se hominum designaret, qui nihil habent inter se quod possit ad unitatem individuae substantiae pertinere: In lege vestra, inquit, scriptum est, quod duorum hominum testimonium verum est (Joan. VIII, 17). Et cum praemisisset: Duorum hominum testimonium verum est; ubi venit ad suum et Patris testimonium, non dixit: Verum est testimonium nostrum, quia duorum deorum testimonium est; sed: Ego, inquit, sum qui testimonium perhibeo de me ipso, et testimonium perhibet de me, qui misit me, Pater (Ibid., 18). Supra quoque similiter ait: Et si judico ego, judicium meum verum est, quia solus non sum, sed ego et qui misit me Pater (Ibid., 16). Itaque et infra ut supra et Patrem significavit et Filium, nec pluralitatem admiscuit, nec divinae unitatem substantiae separavit.

44. Wherefore the Lord also, in pointing out the diversity that exists among men, who have nothing in common that can tend towards the unity of an indivisible substance, says: In your law it is written that the testimony of two men is true. John 8:17 But though He had said, The testimony of two men is true, when He came to the testimony of Himself and His Father, He said not: Our testimony is true, for it is the testimony of two Gods; but: I am One that bear witness of Myself, and the Father that sent Me bears witness of Me. John 8:18 Earlier He also says: If I judge, My judgment is true; for I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent Me. John 8:16 Thus, both in one place and the other, He indicated both the Father and the Son, but neither implied the plurality, nor severed the unity of their divine Substance.

46. Evidens est igitur quia quod unius est substantiae, separari non potest, etiamsi non sit singularitatis, sed unitatis. Singularitatem hanc dico, quae Graece μονοτὴς dicitur. Singularitas ad personam pertinet, unitas ad naturam. Ea vero quae diversae substantiae sunt, non solum unum, sed etiam plura dici solere, licet jam et prophetico claruerit testimonio; expressius tamen ipse Apostolus declaravit dicens: Nam etsi sunt qui dicantur dii, sive in coelo, sive in terra (I Cor. VIII, 5). Vides igitur quia hi qui ex diversis substantiis sunt, et non ex unius veritate naturae, dii appellantur? Pater autem et Filius, quia unius substantiae sunt, non duo dii, sed Unus Deus, Pater ex quo omnia, et unus Dominus Jesus Christus, per quem omnia (Ibid., 6). Unus, inquit, Deus Pater, et unus Dominus Jesus; et supra: Unus Deus, non duo dii (Ibid. 4); et infra: Unus Dominus, et non duo.

45. It is plain, then, that whatsoever is of one substance cannot be severed, even though it be not single, but one. By singleness I mean that which the Greeks call μονοτής . Singleness has to do with a person; unity with a nature. That those things which are of a different substance are wont to be called, not one alone, but many, though already proved on the testimony of the prophet, the Apostle himself has stated in so many words, saying: For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth. 1 Corinthians 8:5 Do you see, then, that those who are of different substances, and not of the verity of one nature, are called gods? But the Father and the Son, being of one substance, are not two Gods, but One God, the Father, of Whom are all things, and one Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom are all things. 1 Corinthians 8:6 One God, he says, and one Lord Jesus; and above: One God, not two Gods; and then: One Lord, not two Lords. 1 Corinthians 8:4, 6

47. Pluralitas ergo excluditur, non unitas sequestratur. Sed quemadmodum cum legimus Dominum Jesum, nec Patrem, ut supra diximus (Lib. II, ca), a dominationis jure secernimus, quod ei commune 560 cum Filio est: ita cum legimus solum verum Deum Patrem, nec Filium a solius veri Dei jure possumus separare, quod ei commune cum Patre est.

46. Plurality, therefore, is excluded, but the unity is not destroyed. But as, on the one hand, when we read of the Lord Jesus, we do not dissociate the Father, as I have already said, from the prerogative of ruling, because He has that in common with the Son; so, on the other hand, when we read of the only true God, the Father, we cannot sever the Son from the prerogative of the only true God, for He has that in common with the Father.

48. Aut dicant quid aliud sentiant, quidve arbitrentur, cum legimus: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et ipsi soli servies (Matth. IV, 10), utrum Christum non adorandum, et Christo non existiment serviendum? Quod si illa quae adoravit eum Chananaea (Matth. XV, 25), impetrare meruit quod poposcit; et Paulus apostolus, qui servum se Christi prima scriptorum suorum praefatione profitetur (Rom. I, 1), apostolus esse meruit, non ab hominibus neque per hominem, sed per Jesum Christum; dicant quid arbitrentur sequendum, utrum cum Ario malint sibi societatem esse perfidiae; ut solum et verum Deum Christum negando, ostendant quia nec adorandum eum, nec serviendum ei judicent: an vero consortium malint habere cum Paulo, qui serviendo atque adorando etiam Christum, utique solum verum Deum voce affectuque non diffitebatur, quem pio servitio fatebatur.

47. Let them say what they feel or what they think, when we read: You shall worship the Lord your God, and Him only shall you serve. Matthew 4:10 Do they think Christ should not be worshipped, and that He ought not to be served? But if that woman of Canaan who worshipped Him, Matthew 15:25 merited to gain what she asked for, and the Apostle Paul, who confessed himself to be the servant of Christ in the very outset of his letters, merited to be an Apostle not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ; Galatians 1:1 let them say what they think should follow. Would they prefer to join with Arius in a league of treachery, and so show, by denying Christ to be the only true God, that they consider He should neither be worshipped nor served? Or would they sooner go in company with Paul, who in serving and worshipping Christ did not disown in word and heart the only true God, Whom he acknowledged with dutiful service?

CAPUT IV.

OBJICIEBATUR AB HAERETICIS Christum Patri adorationem exhibuisse. At reponitur et hoc referendum ad humanitatem, ut ex loci examine manifestatur: illic tamen addita esse divinitatis testimonia, quod in aliis etiam Christi operibus factum videmus.

CHAPTER 4.

It is objected by heretics that Christ offered worship to His Father. But instead it is shown that this must be referred to His humanity, as is clear from an examination of the passage. However, it also offers fresh witness to His Godhead, as we often see it happening in other actions that Christ did.

49. [Alias cap. II.] Quod si quis dicat quoniam Deum Patrem adorat et Filius, quia scriptum est: Vos adoratis quod nescitis, nos adoramus quod scimus (Joan. IV, 22); consideret quando, et apud quem, et cujus suscepto loquatur affectu.

48. But if any one were to say that the Son worships God the Father, because it is written, You worship you know not what, we know what we worship, John 4:22 let him consider when it was said, and to whom, and to whose wishes it was in answer.

50. Denique et in superioribus non immerito praemissum est, quia Jesus fatigatus ex itinere sedebat, et a Samaritana bibere postulabat; quia secundum carnem hominis loquebatur: nam secundum divinitatem nec fatigari poterat, nec sitire (Ibid. VI, 7).

49. In the earlier verses of this chapter it was stated, not without reason, that Jesus, being weary with the journey, was sitting down, and that He asked a woman of Samaria to give Him drink; John 4:6-7 for He spoke as man; for as God He could neither be weary nor thirst.

51. Deinde cum Samaritana quasi Judaeum appellaret, et prophetam putaret; quasi Judaeus qui spiritaliter mysteria Legis doceret, respondit: Vos adoratis quod nescitis, nos adoramus quod scimus. Nos, inquit, hoc est, se hominibus copulavit. Quomodo autem nisi secundum carnem hominibus copulatur? Et ut ostenderet quia secundum incarnationem responderat, addidit: Quia salus ex Judaeis est (Ibid. 22).

50. So when this woman addressed Him as a Jew, and thought Him a prophet, He answers her, as a Jew who spiritually taught the mysteries of the Law: You worship you know not what, we know what we worship. We, He says; for He joined Himself with men. But how is He joined with men, but according to the flesh? And to show that He answered as being incarnate, He added: for salvation is of the Jews. John 4:22

52. Sed statim post hoc sequestravit hominis affectum, dicens: Veniet hora, et nunc est, quando veri adoratores adorabunt Patrem (Ibid., 23). Non dixit: Adorabimus. Quod utique dixisset, si consortium nostri subiret obsequii.

51. But immediately after this He put aside His human feelings, saying: But the hour comes, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father. John 4:23 He said not: We shall worship. This He would certainly have said, if He had a share in our obedience.

53. Verum cum legerimus quod Maria adoravit eum (Matth. XXVIII, 9), intelligere debemus quod non potest per eamdem naturam et adorare quasi servus, et adorari quasi Dominus: sed potius quia ut homo inter homines adorare dicitur, et quasi Dominus a famulis adoratur.

52. And when we read that Mary worshipped Him, Matthew 28:9 we ought to learn that it is not possible for Him under the same nature both to worship as a servant, and to be worshipped as Lord; but rather that as man He is said to worship among men, and that as Lord He is worshipped by His servants.

54. Multa ergo secundum incarnationis legimus et credimus sacramentum, sed in ipsa 561 naturae humanae affectione majestatem licet spectare divinam. Fatigatur ex itinere Jesus, ut reficiat fatigatos: petit bibere, sitientibus potum spiritalem daturus: esurit, cibum salutis esurientibus traditurus: moritur, vivificaturus: sepelitur, resurrecturus: tremulo pendet in ligno, confirmaturus trementes: coelum caligine obducit, ut illuminet: terras tremefacit, ut solidet: maria conturbat, ut mitiget: reserat tumulos mortuorum, ut ostendat domicilia esse vivorum: creatur ex Virgine, ut ex Deo natus esse credatur: nescire se simulat, ut scire faciat nescientes: adorare quasi Judaeus dicitur, ut quasi verus Deus Filius adoretur.

53. Many things therefore we read and believe, in the light of the sacrament of the Incarnation. But even in the very feelings of our human nature we may behold the Divine Majesty. Jesus is wearied with His journey, that He may refresh the weary; He desires to drink, when about to give spiritual drink to the thirsty; He was hungry, when about to supply the food of salvation to the hungry; He dies, to live again; He is buried, to rise again; He hangs upon the dreadful tree, to strengthen those in dread; He veils the heaven with thick darkness, that He may give light; He makes the earth to shake, that He may make it strong; He rouses the sea, that He may calm it; He opens the tombs of the dead, that He may show they are the homes of the living; He is made of a Virgin, that men may believe He is born of God; He feigns not to know, that He may make the ignorant to know; as a Jew He is said to worship, that the Son may be worshipped as true God.

CAPUT V.

DOMINICA AD ZEBEDAEI filiorum matrem verba ingerentibus Ambrosius respondet, quod Christus moestitia illam afficere noluerit, clementiae fuisse. Affertur hujusce indulgentiae causa multiplex. Moluisse igitur Dominum petitionis illius concessionem ad Patrem remittere, quam eamdem impossibilem pronuntiare: nec tamen Christo incommodare suum responsum, tum ex ipsis ejusdem verbis, tum ex aliorum locorum comparatione ostenditur.

CHAPTER 5.

Ambrose answers those who press the words of the Lord to the mother of Zebedee's children, by saying that they were spoken out of kindness, because Christ was unwilling to cause her grief. Ample reason for such tenderness is brought forward. The Lord would rather leave the granting of that request to the Father, than declare it to be impossible. This answer of Christ's, however, is not to His detriment, as is shown both by His very words, and also by comparing them with other passages.

55. Quomodo, inquiunt, Filius Dei solus verus Deus potest esse similis Patri, cum ipse dixerit filiis Zebedaei: Calicem quidem meum bibetis, sedere autem ad dexteram meam vel ad sinistram non est meum dare vobis, sed quibus paratum est a Patre meo (Matth. XX, 23)? Hoc igitur vestrum divinae, ut vultis, inaequalitatis est argumentum; cum in eo magis venerari Domini clementiam, adorare gratiam deberetis: si tamen virtutis atque sapientiae Dei profunda secreta possetis advertere.

54. How, they say, can the Son of God be the only true God, like to the Father, when He Himself said to the sons of Zebedee: ‘You shall drink indeed of My cup; but to sit on My right hand or on My left, is not Mine to give to you, but to those for whom it has been prepared of My Father?’? Matthew 20:23 This, then, is, as you desire, your proof of divine inequality; though in it you ought rather to reverence the Lord’s kindness and to adore His grace; if, that is, you could but perceive the deep secrets of the virtue and wisdom of God.

56. Considerate enim quae cum filiis et pro filiis petat. Mater est utique, cui pro filiorum honore sollicitae immoderatior quidem, sed tamen ignoscenda mensura votorum est. Atque mater aetate longaeva, studio religiosa, solatio destituta: quae tunc temporis quando vel juvanda vel alenda foret validae prolis auxilio, abesse sibi liberos patiebatur, et voluptati suae mercedem sequentium Christum praetulerat filiorum: qui prima voce vocati a Domino, ut legimus (Matth. IV, 22), relictis retibus et patre, secuti sunt eum.

55. For think of her who, with and for her sons, makes this request. It is a mother, who in her anxiety for the honour of her sons, though somewhat unrestrained in the measure of her desires, may for all that yet find pardon. It is a mother, old in years, devout in her zeal, deprived of consolation; who at that time, when she might have been helped and supported by the aid of her able bodied offspring, suffered her children to leave her, and preferred the reward her sons should receive in following Christ to her own pleasure. For they when called by the Lord, at the first word, as we read, left their nets and their father and followed Him. Matthew 4:22

57. Haec igitur studio maternae sedulitatis indulgentior, obsecrabat Salvatorem, dicens: Dic ut sedeant hi duo filii mei, unus ad dexteram tuam, et alter ad sinistram in regno tuo (Ibid. 20, 21). Etsi error, pietatis tamen error est; nesciunt enim materna viscera patientiam: etsi voti avara, tamen veniabilis cupiditas, quae non pecuniae est avida, sed gratiae: nec inverecunda petitio, quae non sibi, sed liberis consulebat. Matrem considerate, matrem cogitate.

56. She then, somewhat yielding to the devotion of a mother's zeal, besought the Saviour, saying: Grant that these my two sons may sit the one on Your right hand, the other on Your left in Your kingdom. Matthew 20:21 Although it was an error, it was an error of a mother's affections; for a mother's heart knows no patience. Though eager for the object of her desires, yet her longing was pardonable, for she was not greedy for money, but for grace. Not shameless was her request, for she thought not of herself, but of her children. Contemplate the mother, reflect upon her.

58. Sed nihil mirum si vilis vobis videtur circa filios 562 affectus parentum, qui etiam omnipotentis Patris vilem putatis esse circa unigenitum Filium charitatem. Dominus coeli atque terrarum verecundabatur (ut secundum assumptionem carnis et virtutes animae loquar), verecundabatur, inquam, et ut ipsius verbo utar, confundebatur matri pro filiis postulanti etiam suae sedis consortium denegare: vos aeterni Dei Filium proprium interdum pro ministerio stare contenditis, interdum famulatorium, hoc est, non ex majestatis unitate, sed ex Patris praeceptione vultis ejus esse consessum; et negatis hoc Deo vero Dei Filio, quod ille hominibus aperte noluit denegare.

57. But it is nothing wonderful if the feelings of parents for their children seem nothing to you, who think the love of the Almighty Father for His only-begotten Son a trifling matter. The Lord of heaven and earth was ashamed (to speak as accords with the assumption of our flesh and the virtues of the soul) — He was ashamed, I say, and, to use His own word, disturbed, to refuse a share even in His own seat to a mother making request for her sons. You maintain sometimes that the proper Son of the eternal God stands to give service, at other times you would have His co-session to be as that of an attendant, that is, not because there is a oneness of majesty, but because it is the order of the Father; and you deny to the Son of God, Who is true God, that which He plainly was unwilling to refuse to men.

59. Considerabat enim matris dilectionem, quae filiorum mercede grandaevam solabatur senectam, et desideriis licet fessa maternis, charissimorum pignorum tolerabat absentiam.

58. For He thought of the mother's love, who solaced her old age with the thought of her sons' reward, and, though harassed with a mother's longings, endured the absence of those dearest pledges of her love.

60. Considerate etiam feminam, hoc est, sexum fragiliorem, quem Dominus propria nondum confirmaverat passione. Considerate, inquam, Evae illius primae mulieris haeredem transfusa in omnes immoderatae cupiditatis successione labentem, quam Dominus adhuc proprio sanguine non redemerat, nondum inolitam affectibus omnium immodici contra fas honoris appetentiam suo cruore diluerat. Haereditario igitur mulier delinquebat errore.

59. Think also of the woman, that is, the weaker sex, whom the Lord had not yet strengthened by His own Passion. Think, I say, of a descendant of Eve, the first woman, sinking under the inheritance of unrestrained passion, which had been passed on to all; one, too, whom the Lord had not yet redeemed with His own Blood, and from whom He had not yet washed out in His Blood the desire implanted in the hearts of all for unbounded honour even beyond what is right. Thus the woman offended owing to an inherited tendency to wrong.

61. Et quid mirum si mater pro filiorum suorum, quod est tolerabilius quam pro se; quando etiam apostoli ipsi inter se, sicut legimus (Luc. XXII, 24), de sui praelatione certabant?

60. And what wonder if a mother should strive to win preference for her children (which is far better than if she had done it for herself), when even the Apostles themselves, as we read, strove among themselves, as to who should have the preference? Luke 22:24

62. Non debuit igitur medicus omnium destitutam matrem, et aegram adhuc mentem pudoris convicio sauciare; ne postulato sibi superbius denegato, quasi immoderatae petitionis damnata moereret.

61. The physician, therefore, ought not to wound a mother who has been deprived of all, nor a suffering mind, with shameful reproaches, lest when the request had been made and had been proudly denied, she should grieve over the condemnation of her petition as being unreasonable.

63. Denique Dominus qui honorandam sciret esse pietatem, non mulieri, sed filiis ejus respondit dicens: Potestis bibere calicem, quem ego bibiturus sum? Dicentibus autem illis: Possumus; ait illis Jesus: Calicem quidem meum bibetis; sedere autem ad dexteram meam vel ad sinistram non est meum dare vobis, sed quibus paratum est a Patre meo (Matth. XX, 22, 23).

62. Lastly, the Lord, Who knew that a mother's affection is to be honoured, answered not the woman, but her sons, saying: Are you able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of? When they say: We are able, Jesus says to them: You shall drink indeed of My cup; but to sit on My right hand and on My left is not Mine to give to you, but to those for whom it is prepared of My Father. Matthew 20:22-23

64. Quam patiens et clemens Dominus, quam alta sapientia et bona charitas! Volens enim ostendere quia non perfunctoriam rem aliquam discipuli postularent, sed eam quam impetrare non possent, praerogativam ejus paternae honorificentiae reservavit: non metuens, ne quid juri proprio derogaret, qui non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo (Philip. II,

6); simul diligens discipulos, quia, sicut habes, usque in finem dilexit eos (Joan. XIII, 1), noluit iis quos diligeret, videri quod peterent denegasse: sanctus et bonus Dominus, qui mallet aliquid dissimulare de jure, quam de charitate deponere: Charitas enim patiens est, benigna est, non aemulatur, non inflatur, non quaerit quae sua sunt (I Cor. XIII, 4). 563

63. How patient and kind the Lord is; how deep is His wisdom and good His love! For wishing to show that the disciples asked for no slight thing, but one they could not obtain, He reserved His own peculiar rights for His Father’s honour, not fearing to detract anything from His own rights: Who thought it not robbery to be equal with God; Philippians 2:6 and loving, too, His disciples (for He loved them, as it is written, unto the end), John 13:1 He was unwilling to seem to refuse to those whom He loved what they desired; He, I say, the good and holy Lord, Who would rather keep some of His own prerogative secret, than lay aside anything of His love. For charity suffers long, and is kind; charity envies not, and seeks not her own. 1 Corinthians 13:4

65. Denique ut agnoscatis non infirmitatis, sed indulgentiae esse, quia dixit: Non est meum dare vobis; ubi sine matre filii Zebedaei rogant, nihil de Patre dixit; sic enim habes: Non est meum dare vobis, sed quibus paratum est (Matth. X, 40). Ita Marcus evangelista posuit. Ubi vero mater pro filiis rogat, hoc est, secundum Matthaeum: Non est, inquit, meum dare vobis, sed quibus paratum est a Patre meo (Matth. XX, 23), hic addidit: A Patre meo; quia majorem indulgentiam maternus poscebat affectus.

64. Lastly, that you may learn it was no sign of weakness, but rather of tenderness, that He said: It is not Mine to give to you; note that when the sons of Zebedee make the request without their mother, He said nothing about the Father; for thus it is written: It is not Mine to give to you, but those for whom it has been prepared. Mark 10:40 So the Evangelist Mark has stated it. But when the mother makes this request on her sons' behalf, as we find it in Matthew, He says: It is not Mine to give to you, but to those for whom it has been prepared of My Father. Matthew 20:23 Here He added: of My Father, for a mother's feelings demanded greater tenderness.

66. Quod si putant, dicendo: Quibus paratum est a Patre meo, quia, aut, Patri plus tribuit, aut sibi aliquid derogavit; dicant utrum et illic putent Patri aliquid derogatum, quia dixit in Evangelio Filius de Patre: Pater non judicat quemquam (Joan. V, 22).

65. But if they think that by saying, For whom it has been prepared of My Father, He assigned greater power to His Father, or detracted anything from His own; let them say whether they think there is any detraction from the Father's power, because the Son in the Gospel says of the Father: The Father judges no man. John 5:22

67. Quod si sacrilegum putamus credere quia Pater ita judicium detulit Filio, ut ipse non habeat; habet enim, nec potest amittere quod habet naturaliter divina majestas: sacrilegum utique aestimare debemus quia non potest Filius dare quidquid aut homines mereri possunt, aut quaevis accipere creatura; praesertim cum ipse dixerit: Ego ad Patrem vado, et quodcumque ab eo petieritis in nomine meo, hoc faciam (Joan. XIV, 12, 13). Si enim quod Pater dare potest, Filius non potest, mentita est ergo veritas, et non potest facere quidquid in nomine ejus Pater fuerit obsecratus. Nec enim ideo dixit: Quibus paratum est a Patre meo, ut tantummodo a Patre poscatur: nam omnia quaecumque a Patre fuerint postulata, se donare memoravit. Denique non dixit: Quodcumque a me petieritis, hoc faciam; sed: Quodcumque ab eo petieritis in nomine meo, hoc faciam.

66. But if we think it impious to believe that the Father has handed over all judgment to the Son in such wise that He has it not Himself — for He has it, and cannot lose what the Divine Majesty has by its very nature, — we ought to consider it equally impious to suppose that the Son cannot give what either men can merit, or any creature can receive; especially as He Himself has said: I go unto My Father, and whatsoever you shall ask of Him in My name, that will I do. John 14:12-13 For if the Son cannot give what the Father can give, the Truth has lied, and cannot do what the Father has been asked for in His name. He therefore did not say: For whom it has been prepared of My Father, in order that requests should be made only of the Father. For all things which are asked of the Father, He has declared that He will give. Lastly, He did not say: Whatsoever you shall ask of Me, that will I do; but: Whatsoever you shall ask of Him in My name, that will I do.

CAPUT VI.

ACCURATIUS PROPOSITAM SOLUTURUS objectionem, contendit memoratam petitionem, si modo in se impossibilis non fuit, possibilem fuisse Christo; maxime cum ipsi omne judicium Pater dederit, quod sine ulla imperfectionis nota intelligendum. Attamen idem postulatum inter impossibilia censendum probat. Quod ut omnino esset possibile, tunc responsum Christi secundum naturam humanam accipiendum tradit, ac loci explicatione declarat. Denique iterum suam confirmat de sessionis hujus impossibilitate responsionem.

CHAPTER 6.

Wishing to answer the above-stated objection somewhat more fully, he maintains that this request, had it not been impossible in itself, would have been possible for Christ to grant; especially as the Father has given all judgment to Him; which gift we must understand to have been given without any feature of imperfection. However, he proves that the request must be reckoned amongst the impossibilities. To make it really possible, he teaches that Christ's answer must be taken in accordance with His human nature, and shows this next by an exposition of the passage. Lastly, he once more confirms the reply he has given on the impossibility of Christ's session.

68. Quaero nunc utrum possibile aliquid humanae conditioni, aut alicui creaturae, an impossibile putent a Zebedaei conjuge et filiis postulatum? Si possibile, quomodo ad sinistram suam vel ad dexteram impertiendae apostolis sedis non habuit potestatem, qui omnia fecit esse, quae non erant?

Aut quomodo non poterat judicare de meritis hominum, cui Pater dedit omne judicium?

67. I ask now whether they think the request made by the wife and sons of Zebedee was possible or impossible to human circumstances, or to any created being? If it was possible, how is it that He Who made all things which were not had not the power of granting a seat to His apostles on His right hand and on His left? Or how was it that He, to Whom the Father gave all judgment, could not judge of men's merits?

69. Notum est quemadmodum dederit (Joan. V, 22): nam quomodo quasi indigens accepit Filius, qui omnia creavit ex nihilo? Quorum igitur naturas fecerat, eorum judicium non habebat? Dedit autem Pater Filio omne judicium; Ut omnes, inquit, honorificent Filium, sicut honorificant Patrem (Ibid., 23). Non igitur potentia Filii, sed cognitio nostra proficit: neque aliquid ad substantiam 564 ejus accedit, sed ad nostram utilitatem, quod a nobis cognoscitur; ut cognoscendo Dei Filium, vitam habeamus aeternam (Joan. XVII, 3).

68. We know well in what way He gave it; for how did the Son, who created all things out of nothing, receive it as though in want? Had He not the judgment of those whose natures He had made? The Father gave all judgment to the Son, that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. John 5:23 It is not therefore the power of the Son, but our knowledge of it, that increases; nor does what is learned by us add anything to His being, but only to our advantage; so that by knowing the Son of God, we may have eternal life.

70. Cum autem in cognitione Filii Dei honor illius, noster autem non illius sit profectus, si quis putat quia Dei virtus illo honore cumulatur, necesse est etiam Deum Patrem credat posse cumulari; quia et ipse per cognitionem nostram clarificatur sicut Filius, juxta quod scriptum est, dicente Filio: Ego te clarificavi super terram (Ibid., 4). Ergo si possibile aliquid erat quod petebatur, in potestate utique Filii fuit.

69. As, then, in our knowledge of the Son of God His honour, but our profit, not His, is concerned; if any one thinks that the power of God is augmented by that honour, He must also believe that God the Father can receive augmentation; for He is glorified by our knowledge of Him, as is the Son: as it is written on the word of the Son: I have glorified You upon the earth. John 17:4 Therefore if that which was asked for was at all possible, it certainly was in the power of the Son to grant it.

71. Sed tamen ostendant, si possibile putant, qui de hominibus aut caeteris creaturis, aut ad dexteram, aut ad sinistram Dei sedeat; Pater enim dicit Filio: Sede ad dexteram meam (Psal. CIX, 1). Itaque si quis ad dexteram Filio sedet, inter ipsum utique et Patrem, ut humano usu loquamur, Filius medius reperitur.

70. Let them show, if they consider it possible, who of men or of other created beings sits either on the right hand or the left of God. For the Father says to the Son: Sit on My right hand. Therefore if any one sits on the right hand of the Son, the Son is found to be sitting (to speak in human wise) between Himself and the Father.

72. Non ergo possibile homini aliquid petebatur, sed noluit dicere quod homines sedere secum non possint; si quidem divinam suam gloriam celari, priusquam resurgeret, non divulgari cupiebat. Nam et supra cum inter famulos suos Moysen et Eliam apparuisset in gloria, monuerat discipulos, ne cui dicerent, quod vidissent (Matth. XVII, 9).

71. A thing impossible for man, then, was asked of Him. But He was unwilling to say that men could not sit with Him; seeing that He desired His divine glory should be veiled, and not revealed before He rose again. Matthew 17:9 For before this, when He had appeared in glory between His attendants Moses and Elias, He had warned His disciples that they should tell no man what they had seen.

73. Itaque si possibile non erat hominibus vel creaturis caeteris hoc mereri, non debet videri Filius minus posse, quia non dedit apostolis, quod nec Pater hominibus vel creaturis caeteris dedit. Aut dicant cui horum dederit Pater. Non utique angelis, de quibus Scriptura dicit quia omnes angeli stabant in circuitu sedis (Apoc. VII, 11). Denique Gabriel se stare dixit, sicut habes: Ego sum Gabriel, qui asto ante Dominum (Luc. I, 19).

72. Therefore if it was not possible for men or other created beings to merit this, the Son ought not to seem to have less power because He gave not to His apostles, what the Father has not given to men or other created beings. Or else let them say to which of them He has given it. Certainly not to the angels; of whom Scripture says that all the angels stood round about the throne. Revelation 7:11 Thus Gabriel said that he stands, as it says: I am Gabriel that stand before God. Luke 1:19

74. Non ergo angelis, non senioribus qui adorant sedentem; illi enim non super sedem majestatis sedent: sed, ut dixit Scriptura, in circuitu sedis; sedes enim aliae viginti et quatuor sunt, ut habes in Apocalypsi Joannis: Et supra sedem viginti quatuor seniores sedentes (Apoc. IV, 4). In Evangelio quoque ipse Dominus dicit: Cum sederit Filius homnis in sede majestatis suae, sedebitis et ipsi super sedes duodecim, judicantes duodecim tribus Israel (Matth. XIX, 28). Non ergo sedis suae dixit apostolis dari posse consortium, sed alias illas sedes esse duodecim; quas tamen non pro corporali consessu, sed pro successu spiritalis gratiae aestimare debemus.

73. Not to the angels, then, has He given it, nor to the elders who worship Him that sits; for they do not sit upon the seat of majesty, but as the Scripture has said, round about the throne; for there are four and twenty other seats, as we have it in the Revelation of John: And upon the seats four and twenty elders sitting. Revelation 4:4 In the Gospel also the Lord Himself says: When the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of His glory, you also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matthew 19:28 He did not say that a share in His own throne could be given to the apostles, but that there were those other twelve thrones; which, however, we ought not to think of as referring to actual sitting down, but as showing the happy issue of spiritual grace.

76. Si ergo nihil plus dedit Pater quam Filius, nihil utique minus dedit Filius quam Pater: nihil igitur minus Filius potest quam Pater.

75. If, then, the Father has given nothing more than the Son, the Son certainly has given nothing less than the Father. Therefore the Son can in no way be less than the Father.

77. Ponite tamen possibile impetratu hominibus 565 quod posceretur, quid est quod ait: Sedere autem ad dexteram meam vel ad sinistram non est meum dare vobis (Matth. XX, 23)? Quid est meum? Supra dixit: Calicem quidem meum bibetis; infra posuit: Non est meum dare vobis; et supra meum, et infra meum dixit, nec immutavit. Ergo superiora docent propter quid dixerit meum.

76. Suppose, however, that it had been possible for men to obtain what was desired; what does it mean when He says: But to sit on My right hand and on My left is not Mine to give to you? Matthew 20:23 What is Mine? Above He said: You shall drink indeed of My cup; and again He added: It is not Mine to give to you. Above He said Mine, and again lower down He said Mine. He made no change. And so the earlier passages tell us why He said Mine.

78. Rogatus enim a muliere quasi homo, ut ad dexteram vel ad sinistram suam filios ejus sedere pateretur; quia illa quasi hominem rogaverat, et Dominus quasi tantummodo homo de sua passione respondit: Potestis bibere calicem, quem ego bibiturus sum (Ibid., 22)?

77. For being asked by a woman as man to allow her sons to sit on His right hand and His left, because she asked Him as man, the Lord also as though only man answered concerning His Passion: Are you able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of? Matthew 20:22

79. Itaque quia secundum carnem de passione sui corporis loquebatur, demonstrare voluit quod secundum carnem quidem subeundae passionis nobis exemplum ac similitudinem derelinqueret, secundum humanam autem conditionem non sedis supernae consortia donaret. Hoc est enim quod dixit: Non est meum; sicut alibi: Mea doctrina non est mea (Joan. VII, 16); non est enim, inquit, secundum carnem mea: quia quae divina sunt, non sunt carnis eloquia.

78. Therefore because He spoke according to the flesh of the Passion of His Body, He wished to show that according to the flesh He left behind Him an example and pattern to us of the endurance of suffering; but that according to His position as man He could not grant them fellowship in the throne above. This is the reason why He said: It is not Mine; as also in another place He says: My doctrine is not Mine. John 7:16 It is not, He says, spoken after my flesh; for the words which are divine belong not to the flesh.

80. Indulgentiam autem suam circa discipulos quos diligeret, quam expresse revelavit, praemittens: Calicem quidem meum bibetis? Etenim quia non debebat id dare quod petierant, aliud proposuit; ut prius commemoraret quid iis tribueret, quam quid negaret: quo magis aequitatem sibi petitionis, quam studium Dominicae liberalitatis intelligerent defuisse.

79. But how plainly He showed His tenderness for His disciples, whom He loved, saying first: Will you drink of My cup? For as He could not grant what they sought, He offered them something else, so that He might mention what He would assign to them, before He denied them anything; in order that they might understand that the failure lay more in the equity of their request to Him, than in the wish of their Lord to show kindness.

81. Calicem quidem, inquit, meum bibetis, hoc est, passionem quidem quae carnis meae est, non negabo; quod enim humanae assumptionis habeo, potestis imitari: donavi vobis victoriam passionis, haereditatem crucis: Sedere autem ad dexteram meam, vel ad sinistram, non est meum dare vobis. Non dixit: Non est meum dare, sed, non est meum dare vobis, hoc est, non sibi potestatem deesse asserens, sed meritum creaturis.

80. You shall indeed drink of My cup, He says; that is, I will not refuse you the suffering, which My flesh will undergo. For all that I have taken on Myself as man, you can imitate. I have granted you the victory of suffering, the inheritance of the cross. ‘But to sit on My right hand and on My left is not Mine to give to you.’ He did not say, It is not Mine to give, but: It is not Mine to give to you; meaning by this, not that He lacked the power, but that His creatures were wanting in merit.

82. Accipe aliter: Non est meum dare vobis. Quod est, non est meum, qui veni humilitatem docere: non est meum, qui veni non ministrari, sed ministrare: non est meum, qui justitiam servo, non gratiam.

81. Or take in another way the words: It is not Mine to give to you, that is, It is not Mine, for I came to teach humility; it is not Mine, for I came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister; it is not Mine, for I show justice, not favour.

83. Denique ad Patrem referens, addidit: Quibus paratum est; ut ostenderet Patrem quoque non petitionibus deferre solere, sed meritis, quia Deus personarum acceptor non est (Act. X, 34). Unde et Apostolus ait: Quos praescivit, et praedestinavit (Rom. VIII, 29); non enim ante praedestinavit, quam praesciret: sed quorum merita praescivit, eorum praemia praedestinavit.

82. Then, speaking of the Father, He added: For whom it has been prepared, to show that the Father also is not wont to give heed merely to requests, but to merits; for God is not a respecter of persons. Acts 10:34 Wherefore also the Apostle says: Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate. Romans 8:29 He did not predestinate them before He knew them, but He did predestinate the reward of those whose merits He foreknew.

84. Jure igitur reprehenditur mulier, quae et impossibilia et speciali quodam privilegio ab eo Domino postulavit, qui ea quae sanctis judicavit esse donanda, non duobus apostolis, sed omnibus discipulis, etiam sine cujusquam precatione, voluntaria sui largitate contulerit, sicut scriptum est: Duodecim vos sedebitis super sedes, judicantes duodecim tribus Israel (Matth. XIX, 28). 566

83. Rightly then is the woman checked, who demanded what was impossible, as a special kind of privilege from Him the Lord, Who of His own free gift granted not only to two apostles, but to all the disciples, those things which He had adjudged to be given to the saints; and that too without a prayer from any one, as it is written: You shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matthew 19:28

85. Ergo etiamsi possibile putemus postulatum fuisse, calumniae locus non est; tamen cum legerim Seraphim stare (Esai. VI, 2), quomodo possum quod homines ad dexteram vel ad sinistram Filio Dei sedeant, arbitrari? Supra Cherubim Dominus sedet, sicut habes: Qui sedes super Cherubim, appare (Psal. LXXIX, 2); quomodo apostoli super Cherubim sedebunt?

84. Therefore, although we may think the demand to have been possible, there is no room for false attacks. However, when I read that the seraphim stand, Isaiah 6:2 how can I suppose that men may sit on the right hand or the left of the Son of God? The Lord sits upon the cherubim, as it says: You that sits upon the cherubim, show myself. And how shall the apostles sit upon the cherubim?

86. Et hoc tamen colligo non ex meo ingenio, sed ex Dominicae vocis oraculo; ipse enim Dominus in posterioribus apostolos commendans Patri, ait: Pater, quos dedisti mihi, volo ut ubi ego sum, et illi sint mecum (Joan. XVII, 24). Utique si judicasset quia divinam sedem Pater hominibus daret, dixisset: Volo ut ubi ego sedeo, et illi sedeant mecum; Sed volo, inquit, ut sint mecum, non ut sedeant mecum; et ubi ego, non quomodo ego.

85. And I do not come to this conclusion of my own mind, but because of the utterances of our Lord's own mouth. For the Lord Himself later on, in commending the apostles to the Father, says: Father, I will that they also whom You have given Me be with Me where I am. John 17:24 But if He had thought that the Father would give the divine throne to men, He would have said: I will that where I sit, they also may sit with Me. But He says: I will that they be with Me, not that they may sit with Me; and where I am, not as I am.

87. Deinde sequitur: Ut videant claritatem meam. Nec hic dixit: Ut habeant claritatem meam, sed ut videant; servus enim videt, Dominus possidet; sicut et David docuit dicens: Ut videam voluptatem Domini (Psal. XXVI, 4). Et ipse Dominus in Evangelio revelavit asserens: Beati mundi corde, ipsi enim Deum videbunt (Matth. V, 8). Videbunt, inquit, non super Cherubim cum Deo sedebunt.

86. Then follow the words: That they may see My glory. Here too He did not say: that they may have My glory, but that they may see it. For the servant sees, the Lord possesses; as David also has taught us, saying: That I may see the delight of the Lord. And the Lord Himself in the Gospel has revealed it, stating: Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. Matthew 5:8 They shall see, He says; not They shall sit with God upon the cherubim.

88. Desinant ergo viliora secundum divinitatem aestimare de Dei Filio, ne viliora quoque de Patre aestiment. Qui enim male crediderit de Filio, non potest bene sentire de Patre: qui male crediderit de Spiritu, non potest bene sentire de Filio. Ubi enim una dignitas, una gloria, una charitas, una majestas est; in commune derogatur, quidquid in aliquo putaveris derogandum: jam enim non erit plenitudo quam discernas et dividas in aliquas portiones.

87. Let them therefore cease to think little of the Son of God according to His Godhead, lest they should think little also of the Father. For he who believes wrongly of the Son cannot think rightly of the Father; he who thinks wrongly of the Spirit cannot think rightly of the Son. For where there is one dignity, one glory, one love, one majesty, whatsoever you think is to be withdrawn in the case of any one of the Three Persons, is withdrawn from all alike. For that can never have completeness which you can separate and divide into various portions.

CAPUT VII.

OBJECTIO PETITA EX hoc loco: Dilexisti eos, sicut et me dilexisti, ut diluatur, primo Arianorum expositionis impietas demonstratur, deinde comparantur eadem verba cum similibus, ac demum totus locus consideratur. Hinc deducitur Christi missionem, etsi secundum carnem accipienda est, illi non officere. Quo probato, qui fiat divina missio describitur.

CHAPTER 7.

Objection is taken to the following passage: You have loved them, as You have loved Me. To remove it, he shows first the impiety of the Arian explanation; then compares these words with others; and lastly, takes the whole passage into consideration. Hence he gathers that the mission of Christ, although it is to be received according to the flesh, is not to His detriment. When this is proved he shows how the divine mission takes place.

89. [Alias cap. III.] Exsistunt tamen, Imperator auguste, qui hanc divinae unitatem substantiae negare cupientes, extenuare studeant Patris et Filii charitatem; quia scriptum est: Et dilexisti eos, sicut et me dilexisti (Joan. XVII, 23). Quod cum dicunt, qui aliud agunt, nisi inter Dei Filium et homines aequalitatem quamdam comparationis inducunt?

88. There are some, O Emperor Augustus, who in their desire to deny the unity of the divine Substance, strive to make little of the love of the Father and the Son, because it is written: You have loved them, as You have loved Me. John 17:23 But when they say this, what else do they do but adopt a likeness of comparison between the Son of God and men?

90. Numquid sic diligi possunt a Deo homines quemadmodum Filius, in quo complacuit Pater? Ille per se complacet, nos per ipsum: in quibus enim Deus Filium suum ad imaginem suam cernit, eos per Filium adsciscit in gratiam filiorum; ut quemadmodum per imaginem ad 567 imaginem sumus, sic per generationem Filii in adoptionem vocemur. Alius igitur naturae amor sempiternus, alius gratiae.

89. Can men indeed be loved by God as the Son is, in Whom the Father is well-pleased? Matthew 3:17 He is well-pleasing in Himself; we through Him. For those in whom God sees His own Son after His own likeness, He admits through His Son into the favour of sons. So that as we go through likeness unto likeness, so through the Generation of the Son are we called unto adoption. The eternal love of God's Nature is one thing, that of grace is another.

91. Aut si ex verbis faciunt quaestionem, quia scriptum est: Et dilexisti eos, sicut et me dilexisti; et comparationem factam putant: ergo et illud comparative dictum putant: Estote misericordes, sicut et Pater vester qui est in coelis, misericors est (Luc. VI, 36); et alibi: Estote perfecti, sicut et Pater meus, qui in coelis est, perfectus est (Matth. V, 48). Quod si ille secundum plenitudinem majestatis suae perfectus est, nos autem perfecti secundum virtutis accedentis profectum; etiam Filius diligitur a Patre secundum semper manentis plenitudinem charitatis: in nobis autem charitatem Dei virtutis emeretur profectus.

90. And if they start a debate on the words that are written: And You have loved them, as You have loved Me, and think a comparison is intended; they must think that the following also was said by way of comparison: Be merciful, as your Father Which is in heaven is merciful; Luke 6:36 and elsewhere: Be perfect, as My Father Which is in heaven is perfect. Matthew 5:48 But if He is perfect in the fullness of His glory, we are but perfect according to the growth of virtue within us. The Son also is loved by the Father according to the fullness of a love that ever abides, but in us growth in grace merits the love of God.

92. Vides igitur quam gratiam Deus dederit hominibus, et tu Patris et Filii vis dissolvere naturalem et individuam charitatem; et tu verba adhuc discutis, ubi unitatem majestatis advertis?

91. You see, then, how God has given grace to men, and do you wish to dissever the natural and indivisible love of the Father and the Son? And do you still strive to make nothing of words, where you note the mention of a unity of majesty?

93. Vide totum hunc locum, ex cujus affectu loquatur; habes enim dicentem ipsum: Clarifica me, Pater, claritate ea quam habui, priusquam mundus esset, apud te (Joan. XVII, 5). Vide quia ex primi hominis loquatur affectu; quia nobis ea petitione deposcit, quae ante peccatum in paradiso homo meminerit esse collata, ut et latroni in passione memoravit: Amen, amen dico tibi, hodie mecum eris in paradiso (Luc. XXIII, 13). Haec est ante mundum claritas. Mundum autem pro hominibus dixit, sicut habes: Ecce mundus totus post ipsum abit (Joan. XII, 19); et alibi: Ut cognoscat hic mundus quia tu me misisti (Joan. XIV, 31).

92. Consider the whole of this passage, and see from what standpoint He speaks; for you hear Him saying: Father, glorify Me with the glory which I had with You before the world was. John 17:5 See how He speaks from the standpoint of the first man. For He begs for us in that request those things which, as Man, He remembered were granted in paradise before the Fall, as also He spoke of it to the thief at His Passion: Verily, verily, I say unto you, today shall you be with Me in paradise. Luke 23:43 This is the glory before the world was. But He used the word world instead men, as also you have it: Lo! The whole world goes after Him; John 12:19 and again That the world may know that You have sent Me. John 17:21

94. Et tamen ut scires magnum Deum et salutarem et omnipotentem Dei Filium; indicium suae majestatis admiscuit dicendo: Et mea omnia tua sunt, et tua mea (Ibid. 10). Omnia habet, et tu missum esse ad injuriam derivas?

93. But that you might know the great God, even the life-giving and Almighty Son of God, He has added a proof of His majesty by saying: And all Mine are Yours, and Yours are Mine. John 17:10 He has all things, and do you turn aside the fact that He was sent, to wrong Him?

95. Qui si secundum carnem non accipis missum, ut Apostolus dixit (Rom. VIII, 3), et ex verbo simplici praejudicium struis, quo dicas inferiores a superioribus mitti solere: quid ad illa respondes, quia Filius ad homines missus est? Nam si minorem putas eum qui mittitur, eo videlicet a quo mittitur; disce quod et minor majorem misit, et majores ad minores missi sunt. Nam et Tobias Raphaelem archangelum misit (Tobiae IX, 3), et angelus ad Balaam missus est (Num. XXII, 22), et Dei Filius ad Judaeos (Matth. XXV, 24).

94. But if you do not accept the truth of His mission according to the flesh, as the Apostle spoke of it, Romans 8:3 and dost raise out of a mere word a decision against it, to enable you to say that inferiors are wont to be sent by superiors; what answer will you give to the fact that the Son was sent to men? For if you think that he who is sent is inferior to him by whom he is sent, you must learn also that an inferior has sent a superior, and that superiors have been sent to inferiors. For Tobias sent Raphael the archangel, Tobit 9:3 and an angel was sent to Balaam, Numbers 22:22 and the Son of God to the Jews.

96. Numquid ergo minor etiam Judaeis Dei Filius, ad quos mittebatur? De ipso enim scriptum est: Novissime autem misit eis filium suum unicum dicens: Verebuntur filium meum (Matth. XXI, 37). Et vide quia ante servos, postea filium nominavit; ut scias quod Deus Filius unigenitus secundum divinitatis potentiam nec nomen habet, nec consortium commune cum servis: reverendus mittitur, non cum famulis conferendus. 568

95. Or was the Son of God inferior to the Jews to whom He was sent? For of Him it is written: Last of all He sent unto them His only Son, saying, They will reverence My Son. Matthew 21:37 And mark that He mentioned first the servants, then the Son, that you may know that God, the only-begotten Son according to the power of His Godhead, has neither name nor lot in common with servants. He is sent forth to be reverenced, not to be compared with the household.

97. Et bene addidit, meum, ut non unus de multis, nec degeneris naturae, nec minoris alicujus potestatis: sed verus a vero, et paternae imago venisse substantiae crederetur.

96. And rightly did He add the word My, that we might believe He came, not as one of many, nor as one of a lower nature or of some inferior power, but as true from Him that is true, as the Image of the Father’s Substance.

98. Esto tamen, minor sit qui mittitur, eo a quo mittitur; ergo et Pilato minor Christus, quoniam Pilatus misit eum ad Herodem. Sed sermo non praejudicat potestati: Scriptura, quae missum dicit a Patre, missum dicit a praeside.

97. Suppose, however, that he who is sent is inferior to him by whom he is sent. Christ then was inferior to Pilate; for Pilate sent Him to Herod. But a word does not prejudice His power. Scripture, which says that He was sent from the Father, says that He was sent from a ruler.

99. Unde si sobrie de Dei Filio quae digna sunt, opinemur; ideo missum intelligere debemus, quia ex illo incomprehensibili inenarrabilique secreto majestatis profundae dedit se comprehendendum pro captu nostro mentibus nostris Dei Verbum, non solum cum se exinaniret, sed etiam cum habitaret in nobis, sicut scriptum est: Quoniam inhabitabo in illis (II Cor. VI, 16). Denique et alibi habes quia Deus dixit: Venite, descendamus, et confundamus linguas eorum (Gen. XI, 7). Non enim Deus de loco aliquando descendit, qui ait: Ego coelum et terram compleo (Jerem. XXIII, 24); sed in eo descendere videtur, si nostros Dei Verbum penetret affectus, sicut dixit propheta: Parate viam Domino, rectas facite semitas ejus; (Esai. XL, 3); ut quemadmodum ipse promisit, veniens cum Patre, apud nos faciat mansionem. Evidens est igitur quomodo veniat.

98. Wherefore, if we sensibly hold to those things which be worthy of the Son of God, we ought to understand Him to have been sent in such a way that the Word of God, out of the incomprehensible and ineffable mystery of the depths of His majesty, gave Himself for comprehension to our minds, so far as we could lay hold of Him, not only when He emptied Himself, but also when He dwelt in us, as it is written: I will dwell in them. 2 Corinthians 6:16 Elsewhere also it stands that God said: Go to, let us go down and confound their language. Genesis 11:7 God, indeed, never descends from any place; for He says: I fill heaven and earth. Jeremiah 23:24 But He seems to descend when the Word of God enters our hearts, as the prophet has said: Prepare the way of the Lord, make His paths straight. Isaiah 40:3 We are to do this, so that, as He Himself promised, He may come together with the Father and make His abode with us. John 14:23 It is clear, then, how He comes.

CAPUT VIII.

CHRISTO IN QUANTUM verus est Dei Filius, Dominum non esse, sed in quantum homo est; ut verbis ejusdem modo Patrem, modo Dominum compellantis significatur. Quot haereses uno jugulentur Scripturae versiculo. Distinguenda igitur quae Christo vel ut Dei vel ut Davidis filio conveniant; illi enim sub ultimo tantum nomine ascribendum, quod servus fuerit. Ad extremum complures locos demonstrat non nisi secundum incarnationem accipi posse.

CHAPTER 8.

Christ, so far as He is true Son of God, has no Lord, but only so far as He is Man; as is shown by His words in which He addressed at one time the Father, at another the Lord. How many heresies are silenced by one verse of Scripture! We must distinguish between the things that belong to Christ as Son of God or as Son of David. For under the latter title only must we ascribe it to Him that He was a servant. Lastly, he points out that many passages cannot be taken except as referring to the Incarnation.

100. Unde et evidens est quomodo dominum dicat, quem Patrem novit; ait enim: Confiteor tibi, Pater, Domine coeli et terrae (Matth. XI, 25). Ante Patrem dixit Sapientia suum, postea creaturae Dominum nuncupavit. Itaque dominatum non esse ubi vera progenies est, ipse Dominus ostendit in Evangelio suo, dicens: Quid vobis videtur de Christo? cujus Filius est? Dicunt ei: David. Ait illis Jesus: Quomodo ergo David in spiritu vocat eum Dominum, dicens: Dixit Dominus Domino meo: Sede a dextris meis? Et addidit: Si ergo David in spiritu vocat eum Dominum, quomodo filius ejus est? Et nemo poterat ei respondere verbum (Matth. XXII, 42 et seq.).

99. Wherefore also it is plain how He calls Him Lord, Whom He knew as Father. For He says: I confess to You, Father, Lord of heaven and earth. Matthew 11:25 First Wisdom spoke of His own Father, and then proclaimed Him Lord of creation. For this reason the Lord shows in His Gospel that no lordship is exercised where there is a true offspring, saying: What do you think of Christ? Whose Son is He? They say unto Him, The son of David. Jesus says to them, How then does David in spirit call Him Lord, saying: The Lord said to my Lord: Sit on My right hand? Then he added: If David in spirit then call Him Lord, how is He his son? And no man was able to answer Him a word. Matthew 22:42-46

101. O quam caute propter Arianos etiam in hoc testimonio Dominus fidei prospexit! Non enim dixit: Vocat eum spiritus dominum: sed quia David dixit in spiritu; ut cujus secundum carnem 569 Filius est, David scilicet, ejus etiam secundum divinitatem et Dominus et Deus crederetur. Vides igitur quia nomen pietatis et dominii discretum est.

100. With what care did the Lord provide for the faith in this witness because of the Arians! For He did not say: The spirit calls Him Lord, but that David spoke in spirit; in order that men might believe that as He is his, that is, David’s son according to the flesh, so also He is his Lord and God according to His Godhead. You see, then, that there is a distinction between the titles that are used of relationship and of lordship.

102. Et bene Dominus suum quidem Patrem coeli autem et terrae Dominum praedicavit; ut tu cum legis et Patrem et Dominum, intelligas Patrem Filii, et Dominum creaturae. In alio praerogativa naturae est, in alio auctoritas potestatis; formam enim servi accipiens, eo utique Dominum vocat, quo servitutem suscepit, aequalis in Dei forma, servus in corporis: servitus enim carnis, dominatus autem divinitatis est. Unde et Apostolus ait: Deus Domini nostri Jesu Christi, pater gloriae (II Cor. I, 3), hoc est, Deum assumptionis humanae asserens, Patrem autem gloriae. Num enim duos filios habuit Deus Christum et gloriam? Minime. Ergo si unus Dei Filius Christus, utique Christus est gloria. Quid autem ei derogas, qui Patris gloria est?

101. And rightly did the Lord speak of His own Father, but of the Lord of heaven and earth; so that you, when you read of the Father and the Lord, may understand it is the Father of the Son, and the Lord of Creation. In the one title rests the claim of nature, in the other the authority to rule. For taking on Himself the form of a servant, He calls Him Lord, because He has submitted to service; being equal to Him in the form of God, but being a servant in the form of His body: for service is the due of the flesh, but lordship is the due of the Godhead. Wherefore also the Apostle says: The God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, 2 Corinthians 1:3 that is, terming Him God of the adoption of humanity but the Father of glory. Did God have two Sons, Christ and Glory? Certainly not. Therefore if there is one Son of God, even Christ, Christ is Glory. Why do you strive to belittle Him who is the glory of the Father?

103. Si ergo et Filius gloria est, et Pater gloria; quia Pater gloriae non potest aliud esse quam gloria: non divisio gloriarum, sed una est gloria. Itaque ad proprietatem naturae gloria refertur, dominatus autem ad suscepti corporis servitutem. Si enim caro etiam justi animae subdita est, sicut scriptum est: Castigo corpus meum, et servituti redigo (I Cor. IX, 27), quanto magis subjecta et divinitati, de qua dicitur: Quoniam universa serviunt tibi (Psal. CXVIII, 91)?

102. If then the Son is glory, and the Father is glory (for the Father of glory cannot be anything else than glory), there is no separation of glories, but glory is one. Thus glory is referred to its own proper nature, but lordship to the service of the body that was assumed. For if the flesh is subject to the soul of a just man as it is written: I chastise my body and bring it into subjection; 1 Corinthians 9:27 how much more is it subject to the Godhead, of Which it is said: For all things serve You?

104. Una autem quaestione et Sabellianos et Photinianos et Arianos Dominus exclusit. Nam cum Dominum dixisse Domino dicit, Sabellius excluditur, qui eumdem Patrem vult esse quem Filium. Excluditur Photinus, qui secundum carnem judicat; quia dominus David regis non poterat esse, nisi qui Deus est; scriptum est enim: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et illi soli servies (Deut. VI, 13). Numquid contra Legem propheta sentiret, qui sub Lege regnaret? Excluditur Arius, qui Filium sedere audit ad dexteram Patris; ut si ex usu argumentetur humano, ipse se perimat, et venenum sacrilegae disputationis suae in se refundat, ut dum inaequalitatem Patris et Filii ex consuetudine hominum interpretatur, in utroque a vero devius, eum praeferat cui derogat, confessurus priorem quem audit ad dexteram. Excluditur etiam Manichaeus: non enim negat esse se David filium secundum carnem; ut pote qui clamantibus caecis: Jesu, fili David, miserere nobis (Matth. XX, 30); et delectatus est fide, et stetit et curavit eos: sed negat hoc suae esse aeternitatis, si David solius filius a perfidis nominetur.

103. By one question the Lord has shut out both Sabellians and Photinians and Arians. For when He said that the Lord spoke to the Lord, Sabellius is set aside, who will have it that the same Person is both Father and Son. Photinus is set aside, who thinks of Him merely as man; for none could be Lord of David the King, but He Who is God, for it is written: You shall worship the Lord your God, and Him only shall you serve. Deuteronomy 6:13 Would the prophet who ruled under the Law act contrary to the Law? Arius is set aside, who hears that the Son sits on the right hand of the Father; so that if he argues from human ways, he refutes himself, and makes the poison of his blasphemous arguments to flow back upon himself. For in interpreting the inequality of the Father and the Son by the analogy of human habits (wandering from the truth in either case), he puts Him first Whom he makes little of, confessing Him to be the First, Whom he hears to be at the right hand. The Manichæan also is set aside, for he does not deny that He is the Son of David according to the flesh, Who, at the cry of the blind men, Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on us, Matthew 20:30 was pleased at their faith and stood and healed them. But He does deny that this refers to His eternity, if He is called Son of David alone by those who are false.

105. Nam Filius Dei est contra Hebionem, Filius David est contra Manichaeos: Filius Dei est contra Photinum, Filius David est contra Marcionem: Filius Dei est contra Paulum Samosatenum: 570 Filius David est contra Valentinum: Filius Dei est contra Arium atque Sabellium gentilis erroris haeredes: Dominus David est contra Judaeos, qui Dei Filium in carne cernentes, hominem tantummodo impio furore credebant.

104. For Son of God is against Ebion, Son of David, is against the Manichees; Son of God is against Photinus, Son of David is against Marcion; Son of God is against Paul of Samosata, Son of David is against Valentinus; Son of God is against Arius and Sabellius, the inheritors of heathen errors. Lord of David is against the Jews, who beholding the Son of God in the flesh, in impious madness believed Him to be only man.

106. Sed Ecclesiastica fide et Dei Patris et David idem atque unus est Filius; quia incarnationis Dei mysterium universae salus est creaturae; secundum quod scriptum est: Ut sine Deo pro omnibus gustaret mortem (Hebr. II, 9), id est, quod creatura omnis sine passione aliqua divinitatis Dominici sanguinis redimenda sit pretio, ut alibi habet: Omnis creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis (Rom. VIII, 21).

105. But in the faith of the Church one and the same is both Son of God the Father and Son of David. For the mystery of the Incarnation of God is the salvation of the whole of creation, according to that which is written: That without God He should taste death for every man; Hebrews 2:9 that is, that every creature might be redeemed without any suffering at the price of the blood of the Lord's Divinity, as it stands elsewhere: Every creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption. Romans 8:21

107. Aliud est igitur secundum divinam substantiam, aliud secundum susceptionem carnis Filium nominari: nam secundum generationem divinam Deo Patri aequalis est Filius, et secundum susceptionem corporis Deo Patri servus est; quia formam servi, inquit (Phil. II, 7), accepit: unus tamen atque idem est Filius. Contra autem sancto patriarchae David secundum gloriam suam Dominus est, secundum corporalis successionis seriem filius est, non deficiens a se, sed nostrae jus sibi adoptionis acquirens.

106. It is one thing to be named Son according to the divine Substance, it is another thing to be so called according to the adoption of human flesh. For, according to the divine Generation, the Son is equal to God the Father; and, according to the adoption of a body, He is a servant to God the Father. For, it says, He took upon Him the form of a servant. Philippians 2:7 The Son is, however, one and the same. On the other hand, according to His glory, He is Lord to the holy patriarch David, but his Son in the line of actual descent, not abandoning anything of His own, but acquiring for Himself the rights that go with the adoption into our race.

108. Nec solum ex genere David servitutem suscepit in persona hominis; sed etiam ex nomine, sicut habes: Inveni David servum meum; et alibi: Ecce ego mittam ad vos servum meum (Zach. III, 8), Oriens nomen est ei (Ibid. VI, 12). Et ipse Filius ait: Sic dicit Dominus, qui finxit me ex utero servum sibi, et dixit mihi: Magnum tibi est vocari puerum meum. Ecce posui te in testamentum generis mei, in lucem gentium; ut sis in salutem usque ad extremum terrae (Esai XLIX, 6 et seq.). Cui hoc dicitur, nisi Christo? qui cum in forma Dei esset, exinanivit se, et formam servi accepit (Phil. II, 6). Quid est in Dei forma, nisi in divinitatis plenitudine?

107. Not only does He undergo service in the character of man by reason of His descent from David, but also by reason of His name, as it is written: I have found David My Servant; and elsewhere: Behold I will send unto you My Servant, the Orient is His name. Zechariah 3:8 And the Son Himself says: Thus says the Lord, that formed Me from the womb to be His servant, and said to Me: It is a great thing for You to be called My Servant. Behold I have set You up for a witness to My people, and a light to the Gentiles, that You may be for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Isaiah 49:5-6 To whom is this said, if not to Christ? Who being in the form of God, emptied Himself and took upon Him the form of a servant. Philippians 2:6-7 But what can be in the form of God, except that which exists in the fullness of the Godhead?

109. Disce igitur quid sit: Formam servi accepit, id est, plenitudinem perfectionis humanae, plenitudinem obedientiae. Ideoque dicit in psalmo trigesimo: Statuisti in loco spatioso pedes meos. Super omnes inimicos meos factus sum opprobrium. Illustra faciem tuam super servum tuum (Psal. XXX, 9, 12 et 17). Servus dictus est homo, in quo sanctificatus est: servus homo, in quo unctus est: servus homo, in quo factus sub Lege, factus ex Virgine est; et ut compendio dicam, servus dictus est, in quo matrem habet, sicut scriptum est: O Domine, ego servus tuus, ego servus tuus, et filius ancillae tuae (Psal. CXV, 7); et alibi: Afflictus sum et humiliatus sum nimis (Psal. XXXVII, 9).

108. Learn, then, what this means: He took upon Him the form of a servant. It means that He took upon Him all the perfections of humanity in their completeness, and obedience in its completeness. And so it says in the thirtieth Psalm: You have set my feet in a large room. I am made a reproach above all mine enemies. Make Your face to shine upon Your servant. Servant means the Man in whom He was sanctified; it means the Man in whom He was anointed; it means the Man in whom He was made under the law, made of the Virgin; and, to put it briefly, it means the Man in whose person He has a mother, as it is written: O Lord, I am Your Servant, I am Your Servant, and the Son of Your hand-maid; and again: I am cast down and sore humbled.

110. Quis nimis humiliatus est, nisi Christus, qui venit ut omnes liberaret per obedientiam? Sicut enim per inobedientiam unius hominis peccatores constituti sunt plurimi, ita et per unius obedientiam justi constituentur multi (Rom. V, 19). Quis calicem 571 salutarem (Psal. CXV, 13) accepit, Christus princeps sacerdotum, an David, qui neque sacerdotium habuit, neque passionem subiit? Quis sacrificavit hostiam laudis?

109. Who is sore humbled, but Christ, Who came to free all through His obedience? For as by one man’s disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. Romans 5:19 Who received the cup of salvation? Christ the High Priest, or David who never held the priesthood, nor endured suffering? Who offered the sacrifice of Thanksgiving?

111. Sed si hoc parum est, accipe aliud: Custodi animam meam, quoniam ego sanctus sum (Psal. LXXXV, 2). Numquid de se hoc diceret David? Sed ille dicit, qui ait: Non derelinques animam meam in inferno, nec dabis sanctum tuum videre corruptionem (Psal. XV, 10). Idem ergo utrumque dicit.

110. But that is insufficient; take again: Preserve My soul, for I am holy. Did David say this of himself? Nay, He says it, Who also says: You will not leave My soul in hell, neither will You allow Your Holy One to see corruption. The Same then says both of these.

112. Addidit vero: Salvum fac servum tuum (Psal. LXXXV, 2); et infra: Da postestatem puero tuo, et filio ancillae tuae (Ibid. 16); et alibi, id est, in Ezechiele: Et suscitabo super eos pastorem unum, et reget eos servus meus David. Ipse pascet eos, et erit eorum pastor: et ego Dominus ero illis in Deum, et servus meus David in medio eorum princeps (Ezech. XXIV, 23, 24). Utique David jam defunctus erat, filius Jesse. De Christo itaque dicit, qui propter nos filius ancillae factus est, secundum formam hominis; nam secundum divinam generationem non matrem habet, sed Patrem: nec corporalis ventris est fructus, sed sempiterna Dei virtus.

111. He has added further: Save Your Servant; and, further on: Give Your strength to Your servant, and to the Son of Your handmaid; and, elsewhere, that is, in Ezekiel: And I will set up one Shepherd over them, and He shall rule them, even My Servant David. He shall feed them, and He shall be their Shepherd. And I the Lord will be their God, and My Servant David a prince among them. Ezekiel 34:23-24 Now David the Son of Jesse was already dead. Therefore he speaks of Christ, Who for our sakes was made the Son of a handmaiden in the form of man; for according to His divine Generation He has no Mother, but a Father only: nor is He the fruit of earthly desire, but the eternal Power of God.

113. Ergo etiam illud cum legimus quia dixit Dominus: Tempus meum nundum impletum est (Joan. VII, 8), et: Adhuc modicum vobiscum sum (Joan. XIII, 33), et: Vado ad eum qui misit me (Ibid.), et: Clarificatus est Filius hominis (Ibid., 31), ad incarnationis sacramentum referre debemus. Cum autem legimus: Et Deus clarificatus est in eo, et Deus clarificavit eum (Ibid.); quid ibi est quaestionis, ubi et Filius clarificatur a Patre, et Pater clarificatur a Filio?

112. And so, also, when we read that the Lord said: My time is not yet full come; John 7:8 and: Yet a little while I am with you; and: I go unto Him that sent Me; John 7:33 and: Now is the Son of Man glorified; John 13:31 we ought to refer all this to the sacrament of the Incarnation. But when we read: And God is glorified in Him, and God has glorified Him; John 13:31 what doubt is there here, where the Son is glorified by the Father, and the Father is glorified by the Son?

114. Denique ut fidem unitatis et copulam Trinitatis aperiret, etiam ab Spiritu clarificandum esse se dixit, sicut habes: Ille de meo accipiet, et clarificabit me (Joan. XVI, 14). Clarificat ergo Dei Filium etiam Spiritus sanctus. Quomodo igitur ipse dixit: Si ego clarificavero me ipsum, claritas mea nihilum est (Joan. VIII, 54)? Ergo nihil est claritas Filii? Sacrilegum est dicere, nisi referas ad carnem; quia ex persona hominis Filius loquebatur, eo quod comparatione divinitatis nulla est carnis claritas.

113. Next, to make clear the faith of the Unity, and the Union of the Trinity, He also said that He would be glorified by the Spirit, as it stands: He shall receive of Mine, and shall glorify Me. John 16:14 Therefore the Holy Spirit also glorifies the Son of God. How, then, did He say: If I glorify Myself, My glory is nothing. John 8:54 Is then the glory of the Son nothing? It is blasphemy to say so, unless we apply these words to His flesh; for the Son spoke in the character of man, for by comparison with the Godhead, there is no glory of the flesh.

115. Desinant igitur impie objicere, quod in suam perfidiam retorquetur. Dicunt enim: Scriptum est: Nunc clarificatus est Filius hominis (Joan. XIII, 31). Non nego scriptum: Clarificatus est Filius hominis; sed videant quid sequatur: Et Deus clarificatus est in eo. Ego excusationem habeo de Filio hominis, ille de Patre non habet; quia Pater non suscepit carnem. Excusationem habeo, et non utor: ille non habet, et calumniatur. Aut simpliciter me patiatur intelligere, aut ad carnem referre quae carnis sunt. Pia mens, quae leguntur secundum carnem divinitatemque, distinguit: sacrilega confundit, et ad divinitatis detorquet injuriam, quidquid secundum humilitatem carnis est dictum. 572

114. Let them cease from their wicked objections which are but thrown back upon their own falseness. For they say, it is written: Now is the Son of Man glorified. I do not deny that it is written: The Son of Man is glorified. But let them see what follows: And God is glorified in Him. I can plead some excuse for the Son of Man, but He has none for His Father; for the Father took not flesh upon Himself. I can plead an excuse, but do not use it. He has none, and is falsely attacked. I can either understand it in its plain sense, or I can apply to the flesh what concerns the flesh. A devout mind distinguishes between the things which are spoken after the flesh or after the Godhead. An impious mind turns aside to the dishonour of the Godhead, all that is said with regard to the littleness of the flesh.

CAPUT IX.

JUDAICO MORE ORDINEM verborum: In nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti, objicientibus, praeter responsum quod vir sanctus indicat a se jam datum, regerit etiam Filium ante Patrem saepe locari.

CHAPTER 9.

The saint meets those who in Jewish wise object to the order of the words: In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, with the retort that the Son also is often placed before the Father; though he first points out that an answer to this objection has been already given by him.

116. [Alias cap. IV.] Quid quod etiam more Judaico falsi et impudentes interpretes Ariani verborum sunt divinorum, dicentes usque adeo aliam Patris, aliam Filii, aliam Spiritus sancti esse potestatem, ut scriptum sit: Ite, docete omnes gentes, baptizantes eos in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti (Matth. XXVIII, 19); et ex verborum ordine differentiam divinae faciunt potestatis?

115. Why is it that the Arians, after the Jewish fashion, are such false and shameless interpreters of the divine words, going indeed so far as to say that there is one power of the Father, another of the Son, and another of the Holy Ghost, since it is written: Go, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost? And why do they make a distinction of divine power owing to the mere order of words?

117. Ego autem licet hoc ipsum testimonium in superioribus libris pro unitate asseruerim majestatis ac nominis, tamen si hinc faciunt quaestionem, possum testimoniis asserere Scripturarum in plerisque locis prius Filium nominatum, postea Patrem dictum. Numquid igitur quia Filii significatio ante praemissa est, verborum, ut Ariani volunt, praejudicio Pater secundus a Filio est? Absit, inquam, absit. Nescit hunc ordinem fides, nescit discretum Patris et Filii honorem. Non legi, non audivi, nec aliquem in Deo inveni gradum. Nusquam secundum, nusquam tertium Deum legi: primum legi, primum ac solum audivi (Esai XLIV, 6).

116. Though I have already given this very witness for a unity of majesty and name in my former books, yet if they make this the ground of debate, I can maintain on the testimony of the Scriptures that the Son is mentioned first in many places, and that the Father is spoken of after Him. Is it therefore a fact that, because the name of the Son is placed first, by the mere accident of a word, as the Arians would have it, the Father comes second to the Son? God forbid, I say, God forbid. Faith knows nothing of such order as this; it knows nothing of a divided honour of the Father and the Son. I have not read of, nor heard of, nor found any varying degree in God. Never have I read of a second, never of a third God. I have read of a first God, Isaiah 44:6 I have heard of a first and only God.

118. Si ordinis exigimus superstitionem, nec ad dexteram Patris sedere Filius debet, nec primum se et principium debuit dicere. Male ergo Evangelista prius a Verbo, quam a Deo coepit, dicens: In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum (Joan. I, 1). Etenim juxta humani ritus ordinem, prius Patrem debuit nominare. Nescivit etiam Apostolus ordinem, qui ait: Paulus servus Christi Jesu, vocatus apostolus, segregatus in Evangelium Dei (Rom. I, 1); et alibi: Gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et charitas Dei, et communicatio Spiritus sancti (II Cor. XIII, 13). Si verborum persequamur ordinem, in primo Filium posuit, in secundo Patrem. Sed verborum ordo saepe mutatur; et ideo non debes vel de ordine, vel de gradu Patri Deo et Filio ejus facere quaestionem, cum secundum divinitatem divisio nulla sit unitatis.

117. If we pay such excessive regard to order, then the Son ought not to sit at the right hand of the Father, nor ought He to call Himself the First and the Beginning. The Evangelist was wrong in beginning with the Word and not with God, where he says: In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God. John 1:1 For, according to the order of human usage, he ought to name the Father first. The Apostle also was ignorant of their order, who says: Paul the servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an Apostle, separated unto the Gospel of God; Romans 1:1 and elsewhere: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost. 2 Corinthians 13:14 If we follow the order of the words, he has placed the Son first, and the Father second. But the order of the words is often changed; and therefore you ought not to question about order or degree, in the case of God the Father and His Son, for there is no severance of unity in the Godhead.

CAPUT X.

ARIANOS AD GENTILES palam transire, dum objiciunt illa verba: Qui in me credit, non in me credit, etc. Verus loci sensus explicatur, et ne credatur Dominus nostram in ipsum fidem prohibuisse, alias ut Deus, alias ut homo locutus ostenditur. Mox variis ejusdem fidei effectibus prolatis in medium, alios quoque nonnullos locos eodem modo sumendos probat.

CHAPTER 10.

The Arians openly take sides with the heathen in attacking the words: He that believes in Me, believes not in Me, etc. The true meaning of the passage is unfolded; and to prevent us from believing that the Lord forbade us to have faith in Him, it is shown how He spoke at one time as God, at another as Man. After bringing forward examples of various results of that faith, he shows that certain other passages also must be taken in the same way.

119. Ad extremum ut christianos se non esse manifestent, negant in Christum esse credendum, dicentes scriptum esse: Qui in me credit, non credit in me, sed in eum qui me misit (Joan. XII, 44). Hanc ego exspectabam confessionem, quid me quibusdam ambagibus ludebatis? Sciebam mihi adversum gentiles esse contentionem: 573 sed illi convertuntur, vos non convertimini. Illi si credant, salvum est sacramentum: vos perdidistis acceptum; et nec coeptum fortasse, sed fictum.

118. Last of all, to show that they are not Christians, they deny that we are to believe in Christ, saying that it is written: He that believes in Me, believes not on Me, but on Him that sent Me. John 12:44 I was awaiting this confession; why did you delude me with your quibbles? I knew I had to contend with heathens. Nay, they indeed are converted, but you are not. If they believe, that the sacrament [of Baptism] is safe; you have received it, and destroyed it, or perchance it has never been received, but was unreal from the first.

120. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Qui in me credit, non in me credit, sed in eum qui me misit. Sed videte quid sequatur, et videte sic quemadmodum se Dei Filius vult videri; sequitur enim: Et qui videt me, videt eum qui me misit (Joan. XII, 45), hoc est, quia Pater videtur in Filio. Exposuit igitur id quod ante praemisit, quia ille credit in Filium, qui confitetur et Patrem. Nam qui Filium nescit, nec Patrem novit; omnis enim qui negat Filium, nec Patrem habet: qui confitetur Filium, et Filium, et Patrem habet.

119. It is written, they say: He that believes in Me, believes not on Me, but on Him that sent Me. But see what follows, and see how the Son of God wishes to be seen; for it continues: And he that sees Me, sees Him that sent Me, John 12:45 for the Father is seen in the Son. Thus, He has explained what He had spoken earlier, that he who confesses the Father believes on the Son. For he who knows not the Son, neither knows the Father. For every one that denies the Son has not the Father, but he that confesses the Son has both the Father and the Son. 1 John 2:23

121. Quid est ergo: Non credit in me? Non in id quod corporaliter cernitis, non in hominem tantummodo, quem videtis: non enim in hominem tantummodo credendum asseruit, sed ut credas quia Jesus Christus ipse est Dei Filius et homo. Propter quod et utrumque ait: A meipso non veni (Joan. VII, 28); et alibi: Ego sum principium quod et loquor vobis (Joan. VIII, 25). Quasi homo, a se non venit: quasi Dei Filius non ex homine principium habet: sed sum, inquit, ipse principium quod et loquor vobis (Joan. XII, 46): neque humana, sed divina sunt, quae locutus sum.

120. What, then, is the meaning of Believes not on Me? That is, not on that which you can perceive in bodily form, nor merely on the man whom you see. For He has stated that we are to believe not merely on a man, but that you may believe that Jesus Christ Himself is both God and Man. Wherefore, for both reasons He says: I came not from Myself; John 7:28 and again: I am the beginning, of which also I speak to you. John 8:25 As Man He came not from Himself; as Son of God He takes not His beginning from men; but I am, He says, Myself 'the beginning of which also I speak to you.' Neither are the words which I speak human, but divine.

122. Neque enim fas est credere quod negaverit in se esse credundum, cum ipse dixerit: Ut omnis qui credit in me, in tenebris non maneat (Joan. III, 16); et alibi: Haec est enim voluntas Patris mei qui me misit, ut omnis qui videt Filium et credit in eum, habeat vitam aeternam (Joan VI, 40); et alibi: Creditis in Deum, et in me credite (Joan. XIV, 1).

121. Nor is it right to believe that He denied we were to believe in Him, since He Himself said: That whosoever believes in Me should not abide in darkness; John 12:46 and in another place again: For this is the will of My Father that sent Me, that every one that sees the Son, and believes in Him, may have eternal life; John 6:40 and again: You believe in God, believe also in Me. John 14:1

123. Nemo ergo Filium sine Patre accipiat, quia Filium legimus. Habet Patrem Filius, sed non temporalem, non ex passione, non ex conceptione, non ex gratia. Generationem legi, non legi conceptionem. Et Pater dicit, genui (Psal. II, 7); non dicit, creavi: et Filius non creatorem suum Deum secundum aeternitatem divinae generationis, sed Patrem nominat.

122. Let no one, therefore, receive the Son without the Father, because we read of the Son. The Son has the Father, but not in a temporal sense, nor by reason of His passion, nor owing to His conception, nor by grace. I have read of His Generation, I have not read of His Conception. And the Father says: I have begotten; He does not say: I have created. And the Son calls not God His Creator in the eternity of His divine Generation, but Father.

124. Se quoque nunc ex persona hominis, nunc in Dei majestate significat: nunc unitatem sibi divinitatis cum Deo Patre vindicans, nunc fragilitatem humanae carnis assumens: nunc doctrinam suam se non habere, nunc voluntatem suam se non quaerere: nunc testimonium suum verum non esse, nunc verum esse significans. Nam ipse dixit: Si ego testimonium perhibeo de me ipso, testimonium meum non est verum (Joan. V, 31). Et ipse in posterioribus ait: Et si ego testimonium perhibeo de me, verum est testimonium meum (Joan. VIII, 14).

123. He represents Himself also now in the character of man, now in the majesty of God; now claiming for Himself oneness of Godhead with the Father, now taking upon Him all the frailty of human flesh; now saying that He has not His own doctrine, and now that He seeks not His own will; now pointing out that His testimony is not true, and now that it is true. For He Himself has said: If I bear witness of Myself, My witness is not true. John 5:31 Later on He says: If I bear witness of Myself, My witness is true. John 7:14

125. Quomodo igitur non est verum testimonium tuum, Domine Jesu, cui qui credidit, in cruce licet positus, et inter confessi sceleris supplicia constitutus, merita latronis exuit, praemia innocentis emeruit (Luc. XXIII, 41 et seq.) ?

124. And how is Your testimony, Lord Jesus, not true? Did not he who believed it, though he hung upon the cross, and paid the penalty for the crime he owned to, cast aside the deserts of the robber and gain the reward of the innocent? Luke 23:41

126. Deceptus est ergo Paulus, qui ideo recepit oculos, quia credidit, quos amiserat, antequam crederet (Act. IX, 18)?

125. Was Paul deceived, who received his sight, because he believed; Acts 9:12 which sight he had lost, before he believed?

127. Erravitne etiam Jesus Nave, qui ducem militiae coelestis agnovit? Sed posteaquam credidit, 574 statim vicit, dignus qui fidei praelio triumpharet. Denique non aeratas acies in bella produxit, nec ariete, caeterisque tormentorum machinis, sed tubarum septem sacerdotalium sono, murorum hostilium septa deposuit. Ita bellum immane confecit tubae clangor, et infula sacerdotis (Josue VI).

126. And did Joshua, the son of Nun, err in recognizing the leader of the heavenly host? Joshua 5:13 But after he believed, he immediately conquered, being found worthy to triumph in the battle of faith. Again, he did not lead forth his armed ranks into the fight, nor did he overthrow the ramparts of the enemy's walls, with battering rams or other engines of war, but with the sound of the seven trumpets of the priests. Thus the blare of the trumpet and the badge of the priest brought a cruel war to an end.

128. Vidit hoc meretrix, et quae in excidio civitatis remedia desperaret salutis, quia fides vicerat, signa fidei atque vexilla Dominicae passionis attollens, coccum in fenestra ligavit; ut species cruoris mystici quae foret mundum redemptura, vernaret (Josue II). Ita foris Jesu nomen fuit praeliantibus ad victoriam, intus species Dominicae passionis periclitantibus ad salutem. Unde quia intellexit Rahab coeleste mysterium, dicit Dominus in psalmo. Memor ero Rahab et Babylonis, scientium me (Psal. LXXXVI, 4).

127. A harlot saw this; and she who in the destruction of the city lost all hope of any means of safety, because her faith had conquered, bound a scarlet thread in her window, and thus uplifted a sign of her faith and the banner of the Lord's Passion; Joshua 2:18 so that the semblance of the mystic blood, which should redeem the world, might be in memory. So, without, the name of Joshua was a sign of victory to those who fought; within, the semblance of the Lord's Passion was a sign of salvation to those in danger. Wherefore, because Rahab understood the heavenly mystery, the Lord says in the Psalm: I will be mindful of Rahab and Babylon that know Me.

129. Quomodo ergo non est verum testimonium tuum, Domine, nisi secundum fragilitatem hominum? Omnis enim homo mendax (Psal. CXV, 2).

128. How, then, is Your testimony not true, O Lord, except it be given in accordance with the frailty of man? For every man is a liar.

130. Denique ut secundum hominem dixisse se demonstraret, ait: Qui misit me Pater, ipse testimonium perhibet de me (Joan. VIII, 18). Verum autem est testimonium secundum divinitatem, sicut ipse ait: Et verum est testimonium meum; quia scio unde veni, et quo vado: vos autem nescitis unde veni, et quo vado. Vos secundum carnem judicatis (Ibid., XIV, 15). Non ergo secundum divinitatem, sed secundum hominem judicant, qui putant Christo testificandi scientiam defuisse.

129. Lastly, to prove that He spoke as man, He says: The Father that sent Me, He bears witness of Me. John 8:18 But His testimony as God is true, as He Himself says: My record is true: for I know whence I come, and whither I go, but you know not whence I come, and whither I go. You judge after the flesh. John 8:14-15 They judge then not after the Godhead but after the manhood, who think that Christ had not the power of bearing witness.

131. Ergo cum audis: Qui credit in me, non credit in me; et: Qui misit me Pater, ipse mihi mandatum dedit (Joan. XII, 49); didicisti quo id putes esse referendum. Denique mandatum quod esset, ostendit dicens: Pono animam meam, ut iterum sumam illam. Nemo tollit eam a me, sed ego pono eam a me ipso (Joan. VI, 17 et seq.). Vides ideo dictum, ut ostenderet liberam sibi ponendae ac resumendae animae potestatem, sicut ipse dixit: Potestatem habeo ponendi eam, et potestatem habeo iterum sumendi eam. Hoc mandatum accepi a Patre meo (Ibid.).

130. Therefore, when you hear, He that believes, believes not on Me; or: The Father that sent Me, He gave Me a commandment; John 12:49 you have now learned whither you ought to refer those words. Lastly, He shows what the commandment is, saying: I lay down My life, that I may take it again. No man takes it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. John 10:17 You see, then, what is said so as to show He had full power to lay down or to take up His life; as He also said: I have power to lay it down, and I have power again to take it up. This commandment have I received of My Father. John 10:18

132. Sive igitur mandatum, sive, ut aliqui Latini codices habent, praeceptum, non utique secundum divinitatem, sed secundum incarnationem datur, ad subeundae victoriam passionis.

131. Whether, then, a command, or, as some Latin manuscripts have it, a direction was given, it was certainly not given to Him as God, but as incarnate man, with reference to the victory He should gain in undergoing His Passion.

CAPUT XI.

QUOD CHRISTUS LEGATUR nihil a se loqui, hoc referendum ad ipsius humanitatem. Quomodo etiam secundum divinitatem audire ac videre Patrem recte dicatur, exposito, Dei Filium creaturam non esse multis coacervatis argumentis evincit.

CHAPTER 11.

We must refer the fact that Christ is said to speak nothing of Himself, to His human nature. After explaining how it is right to say that He hears and sees the Father as being God, He shows conclusively, by a large number of proofs, that the Son of God is not a creature.

133. [Alias Cap. V.] An vero in hanc humilitatem Dei Filium deducemus, ut nisi quae audierit, facere aut loqui nesciat: et praescriptam agendi loquendique ei putemus esse mensuram; quia scriptum est: Ex me ipso non sum locutus (Joan. XII, 49); et infra: Sicut dixit mihi Pater, ita loquor (Ibid. 50)? Sed ad obedientiam carnis, aut ad fidem unitatis ista referantur. Plerique enim doctiores et audire Filium, et dicere aliquid Filio Patrem accipiunt per 575 unitatem naturae, quod enim per unitatem voluntatis novit Filius Patrem velle, videtur audisse.

132. Are we indeed to bring the Son of God to such a low estate that He may not know how to act or speak, except as He hears, and are we to suppose that a fixed measure of action or of speech is assigned to Him, because it is written: I speak not of Myself, and, further on: As the Father has said to Me, even so I speak? John 12:50 But those words have reference to the obedience of the flesh, or else to the faith in the Unity. For many learned men allow that the Son hears, and that the Father speaks to the Son through the unity of their Nature; for that which the Son, through the unity of their will, knows that the Father wills, He seems to have heard.

134. Unde non officium corporale, sed arbitrium indissociabile cooperationis declaratur; neque enim verborum hic aliquem significat auditum, sed unitatem voluntatis atque virtutis, quae et in Patre est et in Filio. Quam etiam in Spiritu sancto esse memoravit alio loco, dicens: Non enim loquetur a se, sed quaecumque audit, loquetur (Joan. XVI, 13); ut adverteremus quia quidquid Spiritus loquitur, loquitur et Filius: et quidquid loquitur Filius, loquitur et Pater; quia una sententia et operatio Trinitatis est. Sicut enim Pater videtur in Filio, non utique specie corporali, sed unitate divinitatis; ita etiam Pater loquitur in Filio, non temporali voce, nec corporali sono, sed operis unitate. Denique cum dixisset: Pater qui in me manet, ipse loquitur: et opera quae ego facio, ipse facit; addidit: Credite mihi, quia ego in Patre, et Pater in me est. Alioquin propter opera ipsa credite (Joan. XII, 60; XIV, 50).

133. Whereby is meant no personal duty, but an indivisible sentence of co-operation. For this does not signify any actual hearing of words, but the unity of will and of power, which exists both in the Father and in the Son. He has stated that this exists also in the Holy Spirit, in another place, saying, For He shall not speak of Himself, but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak, John 16:13 so that we may learn that whatsoever the Spirit says, the Son also says; and whatsoever the Son says, the Father says also; for there is one mind and one mode of working in the Trinity. For, as the Father is seen in the Son, not indeed in bodily appearance, but in the unity of the Godhead, so also the Father speaks in the Son, not with a voice of earth, not with a human sound, but in the unity of Their work. So when He had said: The Father that dwells in Me, He speaks; and the works that I do, He does; John 14:10 He added: Believe Me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me; or else believe Me for the very work's sake. John 14:17

135. Hic intellectus est noster secundum divinarum seriem Scripturarum: Ariani autem qui nolunt de Deo aestimare quae digna sunt, vel apto suis meritis confutentur exemplo, ne totum carnaliter credant; cum ipsi patris sui diaboli opera incorporaliter videant. Sicut de eorum consortibus Judaeis Dominus declaravit dicens: Vos quod vidistis patrem vestrum facientem, facitis (Joan. VIII, 38); cum utique non quia diabolum operantem viderint, sed quia arbitria ejus fecerint, arguantur, invisibiliter in his secundum iniquitatem suam diabolo operante peccatum. Hoc secundum Apostolum (II Tim. III, 9) propter insipientiam posuimus perfidorum.

134. This is what we understand according to the whole course of the holy Scriptures; but the Arians, who will not think of God the things that be right, may be put to silence by an example just suited to their deserts; that they may not believe everything in carnal fashion, since they themselves do not see the works of their father the devil with bodily eyes. So the Lord has declared of their fellows the Jews, saying: You do what you have seen your father doing; John 8:38 though they are reproved not because they saw the work of the devil, but because they did his will, since the devil unseen works out sin in them in accordance with their own wickedness. We have written this, as the Apostle did, because of the folly of these traitors. 2 Timothy 3:9

136. Caeterum satis probatum est Scripturarum exemplis ad unitatem majestatis pertinere divinae, quod et Pater maneat in Filio; et ea quae loquitur Filius, a Patre videatur audisse. Unitatem autem majestatis quibus aliis possumus intelligere, quam quod eadem Patri et Filio deferuntur? Nam quid praecellentius potest dici, quam quod Apostolus (I Cor. II, 8) dixit Dominum majestatis crucifixum?

135. But we have sufficiently proved by examples from Scripture that it is a property of the unity of the divine majesty that the Father should abide in the Son, and that the Son should seem to have heard from the Father those things which He speaks. How else can we understand the unity of majesty than by the knowledge that the same deference is paid to the Father and the Son? For what can be better put than the Apostle's saying that the Lord of glory was crucified? 1 Corinthians 2:8

137. Filius ergo est et Deus majestatis, et Dominus majestatis; sed non creaturis subjecta majestas: non ergo creatura Filius.

136. The Son then is the God of glory and the Lord of glory, but glory is not subject to creatures; the Son therefore is not a creature.

138. Filius paternae est imago substantiae (Hebr. I, 3): omnis autem creatura dissimilis supernae substantiae, sed non dissimilis Dei Patris Filius: non ergo creatura Filius.

137. The Son is the Image of the Father's Substance; Hebrews 1:3 but every creature is unlike that divine Substance, but the Son of the Father is not unlike God; therefore the Son is not a creature.

139. Filius non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo (Phil. II, 6): sed nulla creatura aequalis Deo, aequalis autem Filius: non ergo creatura Filius.

138. The Son thought it not robbery to be equal with God; Philippians 2:6 but no creature is equal with God, the Son, however, is equal; therefore the Son is not a creature.

140. Omnis creatura mutabilis: sed non mutabilis Dei Filius: non ergo creatura Dei Filius.

139. Every creature is changeable; but the Son of God is not changeable; therefore the Son of God is not a creature.

141. Omnis creatura accidentia et boni et mali recipit suae capacitate naturae, eademque decessionem sentit: Dei autem Filio nihil 576 potest ex ejus divinitate vel decedere vel accedere: non ergo creatura Dei Filius.

140. Every creature meets with chance occurrences of good and evil after the powers of its nature, and also feels their passing away; but nothing can pass away from or bring addition to the Son of God in His Godhead; therefore the Son of God is not a creature.

142. Omne opus suum adducet Deus in judicium (Eccl. XII, 14), sed Dei Filius non adducitur in judicium; quia ipse judicat: non ergo creatura Dei Filius.

141. Every work of His God will bring into judgment; Ecclesiastes 12:14 but the Son of God is not brought into judgment; for He Himself judges; therefore the Son of God is not a creature.

143. Postremo ut unitatem intelligas, de ovibus dicens Salvator: Nullus, inquit, rapit eas de manu mea. Pater quod dedit mihi, majus omnibus est, et nemo potest rapere de manu Patris mei. Ego et Pater unum sumus (Joan. X, 29, 30).

142. Lastly, that you may understand the unity, the Saviour in speaking of His sheep says: No man is able to pluck them out of My hand. My Father Which gave them to Me is greater than all, and no man is able to pluck them out of My Father’s hand. I and My Father are one. John 10:28-30

144. Sic vivificat Filius, ut Pater: Sicut enim Pater suscitat mortuos et vivificat; sic et Filius quos vult, vivificat (Joan. V, 21). Sic suscitat Filius, ut Pater: sic conservat Filius, ut Pater. Qui non impar est gratia, quomodo impar est potestate? Sic etiam non perdit Filius, ut Pater. Et ideo ne quis vel duos deos crederet, vel discretionem potestatis induceret, unum se esse cum Patre dixit. Id quemadmodum potest dicere creatura? Non ergo creatura Dei Filius est.

143. So the Son gives life as does the Father. For as the Father raises up the dead and quickens them, even so the Son quickens whom He will. John 5:21 So the Son raises up as does the Father: so too the Son preserves as does the Father. He Who is not unequal in grace, how is He unequal in power? So also the Son does not destroy, as neither does the Father. Therefore lest any one should believe there were two Gods, or should imagine a diversity of power, He said that He was one with His Father. How can a creature say that? Therefore the Son of God is not a creature.

145. Non idem est regnare et servire: Christus autem et rex est et filius regis: non ergo servus est Dei Filius. Omnis autem creatura servit; sed non servit Dei Filius, qui ex servis filios Dei facit: non ergo creatura Dei Filius.

144. It is not the same thing to rule as to serve; but Christ is both a King and the Son of a King. The Son of God therefore is not a servant. Every creature, however, gives service. But the Son of God, Who makes servants become the sons of God, does not give service. Therefore the Son of God is not a servant.

CAPUT XII.

SUPERIORA CONFIRMAT EX parabola divitis ad quaerendum sibi regnum proficiscentis; ostenditque cum regnum tradat Patri Filius, ad contumeliam non accipiendum, si omnia huic subjicere Pater dicatur. Nos hic esse Christi regnum, et in Christi regno; futuros aliquando in regno Dei, ubi regnat ex aequo tota Trinitas.

CHAPTER 12.

He confirms what has been already said, by the parable of the rich man who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom; and shows that when the Son delivers up the kingdom to the Father, we must not regard the fact that the Father is said to put all things in subjection under Him, in a disparaging way. Here we are the kingdom of Christ, and in Christ's kingdom. Hereafter we shall be in the kingdom of God, where the Trinity will reign together.

146. Divine itaque illam parabolam induxit divitis, qui in regionem longinquam profectus est accipere regnum et reverti (Luc. XIX, 12), se ipsum secundum substantiam divinitatis incorporationisque describens. Ipse enim dives secundum plenitudinem divinitatis, qui pro nobis pauper factus est, cum dives esset et rex aeternus, et aeterno rege progenitus: peregre profectus secundum corporis susceptionem; quia vias hominis tamquam iter ingressus alienum, venit in hunc mundum, ut regnum sibi pararet ex nobis.

145. In divine fashion has He represented that parable of the rich man, who went to a far-off country to receive a kingdom, and to return, Luke 19:12 thus describing Himself in the substance of the Godhead, and of His Manhood. For He being rich in the fullness of His Godhead, Who was made poor for us though He was rich and an eternal King, and the Son of an eternal King; He, I say, went to a foreign country in taking on Him a body, for He entered upon the ways of men as though upon a strange journey, and came into this world to prepare for Himself a kingdom from among us.

147. Venit ergo Jesus in hanc terram regnum accipere de nobis, quibus ait: Regnum Dei intra vos est (Luc. XVII, 21). Hoc est regnum quod Christus accepit, hoc est, quod Patri tradidit. Nam quomodo regnum accepit, qui erat rex sempiternus? Venit ergo Filius hominis accipere regnum, et reverti. Noluerunt eum suscipere Judaei, de quibus ait: Illi qui noluerunt me regnare super se, adducite et interficite eos (Luc. XIX, 27).

146. Jesus therefore came to this earth to receive for Himself a kingdom from us, to whom He says: The kingdom of God is within you. John 17:21 This is the kingdom which Christ has received, this the kingdom which He has delivered to the Father. For how did He receive for Himself a kingdom, Who was a King eternal? The Son of Man therefore came to receive a kingdom and to return. The Jews were unwilling to acknowledge Him, of whom He says: They which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them. Luke 19:27

148. Sequamur Scripturarum ordinem. Ille qui venit, regnum Deo Patri tradet: et cum tradiderit regnum, tunc et ipse subjectus erit ei, qui sibi subjecit omnia; ut sit Deus omnia et in omnibus (I Cor. XV, 24, 28). Si ut Filius hominis regnum accepit Dei Filius; ut Filius utique hominis etiam 577 traditurus est, quod accepit: si ut Filius hominis tradit, ergo et ut Filius hominis subjectionem, utique per conditionem carnis, non per majestatem divinitatis, agnoscit.

147. Let us follow the course of the Scriptures. He Who came will deliver up the kingdom to God the Father; and when He has delivered up the kingdom, then also shall He be subject to Him, Who has put all things in subjection under Him, that God may be all in all. 1 Corinthians 15:24-28 If the Son of God has received the kingdom as Son of Man, surely as Son of Man also He will deliver up what He has received. If He delivers it up as Son of Man, as Son of Man He confesses His subjection indeed under the conditions of the flesh, and not in the majesty of His Godhead.

149. Et tu ad contumeliam objicis, quod ei subjecerit omnia Deus; cum audias quod regnum Filius hominis Deo tradat, et ut in superioribus diximus libris, legeris: Nemo venit ad me, nisi Pater attraxerit eum, et ego resuscitabo eum in novissimo die (lib. II, ca)? Si litteram sequamur, vide magis atque adverte unitatem honorificentiae: et Pater subjecit Filio, et Filius Patri tradit. Dic quid sit amplius trahere, an resuscitare? Nonne secundum morem hominum ministerium trahentis, potestas est suscitantis? Sed et Filius ad Patrem trahit, et Pater ad Filium trahit: et Filius suscitat, et Pater suscitat. Facessant sacrilegae commenta discretionis, ubi unitas potestatis est.

148. And do you make objections and contemn Him, because God has put all things in subjection under Him, when you hear that the Son of Man delivers up the kingdom to God, and hast read, as we said in our earlier books: No man can come to Me, except the Father draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day? John 6:44 If we follow it literally, see rather and notice the unity of honour each gives to other: The Father has put all things in subjection under the Son, and the Son delivers the kingdom to the Father. Say now which is the greater, to deliver up, or to raise up to life? Do we not after human fashion speak of the service of delivering up, and the power of raising to life? But both the Son delivers up to the Father, and also the Father to the Son. The Son raises to life, and the Father also raises to life. Let them create the fiction of a blasphemous division where there is a unity of power.

150. Tradat igitur Patri regnum suum Filius? Non deperit Christo regnum quod tradit, sed proficit. Nos sumus regnum, quia nobis dictum est: Regnum Dei intra vos est (Luc. XVII, 21). Et sumus regnum Christi ante, postea Patris; quia scriptum est: Nemo venit ad Patrem, nisi per me (Joan. XIV, 6). Cum in via sum, Christi sum; cum pervenero, Patris sum: sed ubique per Christum, et ubique sub Christo.

149. Let the Son then deliver up His kingdom to the Father. The kingdom which He delivers up is not lost to Christ, but grows. We are the kingdom, for it was said to us: The kingdom of God is within you. Luke 17:21 And we are the kingdom, first of Christ, then of the Father; as it is written: No man comes to the Father, but by Me. John 14:6 When I am on the way, I am Christ's; when I have passed through, I am the Father's; but everywhere through Christ, and everywhere under Him.

151. Bonum est in regno Christi esse, ut Christus nobiscum sit, sicut ipse ait: Ecce ego vobiscum sum usque ad consummationem mundi (Matth. XXVIII, 20). Sed melius est esse cum Christo: Dissolri enim et cum Christo esse multo melius (Phil. I, 23). Cum in hoc mundo sub peccato sumus, Christus nobiscum est; ut per unius obedientiam justi constituantur multi (Rom. V, 19). Et si peccatum hujus mundi evasero, incipiam esse cum Christo. Denique ait: Veniam iterum, et assumam vos ad me (Joan. XIV, 3); et infra: Volo ut ubi ego sum, et isti sint mecum (Joan. XVII, 24).

150. It is a good thing to be in the kingdom of Christ, so that Christ may be with us; as He Himself says: Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Matthew 28:20 But it is better to be with Christ: For to depart and be with Christ is far better. Philippians 1:23 Though we are under sin in this world, Christ is with us, that by the obedience of one man many may be made just. Romans 5:19 And if I escape the sin of this world, I shall begin to be with Christ. And so He says: I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; John 14:3 and further on: I will that where I am, there you may be also with Me. John 14:3

152. Ergo nunc sub regno Christi sumus, dum in corpore versamur, et nondum forma exuimur servi, quam ille cum se exinanivisset, accepit: cum vero gloriam ejus viderimus, quam habuit priusquam mundus esset, erimus in regno Dei, in quo patriarchae sunt et prophetae, de quibus scriptum est: Cum videritis Abraham, Isaac et Jacob, et omnes prophetas in regno Dei (Luc. XIII, 28); ut jam pleniore Dei cognitione potiamur.

151. Therefore we are now under Christ's rule, while we are in the body, and are not yet stripped of the form of a servant, which He put upon Him, when He emptied Himself. But when we shall see His glory, which He had before the world was, we shall be in the kingdom of God, in which are the patriarchs and prophets, of whom it is written: When you shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God; Luke 13:28 and shall thus acquire a deeper knowledge of God.

153. Sed in Filii regno et Pater regnat, et in regno Patris Filius regnat, quia Pater in Filio, et in Patre Filius: et in quo habitat Filius, habitat et Pater; et in quo habitat Pater, habitat et Filius, sicut ipse ait: Ego et Pater ad eum veniemus, et apud eum mansionem faciemus (Joan. XIV, 23). Ergo sicut una domus, ita et unum regnum. Eousque autem unum Patris et Filii regnum est, ut quod Filius tradit, Pater accipit, et quod Pater accipiat, Filius non amittat. Ergo in uno regno unitas potestatis est. Nemo igitur 578 divinitatem inter Patrem Filiumque secernat.

152. But in the kingdom of the Son the Father also reigns; and in the kingdom of the Father the Son also reigns: for the Father is in the Son, and the Son in the Father; and in whomsoever the Son dwells, in him also the Father dwells; and in whomsoever the Father dwells, in him also the Son dwells, as it is written: Both I and My Father will come to Him, and make Our abode with Him. John 14:23 Thus as there is one dwelling, so also there is one kingdom. Yea, and so far is the kingdom of the Father and of the Son but one, that the Father receives what the Son delivers, and the Son does not lose what the Father receives. Thus in the one kingdom there is a unity of power. Let no one therefore sever the Godhead between the Father and the Son.

CAPUT XIII.

QUAE CHRISTI SUBJECTIO sit, quaesiturus, ubi subjectiones varias proposuit ac rejecit, Apostolicum textum percurrit; unde impiam explodit haereticorum hac de re opinionem. Subjectionem quae futura significatur, divinitatis esse non posse; cum inter Patrem et Filium voluntatis summa semper fuerit concordia. Etiam eidem Filio secundum divinitatem vere omnia subjecta esse, at nondum subjecta hoc sensu dici, quod ejus mandatis non pareant omnes homines: qui postquam illis fuerint subditi, tum Christus in his subjicietur, et Patris opus perfectum erit.

CHAPTER 13.

With the desire to learn what subjection to Christ means after putting forward and rejecting various ideas of subjection, he runs through the Apostle's words; and so puts an end to the blasphemous opinions of the heretics on this matter. The subjection, which is shown to be future, cannot concern the Godhead, since there has always been the greatest harmony of wills between the Father and the Son. Also to that same Son in His Godhead all things have indeed been made subject; but they are said to be not yet subject to Him in this sense, because all men do not obey His commands. But after that they have been made subject, then shall Christ also be made subject in them, and the Father's work be perfected.

154. [Alias cap. VI.] Quod si Patri et Filio unum Dei nomen et jus est, cum Deus verus, et rex sempiternus sit etiam Dei Filius; non utique secundum divinitatem subjectus est Dei Filius. Subjectum itaque, Imperator auguste, quemadmodum debeamus accipere, consideremus.

153. But if the one name and right of God belong to both the Father and the Son, since the Son of God is also true God, and a King eternal, the Son of God is not made subject in His Godhead. Let us then, Emperor Augustus, think how we ought to regard His subjection.

155. Quomodo enim subjectus Dei Filius? Ut creatura vanitati? Sed impium est de divinitatis substantia tale aliquid aestimare.

154. How is the Son of God made subject? As the creature to vanity? But it is blasphemous to have any such idea of the Substance of the Godhead.

156. An quemadmodum creatura omnis Dei Filio, quia aeque scriptum est: Omnia subjecisti sub pedibus ejus (Psal. VIII, 8)? Sed non Christus sibi ipse subjectus est.

155. Or as every creature is to the Son of God, for it is rightly written: You have put all things in subjection under His feet? But Christ is not made subject to Himself.

157. An quemadmodum mulier viro, sicut legimus: Mulieres viris suis subjectae sint (Ephes. V, 22); et alibi: Mulier in silentio discat cum omni subjectione (I Tim. II, 11)? Sed sacrilegum est vel Patri virum, vel Dei Filio mulierem comparare.

156. Or as a woman to a man, as we read: Let the wives be subject to their husbands; Ephesians 5:22 and again: Let the woman learn in silence in all subjection? 1 Timothy 2:11 But it is impious to compare a man to the Father, or a woman to the Son of God.

158. An quemadmodum Petrus dixit: Subjecti estote omni humanae creaturae (I Petr. II, 13)? Nec sic utique Christus.

157. Or as Peter said: Submit yourselves to every human creature? 1 Peter 2:13 But Christ was certainly not so subject.

159. Vel quemadmodum Paulus scripsit: Deo et Patri subjecti invicem in timore Christi (Ephes. V, 21)? Sed neque in suo, neque in alterius Christi timore subjectus est Filius, quia unus est Christus. Quorum verborum vim considerate, quia Patri subjecti sumus, dum etiam Christum veremur.

158. Or as Paul wrote: Submitting yourselves mutually to God and the Father in the fear of Christ? Ephesians 5:21 But Christ was not subject either in His own fear, nor in the fear of another Christ. For Christ is but one. But note the force of these words, that we are subject to the Father, while we also fear Christ.

160. Quomodo ergo subjectum intelligimus? Totum Apostolicum caput recenseamus; ut nihil videatur fraude subtractum, aut obreptione praestrictum: Si in hac inquit, vita tantum in Christo sperantes sumus, miserabiliores sumus omnibus hominibus. Si autem Christus resurrexit a mortuis primitiae dormientium (I Cor. XV, 19, 20)? Videtis quoniam de resurrectione Christi tractata est disputatio.

159. How, then, do we understand His subjection? Shall we review the whole chapter which the Apostle wrote, so as to give no appearance of having falsely withheld anything, or of having weakened its force with intention to deceive? If in this life only, he says, we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But if Christ is risen from the dead, He is the first-fruits of them that slee Corinthians 15:19-20 You see how he discusses the question of Christ’s Resurrection.

161. Quoniam sicut per unum hominem, inquit, mors, et per hominem resurrectio mortuorum. Sicut enim in Adam omnes moriuntur, ita et in Christo omnes vivificabuntur. Unusquisque autem in suo ordine, primitiae Christus: deinde hi qui sunt Christi, qui in adventum ejus crediderunt. Deinde finis, cum tradiderit regnum Deo et Patri, cum evacuaverit omnem principatum, et potestatem et virtutem. 579 Oportet enim illum regnare, donec ponat omnes inimicos sub pedibus ejus. Novissime autem inimica destruetur mors; omnia enim subjecit sub pedibus ejus. Cum autem dicat: Omnia subjecta sunt ei, sine dubio praeter eum qui subjecit ei omnia. Cum autem subjecta illi fuerint omnia, tunc et ipse Filius subjectus erit illi, qui sibi subjecit omnia; ut sit Deus omnia in omnibus (I Cor. XV, 20-28). Quod etiam ad Hebraeos idem Apostolus dixit: Nunc autem nondum videmus omnia illi esse subjecta (Hebr. II, 8). Accepimus Apostolicae seriem lectionis.

160. For since by one man, he says, came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But each one in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's, who have believed in His coming. Then comes the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when He shall have put down all rule and authority and power. For He must reign until He has put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death; for He has put all things under His feet. But when He says, all things are put under Him, it is manifest that He is excepted Which did put all things under Him. But when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him, that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all. 1 Corinthians 15:21-28 Thus also the same Apostle said to the Hebrews: But now we see not yet all things put under Him. Hebrews 2:8 We have heard the whole of the Apostle's discourse.

162. Quomodo igitur subjectum dicimus? Sabelliani et Marcionitae dicunt quod haec futura sit Christi ad Deum Patrem subjectio, ut in Patrem Filius refundatur. Si ergo ea erit Verbi subjectio, ut resolvatur in Patrem Deus Verbum: ergo et quaecumque Patri Filioque subjecta sunt, in Patrem et Filium resolventur; ut sit Deus omnia et in omnibus creaturis. Sed absurdum est dicere: non igitur per refusionem subjectio. Alia sunt enim quae subjiciuntur, ea utique quae creata sunt: et alius, cui fit illa subjectio. Conticescant itaque saevae refusionis interpretes.

161. How, then, do we speak of His subjection? The Sabellians and Marcionites say that this subjection of Christ to God the Father will be in such wise that the Son will be re-absorbed into the Father. If, then, the subjection of the Word means that God the Word is to be absorbed into the Father; then whatsoever is made subject to the Father and the Son will be absorbed into the Father and the Son, that God may be all and in all His creatures. But it is foolish to say so. There is therefore no subjection through re-absorption. For there are other things which are made subject, those, that is to say, which are created, and there is Another, to Whom that subjection is made. Let the expounders of a cruel re-absorption keep silence.

163. Atque utinam et illi tacerent, qui quoniam resolubile Dei Verbum, Deique sapientiam probare non possunt, infirmitatem divinitati subjectionis ascribunt, dicentes quia scriptum est: Cum autem subjecta illi fuerint omnia, tunc et ipse Filius subjectus erit illi (I Cor. XV, 28).

162. Would that they too were silent, who, as they cannot prove that the Word of God and Wisdom of God can be re-absorbed, attribute the weakness of subjection to His Godhead, saying that it is written: But when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him. 1 Corinthians 15:28

164. Videmus igitur quia nondum subjectum, sed subjiciendum esse Scriptura commemorat: ergo nunc non est subjectus Deo Patri Filius. In quo igitur Filium subjectum fore dicitis? Si in divinitate; nec inobediens est, quia non est a Patre discors: nec subjectus, quia non est servus, sed unicus proprio Patri Filius. Denique cum coelum crearet, terram conderet, et potestatem exercebat et charitatem. Nulla igitur servilis in Christi divinitate subjectio. Si autem nulla subjectio, voluntas libera est.

163. We see, then, that the Scripture states that He is not yet made subject, but that this is to come: Therefore now the Son is not made subject to God the Father. In what, then, do you say that the Son will be made subject? If in His Godhead, He is not disobedient, for He is not at variance with the Father; nor is He made subject, for He is not a servant, but the only Son of His own proper Father. Lastly, when He created heaven, and formed the earth, He exercised both power and love. There is therefore no subjection as that of a servant in the Godhead of Christ. But if there is no subjection then the will is free.

165. Quod si eam subjectionem putant Filii, quia cum ejus voluntate omnia faciat Pater, discant hoc ipsum esse individuae potestatis argumentum; quia unitas voluntatis est, quae non coepit ex tempore, sed erat semper. Ubi autem unitas perpetua voluntatis, non utique temporalis subjectionis infirmitas. Si enim per naturam subjiceretur, semper subjectus maneret: cum vero subjiciendus dicatur in tempore, dispensationis ergo susceptae, non perpetuae infirmitatis erit illa subjectio; maxime cum sempiterna Dei virtus non possit statum mutare pro tempore, nec Deo Patri ex tempore jus potestatis accidere. Nam si Filius aliquando mutabitur, ut secundum divinitatem subjiciatur: ergo et Deus Pater, si 580 aliquando plus poterit, ut subjectum secundum divinitatem habeat Filium, nunc interim minus posse secundum interpretationem vestram necesse est aestimetur.

164. But if they think of this as the subjection of the Son, namely, that the Father makes all things in union with His will, let them learn that this is really a proof of inseparable power. For the unity of Their will is one that began not in time, but ever existed. But where there is a constant unity of will, there can be no weakness of temporal subjection. For if He were made subject through His nature, He would always remain in subjection; but since He is said to be made subject in time, that subjection must be part of an assumed office and not of an everlasting weakness: especially as the eternal Power of God cannot change His state for a time, neither can the right of ruling fall to the Father in time. For if the Son ever will be changed in such wise as to be made subject in His Godhead, then also must God the Father, if ever He shall gain more power, and have the Son in subjection to Himself in His Godhead, be considered now in the meantime inferior according to your explanation.

166. Quid autem culpae commeruit Filius, ut postea secundum divinitatem subjici posse credatur? Numquid secundum carnem ad dexteram Patris sedere praeripuit, et, invito Patre, sibi praerogativam Paterni solii vindicavit? Sed ipse ait: Omnia quae placita sunt ei, facio semper (Joan. VIII, 29). Ergo si in omnibus Patri complacet Filius, cur subjicietur qui ante subjectus non erat?

165. But what fault has the Son been guilty of, that we should believe that He could hereafter be made subject in His Godhead? Has he as man seized for Himself the right to sit at His Father’s side, or has He claimed for Himself the prerogative of His Father’s throne, against His Father’s will? But He Himself says: For I do always those things that please Him. John 8:29 Therefore if the Son pleases the Father in all things, why should He be made subject, Who was not made subject before?

167. Videamus itaque ne non divinitatis illa, sed nostra fiat in Christi timore subjectio, plena gratiae, et plena mysterii. Itaque rursus Apostolica verba pendamus. Cum autem subjecta, inquit, illi fuerint omnia, tunc et ipse subjectus erit ei, qui sibi subjecit omnia; ut sit Deus omnia et in omnibus. Ergo quid dicis? Nunc subjecta non sunt ei omnia? non subjecti sanctorum chori? non Angeli, qui in terris posito ministrabant (Matth. IV, 11)? non Archangeli, qui etiam ad Mariam adventus Dominici praenuntii mittebantur (Luc. I, 26)? non omnis militia coelestis? non Cherubim et Seraphim, non Throni et Dominationes et Potestates, quae venerantur et laudant?

166. Let us see then that there be not a subjection of the Godhead, but rather of us in the fear of Christ, a truth so full of grace, and so full of mystery. Wherefore, again, let us weigh the Apostle's words: But when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him: that God may be all in all. What then do you say? Are not all things now subject unto Him? Are not the choirs of the saints made subject? Are not the angels, who ministered to Him when on the earth? Matthew 4:11 Are not the archangels who were sent to Mary to foretell the coming of the Lord? Are not all the heavenly hosts? Are not the cherubim and seraphim, are not thrones and dominions and powers which worship and praise Him?

168. Quomodo ergo subjecta erunt? Sic utique quemadmodum ipse Dominus dixit: Tollite jugum meum super vos (Matth. XI, 29); non enim indomiti jugum portant, sed humiles atque mansueti. Haec est plane nec ipsis hominibus vilis, sed gloriosa subjectio; ut in nomine Jesu omne genu curvetur coelestium, et terrestrium, et infernorum: et omnis lingua confiteatur, quia Dominus Jesus in gloria est Dei Patris (Philip. II, 10, 11). Ideo autem ante subjecta non erant omnia, quia nondum receperant sapientiam Dei, nondum habile jugum Verbi mentis quadam cervice portabant. Quotquot autem, sicut scriptum est, receperunt eum, dedit eis potestatem filios Dei fieri (Joan. I, 11).

167. How, then, will they be brought into subjection? In the way that the Lord Himself has said. Take My yoke upon you. Matthew 11:29 It is not the fierce that bear the yoke, but the humble and the gentle. This clearly is no base subjection for men, but a glorious one: that in the Name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things beneath; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus is Lord in the glory of God the Father. Philippians 2:10 But for this reason all things were not made subject before, for they had not yet received the wisdom of God, not yet did they wear the easy yoke of the Word on the neck as it were of their mind. But as many as received Him, as it is written, to them gave He power to become the sons of God. John 1:12

169. Dicet aliquis: Ergo jam subjectus est Christus; quia plurimi crediderunt? Minime; quia non in paucis est Christi subjectio, sed in omnibus. Sicut enim si in me concupiscat adhuc caro adversus spiritum, spiritus autem adversus carnem, non videor esse subjectus, etsi ex parte sim subditus: ita quia omnis Ecclesia unum corpus est Christi, quamdiu genus dissentit humanum, Christum dividimus. Nondum ergo subjectus est Christus, cujus non sunt adhuc membra subjecta. Cum autem fuerimus non multa membra, sed unus spiritus: tunc et ipse subjectus erit; ut per ipsius subjectionem sit Deus omnia et in omnibus.

168. Will any one say that Christ is now made subject, because many have believed? Certainly not. For Christ’s subjection lies not in a few but in all. For just as I do not seem to be brought into subjection, if the flesh in me as yet lusts against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, Galatians 5:17 although I am in part subdued; so because the whole Church is the one body of Christ, we divide Christ as long as the human race disagrees. Therefore Christ is not yet made subject, for His members are not yet brought into subjection. But when we have become, not many members, but one spirit, then He also will become subject, in order that through His subjection God may be all and in all.

170. Sicut autem nondum subjectus est Christus, ita nondum perfectum est opus Patris; quia dixit Filius Dei: Meus cibus est ut faciam 581 voluntatem Patris mei qui me misit, et perficiam opus ejus. Quid igitur quaestionis est, quia in me erit Filii subjectio, in quo imperfectum est opus Patris; quia non sum ipse perfectus? Ergo qui imperfectum opus facio Patris, ipse Filium facio esse subjectum? Sed non est injuria ista, sed gratia; quia in eo quod subjicimur, noster utique, non divinitatis est profectus; ut subjiciamur Legi, subjiciamur gratiae. Quoniam ante, sicut ipse dixit Apostolus, sapientia carnis inimica erat in Deum; Legi enim non erat subdita (Rom. VIII, 7): nunc autem jam per Christi est subdita passionem.

169. But as Christ is not yet made subject, so is the work of God not yet perfected; for the Son of God said: My meat is to do the will of My Father that sent Me, and to finish His work. John 4:34 What manner of doubt is there that the subjection of the Son in me is still in the future, in whom the work of the Father is unfinished, because I myself am not yet perfect? I, who make the work of God to be unfinished, do I make the Son of God to be in subjection? But that is not a matter of wrong, it is a matter of grace. For in so far as we are made subject, it is to our profit, not to that of the Godhead, that we are made subject to the law, that we are made subject to grace. For formerly, as the Apostle himself has said, the wisdom of the flesh was at enmity with God, for it was not made subject to the law, Romans 8:7 but now it is made subject through the Passion of Christ.

CAPUT XIV.

PROSEQUITUR COEPTAM DIFFICULTATEM, et Christum non nisi secundum carnem subjectum docet: sed ipsum dum carne subjiceretur, praebuisse tamen signa divinitatis. Repugnare ut secundum hanc subjiciatur: humanitatem vero quam adoptavit, ita in nobis subditam esse, quo pacto in eadem ejus humanitate exaltatur et nostra. Denique quando futura sit eadem illa Christi subjectio, explicatur.

CHAPTER 14.

He continues the discussion of the difficulty he has entered upon, and teaches that Christ is not subject but only according to the flesh. Christ, however, while in subjection in the Flesh, still gave proofs of His Godhead. He combats the idea that Christ is made subject in This. The humanity indeed, which He adopted, has been so far made subject in us, as ours has been raised in that very humanity of His. Lastly, we are taught, when that same subjection of Christ will take place.

171. Et tamen ne quis calumnietur, videte quid divinitus inspirans Scriptura praecaverit; ostendit enim nobis in quo subjectus erit Deo Christus, dum docet in quo sibi universa subjecerit. Ideoque dicit: Nunc autem non videmus omnia ei subjecta (Hebr. II, 8). Nam paulo minus quam Angelos minoratum vidimus Jesum propter passionem mortis. Ostendit itaque minorem factum in carnis susceptione. Quid igitur impedit quin etiam subjectionem in carnis susceptione significet, per quam subjiciet sibi omnia, dum in ipsa Patri Deo est ipse subjectus?

170. However, lest anyone should cavil, see what care Scripture takes under divine inspiration. For it shows to us in what Christ is made subject to God, while it also teaches us in what He made the universe subject to Himself. And so it says: Now we see not yet all things put under Him. Hebrews 2:8 For we see Jesus made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. Hebrews 2:9 It shows therefore that He was made lower in taking on Him our flesh. What then hinders Him from openly showing His subjection in taking on Him our flesh, through which He subjects all things to Himself, while He Himself is made subject in it to God the Father?

172. Consideremus itaque ejus subjectionem: Pater, inquit, meus, si vis, transfer calicem hunc a me: verum non mea voluntate, sed tua fiat (Luc. XXII, 42). Ergo secundum humanae naturae assumptionem erit illa subjectio; quia sicut legimus: Specie inventus ut homo, humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Phil. II, 8): subjectio utique obedientiae est, obedientia mortis, mors assumptionis humanae; assumptionis ergo humanae erit illa subjectio. Nequaquam igitur divinitatis infirmitas, sed dispensatio ista pietatis est.

171. Let us then think of His subjection. Father, He says, if You be willing, remove this cup from Me; nevertheless not My will but Yours be done. Luke 22:42 Therefore that subjection will be according to the assumption of human nature; as we read: Being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, being made obedient unto death. Philippians 2:8 The subjection therefore is that of obedience; the obedience is that of death; the death is that of the assumed humanity; that subjection therefore will be the subjection of the assumed humanity. Thus in no wise is there a weakness in the Godhead, but there is such a discharge of pious duty as this.

173. Vide quam non timeam eorum propositiones. Illi objiciunt subjiciendum Patri Deo, ego lego Mariae subditum matri; quia scriptum est de Joseph et Maria: Et erat subditus illis (Luc. II, 51). Aut si hoc putant, dicant quia hominibus erat subjecta divinitas.

172. See how I do not fear their intentions. They allege that He must be subject to God the Father, I say He was subject to Mary His Mother. For it is written of Joseph and Mary: He was subject unto them. Luke 2:51 But if they think so, let them say how the Deity was made subject to men.

174. Non igitur praejudicet quia subjectus dicitur, cui non praejudicat, quia servus legitur, quia crucifixus asseritur, mortuus praedicatur. Qui cum moreretur, vivebat; cum subjiceretur, regnabat: cum sepeliretur, resuscitabat; ac subjectum se potestati praebebat humanae, alias se Dominum majestatis declarabat aeternae. Erat sub judice, et ad dexteram Dei solium sibi judex perpetuus vindicabat. Scriptum est denique: Amodo videbitis Filium hominis sedentem ad dexteram virtutis Dei, et venientem in nubibus coeli (Matth. XXVI, 64). Vapulabat a Judaeis, imperabat angelis: natus 582 ex Maria sub Lege erat, ante Abraham supra Legem erat (Galat. IV, 4). In cruce venerandus natura: denique sol refugit, terra contremuit, conticuerunt angeli (Matth. XXVII, 51). Cujus igitur passionem elementa videre timuerunt, hujus generationem videre potuerunt? Et in quo subjectionem corporis non tulerunt, in eo subjectionem naturae venerabilis sustinebunt?

173. Let not the fact that He is said to have been made subject work against Him, Who receives no hurt from the fact that He is called a servant, or is stated to have been crucified, or is spoken of as dead. For when He died He lived; when He was made subject He was reigning; when He was buried He revived again. He offered Himself in subjection to human power, yet at another time He declared He was the Lord of eternal glory. He was before the judge, yet claimed for Himself a throne at the right hand of God, as Judge forever. For thus it is written: Hereafter you shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of the power of God, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Matthew 26:64 He was scourged by the Jews, and commanded the angels; He was born of Mary under the law; Galatians 4:4 He was before Abraham above the law. On the cross He was revered by nature; the sun fled; the earth trembled; the angels became silent. Could the elements see the Generation of Him Whose Passion they feared to see? And will they uphold the subjection of an adorable Nature in Him, in Whom they could not endure the subjection of the body?

175. Sed cum unius naturae sint Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus, utique non erit Pater sibi ipse subjectus. Et ideo non erit in eo subjectus Filius, in quo cum Patre unum est; ne per unitatem divinitatis videatur et Pater Filio esse subjectus. Ergo sicut in illa cruce non divinitatis plenitudo, sed nostra fragilitas erat subdita: ita etiam postea subjectus erit Filius Patri, in nostrae utique participatione naturae; ut, subjectis carnis illecebris, non divitiae sint cordi, non ambitio, non voluptas: sed omnia nobis Deus sit, si per omnia quantum capere possumus, ad ejus imaginem, similitudinemque vivamus.

174. But since the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are of one Nature, the Father certainly will not be in subjection to Himself. And therefore the Son will not be in subjection in that in which He is one with the Father; lest it should seem that through the unity of the Godhead the Father also is in subjection to the Son. Therefore, as upon that cross it was not the fullness of the Godhead, but our weakness that was brought into subjection, so also will the Son hereafter become subject to the Father in the participation of our nature, in order that when the lusts of the flesh are brought into subjection the heart may have no care for riches, or ambition, or pleasures; but that God may be all to us, if we live after His image and likeness, as far as we can attain to it, through all.

176. Ad communitatem igitur beneficium transivit a specie; quia in sua carne naturam totius humanae carnis edomuit. Et ideo juxta Apostolum: Sicut portavimus imaginem hujus terreni, portemus et imaginem hujus coelestis (I Cor. XV, 49). Quod utique nisi per interiorem hominem non potest evenire. Deponentes igitur universa, hoc est, illa quae legimus; iram, animositatem, blasphemiam, turpiloquium (Coloss. III, 8); et sicut infra dictum est: Exspoliantes nos veterem hominem cum actibus suis, induamus novum, qui renovatur in agnitionem, secundum imaginem ejus, qui creavit eum (Ibid., 9, 10).

175. The benefit has passed, then, from the individual to the community; for in His flesh He has tamed the nature of all human flesh. Thus, according to the Apostle: As we have borne the image of the earthly, so also shall we bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Corinthians 15:49 This thing certainly cannot come to pass except in the inner man. Therefore, laying aside all these, that is those things which we read of: anger, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication; Colossians 3:8 as he also says below: Let us, having put off the old man with his deeds, put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created Him. Colossians 3:9-10

177. Et ut scires, quia cum dicit: Ut sit Deus omnia et in omnibus, a Deo Patre non separet et Christum, ipse ad Colossenses dicit: Ubi non masculus, inquit, et femina, Judaeus et Graecus, Barbarus et Scytha, servus et liber: sed omnia et in omnibus Christus (Coloss. III, 11). Ergo etiam ad Corinthios dicens: Ut sit Deus omnia et in omnibus (I Cor. XV, 28), et unitatem et aequalitatem cum Deo Patre complexus est Christi; quia nec a Patre Filius separatur. Et similiter sicut Pater omnia et in omnibus, ita omnia in omnibus etiam Christus operatur. Si ergo Christus quoque in omnibus omnia operatur (I Cor. XII, 6), non utique in divinitatis majestate subjectus est, sed in nobis. Quomodo autem subjectus est in nobis, nisi eo modo quo minor angelis factus est, in corporis scilicet sacramento? In eo enim nondum subjecta ei omnia videbantur, quae creatori suo a principio sui utique serviebant.

176. And that you might know that when he says: That God may be all in all, he does not separate Christ from God the Father, he also says to the Colossians: Where there is neither male nor female, Jew nor Greek, Barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all. Colossians 3:11 So also saying to the Corinthians: That God may be all and in all, he comprehended in that the unity and equality of Christ with God the Father, for the Son is not separated from the Father. And in like manner as the Father works all and in all, so also Christ works all in all. If, then, Christ also works all in all, He is not made subject in the glory of the Godhead, but in us. But how is He made subject in us, except in the way in which He was made lower than the angels, I mean in the sacrament of His body? For all things which served their Creator from their first beginning seemed not as yet to be made subject to Him in that.

178. Quod si quaesieris quemadmodum sit subjectus in nobis, ipse ostendit dicens: In carcere eram, et venistis ad me: infirmus eram, et visitastis me. Quod enim uni horum minimorum fecistis, mihi fecistis (Matth. XXV, 36 et seq.). Infirmum audis, et non moveris: subjectum audis, et moveris; cum in eo infirmus, in quo subjectus, in quo peccatum atque maledictum pro nobis factus est.

177. But if you should ask how He was made subject in us, He Himself shows us, saying: I was in prison, and you came unto Me; I was sick, and you visited Me: Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these you have done it unto Me. Matthew 25:36, 40 You hear of Him as sick and weak, and art not moved. You hear of Him in subjection, and art moved, though He is sick and weak in Him in whom He is in subjection, in whom He was made sin and a curse for us.

179. Sicut igitur non propter se, sed propter nos peccatum atque maledictum factus est: ita non pro se, sed pro nobis erit subjectus in nobis, non in natura subjectus aeterna, neque 583 in natura maledictus aeterna: Maledictus enim omnis qui pendet in ligno (Galat. III, 13). Maledictus, quia nostra maledicta suscepit: subjectus quoque, quia subjectionem nostram ipse suscepit, sed in servilis formae assumptione, non in Dei majestate; ut dum ille nostrae fragilitatis se praeberet in carne consortem, nos in virtute sua divinae faceret consortes naturae (II Petr. I, 4). Non quo aut hoc nobis cum superna Christi generatione naturale consortium, aut divinitatis in Christo sit illa subjectio: sed sicut in illo per carnem illam, quae est pignus nostrae salutis, sedere nos in coelestibus Apostolus dixit (Ephes. II, 6), utique non sedentes; sic et ille per nostrae assumptionem naturae dicitur subjectus in nobis.

178. As, then, He was made sin and a curse not on His own account but on ours, so He became subject in us not for His own sake but for ours, being not in subjection in His eternal Nature, nor accursed in His eternal Nature. For cursed is every one that hangs on a tree. Galatians 3:13 Cursed He was, for He bore our curses; in subjection, also, for He took upon Him our subjection, but in the assumption of the form of a servant, not in the glory of God; so that while he makes Himself a partaker of our weakness in the flesh, He makes us partakers of the divine Nature in His power. But neither in one nor the other have we any natural fellowship with the heavenly Generation of Christ, nor is there any subjection of the Godhead in Christ. But as the Apostle has said that on Him through that flesh which is the pledge of our salvation, we sit in heavenly places, Ephesians 2:6 though certainly not sitting ourselves, so also He is said to be subject in us through the assumption of our nature.

180. Quis enim tam demens qui putet, ut supra diximus (Ca et seq.), quod ad dexteram Dei Patris sedes sibi venerabilis debeatur; cum licet etiam secundum carnem Christo ea a Patre, generationis tamen supernae et aequalis potentiae deferatur? Angeli adorant, et tu tibi praesumptione sacrilega solium Dei sternis?

179. For who is so mad as to think, as we have said already, that a seat of honour is due to Him at the right hand of God the Father, when that is granted to Christ according to the flesh by the Father of His Generation, even a seat of a heavenly and equal power? The angels worship, and do you attempt to overthrow the throne of God with impious presumption?

181. Scriptum est, inquies, quia cum mortui essemus peccatis, convivificavit nos in Christo, cujus gratia estis salvi facti; et simul suscitavit, simulque fecit sedere in coelestibus, in Christo Jesu (Ephes. II, 5, 6). Agnosco scriptum: sed non ut homines sedere ad dexteram sibi patiatur Deus, sed ut in Christo sedere; quia ipse est omnium fundamentum, et ipse est caput Ecclesiae (Ephes. V, 23), in quo communis secundum carnem natura praerogativam sedis coelestis emeruit: in Christo enim Deo caro, in carne autem humani natura generis omnium hominum particeps honoratur.

180. It is written, you say, that when we were dead in sins, He has quickened us in Christ, by Whose grace you are saved, and has raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Ephesians 2:5-6 I acknowledge that it is so written; but it is not written that God suffers men to sit on His right hand, but only to sit there in the Person of Christ. For He is the foundation of all, and is the head of the Church, Ephesians 5:23 in Whom our common nature according to the flesh has merited the right to the heavenly throne. For the flesh is honoured as having a share in Christ Who is God, and the nature of the whole human race is honoured as having a share in the flesh.

182. Sicut nos ergo in illo sedemus per corporeae communitatem naturae, ita et ille qui per susceptionem nostrae carnis maledictum pro nobis factus est; cum maledictum utique in benedictum Filium Dei non cadat: ita, inquam, et ille per obedientiam omnium erit subjectus in nobis; cum Gentilis crediderit, cum Judaeus agnoverit, quem crucifixit; cum Manichaeus adoraverit, quem in carne venisse non credidit; cum Arianus omnipotentem confessus fuerit, quem negavit; cum postremo in omnibus fuerit sapientia Dei, justitia, pax, charitas, resurrectio. Per sua igitur opera Christus et genera diversa virtutum erit in nobis Patri subditus; cum vitiis abdicatis, et feriante delicto, unus in omnibus Deo coeperit in uno sensu populorum omnium spiritus adhaerere, tunc erit Deus omnia et in omnibus (I Cor. XV, 28).

181. As we then sit in Him by fellowship in our fleshly nature, so also He, Who through the assumption of our flesh was made a curse for us (seeing that a curse could not fall upon the blessed Son of God), so, I say, He through the obedience of all will become subject in us; when the Gentile has believed, and the Jew has acknowledged Him Whom he crucified; when the Manichæan has worshipped Him, Whom he has not believed to have come in the flesh; when the Arian has confessed Him to be Almighty, Whom he has denied; when, lastly, the wisdom of God, His justice, peace, love, resurrection, is in all. Through His own works and through the manifold forms of virtues Christ will be in us in subjection to the Father. And when, with vice renounced and crime at an end, one spirit in the heart of all peoples has begun to cleave to God in all things, then will God be all and in all. 1 Corinthians 15:28

CAPUT XV.

SUPERIUS DISPUTATA STRICTIM resumit, ex unitate divinae potestatis in Patre ac Filio quaecumque de Filii subjectione dicuntur, ad solam referenda humanitatem scite colligens: quod praeterea ex charitate, quae eadem utriusque est, confirmat.

CHAPTER 15.

He briefly takes up again the same points of dispute, and shrewdly concludes from the unity of the divine power in the Father and the Son, that whatever is said of the subjection of the Son is to be referred to His humanity alone. He further confirms this on proof of the love, which exists alike in either.

183. Conclusionem igitur totius absolutionis breviter colligamus. Unitas potestatis opinionem injuriosae subjectionis excludit: evacuatio 584 potestatum, et victoria de morte quaesita, triumphatoris utique non minuit potestatem: subjectionem operatur obedientia, obedientiam Christus assumpsit, obedientia usque ad crucem, crux ad salutem. Ergo ubi opus, ibi et auctor est operis. Cum igitur omnia Christo subjecta fuerint per obedientiam Christi, ut in nomine ejus omnes genu flectant, tunc erit ipse omnia in omnibus; nunc enim, quia non omnes credunt, non videntur omnes esse subjecti. Cum omnes ergo crediderint, et Dei fecerint voluntatem, erit omnia et in omnibus Christus: cum Christus fuerit omnia et in omnibus, erit omnia et in omnibus Deus; quia Pater manet semper in Filio. Quomodo ergo infirmitatis arguitur, qui redemit infirmos?

182. Let us then shortly sum up our conclusion on the whole matter. A unity of power puts aside all idea of a degrading subjection. His giving up of power, and His victory as conqueror won over death, have not lessened His power. Obedience works out subjection. Christ has taken obedience upon Himself, obedience even to taking on Him our flesh, the cross even to gaining our salvation. Thus where the work lies, there too is the Author of the work. When therefore, all things have become subject to Christ, through Christ's obedience, so that all bend their knees in His name, then He Himself will be all in all. For now, since all do not believe, all do not seem to be in subjection. But when all have believed and done the will of God, then Christ will be all and in all. And when Christ is all and in all, then will God be all and in all; for the Father abides ever in the Son. How, then, is He shown to be weak, Who redeemed the weak?

184. Ac ne forte et illud ad infirmitatem Filii referas, quod scriptum est quia subjecit ei Deus omnia; disce quod omnia sibi etiam ipse subjecerit; scriptum est enim: Nostra autem conversatio in coelis est; unde et Salvatorem exspectamus Dominum Jesum, qui transfigurabit corpus humilitatis nostrae, conforme ut fiat corpori gloriae suae secundum operationem, quo possit etiam subjicere sibi omnia (Phil. III, 20, 21). Didicisti ergo quod omnia possit sibi ipse subjicere, secundum operationem utique divinitatis.

183. And lest you should by chance attribute to the weakness of the Son, that it is written, that God has put all things in subjection under Him; learn that He has Himself brought all things into subjection to Himself, for it is written: Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus, Who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like His glorious body according to the working, whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself. Philippians 3:20-21 You have learned, therefore, that He can subdue all things unto Himself according to the working of His Godhead.

185. Disce nunc quoniam secundum carnem omnia subjecta accipiat, sicut scriptum est: Qui operatus est in Christo, suscitans eum a mortuis, et constituens eum ad dexteram suam in coelestibus, supra omnem principatum, et potestatem, et virtutem, et dominationem, et omne nomen quod nominatur non solum in hoc saeculo, sed etiam in futuro; et omnia subjecit sub pedibus ejus (Ephes. V, 20, 21). Secundum carnem igitur ei omnia subjecta tradentur, secundum quam et a mortuis suscitatus est, et secundum animam humanam ac rationabilem subjectionem.

184. Learn now how He receives all things in subjection according to the flesh, as it is written: Who wrought in Christ, raising Him from the dead, and setting Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places, above principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; and has put all things under His feet. Ephesians 1:20-21 According to the flesh then all things are given to Him in subjection; according to which also He was raised from the dead, both in His human soul and His rational subjection.

186. Divine plerique interpretantur quod scriptum est: Nonne Deo subjecta erit anima mea (Psal. LXI, 1)? animam dixit, non divinitatem; animam, non majestatem. Et ut sciremus quod Dominus per Prophetam de susceptione naturae est locutus humanae, addidit: Usquequo adjicietis super hominem (Ibid., 3)? secundum illud quod ait in Evangelio: Quid me quaeritis interficere hominem (Joan. VIII, 40)? Et addidit: Verumtamen pretium meum voluerunt repellere, cucurrerunt in siti, ore suo benedicebant, et corde suo maledicebant (Ps. LXI, 4). Judaei enim, reportante Juda pretium, recipere noluerunt (Matth. XXVII, 6), currentes in siti amentiae; quia spiritalis potus gratiam recusarunt.

185. Many nobly interpret that which is written: Truly my soul will be in subjection to God; He said soul not Godhead, soul not glory. And that we might know that the Lord has spoken through the prophet of the adoption of our human nature, He added: How long will you cast yourselves upon a man? As also He says in the Gospel: Why do you seek to kill Me, a man? John 8:40 And He added again: Nevertheless they desired to refuse My price, they ran in thirst, they blessed with their mouth, and cursed with their heart. For the Jews, when Judas brought back the price, Matthew 27:4 would not receive it, running on in the thirst of madness, for they refused the grace of a spiritual draught.

187. Haec est pia subjectionis interpretatio. Etenim cum Dominicae passionis hoc munus sit, utique in quo passus est, in hoc erit subjectus in nobis. Quaerimus qua causa? Ut neque angeli, neque virtutes, neque altitudo, neque profundum, neque praesentia, neque futura, neque creatura alia separare nos possit a charitate Dei, quae est in Christo Jesu (Rom. VIII, 38, 39). Videmus itaque ex his quae diximus, nullam exceptam esse creaturam: sed istis, quas supra dixit, omnem, si qua est, annumeratam esse. 585

186. This is the reverent interpretation of subjection, for since this is the office of the Lord’s Passion, He will be subject in us in that in which He suffered. Do we ask wherefore? That neither angels, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor things present, nor things to come, nor any other creature may separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus. Romans 8:38-39 We see then, from what has been said, that no creature is excepted; but that every one, of whatever kind it may be, is enumerated among those he mentioned above.

188. Simul etiam illud est considerandum, quod cum in superioribus dixerit: Quis nos separabit a charitate Christi? subter posuit: Neque mors, neque vita, nec alia creatura separare nos poterit a charitate Dei, quae est in Christo Jesu (Ibid., 35). Videmus ergo eamdem charitatem Dei esse, quae Christi est. Denique non otiose posuit charitatem Dei, quae est in Christo Jesu; ne separatam Dei et Christi intelligeres charitatem. Nihil autem est quod charitas dividat, nihil quod divinitas sempiterna non possit, nihil quod lateat veritatem, fallat justitiam, praetereat sapientiam.

187. At the same time, we must also think of the words which, after first saying Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Romans 8:35 he wrote next: Neither death, nor life, nor any other creature can separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus. We see, then, that the love of God is the same as the love of Christ. Thus it was not without reason that he wrote of the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, lest otherwise you might imagine that the love of God and of Christ was divided. But there is nothing that love divides, nothing that the eternal Godhead cannot do, nothing that is unknown to the Truth, or deceives Justice, or escapes the notice of Wisdom.

CAPUT XVI.

ARIANOS A SPIRITU sancto per David condemnatos, quippe qui scientiae Christi derogare audeant. Locum ab illis ad hoc citatum suspicione corruptionis minime carere; sed ut maxime careat, distinguendam esse vocem Filius; Christo enim ut Dei Filio scientiam deesse non posse, cum sit sapientia: nec partis ullius cognitionem, cum omnia crearit. Eum qui saecula fecerit, futurum non posse non cognoscere, et multo minus diem judicii. Sive quid magnum sit ea cognitio, sive quid parvum, eam Filio non negandam; immo neque etiam Spiritui sancto. Demum his addit varia signa, quibus haec scientia inesse Christo colligi potest.

CHAPTER 16.

The Arians are condemned by the Holy Spirit through the mouth of David: for they dare to limit Christ's knowledge. The passage cited by them in proof of this is by no means free from suspicion of having been corrupted. But to set this right, we must mark the word Son. For knowledge cannot fail Christ as Son of God, since He is Wisdom; nor the recognition of any part, for He created all things. It is not possible that He, who made the ages, cannot know the future, much less the day of judgment. Such knowledge, whether it concerns anything great or small, may not be denied to the Son, nor yet to the Holy Spirit. Lastly, various proofs are given from which we can gather that this knowledge exists in Christ.

189. [Alias cap. VII.] Unde exsecrabiles eos qui ista commemorant, et a Spiritu sancto esse damnatos scire debemus. Quos enim alios, nisi specialiter Arianos Propheta condemnat, qui dicunt quod Dei Filius nesciat tempora et annos? Non enim est aliquid quod ignoret Deus: est autem Deus Christus, et altissimus Christus; ipse est enim super omnia Deus.

188. Wherefore we ought to know that they who make such statements are accursed and condemned by the Holy Spirit. For whom else but the Arians in chief does the prophet condemn, seeing that they say that the Son of God knows neither times nor years. For there is nothing which God is ignorant of; and Christ, yea the most high Christ, is God, for He is God over all. Romans 9:5

190. Videte quemadmodum sanctus David hujuscemodi homines qui Dei Filio scientiam derogent, perhorrescat; sic enim habes: In laboribus hominum non sunt, et cum hominibus non flagellabuntur; ideo obtinuit eos superbia eorum; cooperti sunt iniquitate et impietate sua: prodiit quasi ex adipe iniquitas eorum, pertransierunt in dispositionem cordis (Psal. LXXII, 5 et seq.). Utique eos condemnat qui ex dispositione cordis aestimanda quae divina sunt, arbitrantur: nam Deus nec dispositioni est subjectus, nec ordini; quando etiam ipsa quae sunt in usu hominum, et successione generis humani, non semper aliqua solemnis dispositione rationis, sed plerumque secretis latentibusque decursa mysteriis, evenire cernamus.

189. See how horrified holy David is at such men, in limiting the knowledge of the Son of God. For thus it is written: They are not in the troubles of other men, neither will they be scourged with men; therefore their pride has laid hold on them; they are covered with their wickedness and blasphemy; their iniquity has stood forth as it were with fatness; they have passed on to the thoughts of their heart. Truly he condemns those who think that divine things are to be regarded in the light of the thoughts of the heart. For God is not subject to arrangement or order; seeing that we do not perceive even those very things, which are common among men and often occur in the history of the human race, to turn out always after the arrangement of some stated rule, but often to happen suddenly in some secret and mysterious manner.

191. Cogitaverunt, inquit, et locuti sunt nequitiam, iniquitatem in Excelsum locuti sunt, posuerunt in coelum os suum (Ibid., 8). Videmus itaque quod impii sacrilegii reos damnet, qui ex similitudine 586 humanae naturae, dispositionem sibi arrogent coelestis arcani.

190. They have thought, he says, and have spoken wickedness. They have spoken wickedness against the Most High. They have set their mouth against heaven. We see then that he condemns, as guilty of wicked blasphemy, those who claim for themselves the right to arrange the heavenly secrets after the semblance of our human nature.

192. Et dixerunt: Quomodo scivit Deus? et si est scientia omnis in Altissimo (Ibid., 11)? Nonne haec quotidie perstrepunt Ariani, scientiam omnem in Christo esse non posse? Quia ipse, inquiunt, diei et horae se professus est esse ignarum. Nonne dicunt: Quomodo scivit, qui eum non potuisse scire commemorant, nisi quae audierit, et viderit: et ea quae spectant ad divinae unitatem naturae ad infirmitatem sacrilega interpretatione derivant?

191. And they have said: How has God known? And is there knowledge in the Most High? Do not the Arians echo this daily, saying that all knowledge cannot exist in Christ? For He, they say, stated that He knew not the day nor hour. Do they not say, how did He know, while they maintain that He could not know anything but what He heard and saw, and apply by a blasphemous interpretation that which concerns the unity of the divine Nature to weaken His power?

193. Scriptum est, inquiunt: De die autem illo et hora nemo scit, neque angeli coelorum, nec Filius, nisi solus Pater (Marc. XIII, 32). Primum veteres non habent codices Graeci quia nec Filius scit: sed non mirum si et hoc falsarunt, qui Scripturas interpolavere divinas. Qua ratione autem videatur adjectum, proditur, dum ad interpretationem tanti sacrilegii derivatur.

192. It is written, they say: But of that day and that hour knows no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only. Mark 13:32 First of all the ancient Greek manuscripts do not contain the words, neither the Son. But it is not to be wondered at if they who have corrupted the sacred Scriptures, have also falsified this passage. The reason for which it seems to have been inserted is perfectly plain, so long as it is applied to unfold such blasphemy.

194. Pone tamen ab evangelistis scriptum. Medium utique nomen est Filii: nam et Filius hominis dicitur; ut secundum imprudentiam assumptionis nostrae diem futuri judicii nescisse videatur. Quomodo enim nesciret diem Dei Filius, cum in ipso sint thesauri sapientiae et scientiae Dei absconditi (Coloss. II, 3) ?

193. Suppose however that the Evangelist wrote thus. The name of Son embraces both natures. For He is also called Son of Man, so that in the ignorance attached to the assumption of our nature, He seems not to have known the day of the judgment to come. For how could the Son of God be ignorant of the day, seeing that the treasures of the wisdom and knowledge of God are hidden in Him? Colossians 2:3

195. Quaero autem utrum ex substantia, an ex accidenti habuerit scientiam; omnis enim scientia aut ex natura, aut ex disciplina est: ex natura suppetit, ut equo currere, pisci natare; haec enim faciunt antequam discant: ex disciplina rursus suppetit natare homini; nam nisi didicerit, scire non poterit. Cum ergo mutis animantibus suppetat ex natura facere et scire quae non didicerint, quid censes de Dei Filio, utrum ex institutione, an ex natura habeat scientiam? Si ex institutione: ergo non est natus sapientia, et ex processu coepit esse perfectus, nec erat semper. Quod si naturalem scientiam habet, utique perfectus in principio erat, perfectus ex Patre processit; et ideo praescientia non eguit futurorum.

194. I ask then, whether He had this knowledge by reason of His Being, or by chance? For all knowledge comes to us either through nature, or by learning. It is supplied by nature, as for instance to a horse to enable it to run, or to a fish to enable it to swim. For they do this without learning. On the other hand, it is by learning that a man is enabled to swim. For he could not do so unless he had learned. Since therefore nature enables dumb animals to do and to know what they have not learned, why should you give an opinion on the Son of God, and say whether He has knowledge by instruction or by nature? If by instruction, then He was not begotten as Wisdom, and gradually began to be perfect, but was not always so. But if He has knowledge by nature, then He was perfect in the beginning, He came forth perfect from the Father; and so needed no foreknowledge of the future.

196. Non ergo nescivit diem; neque enim sapientiae Dei est ex parte scire, et ex parte nescire. Nam quomodo potest nescire partem, qui fecit omnia; cum minus sit scire, quam facere? Multa enim scimus, quae facere non possumus: nec eodem modo omnes scimus, sed ex parte cognoscimus. Novit enim ventorum vim, stellarumque cursus aliter rusticus, aliter civitatis incola, aliter gubernator. Etsi non omnes norunt omnia, tamen nosse dicuntur: solus autem plene novit ille, qui fecit omnia. Novit gubernator quota vigilia procedat Arcturus, 587 quales ortus exploret Orionis; non tamen colligationes Vergiliarum, caeterarumque stellarum aut numerum novit, aut nomina, sicut ille, Qui numerat multitudinem stellarum, et omnibus his nomina vocat (Ps. CXLVI, 4): quem utique non fallit operis sui virtus.

195. He therefore was not ignorant of the days; for it does not fall to the lot of the Wisdom of God to know in part and in part to be ignorant. For how can He who made all things be ignorant of a part, since it is a less thing to know than to make. For we know many things which we cannot make, neither do we all know things in the same way but we know them in part. For a countryman knows the force of the wind and the courses of the stars in one way — the inhabitant of a city knows them in another way — and a pilot in yet a third way. But although all do not know all things, they are said to know them; but He alone knows all things in full, Who made all things. The pilot knows for how many watches Arcturus continues, what sort of a rising of Orion he will discover, but he knows nothing of the connection of the Vergiliæ and of the other stars, or of their number or names, as does He Who numbers the multitude of stars, and calls them all by their names; Whom indeed the power of His work cannot escape.

197. Quomodo enim vultis haec fecisse Dei Filium? Numquid quasi annulum, qui non sentit quod exprimit? Sed omnia in sapientia Pater fecit (Psal. CIII, 24), id est, omnia per Filium fecit, qui est virtus Dei et sapientia (I Cor. I, 24): sapientiae autem id convenit, ut suorum operum et virtutes norit et causas. Et ideo non potuit creator omnium ignorare quod fecit, nescire quod ipse donavit: novit ergo diem quem fecit.

196. How then do you wish the Son of God to have made these things? Like a signet ring which does not feel the impression it makes? But the Father made all things in wisdom, that is, He made all things through the Son, who is the Virtue and Wisdom of God. 1 Corinthians 1:24 But it befits such Wisdom as that to know both the powers and the causes of His own works. Thus the Creator of all things could not be ignorant of what He did — or be without knowledge of what He had Himself given. Therefore He knew the day which He made.

198. Sed dicis, quia praesentem novit, nescit futurum. Licet inepta sit propositio, tamen ut de Scripturis satisfaciam tibi, disce quia non solum praeterita fecit, sed etiam quae futura sunt, sicut scriptum est: Qui fecit quae adventura sunt (Esai. XLV, 11). Et alibi ait Scriptura: Per quem et facta sunt saecula, splendor est gloriae, et character substantiae ejus (Hebr. I, 2, 3). Saecula enim et praeterita et praesentia et futura sunt. Quomodo ergo facta sunt quae futura sunt; nisi quia operatoria virtus et scientia comprehendit numerum omnium saeculorum? Sicut enim vocat quae non sunt, tamquam quae sunt (Rom. IV, 17): sic et fecit quae futura sunt, tamquam quae sint; quia non contingit ut non sint, sed necessario sunt futura, quae esse praecepit. Ergo qui fecit quae futura sunt, eo genere quo sunt futura cognovit.

197. But you say that He knows the present and does not know the future. Though this is a foolish suggestion, yet that I may satisfy you on Scriptural grounds, learn that He made not only what is past, but also what is future, as it is written: Who made things to come. Isaiah 45:11 Elsewhere too Scripture says: By whom also He made the ages, who is the brightness of His glory and the express Image of His Person. Hebrews 1:2-3 Now the ages are past and present and future. How then were those made which are future, unless it is that His active power and knowledge contains within itself the number of all the ages? For just as He calls the things that are not as though they were, Romans 4:17 so has He made things future as though they were. It cannot come to pass that they should not be. Those things which He has directed to be, necessarily will be. Therefore He who has made the things that are to be, knows them in the way in which they will be.

199. Si hoc de saeculis, multo magis de judicii credendum est die; eo quod cognitionem ejus habeat Dei Filius tamquam a se jam factae; quia scriptum est: Dispositione tua permanebit dies (Psal. CXVIII, 91). Nec solum permanet dixit, sed etiam permanebit; ut ejus dispositione quae ventura sunt, gubernentur. Quae disposuit ergo, non novit? Qui plantavit aurem, non audiet? qui finxit oculum, non considerat (Psal. XCIII, 9)?

198. If we are to believe this about the ages, much more must we believe it about the day of judgment, on the ground that the Son of God has knowledge of it, as being already made by Him. For it is written: According to Your ordinance the day will continue. He did not merely say the day continues, but even will continue, so that the things which are to come might be governed by His ordinance. Does He not know what He ordered? He who planted the ear, shall He not hear? He that formed the eye shall He not see?

200. Videamus tamen ne quid forte magnum sit, quod creatorem suum potuerit praeterire; et tamen eligant utrum quasi magnum aliquid et praestantius putent esse quam caetera: an quasi minimum atque abjectum? Si minimum atque abjectum, non est injuria, ut nostro usu loquar, vilia et exigua nescire; nam cum potentiae sit scire quae maxima sunt, despexisse magis videtur degeneris operis vilitatem. Fastidio igitur absolutus est, non potestate fraudatus.

199. Let us however see if by chance there may be some great thing, which could be beyond the knowledge of its Creator; or at least let them choose whether they will think of something great and superior to other things, or something very little and mean. If it is very little and mean, it is no loss, to speak after our fashion, to know nothing of worthless and petty things. For as it is a sign of power to know the greatest things, it seems rather to be a sign of inferior work to look upon what is worth less. Thus He is freed from fastidiousness, yet is not deprived of His power.

201. Quod si magnum et summum arbitrantur scire judicii diem, dicant quid Deo Patre majus aut melius sit. Patrem igitur Deum novit, ut ipse ait: Nemo novit Patrem nisi Filius, et cui voluerit Filius revelare (Matth. XI, 27). Patrem, inquam, novit et diem nescit? Sic ergo creditis 588 quia Patrem revelat, et diem non potest revelare?

200. But if they think it a great and important thing to know the day of judgment: Let them say what is greater or better than God the Father. He knows God the Father, as He Himself says: No man knows the Father but the Son and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him. Matthew 11:27 I say, does He know the Father and yet not know the day? So then you believe that He reveals the Father, and yet cannot reveal the day?

202. Deinde quia gradus quosdam facitis; ut Patrem Filio, Filium Spiritui praeferatis; dicite mihi utrum Spiritus sanctus noverit judicii diem; nihil enim de eo scriptum est hoc loco. Negatis profecto. Quid si doceo quod noverit? Lectum est enim: Nobis autem revelavit Deus per Spiritum suum; Spiritus enim omnia scrutatur, etiam alta Dei (I Cor. II, 10). Utique quia alta Dei scrutatur, cum Deus noverit judicii diem, etiam Spiritus novit. Novit enim omnia quae Deus novit, sicut Apostolus declarat dicens: Quis enim scit hominum quae sunt hominis, nisi spiritus hominis qui in ipso est? Sic et quae Dei sunt, nemo cognovit, nisi Spiritus Dei (Ibid., 11). Videte igitur, ne aut negando Spiritum sanctum scire, negetis et Patrem scire; quia quae Dei sunt, cognovit et Dei Spiritus: quae autem non cognovit Spiritus Dei, utique Dei non sunt: aut confitendo quia Spiritus Dei novit, quod negatis Filium scire, contra vestram assertionem Spiritum Filio praeferatis. Verum non solum sacrilega ista, sed etiam inepta dubitatio.

201. Next because you make certain grades, so as to put the Father before the Son, and the Son before the Holy Spirit, tell me whether the Holy Spirit knew the day of judgment. For no thing is written of Him in this place. You deny it entirely. But what if I show you He knew it? For it is written: But God has revealed them to us by His Spirit, for the Spirit searches all things, yea the deep things of God. 1 Corinthians 2:10 Wherefore, because He searches the deep things of God, since God knows the day of judgment, the Spirit also knows it. For He knows all that God knows, as also the Apostle states, saying: For what man knows the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him, even so the things of God knows no man, but the Spirit of God. 1 Corinthians 2:11 Take heed therefore lest either by denying that the Holy Spirit knows, you should deny that the Father knows; (For the things of God, the Spirit of God also knows, but the things which the Spirit of God does not know, are not the things of God). Or by confessing that the Spirit of God knows, what you deny that the Son of God knows, you should put the Spirit before the Son in opposition to your own declaration. But to hesitate on this point is not only blasphemous but also foolish.

203. Nunc consideremus quibus modis scientia colligatur, et ostendamus ipsum Filium demonstrasse quod et diem sciret. Quod enim scimus, aut tempore, aut loco, aut signis, aut personis declaramus, aut ordine. Quomodo igitur nescivit judicii diem, qui et horam judicii, et locum, et signa expressit et causas.

202. Now consider how knowledge is acquired, and let us show that the Son Himself proved that He knew the day. For what we know we make clear either by mention of time or place or signs or persons, or by giving their order. How then did He not know the day of judgment Who described both the hour and the place of judgment, and the signs and the cases?

204. Denique sic habes: In illa hora qui fuerit in tecto, non descendat tollere vasa de domo sua; et qui in agro, similiter non redeat retro (Luc. XVII, 31). Eousque igitur futurorum norat periculorum eventus, ut etiam praesidia periclitantibus demonstraret.

203. And so you have it: In that hour he which shall be on the housetop let him not come down to take his goods out of his house, and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back. Luke 17:31 To such a point in the future did He know the issues of dangers, that He even showed the means of safety to those in danger.

205. An poterat Dominus diem ignorare, qui ipse de se dixit quia Filius hominis Dominus est sabbati (Matth. XII, 8) ?

204. Could the Lord be ignorant of a day Who Himself said of Himself that the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath? Matthew 12:8

206. Locum quoque etiam alibi designavit, cum sibi structuras templi ostendentibus discipulis, diceret: Videtis haec omnia? Amen dico vobis, non relinquetur lapis super lapidem, qui non destruatur (Matth. XXIV, 2).

205. He has also elsewhere marked out a place, when He said to His disciples who were showing Him the building of the temple, Do you see all these things? Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left one stone upon another which shall not be thrown down. Matthew 24:2

207. De signo quoque interrogatus ab Apostolis respondit: Videte ne seducamini. Multi enim venient in nomine meo, dicentes quia ego sum Christus (Luc. XXI, 8); et infra: Terrae motus, inquit, magni erunt per loca singula, et fames, et pestilentia, terroresque de coelo, et signa magna erunt (Ibid., 11). Itaque et personas expressit et signa.

206. When questioned also about a sign by His disciples, He answered: Take heed that you be not deceived. For many shall come in My name, saying I am Christ; Luke 21:8 and further on He says: and great earthquakes shall be in various places, and famines, and pestilences, and terrors from heaven, and there shall be great signs. Luke 21:11 Thus He has described both persons and signs.

208. Quo autem modo, vel circumdaturos exercitus Jerusalem dicat, vel implenda tempora gentium, et quo ordine, Evangelicae utique lectionis attestatione reseratur. Scivit ergo omnia.

207. In what manner He tells that the armies will surround Jerusalem, or that the times of the Gentiles are to be fulfilled, and in what order — all this is disclosed to us by the witness of the Gospel words. Therefore He knew all things.

CAPUT XVII.

QUOD CHRISTUS DIEM judicii revelare noluerit, in hoc nostrae utilitati consultum esse. Illud alia Domini sententia declaratur; nec non et Pauli loco plane simili. Urgentibus vero cur ita responderit discipulis ac si nescisset, alii loci quibus Patri eadem tribui videtur ignoratio, opponuntur: ex quibus si ignorantiam impotentiamve in Patre illi admittant, hinc in Filio eamdem quae in Patre substantiam admittendam esse contra ipsos arguit Ambrosius; nisi tamen malint mendacii accusare Filium; cum neque in hunc neque in Patrem cadat fallere, sed memoratis locis utriusque unitas designetur.

CHAPTER 17.

Christ acted for our advantage in being unwilling to reveal the day of judgment. This is made plain by other words of our Lord and by a not dissimilar passage from Paul's writings. Other passages in which the same ignorance seems to be attributed to the Father are brought forward to meet those who are anxious to know why Christ answered His disciples, as though He did not know. From these Ambrose argues against them that if they admit ignorance and inability in the Father, they must admit that the same Substance exists in the Son as in the Father; unless they prefer to accuse the Son of falsehood; since it belongs neither to Him nor to the Father to deceive, but the unity of both is pointed out in the passage named.

209. Sed quaerimus qua ratione designare momenta noluerit (Luc. XIX, 43). Si quaeramus, non ignorantiae inveniemus esse, sed sapientiae. Nobis enim scire non proderat; ut dum certa futuri judicii momenta nescimus, semper tamquam in excubiis constituti, et in quadam virtutis specula collocati, peccandi consuetudinem declinemus; ne nos inter vitia dies Domini deprehendat. Non enim prodest scire, sed metuere quod futurum est; scriptum est enim: Noli alta sapere, sed time (Rom. XI, 20).

208. But we ask for what reason He was unwilling to state the time. If we ask it, we shall not find it is owing to ignorance, but to wisdom. For it was not to our advantage to know; in order that we being ignorant of the actual moments of judgment to come, might ever be as it were on guard, and set on the watchtower of virtue, and so avoid the habits of sin; lest the day of the Lord should come upon us in the midst of our wickedness. For it is not to our advantage to know but rather to fear the future; for it is written: Be not high-minded but fear. Romans 11:20

216. Nam si diem designasset expresse, uni aetati hominum quae proxima erat judicio, videretur disciplinam praescripsisse vivendi; superioris temporis aut justus esset remissior, aut peccator securior. Namque adulter nisi quotidianam poenam metuat, non potest ab adulterandi cupiditate desinere: nec latro obsessorum saltuum secreta deserere, nisi sciat sibi momentis omnibus imminere supplicium. Plerumque enim quibus incentivum est impunitas, timor taedio est.

209. For if He had distinctly stated the day, he would seem to have laid down a rule of life for that one age which was nearest to the judgment, and the just man in the earlier times would be more negligent, and the sinner more free from care. For the adulterer cannot cease from the desire of committing adultery unless he fears punishment day by day, nor can the robber forsake the hiding places in the woods where he dwells, unless he knows punishment is hanging over him day by day. For impurity generally spurs them on, but fear is irksome to the end.

211. Ideo ergo dixi quia scire non proderat, immo proderat ignorare; ut ignorantes timeremus, ut observantes emendaremur, sicut ipse dixit: Estote parati, quia nescitis qua hora Filius hominis venturus est (Matth. XXIV, 44). Namque miles nisi bellum in manibus esse cognoscat, praetendere non novit in castris.

210. Therefore I have said that it was not to our advantage to know; nay, it is to our advantage to be ignorant, that through ignorance we might fear, through watchfulness be corrected, as He Himself said: Be ready, for you know not at what hour the Son of Man comes. Matthew 24:44 For the soldier does not know how to watch in the camp unless he knows that war is at hand.

212. Unde alibi quoque ipse Dominus interrogatus ab apostolis, inquam, qui utique non sicut Arius intelligebant, sed Filium Dei futura scire credebant; nam nisi hoc credidissent, numquam interrogassent: interrogatus ergo quando restitueret regnum Israel, non se nescire dixit, sed ait: Non est vestrum scire tempora et annos, quae Pater posuit in sua potestate (Act. I, 7). Attende quid dixerit: Non est vestrum scire. Lege iterum: Non est vestrum. Vestrum dixit, non meum; jam enim non secundum perfectionem, sed secundum profectum humani corporis ac nostrae animae loquebatur. Vestrum ergo dixit, non meum.

211. Wherefore at another time also the Lord Himself when asked by his Apostles (Yes, for they did not understand it as Arius did, but believed that the Son of God knew the future. For unless they had believed this, they would never have asked the question.) — the Lord, I say, when asked when He would restore the kingdom to Israel, did not say that He did not know, but says: It is not for you to know the times or years, which the Father has put in His own power. Acts 1:7 Mark what He said: It is not for you to know! Read again, It is not for you. For you, He said, not for Me, for now

He spoke not according to His own perfection but as was profitable to the human body and our soul. For you therefore He said, not for Me.

213. Quod et Apostolus secutus: De temporibus autem et momentis, fratres, non habetis, inquit, opus ut vobis scribamus (I Thess. V, 1). Itaque ne Apostolus quidem ipse Christi servus dixit se nescire momenta, sed non opus esse doceri populum 590 qui semper spiritalibus munimentis esse debet armatus; ut virtus Christi in unoquoque praetendat. Cum autem dicit Dominus: De temporibus quae Pater posuit in sua potestate, utique non potest exsors esse scientiae paternae, cujus nequaquam exsors est potestatis; cum potestas ex sapientia et virtute gignatur, quod utrumque Christus est.

212. Which example the Apostle also followed: But of the times and seasons, brethren, he says, you have no need that I write unto you. 1 Thessalonians 5:1 Thus not even the Apostle himself, the servant of Christ, said that he knew not the seasons, but that there was no need for the people to be taught; for they ought ever to be armed with spiritual armour, that the virtue of Christ may stand forth in each one. But when the Lord says: Of the times which the Father has put in His own power, Acts 1:7 He certainly cannot be without a share in His Father’s knowledge, in whose power He is by no means without a share. For power grows out of wisdom and virtue; and Christ is both of these.

214. Sed quaeritis qua causa non ita discipulis negaverit, quasi sciret et nollet dicere: sed neque Angelos, neque Filium scire memoraverit (Marc. XIII, 32)? Interrogabo vos et ego, qua causa in Genesi Deus dicat: Descendam itaque, ut videam secundum clamorem illorum venientem ad me, si consummabuntur: sin autem, ut sciam (Gen. XVIII, 21)? Qua causa etiam Scriptura de Domino dicat: Et descendit Dominus videre civitatem et turrim, quam aedificarent filii hominum (Gen. XI, 5)? Qua causa etiam dicat Propheta in Psalterio: Dominus respexit super filios hominum, si est intelligens, aut requirens Deum (Psal. LII, 3); quasi et illic si non descenderet Deus, et hic si non prospiceret Dominus, aut opera hominum ignoraret aut merita?

213. But you ask, why did He not refuse His disciples as one who knew, but would not say; and, why did He state instead that neither the angels nor the Son knew? Mark 13:32 I too will ask you why God says in Genesis: I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry that has come unto Me. And if not, that I may know. Genesis 18:21 Why does Scripture also say of God: And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower, which the sons of men built. Genesis 11:5 Why also does the prophet say in the Book of the Psalms: The Lord looked down upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and that did seek God? Just as though in one place, if God had not descended, and in the other, if He had not looked down, He would have been ignorant either of men's work or of their merits.

215. Sed etiam in Evangelio habes secundum Lucam, quia Pater dicit: Quid faciam? Mittam Filium meum dilectissimum, forsitan hunc verebuntur (Luc. XX, 13). Secundum Matthaeum, autem, et secundum Marcum habes: Quoniam misit unicum Filium suum, dicens: Verebuntur Filium meum (Matt. XXI, 37; Marc. XII, 6). In uno libro dicit: Forsitan verebuntur, et quasi nesciens dubitat; nam hic sermo dubitantis est: in duobus autem aliis libris: Verebuntur, inquit, Filium meum; hoc est, confirmat reverentiam deferendam.

214. But in the Gospel of Luke also you have the same, for the Father says: What shall I do? I will send My beloved Son; it may be that they will reverence Him. Luke 20:13 In Matthew and in Mark you have: But He sent His only Son, saying: they will reverence My Son; Matthew 21:37 In one book He says: It may be that they will reverence My Son; Mark 12:6 and is in doubt as though He does not know; for this is the language of one in doubt. But in the two other books He says: They will reverence My Son; that is, He declares that reverence will be shown.

216. Sed neque dubitare Dei est, neque falli; dubitat enim, qui ignorat quod futurum est: fallitur autem, qui aliud praedixit, et aliud est secutum. Quid autem evidentius, quam quod Scriptura habet aliud Patrem dixisse de Filio, et aliud accidisse eadem Scriptura testatur? Ille dixit: Verebuntur Filium meum: Filius autem vapulavit, illusus est, crucifixus est, mortuus est (Matth. XXVII, 29 et seq.); multoque illis servis qui prius fuerant destinati, graviora secundum carnem passus est. Fefellit igitur Pater, an ignoravit, vel subvenire non potuit? Sed verus nescit fallere; scriptum est enim: Fidelis Deus qui non mentitur (Tit. I, 2). Quomodo autem ignoravit, qui novit omnia (Dan. XIII, 42)? Aut quid non potuit, qui omnia potest?

215. But God can neither be in doubt, nor can He be deceived. For he only is in doubt, who is ignorant of the future; and he is deceived, who has predicted one thing, while another has happened. Yet what is plainer than the fact that Scripture states the Father to have said one thing of the Son, and that the same Scripture proves another think to have taken place? The Son was beaten, He was mocked, was crucified, and died. He suffered much worse things in the flesh than those servants who had been appointed before. Was the Father deceived, or was He ignorant of it, or was He unable to give help? But He that is true cannot make a mistake; for it is written: God is faithful Who does not lie. Titus 1:2 How was He ignorant, Who knows all? What could He not do, Who could do all?

217. Tamen si aut ignoravit, aut non potuit (facilius enim acquiescitis, ut dicatis Patrem ignorasse, quam confiteamini Filium scisse), videtis quia ex hoc ipso unius substantiae est Filius cum Patre; si quemadmodum Pater, ita et Filius, ut secundum vestram insipientiam loquar, aut non omnia novit, aut non omnia potest. Non sum enim avarus aut praeceps circa Filii laudes, ut plus audeam dicere Filium posse quam Patrem, qui nullam inter Patrem et Filium discretionem facio potestatis.

216. Yet if either He was ignorant, or had not power (for you would sooner agree to say that the Father did not know than own that the Son knows), you see from this very fact that the Son is of one Substance with the Father; seeing that the Son like the Father (to speak in accordance with your foolish ideas) does not know all things, and cannot do all things. For I am not so eager or rash in giving praise to the Son as to dare to say that the Son can do more than the Father; for I make no distinction of power between the Father and the Son.

218. Sed fortasse dicatis, non ita dixisse Patrem, sed de Patre Filium fefellisse. Jam ergo 591 non solum infirmitatis Filium, sed etiam sacrilegii et mendacii arguitis. Verumtamen si non creditis de Patre Filio, nec de eo credatis; si enim fallere nos voluit, quia dixit dubitasse Patrem, quasi nesciret quod esset futurum: fallere ergo etiam de se nos voluit, quia futura nescire se dixit; multoque tolerabilius ad pudorem, si ignorantiam ante praetendit, quod de se facit, quam si contrario promissis lusus videatur effectu, quod de Patre praedicavit.

217. But perhaps you say that the Father did not say so, but that the Son erred about the Father. So now you convict the Son not only of weakness, but also of blasphemy and lying. However if you do not believe the Son with regard to the Father, neither may you believe Him with regard to that. For if He wished to deceive us in saying that the Father was in doubt as though He knew not what would take place, He wished also to deceive us about Himself in saying that He did not know the future. It would be far more endurable for Him to stretch the veil of ignorance in front of that which He does of His own accord, than that He should seem to be deluded by a result contrary to what He had foretold in the things He had declared of His Father.

219. Sed neque fallitur Pater, neque fallit Filius: verum ea est in Scripturis consuetudo divinis, sicut et superiora, et multa alia exempla testantur, ut Deus dissimulet se nescire quod novit. Et in hoc ergo unitas divinitatis, et unitas dispositionis in Patre probatur et Filio, si quemadmodum Deus Pater cognita dissimulat, ita Filius etiam in hoc imago Dei, quae sibi sunt nota dissimulet.

218. But neither is the Father deceived, not does the Son deceive. It is the custom of the holy Scriptures to speak thus, as the examples I have already given, and many others testify, so that God feigns not to know what He does know. In this then a unity of Godhead, and a unity of character is proved to exist in the Father and in the Son; seeing that, as God the Father hides what is known to Him, so also the Son, Who is the image of God in this respect, hides what is known to Him.

CAPUT XVIII.

DOMINICI AD APOSTOLOS responsi causam allaturus, primo illud indulgentiae Christi acceptum refert, mox alia quorumdam ratione proposita, germanam hanc esse profitetur, quod idem Dominus ex humano affectu locutus fuerit. Inde colligit scientiam Patris ac Filii aequalem esse; atque adeo non minorem Patre Filium. Postea ubi textui quo dicitur minor, alium quo aequalis traditur, opposuit; Arianorum de Filio judicantium temeritatem castigat, et cum illum impie minorem astruerent, ipsum pie lapidem abs se dici ostendit.

CHAPTER 18.

Wishing to give a reason for the Lord's answer to the apostles, he assigns the one received to Christ's tenderness. Then when another reason is supplied by others he confesses that it is true; for the Lord spoke it by reason of His human feelings. Hence he gathers that the knowledge of the Father and the Son is equal, and that the Son is not inferior to the Father. After having set beside the text, in which He is said to be inferior, another whereby He is declared to be equal, he censures the rashness of the Arians in judging about the Son, and shows that while they wickedly make Him to be inferior, He is rightly called a Stone by Himself.

220. Edoctum est igitur non ignorasse Dei Filium quae futura sunt. Quod si fatentur, et ego, ut jam respondeam qua ratione neque angelos, neque Filium, sed Patrem scire memoravit (Marc. XIII, 32), solemnem ejus in discipulos charitatem etiam in hoc loco et gratiam recognosco, quod ex frequentia ipsa debet omnibus esse jam cognitum. Mavult enim Dominus nimio in discipulos amore propensus, petentibus his quae cognitu inutilia judicaret, videri ignorare quod noverat, quam negare; plusque amat nostram utilitatem instruere, quam suam potentiam demonstrare.

219. We have been taught therefore that the Son of God is not ignorant of the future. If they confess this, I too — that I may now answer why He declared that neither angels, nor the Son, but only the Father knows — call to mind His wonted love for His disciples also in this passage, and His grace, which by its very frequency ought to have been known to all. For the Lord, filled with deep love for His disciples, when they asked from Him what He thought unprofitable for them to know, prefers to seem ignorant of what He knows, rather than to refuse an answer. He loves rather to provide what is useful for us, than to show His own power.

221. Sunt tamen plerique non ita timidiores, ut ego; malo enim alta timere, quam sapere: sunt tamen plerique eo freti, quod scriptum est: Et Jesus proficiebat aetate et sapientia et gratia apud Deum et homines (Luc. II, 52), qui dicant confidenter quod secundum divinitatem quidem ea quae futura sunt, ignorare non potuit, sed secundum nostrae conditionis assumptionem ignorare se quasi Filium hominis ante crucem dixit. Etenim cum Filium dicit, non quasi de alio dicit; nam ipse est et Dominus noster Dei Filius, et Filius Virginis: sed medio verbo nostrum informat affectum, ut quasi hominis filius secundum susceptionem nostrae imprudentiae, vel profectus, non 592 plene adhuc scisse omnia crederetur; non enim est nostrum scire quae futura sunt. Eadem igitur videtur ignorare conditione, qua proficit: nam quomodo secundum divinitatem proficit, in quo habitat plenitudo divinitatis (Coloss. II, 9)? Aut quid est quod nesciat Dei Filius qui dicebat: Quid cogitatis mala in cordibus vestris (Matth. IX, 4)? Quomodo nesciat, de quo dicit Scriptura: Jesus autem norat cogitationes eorum (Luc. VI, 8)?

220. There are, however, some not so faint-hearted as I. For I would rather fear the deep things of God, than be wise. There are some, however, relying on the words: And Jesus increased in age and in wisdom and in favour with God and man, Luke 2:52 who boldly say, that according to His Godhead indeed He could not be ignorant of the future, but that in His assumption of our human state He said that He as Son of Man was in ignorance before His crucifixion. For when He speaks of the Son, He does not speak as it were of another; for He Himself is our Lord the Son of God and the Son of a Virgin. But by a word which embraces both, He guides our mind, so that He as Son of Man according to His adoption of our ignorance and growth of knowledge, might be believed as yet not fully to have known all things. For it is not for us to know the future. Thus He seems to be ignorant in that state in which He makes progress. For how does He progress according to His Godhead, in Whom the fullness of the Godhead dwells? Colossians 2:9 Or what is there which the Son of God does not know, Who said: Why do you think evil in your hearts? Matthew 9:4 How does He not know, of Whom Scripture says: But Jesus knew their thoughts? Luke 6:8

222. Haec tamen alii dicant: ego autem ut ad superiora redeam, qui proposuerim scriptum quia Pater dixit: Fortasse reverebuntur Filium meum (Luc. XX, 13); quod utique ideo arbitror positum; ut quia de hominibus loquebatur Pater, humano locutus videatur affectu: multo magis arbitror quia Filius qui cum hominibus conversatus est, et hominem egit, et carnem suscepit, nostrum assumpsit affectum; ut nostra ignoratione nescire se diceret, non quia aliquid ipse nesciret. Nam etsi homo in veritate corporis videbatur; erat tamen vita, erat lux, et virtus exibat de eo, quae vulnera sauciorum majestatis suae auctoritate sanabat (Luc. VI, 19).

221. This is what others say, but I — to return to my former point, where I stated it was written of the Father: It may be they will reverence My Son, —

I think indeed this was written in order that the Father, as He was speaking of men, might also seem to have spoken with human feelings. But still more am I inclined to think that the Son Who went about with men, and lived the life of man, and took upon Him our flesh, assumed also our feelings; so that after our ignorance He might say He knew not, though there was not anything He did not know. For though He seemed to be a man in the reality of His body, yet was He Life, and Light, and virtue came out of Him, Luke 6:19 to heal the wounds of the injured by the power of His Majesty.

223. Advertitis ergo quaestionem vobis esse sublatam, cum et Filii dictum ad susceptionem integrae conditionis referatur humanae, et de Patre ideo scriptum sit, ut vel sic calumniari Filio desinatis.

222. You see then that this matter has been solved for you, since the saying of the Son is referred to the assumption of our state in its fullness, and it was thus written concerning the Father, in order that you might cease to cavil at the Son.

224. Nihil ergo fuit quod ignoraverit Dei Filius; nihil enim fuit quod ignoraverit Pater. Quod si nihil et Filius ignoravit, ut jam concludamus, dicant in quo eum minorem velint videri. Si minorem generavit Deus Filium, minus contulit; si minus contulit, aut minus voluit, aut minus potuit: sed nec infirmus nec invidus Pater; quia nec voluntas ante Filium, nec potestas: in quo enim minor, qui omnia habet quae Pater habet (Joan. XVI, 15)? Nam et omnia a Patre jure generationis accepit, et totum Patrem gloria suae majestatis expressit.

223. There was nothing then of which the Son of God was ignorant, for there was nothing of which the Father was ignorant. But if the Son was ignorant of nothing, as we now conclude, let them say in what respect they wish Him to seem to be inferior. If God has begotten a Son inferior to Himself, He has granted Him less. If He has granted Him less, He either wished to give less, or could only give less. But the Father is neither weak nor envious, seeing that there was neither will nor power before the Son. For wherein is He inferior, Who has all things even as the Father has them? He has received all things from the Father by right of His Generation, John 16:15 and has shown forth the Father wholly by the glory of His Majesty.

225. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Quoniam Pater major me est (Joan. XIV, 28). Sed scriptum est: Non rapinam arbitratus est se esse aequalem Deo (Philip. II, 6). Scriptum est quod propterea volebant illum Judaei occidere, quia Filium se dicebat Dei, aequalem se faciens Deo (Joan. V, 18). Scriptum est: Ego et Pater unum sumus (Joan. X, 30). Unum legunt, multa non legunt. Numquid ergo et minor et aequalis per naturam eamdem potest esse? Sed aliud ad divinitatem refertur, aliud ad carnem.

224. It is written, they say: For the Father is greater than I. John 14:28 It is also written: He thought it not robbery to be equal with God. Philippians 2:6 It is written again that the Jews wished to kill Him, because He said He was the Son of God, making Himself equal with God. John 5:18 It is written: I and My Father are one. John 10:30 They read one, they do not read many. Can He then be both inferior and equal in the same Nature? Nay, the one refers to His Godhead, the other to His flesh.

226. Minorem dicunt: quaero quis mensus sit, quis tam exaltati cordis, qui velut ante tribunal suum Patrem Deum et Filium constituat; ut de praelatione dijudicet? Non est exaltatum cor meum, neque in vanum elati sunt oculi mei, David dicit (Psal. CXXX, 1). Rex David exaltare cor metuit in rebus humanis, nos exaltamus adversus divina secreta. Quis igitur judicat de Dei Filio? Throni, Dominationes, Angeli, Potestates? Sed famulantur 593 et serviunt Archangeli, sed ministrant Cherubim et Seraphim, sed laudant. Quis igitur judicat de Dei Filio, cum legerit quia ipse Pater noverit Filium, non judicet; Nemo enim novit Filium, nisi Pater (Matth. XI, 27). Novit, inquit, non judicat. Aliud est nosse, aliud judicare. Habet Pater in se scientiam, Filius supra se non habet potestatem. Et rursus: Nemo novit Patrem, nisi Filius; et ipse novit Patrem, sicut eum Pater novit.

225. They say He is inferior: I ask who has measured it, who is of so overweening a heart, as to place the Father and the Son before his judgment seat to decide upon which is the greater? My heart is not haughty nor are my eyes raised unto vanity, says David. King David feared to raise his heart in pride in human affairs, but we raise ours even in opposition to the divine secrets. Who shall decide about the Son of God? Thrones, dominions, angels, powers? But archangels give attendance and serve Him, cherubim and seraphim minister to Him and praise Him. Who then decides about the Son of God, on reading that the Father Himself knows the Son, but will not judge Him. For no man knows the Son, but the Father. Matthew 11:27 Knows it says, not judges. It is one thing to know, another to judge. The Father has knowledge in Himself. The Son has no power superior to Himself. And again: No man knows the Father, but the Son; and He Himself knows the Father, as the Father knows Him.

227. Sed dicis quia minorem se dixit (Joan. XIV, 28): dixit et lapidem. Plus dicis, et impie calumniaris: minus dico, et pic astruo. Minorem dicis, et supra angelos confiteris: ego minorem angelis dico, et non derogo; quia non divinitatem arguo, sed misericordiam praedico.

226. But you say that He said He was inferior, He said also He was a Stone. You say more and yet you impiously attack Him. I say less and with reverence add to His honour. You say He is inferior and confess Him to be above the angels. I say He is less than the angels, yet do not take from His honour; for I do not refute His Godhead, but I do proclaim His pity

CAPUT XIX.

CONVERSUS AD DEUM Patrem Vir sanctus, cur Filium eo minorem non statuat, exponit: tum asserit suum non esse ut metiatur Dei Filium; cum angelo metiri tantum Jerusalem datum fuerit, immo et forte Christo ut homini: sed Arium Satanae imitatorem se praebuisse. Temere igitur de divina generatione disputari; cum tantum humanae signum per Esaiam sit propositum; nec debeat comparatio fieri in divinis. Postremo quantum fugienda sit Arii arrogantia, variorum Scripturae exemplorum oppositione demonstrat.

CHAPTER 19.

The Saint having turned to God the Father, explains why he does not deride that the Son is inferior to the Father, then he declares it is not for him to measure the Son of God, since it was given to an angel — nay, perhaps even to Christ as man — to measure merely Jerusalem. Arius, he says, has shown himself to be an imitator of Satan. It is a rash thing to hold discussions on the divine Generation. Since so great a sign of human generation has been given by Isaiah, we ought not to make comparisons in divine things. Lastly he shows how carefully we ought to avoid the pride of Arius, by putting before us various examples of Scriptures.

228. Ad te nunc, omnipotens Pater, cum lacrymis verba converto. Ego te quidem inaccessibilem, incomprehensibilem, inaestimabilem prompte dixerim: sed Filium tuum minorem non ausim dicere. Nam cum illum splendorem gloriae, et imaginem substantiae tuae legerim (Hebr. I, 3); vercor ne minorem imaginem tuae dicendo substantiae, minorem substantiam tuam dicere videar, cujus imago sit Filius, cum plenitudo tuae divinitatis omnis in Filio sit. Immensum te Filiumque tuum et Spiritum sanctum, incircumscriptum, inaestimabilem, inenarrabilem legi frequenter, credo libenter. Et ideo aestimare non possum, ut examinare possim.

227. To You now, Almighty Father, do I direct my words with tears. I indeed have readily called You inapproachable, incomprehensible, inestimable; but I dared not say Your Son was inferior to Yourself. For when I read that He is the Brightness of Your glory, and the Image of Your Person, Hebrews 1:3 I fear lest, in saying that the Image of Your Person is inferior, I should seem to say that Your Person is inferior, of which the Son is the Image; for the fullness of Your Godhead is wholly in the Son. I have often read, I freely believe, that You and Your Son and the Holy Spirit are boundless, unmeasurable, inestimable, ineffable. And therefore I cannot appraise You so as to weigh You.

229. Esto tamen, spiritu ausuque temerario metiri te velim; unde, quaeso, te metiar? Funiculum agrimensorium vidit propheta (Ezech. XL, 3), quo metiebatur angelus Jerusalem. Metiebatur tamen angelus, non Arius: metiebatur Jerusalem, non Deum. Et fortasse nec Jerusalem metiri poterat angelus; vir enim erat. Denique sic habes: Et allevavi oculos, et vidi: et ecce vir, et in manu ejus funiculus agrimensorius (Ibid.). Vir erat quia typus suscipiendi corporis declarabatur. Vir erat ille, de quo est dictum: Post me venit vir, cujus non sum dignus solvere corrigiam calceamenti ejus (Joan. I, 27). Ergo Christus in typo Jerusalem metitur, Arius Deum.

228. But be it so, that I desired with a daring and rash spirit to measure You? From whence, I ask, shall I measure You? The prophet saw a line of flax with which the angel measured Jerusalem. An angel was measuring, not Arius. And he was measuring Jerusalem, not God. And perchance even an angel could not measure Jerusalem, for it was a man. Thus it is written: I raised my eyes and saw and beheld a man, and in his hand there was a line of flax. Ezekiel 40:3 He was a man, for a type of the body that was to be assumed was thus shown. He was a man, of whom it was said: There comes a man after me, Whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose. John 1:27 Therefore Christ in a type measures Jerusalem. Arius measures God.

230. Et Satanas transfigurat se in angelum lucis; quid mirum si Arius suum imitatur auctorem, ut usurpet illicita (II Cor. XI, 14)? Licet quod Pater suus diabolus per semetipsum non fecit, intolerabiliore 594 iste sacrilegio divinorum sibi scientiam secretorum, et supernae generationis arcana praesumat; diabolus enim verum Dei Filium fatebatur, Arius negat.

229. Even Satan transforms himself into an angel of light; 2 Corinthians 11:14 what wonder then if Arius imitates his Author in taking upon himself what is forbidden? Though his father the devil did it not in his own case, that man with intolerable blasphemy assumes to himself the knowledge of divine secrets and the mysteries of the heavenly Generation. For the devil confessed the true Son of God, Arius denies Him.

231. Si ergo metiri te, omnipotens Pater, non queo, possumne sine sacrilegio de tuae generationis disputare secreto? Possumne dicere quod aliquid inter te et Filium tuum plus minusve sit; cum ipse qui ex te natus est, dixerit: Omnia quae Pater habet mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15)? Quis me constituit judicem aut divisorem de rebus humanis? Hoc Filius dicit, et nos inter Patrem et Filium divisionem nobis et judicium vindicamus? Bona pietas arbitros refugit etiam in divisione patrimonii. Nos ergo erimus arbitri, ut inter te et Filium tuum increatae majestatem substantiae dividamus?

230. If, then, I cannot measure You, Almighty Father, can I without blasphemy discuss the secrets of Your Generation? Can I say there is anything more or less between You and Your Son when He Himself Who was begotten of You, says: All things which the Father has are Mine. John 16:15 Who has made Me a judge and a divider of human affairs? This the Son says, Luke 12:14 and do we claim to make a division and to give judgment between the Father and the Son? A right feeling of duty avoids arbiters even in the division of an inheritance. And shall we become arbiters, to divide between You and Your Son the glory of the uncreated Substance?

232. Generatio, inquit, haec, generatio nequam est: signum quaerit, et signum non dubitur ei, nisi signum Jonae prophetae (Luc. XI, 29). Signum utique datur non divinitatis, sed incarnationis. Denique de incarnatione dicturus ait: Pete tibi signum. Et cum ille dixisset: Non petam, neque tentabo Dominum, responsum est: Ecce virgo in utero accipiet (Esai. VII, 11 et seq.). Ergo signum divinitatis videre non possumus, mensuram quaerimus? Vae misero mihi, impie discutere audemus, quem digne rogare non possimus?

231. This generation, it says, is an evil generation. It seeks a sign, and there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet. Luke 11:29 A sign of the Godhead then is not given, but only of the Incarnation. Thus when about to speak of the Incarnation the prophet says: Ask you a sign. And when the king had said: I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord, the answer was: Behold a Virgin shall conceive. Therefore we cannot see a sign of the Godhead, and do we seek a measure of it? Alas! Woe is me! We impiously dare to discuss Him, to Whom we cannot worthily pray!

233. Viderint tamen quid faciant Ariani: ego te, Pater, si majorem omnibus dixero, injuriose te tuis operibus comparavi: si majorem Filio, ut Arius asserit, impie judicavi. De te prior erit illa sententia, nam neque ulla fieri potest nisi ex comparatione praelatio, neque praeferri quisquam, nisi de quo prius fuerit judicatum.

232. Let the Arians see to what they do. I have unlawfully compared You, O Father, with Your works in saying that You are greater than all. If greater than Your Son, as Arius maintains, I have judged wickedly. Concerning You first will that judgment be. For no choice can be made except by comparison, nor can anyone be put before another without a decision being first given on Himself.

234. Jurare nobis per coelum non licet (Matth. V, 3), judicare de Deo licet: sed Filio tuo soli judicium de omnibus detulisti.

233. It is not lawful for us to swear by heaven, but it is lawful to judge about God. Yet You have given to Your Son alone judgment over all.

235. Joannes carnem Domini baptizare metuebat, Joannes prohibebat dicens: Ego a te debeo baptizari, et tu venis ad me (Matth. III, 14); et ego Christum judicio meo subdam?

234. John feared to baptize the flesh of the Lord, John forbade Him, saying: I have need to be baptized by You, and You come to me? Matthew 3:4 And shall I bring Christ under my judgment?

235. Moyses excusat sacerdotium, Petrus imperatum in ministerio declinat obsequium: Arius scrutatur etiam alta Dei? Sed non Arius Spiritus sanctus: sed Ario et hominibus dictum est: Altiora te ne quaesieris (Eccl. III, 22).

235. Moses excuses himself from the Priesthood, Peter is for avoiding the obedience demanded in the Ministry; and does Arius examine even the deep things of God? But Arius is not the Holy Spirit. Nay, it was said even to Arius and to all men: Seek not that which is too deep for you. Sirach 3:22

236. Moyses vultum Domini prohibetur videre (Exod. XXXIII, 23): Arius meruit videre secretum. Moyses et Aaron in sacerdotibus ejus, Moyses qui cum Domino apparet in gloria; Moyses ergo ille posteriora tantummodo Dei in typo vidit: Arius totum Deum facie ad faciem comprehendit. Sed nemo, inquit, videre potest faciem meam, et vivit (Exod. XXXIII, 20).

236. Moses is prevented from seeing the face of God; Exodus 33:23 Arius merited to see it in secret. Moses and Aaron among His Priests. Moses who appeared with the Lord in glory, that Moses then saw only the back parts of God in appearance; Arius beholds God wholly face to face! But no one, it says, can see My face and live.

237. Paulus etiam de inferioribus dicit: Ex parte cognoscimus et ex parte etiam prophetamus (I Cor. XIII, 9). Arius dicit: Ex toto Deum, non ex parte cognovi. Inferior ergo Paulus, quam Arius; et vas electionis ex parte scit, vas perditionis totum scit: Scio, inquit, hominem, sive in corpore, 595 sive extra corpus nescio, Deus scit, quoniam raptus est in paradisum, et audivit verba ineffabilia (II Cor. XII, 4, 5). Paulus raptus usque ad tertium coelum, se ipsum nescivit: Arius in stercore volutatus Deum scivit. Paulus dicit de se ipso: Deus scit; Arius de Deo dicit: Ego novi.

237. Paul also speaks of inferior beings: We know in part and we prophesy in part. 1 Corinthians 13:9 Arius says: I know God altogether and not in part. Thus Paul is inferior to Arius, and the vessel of election knows in part, but the vessel of perdition knows wholly. I know, he says, a man, whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell, God knows, how he was caught up into Paradise and heard unspeakable words. 2 Corinthians 13:3-4 Paul carried up to the third heaven, knew not himself; Arius rolling in filth, knows God. Paul says of himself: God knows; Arius says of God: I know.

238. Sed non Arius raptus in coelum, quamvis 596 eum secutus sit, qui jactatione damnabili divina praesumeret, dicens: Ponam thronum meum super nubes, et ero similis Altissimo (Esai. XIV, 14); sicut enim ille dixit: Ero similis Altissimo: sic et Arius altissimum Dei Filium sui similem vult videri: quem non in divinitatis aeternae majestate veneratur, sed ex carnis infirmitate metitur.

238. But Arius was not caught up to heaven, although he followed him who with accursed boastfulness presumed on what was divine, saying: I will set my throne upon the clouds; I will be like the Most High. Isaiah 14:14 For as he said: I will be like the Most High, so too Arius wishes the Most High Son of God to seem like himself, Whom he does not worship in the eternal glory of His Godhead, but measures by the weakness of the flesh.

TRACTATIBUS, QUOS ANTE de moribus Sanctus habuerat, subjecturum se mysteriorum expositionem spondet. Deinde cur ea non prius patefecerit, declarato, mysticam aggreditur apertionem, quam a Christo ipso olim celebratam demonstrat.

St. Ambrose states that after the explanations he has already given of holy living, he will now explain the Mysteries. Then after giving his reasons for not having done so before, he explains the mystery of the opening of the ears, and shows how this was of old done by Christ Himself.

1. De moralibus quotidianum sermonem habuimus, cum vel Patriarcharum gesta, vel Proverbiorum legerentur praecepta; ut his informati atque instituti assuesceretis majorum ingredi vias, eorumque iter carpere, ac divinis obedire oraculis: quo renovati per baptismum, ejus vitae usum teneretis, quae ablutos deceret.

1. We have spoken daily upon subjects connected with morals, when the deeds of the Patriarchs or the precepts of the Proverbs were being read, in order that being taught and instructed by these you might grow accustomed to enter the ways of the ancients and to walk in their paths, and obey the divine commands; in order that being renewed by baptism you might hold to that manner of life which beseems those who are washed.

2. Nunc de mysteriis dicere tempus admonet, atque ipsam sacramentorum rationem edere: quam ante baptismum si putassemus insinuandam nondum initiatis, prodidisse potius quam edidisse aestimaremur. Deinde quod inopinantibus melius se ipsa lux mysteriorum infuderit, quam si eam sermo aliquis praecucurrisset.

2. The season now warns us to speak of the Mysteries, and to set forth the purport of the sacraments, which if we had thought it well to teach before baptism to those who were not yet initiated, we should be considered rather to have betrayed than to have portrayed the Mysteries. And then, too, another reason is that the light itself of the Mysteries will shed itself with more effect upon those who are expecting they know not what, than if any discourse had come beforehand.

3. Aperite igitur aures, et bonum odorem vitae aeternae inhalatum vobis munere sacramentorum carpite: quod vobis significavimus, cum apertionis celebrantes mysterium diceremus: Epheta, quod est adaperire (Marc. VII, 34); ut venturus unusquisque ad gratiam quid interrogaretur, cognosceret: quid responderet, meminisse deberet.

3. Open, then, your ears, inhale the good savour of eternal life which has been breathed upon you by the grace of the sacraments; which was signified to you by us, when, celebrating the mystery of the opening, we said, Epphatha, which is, Be opened, Mark 7:34 that whosoever was coming in quest of peace might know what he was asked, and be bound to remember what he answered.

4. Hoc mysterium celebravit Christus in Evangelio (Ibid.), sicut legimus, cum mutum curaret et surdum. Sed ille os tetigit; quia et mutum curabat et virum: in altero, ut os ejus infusae sono vocis aperiret; in altero, quia tactus iste virum decebat, feminam non decebat.

4. Christ made use of this mystery in the Gospel, as we read, when He healed him who was deaf and dumb. But He touched the mouth, because he who was healed was dumb and was a man, as regards one point that he might open his mouth with the sound of the voice given to him; as regards the other point because that touch was seemly towards a man, but would have been unseemly towards a woman.

CAPUT II

QUID INITIANDI ECCLESIAM ingressi promiserint, quibusve coram testibus, et quamobrem se converterint ad orientem?

CHAPTER 2

What those who were to be initiated promised on entering the Church, of the witnesses to these promises, and wherefore they then turned themselves to the East.

5. Post haec reserata tibi sunt sancta sanctorum, ingressus es regenerationis sacrarium: repete quid interrogatus sis, recognosce quid responderis. Renuntiasti diabolo et operibus ejus, mundo et luxuriae ejus ac voluptatibus. Tenetur vox tua, non in tumulo mortuorum, sed in libro viventium.

5. After this the Holy of holies was opened to you, you entered the sanctuary of regeneration; recall what you were asked, and remember what you answered. You renounced the devil and his works, the world with its luxury and pleasures. That utterance of yours is preserved not in the tombs of the dead, but in the book of the living.

6. Vidisti illic levitam, vidisti sacerdotem, vidisti summum sacerdotem. Noli considerare corporum figuras, sed mysteriorum gratiam. Praesentibus angelis locutus es, sicut scriptum est: Quia labia sacerdotis custodiunt scientiam, et legem exquirunt ex ore ipsius; quoniam angelus est Domini omnipotentis (Malac. II, 7). Non est fallere, non est negare: angelus est qui regnum Christi et vitam aeternam annuntiat. Non specie tibi aestimandus sit, sed munere. Quid tradiderit considera, usum ejus expende, et statum ejus agnosce.

6. You saw there the deacon, you saw the priest, you saw the chief priest [i.e. the bishop]. Consider not the bodily forms, but the grace of the Mysteries. You spoke in the presence of the angels, as it is written: For the priest's lips keep knowledge, and they seek the law at his mouth, for he is the angel of the Lord Almighty. Malachi 2:7 There is no place for deception nor for denial. He is an angel who proclaims the kingdom of Christ and eternal life. He is to be esteemed by you not according to his appearance, but according to his office. Consider what he delivered, reflect upon the rule of life he gave you, recognize his position.

7. Ingressus es igitur ut adversarium tuum cerneres, cui renuntiandum in os putaris: ad orientem converteris; qui enim renuntiat diabolo, ad Christum convertitur, illum directo cernit obtutu.

7. You entered, then, that you might discern your adversary, whom you were to renounce as it were to his face, then you turned to the east; for he who renounces the devil turns to Christ, and beholds Him face to face.

CAPUT III

IN AQUA ET sacris ministris praesentiam atque operationem divinitatis considerandam esse, pluribus figuris quibus baptisma jam inde a mundi creatione ac postea praenuntiatum est, docet.

St. Ambrose points out that we must consider the divine presence and working in the water and the sacred ministers, and then brings forward many Old Testament figures of baptism.

8. Quid vidisti? Aquas utique, sed non solas: levitas illic ministrantes, summum sacerdotem interrogantem et consecrantem. Primo omnium docuit te Apostolus non ea contemplanda nobis quae videntur, sed quae non videntur, quoniam quae videntur, temporalia sunt: quae autem non videntur, aeterna (II Cor. IV, 18). Nam et alibi habes: Quia invisibilia Dei a creatura mundi per ea quae facta sunt comprehenduntur: sempiterna quoque virtus ejus ac divinitas operibus aestimatur (Rom. I, 20). Unde et ipse Dominus ait: Si mihi non creditis, vel operibus credite (Joan. X, 38). Crede ergo divinitatis illic adesse praesentiam. Operationem credis, non credis praesentiam? Unde sequeretur operatio, nisi praecederet ante praesentia?

8. What did you see? Water, certainly, but not water alone; you saw the deacons ministering there, and the bishop asking questions and hallowing. First of all, the Apostle taught you that those things are not to be considered which we see, but the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. 1 Corinthians 5:18 For you read elsewhere: That the invisible things of God, since the creation of the world, are understood through those things which have been made; His eternal power also and Godhead are estimated by His works. Romans 1:20 Wherefore also the Lord Himself says: If you believe not Me, believe at least the works. John 10:38 Believe, then, that the presence of the Godhead is there. Do you believe the working, and not believe the presence? Whence should the working proceed unless the presence went before?

9. Considera autem quam vetus mysterium sit, in ipsius mundi praefiguratum origine. In principio ipso, quando fecit Deus coelum et terram, Spiritus, inquit, superferebatur super aquas (Gen. I, 2). Qui superferebatur super aquas, non operabatur super aquas? Sed quid dicam operabatur? quod ad praesentiam spectat, superferebatur. Non operabatur, qui superferebatur? Cognosce quia operabatur in illa mundi fabrica, quando tibi dicit Propheta: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt, et Spiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum (Psal. XXXII, 6). Utrumque prophetico subnixum est testimonio, et quia superferebatur et quia operabatur. Quia superferebatur, Moyses dicit: quia operabatur, David testificatur.

9. Consider, however, how ancient is the mystery prefigured even in the origin of the world itself. In the very beginning, when God made the heaven and the earth, the Spirit, it is said, moved upon the waters. Genesis 1:2 He Who was moving upon the waters, was He not working upon the waters? But why should I say, working? As regards His presence He was moving. Was He not working Who was moving? Recognize that He was working in that making of the world, when the prophet says: By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all their strength by the spirit of His mouth. Each statement rests upon the testimony of the prophet, both that He was moving and that He was working. Moses says that He was moving, David testifies that he was working.

10. Accipe aliud testimonium. Corrupta erat caro omnis ab iniquitatibus suis. Non permanebit, inquit Deus, Spiritus meus in hominibus, quia carnes sunt (Gen. VI, 3.) Quo ostendit Deus quia carnali immunditia, et gravioris labe peccati gratia spiritalis avertitur. Unde volens Deus reparare quod deerat, dilnvium fecit, et justum Noe in arcam jussit ascendere (Gen. VII, 1 et seq.) Qui dum, decedente diluvio, corvum dimisisset prius, qui non revertit; dimisit columbam, quae cum ramo oleae legitur revertisse (Gen. VIII, 7, 8). Vides aquam, vides lignum, columbam aspicis, et dubitas de mysterio?

10. Take another testimony. All flesh was corrupt by its iniquities. My Spirit, says God, shall not remain among men, because they are flesh. Genesis 6:3 Whereby God shows that the grace of the Spirit is turned away by carnal impurity and the pollution of grave sin. Upon which, God, willing to restore what was lacking, sent the flood and bade just Noah go up into the ark. And he, after having, as the flood was passing off, sent forth first a raven which did not return, sent forth a dove which is said to have returned with an olive twig. You see the water, you see the wood [of the ark], you see the dove, and do you hesitate as to the mystery?

11. Aqua est ergo qua caro mergitur, ut omne abluatur carnale peccatum. Sepelitur illic omne flagitium. Lignum est in quo suffixus est Dominus Jesus, cum pateretur pro nobis. Columba est in cujus specie descendit Spiritus sanctus, sicut didicisti in novo Testamento (Matth. III, 16), qui tibi pacem animae, tranquillitatem mentis inspirat. Corvus est figura peccati, quod exit, et non revertitur; si in te quoque justi custodia et forma servetur.

11. The water, then, is that in which the flesh is dipped, that all carnal sin may be washed away. All wickedness is there buried. The wood is that on which the Lord Jesus was fastened when He suffered for us. The dove is that in the form of which the Holy Spirit descended, as you have read in the

New Testament, Who inspires in you peace of soul and tranquillity of mind. The raven is the figure of sin, which goes forth and does not return, if, in you, too, inwardly and outwardly righteousness be preserved.

12. Tertium quoque testimonium est, sicut te Apostolus docet: Quoniam patres nostri omnes sub nube fuerunt, et omnes mare transierunt, et omnes in Moyse baptizati sunt, in nube et in mari (I Cor. X, 1, 2). Denique et ipse Moyses dicit in Cantico: Misisti Spiritum tuum, et operuit eos mare (Exod.XV, 10). Advertis quod in illo Hebraeorum transitu jam tunc sacri baptismatis figura praecesserit, in quo Aegyptius interiit et Hebraeus evasit. Quid enim aliud in hoc quotidie sacramento docemur, nisi quia culpa mergitur, et error aboletur: pietas autem et innocentia tuta permansit?

12. There is also a third testimony, as the Apostle teaches us: For all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and were all baptized to Moses in the cloud and in the sea. 1 Corinthians 10:1-2 And further, Moses himself says in his song: You sent Your Spirit, and the sea covered them. Exodus 15:10 You observe that even then holy baptism was prefigured in that passage of the Hebrews, wherein the Egyptian perished, the Hebrew escaped. For what else are we daily taught in this sacrament but that guilt is swallowed up and error done away, but that virtue and innocence remain unharmed?

13. Audis quia sub nube fuerunt patres nostri, et bona nube, quae carnalium refrigeravit incendia passionum. Bona nubes obumbrat quos revisit Spiritus sanctus. Denique supervenit in Mariam virginem, et virtus Altissimi obumbravit ei (Luc. I, 75); quando redemptionem genti genuit humanae. Et illud miraculum per Moysen in figura factum est (Exod. XIV, 21 et seq.). Si ergo in figura adfuit Spiritus, non adest in veritate, cum Scriptura tibi dicat: Quia lex per Moysen data est, gratia autem et veritas per Jesum Christum facta est (Joan. I, 17).

13. You hear that our fathers were under the cloud, and that a kindly cloud, which cooled the heat of carnal passions. That kindly cloud overshadows those whom the Holy Spirit visits. At last it came upon the Virgin Mary, and the Power of the Highest overshadowed her, Luke 1:35 when she conceived Redemption for the race of men. And that miracle was wrought in a figure through Moses. If, then, the Spirit was in the figure, is He not present in the reality, since Scripture says to us: For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. John 1:17

14. Merrha fons amarissimus erat: misit in eum Moyses lignum, et dulcis est factus (Exod. XV, 23 et seq.). Aqua enim sine praedicatione Domini caecrucis ad nullos usus futurae salutis est: cum vero salutaris fuerit crucis mysterio consecrata, tunc ad usum spiritalis lavacri et salutaris poculi temperatur. Sicut ergo in illum fontem Moyses misit lignum, hoc est propheta; ita et in hunc fontem sacerdos praedicationem Dominicae crucis mittit, et aqua fit dulcis ad gratiam.

14. Marah was a fountain of most bitter water: Moses cast wood into it and it became sweet. For water without the preaching of the Cross of the Lord is of no avail for future salvation, but, after it has been consecrated by the mystery of the saving cross, it is made suitable for the use of the spiritual laver and of the cup of salvation. As, then, Moses, that is, the prophet, cast wood into that fountain, so, too, the priest utters over this font the proclamation of the Lord’s cross, and the water is made sweet for the purpose of grace.

15. Non ergo solis corporis tui credas oculis: magis videtur quod non videtur; quia istud temporale, illud aeternum aspicitur, quod oculis non comprehenditur, animo autem ac mente cernitur.

15. You must not trust, then, wholly to your bodily eyes; that which is not seen is more really seen, for the object of sight is temporal, but that other eternal, which is not apprehended by the eye, but is discerned by the mind and spirit.

16. Denique doceat te decursa Regnorum lectio. (IV Reg. V, 1 et seq.). Naaman Syrus erat, et lepram habebat, nec ab ullo mundari poterat. Tunc ait puella ex captivis, quoniam esset propheta in Israel, qui posset eum a leprae contagione mundare. Sumpto, inquit, auro et argento, perrexit ad regem Israel. Qui cognita adventus ejus causa, scidit vestimenta sua, dicens quod tentaretur magis, cum de se ea quae non essent potestatis regiae, poscerentur: Elisaeus autem regi intimavit ut ad se dirigeret Syrum, quo cognosceret quod esset Deus in Israel. Et cum venisset, mandavit ei ut septies mergeretur in Jordane fluvio.

16. Lastly, let the lessons lately gone through from the Kings teach you. Naaman was a Syrian, and suffered from leprosy, nor could he be cleansed by any. Then a maiden from among the captives said that there was a prophet in Israel, who could cleanse him from the defilement of the leprosy. And it is said that, having taken silver and gold, he went to the king of Israel. And he, when he heard the cause of his coming, rent his clothes, saying, that occasion was rather being sought against him, since things were asked of him which pertained not to the power of kings. Elisha, however, sent word to the king, that he should send the Syrian to him, that he might know there was a God in Israel. And when he had come, he bade him dip himself seven times in the river Jordan.

17. Tunc ille secum tractare coepit quod meliores aquas haberet patriae suae, in quibus se saepe mersisset, et numquam a lepra esset ablutus; eoque revocatus non obediebat mandatis prophetae: sed et admonitu et persuasionibus servulorum acquievit, ac mersit. Mundatusque illico intellexit non aquarum esse quod unusquisque mundatur, sed gratiae.

17. Then he began to reason with himself that he had better waters in his own country, in which he had often bathed and never been cleansed of his leprosy; and so remembering this, he did not obey the command of the prophet, yet on the advice and persuasion of his servants he yielded and dipped himself. And being immediately cleansed, he understood that it is not of the waters but of grace that a man is cleansed.

18. Cognosce nunc quae sit illa puella ex captivis junior, scilicet ex gentibus congregatio, id est, Ecclesia Domini depressa ante captivitate peccati, quando libertatem adhuc gratiae non habebat; cujus consilio vanus ille populus nationum verbum audivit propheticum, de quo ante diu dubitavit; postea tamen ubi credidit exsequendum, ablutus est ab omni contagione vitiorum. Et ille quidem dubitavit, antequam sanaretur: tu jam sanatus es, et ideo dubitare non debes.

18. Understand now who is that young maid among the captives. She is the congregation gathered out of the Gentiles, that is, the Church of God held down of old by the captivity of sin, when as yet it possessed not the liberty of grace, by whose counsel that foolish people of the Gentiles heard the word of prophecy as to which it had before been in doubt. Afterwards, however, when they believed that it ought to be obeyed, they were washed from every defilement of sin. And he indeed doubted before he was healed; you are already healed, and therefore ought not to doubt.

AQUAM NON MUNDARE sine Spiritu, Joannis testimonio et ipsis quibus idem sacramentum administratur, verbis declaratur. Quod etiam asseritur significatum per Evangelicam piscinam, et paralyticum a Domino ibi sanatum: quo loco Spiritus sanctus in ejusdem Christi baptismo vere descendisse ostenditur, et quid in hoc mysterio intelligendum?

That water does not cleanse without the Spirit is shown by the witness of John and by the very form of the administration of the sacrament. And this is also declared to be signified by the pool in the Gospel and the man who was there healed. In the same passage, too, is shown that the Holy Spirit truly descended on Christ at His baptism, and the meaning of this mystery is explained.

19. Ideo tibi ante praedictum est, ut non hoc solum crederes quod videbas; ne forte et tu diceres: Hoc est illud magnum mysterium; quod oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit, nec in cor hominis ascendit (I Cor. II, 9)? Aquas video, quas videbam quotidie: istae me habent mundare, in quas saepe descendi, et numquam mundatus sum? Hinc cognosce quod aqua non mundat sine Spiritu.

19. The reason why you were told before not to believe only what you saw was that you might not say perchance, This is that great mystery which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man. 1 Corinthians 2:9 I see water, which I have been used to see every day. Is that water to cleanse me now in which I have so often bathed without ever being cleansed? By this you may recognize that water does not cleanse without the Spirit.

20. Ideoque legisti quod tres testes in baptismate unum sunt, aqua, sanguis, et Spiritus (I Joan. V, 7); quia si in unum horum detrahas, non stat baptismatis sacramentum. Quid est enim aqua sine cruce Christi? Elementum commune, sine ullo sacramenti effectu. Nec iterum sine aqua, regenerationis mysterium est: Nisi enim quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu, non potest introire in regnum Dei (Joan. III, 5). Credit autem etiam catechumenus in crucem Domini Jesu, qua et ipse signatur: sed nisi baptizatus fuerit in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti, remissionem non potest accipere peccatorum, nec spiritualis gratiae munus haurire.

20. Therefore read that the three witnesses in baptism, the water, the blood, and the Spirit, 1 John 5:7 are one, for if you take away one of these, the Sacrament of Baptism does not exist. For what is water without the cross of Christ? A common element, without any sacramental effect. Nor, again, is there the Sacrament of Regeneration without water: For except a man be born again of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. John 3:5 Now, even the catechumen believes in the cross of the Lord Jesus, wherewith he too is signed; but unless he be baptized in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, he cannot receive remission of sins nor gain the gift of spiritual grace.

21. Ergo ille Syrus septies mersit in Lege: (IV Reg. V, 14) tu autem baptizatus es in nomine Trinitatis, confessus es Patrem, recordare quid feceris; confessus es Filium, confessus es Spiritum sanctum. Tene ordinem rerum in hac fide; mundo mortuus es, et Deo resurrexisti. Et quasi in illo mundi consepultus elemento, peccato mortuus, ad vitam es resuscitatus aeternam.

Crede ergo quia non sunt vacuae aquae.

21. So that Syrian dipped himself seven times under the law, but you were baptized in the Name of the Trinity, you confessed the Father. Call to mind what you did: you confessed the Son, you confessed the Holy Spirit. Mark well the order of things in this faith: you died to the world, and rose again to God. And as though buried to the world in that element, being dead to sin, you rose again to eternal life. Believe, therefore, that these waters are not void of power.

22. Ideo tibi dictum est: Quia angelus Domini descendebat secundum tempus in natatoriam, et movebatur aqua; et qui prior descendisset in natatoriam post commotionem aquae, sanus fiebat a languore quocumque tenebatur (Joan. V, 4). Haec piscina in Hierosolymis erat, in qua unus annuus sanabatur: sed nemo ante sanabatur, quam descendisset angelus. Ut esset indicium quia descenderat angelus, movebatur aqua propter incredulos. Illis signum, tibi fides: illis angelus descendebat, tibi Spiritus sanctus: illis creatura movebatur, tibi Christus operatur ipse Dominus creaturae.

22. Therefore it is said: An angel of the Lord went down according to the season into the pool, and the water was troubled; and he who first after the troubling of the water went down into the pool was healed of whatsoever disease he was holden. John 5:4 This pool was at Jerusalem, in which one was healed every year, but no one was healed before the angel had descended. Because of those who believed not the water was troubled as a sign that the angel had descended. They had a sign, you have faith; for them an angel descended, for you the Holy Spirit; for them the creature was troubled, for you Christ Himself, the Lord of the creature, works.

23. Tunc curabatur unus, nunc omnes sanantur: aut certe unus solus populus christianus; est enim in aliquibus et aqua mendax (Jerem. XV, 18). Non sanat baptismus perfidorum (I, q. 1, c. Non sanat), non mundat, sed polluit. Judaeus urceos baptizat et calices (Marc. VII, 4), quasi insensibilia vel culpam possint recipere, vel gratiam. Tu baptiza hunc calicem tuum sensibilem, in quo bona opera tua luceant, in quo gratiae tuae splendor fulgeat. Ergo et illa piscina in figura; ut credas quia in hunc fontem vis divina descendit.

23. Then one was healed, now all are made whole; or more exactly, the Christian people alone, for in some even the water is deceitful. Jeremiah 15:18 The baptism of unbelievers heals not but pollutes. The Jew washes pots and cups, as though things without sense were capable of guilt or grace. But do you wash this living cup of yours, that in it your good works may shine and the glory of your grace be bright. For that pool was as a type, that you might believe that the power of God descends upon this font.

24. Denique paralyticus ille exspectabat hominem (Joan. V, 7). Quem illum, nisi Dominum Jesum natum ex Virgine: cujus adventu non jam umbra sanaret singulos, sed veritas universos? Iste est ergo qui exspectabatur ut descenderet, de quo dixit Deus Pater ad Joannem Baptistam: Super quem videris Spiritum descendentem de coelo, et manentem super eum, hic est qui baptizat in Spiritu sancto (Joan. I, 33). De quo testificatus est Joannes dicens: Quia vidi Spiritum descendentem de coelo quasi columbam et manentem super eum (Ibid., 32). Et hic quare Spiritus sicut columba descendit, nisi ut tu videres, nisi ut tu agnosceres columbam etiam illam quam Noe justus emisit ex arca, istius columbae speciem fuisse, ut typum agnosceres sacramenti (Gen., VIII, 8)?

24. Lastly, that paralytic was waiting for a man. And what man save the Lord Jesus, born of the Virgin, at Whose coming no longer the shadow should heal men one by one, but the truth should heal the whole. He it is, then, Whose coming down was being waited for, of Whom the Father said to John the Baptist: Upon Whom you shall see the Spirit descending and abiding upon Him, this is He Who baptizes with the Holy Spirit. John 1:33 And John bore witness of Him, and said: I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove and abiding upon Him. John 1:32 And why did the Spirit descend like a dove, but in order that you might see, that you might acknowledge, that that dove also which just Noah sent forth from the ark was a likeness of this dove, that you might recognize the type of the sacrament?

25. Et fortasse dicas: Cum illa vera columba fuerit quae emissa est, hic quasi columba descenderit: quomodo illic speciem fuisse dicimus, hic veritatem; cum secundum Graecos in specie columbae Spiritum descendisse sit scriptum (Luc. III, 12)? Sed quid tam verum quam divinitas quae manet semper? Creatura autem non potest veritas esse, sed species, quae facile solvitur atque mutatur. Simul quia eorum qui baptizantur, non in specie esse debeat, sed vera simplicitas. Unde et Dominus ait: Estote astuti sicut serpentes, et simplices sicut columbae (Matth. X, 16). Merito ergo sicut columba descendit, ut admoneret nos simplicitatem columbae habere debere. Speciem autem et pro veritate accipiendam legimus et de Christo: Et specie inventus ut homo (Phil. II, 7); et de Patre Deo: Neque speciem ejus vidistis (Joan. V, 37).

25. Perhaps you may object: Since that was a real dove which was sent forth, and the Spirit descended like a dove, how is it that we say that the likeness was there and the reality here, whereas in the Greek it is written that the Spirit descended in the likeness of a dove? But what is so real as the Godhead which abides for ever? Now the creature cannot be the reality, but only a likeness, which is easily destroyed and changed. So, again, because the simplicity of those who are baptized ought to be not in appearance but in reality, and the Lord says: Be wise as serpents and simple as doves. Matthew 10:16 Rightly, then, did He descend like a dove, in order to admonish us that we ought to have the simplicity of the dove. And further we read of the likeness being put for the reality, both as regards Christ: And was found in likeness as a man; Philippians 2:8 and as regards God the Father: Nor have you seen His likeness. John 5:37

CONFIRMATUR ADESSE CHRISTUM in baptismate, atque adeo non considerandos ejus ministros.

Demum confessio Trinitatis a baptizatis edi solita paucis expenditur.

Christ is Himself present in Baptism, so that we need not consider the person of His ministers. A brief explanation of the confession of the Trinity as usually uttered by those about to be baptized.

26. Estne adhuc quod dubitare debeas, cum evidenter tibi clamet in Evangelio Pater, qui ait: Hic est Filius meus in quo complacui (Matth. III, 17); clamet Filius, super quem sicut columba se demonstravit Spiritus sanctus; clamet et Spiritus sanctus, qui sicut columba descendit; clamet David: Vox Domini super aquas, Deus majestatis intonuit: Dominus super aquas multas (Psal. XXVIII, 3); Cum tibi Scriptura (1, q. 1, c. Cum Script.) testetur quod ad Hierobaal preces ignis descenderit de coelo (Judic. VI, 21), et rursus precante Elia, ignis sit missus qui sacrificium consecravit (III Reg. XVIII, 38)?

26. Is there, then, here any room left for doubt, when the Father clearly calls from heaven in the Gospel narrative, and says: This is My beloved Son, in Whom I am well pleased? Matthew 3:17 When the Son also speaks, upon Whom the Holy Spirit showed Himself in the likeness of a dove? When the Holy Spirit also speaks, Who came down in the likeness of a dove? When David, too, speaks: The voice of the Lord is above the waters, the God of glory thundered, the Lord above many waters? When Scripture testifies that at the prayer of Jerubbaal, fire came down from heaven, Judges 6:21 and again, when Elijah prayed, fire was sent forth and consecrated the sacrifice.

27. Non merita personarum consideres, sed officia sacerdotum. Et si merita spectes; sicut Eliam consideres, Petri quoque merita spectato, vel Pauli, qui acceptum a Domino Jesu hoc nobis mysterium tradiderunt. Ignis illis visibilis mittebatur (l, q. 1, c. Cum Script., § Ignis), ut crederent: nobis invisibilis operatur, qui credimus: illis ad figuram, nobis ad commonitionem.

Crede ergo adesse Dominum Jesum invocatum precibus sacerdotum, qui ait: Ubi fuerint duo vel tres, ibi et ego sum (Matt. XVIII, 20); quanto magis ubi est Ecclesia, ubi mysteria sua sunt, ibi dignatur suam impertire praesentiam!

27. Do not consider the merits of individuals, but the office of the priests. Or, if you look at the merits, consider the priest as Elijah. Look upon the merits of Peter also, or of Paul, who handed down to us this mystery which they had received of the Lord Jesus. To those [of old] a visible fire was sent that they might believe; for us who believe, the Lord works invisibly; for them that happened for a figure, for us for warning. Believe, then, that the Lord Jesus is present at the invocation of the priest, Who said: Where two or three are, there am I also. Matthew 18:20 How much where the Church is, and where His Mysteries are, does He vouchsafe to impart His presence!

28. Descendisti igitur; recordare quid responderis, quod credas in Patrem, credas in Filium, credas in Spiritum sanctum. Non habes illic: Credo in majorem et minorem et ultimum: sed eadem vocis tuae cautione constringeris, ut similiter credas in Filium, sicut in Patrem credis: similiter in Spiritum sanctum credas, sicut credis in Filium; hoc solo excepto, quod in crucem solius Domini Jesu fateris tibi esse credendum.

28. You went down, then (into the water), remember what you replied to the questions, that you believe in the Father, that you believe in the Son, that you believe in the Holy Spirit. The statement there is not: I believe in a greater and in a less and in a lowest person, but you are bound by the same guarantee of your own voice, to believe in the Son in like manner as you believe in the Father; and to believe in the Holy Spirit in like manner as you believe in the Son, with this one exception, that you confess that you must believe in the cross of the Lord Jesus alone.

EGRESSIS E FONTE baptismatis quare unctio fiat in capite: cur etiam pedum lotio post baptismum; quaeve peccata utrisque remittantur.

Why they who come forth from the laver of baptism are anointed on the head; why, too, after baptism, their feet are washed, and what sins are remitted in each case.

29. Post haec utique ascendisti ad sacerdotem: considera quid secutum sit. Nonne illud quod ait David. Sicut unguentum in capite, quod descendit in barbam, barbam Aaron (Psal. CXXXII, 2)? Hoc est unguentum, de quo et Salomon ait: Unguentum exinanitum est nomen tuum, propterea adolescentulae dilexerunt te, et attraxerunt te (Cant. I, 2). Quantae hodie renovatae animae dilexerunt te, Domine Jesu, dicentes: Attrahe nos post te, in odorem vestimentorum tuorum currimus (Ibid., 3), ut odorem resurrectionis haurirent!

29. After this, you went up to the priest, consider what followed. Was it not that of which David speaks: Like the ointment upon the head, which went down to the beard, even Aaron’s beard? This is the ointment of which Solomon, too, says: Your Name is ointment poured out, therefore have the maidens loved You and drawn You. Song of Songs 1:2 How many souls regenerated this day have loved You, Lord Jesus, and have said: Draw us after You, we are running after the odour of Your garments, Song of Songs 1:3 that they might drink in the odour of Your resurrection.

30. Quare hoc fiat intellige, quia oculi sapientis in capite ejus (Eccles. II, 14). Ideo in barbam defluit, id est, in gratiam juventutis; ideo in barbam Aaron, ut fias electum genus, sacerdotale, pretiosum; omnes enim in regnum Dei et in sacerdotium ungimur gratia spiritali.

30. Consider now why this is done, for the eyes of a wise man are in his head; Ecclesiastes 2:14 therefore the ointment flows down to the beard, that is to say, to the beauty of youth; and therefore, Aaron's beard, that we, too, may become a chosen race, priestly and precious, for we are all anointed with spiritual grace for a share in the kingdom of God and in the priesthood.

31. Ascendisti de fonte, memento Evangelicae lectionis. Etenim Dominus noster Jesus in Evangelio lavit pedes discipulis suis. Quando venit ad Simonem Petrum, ait Petrus: Non lavas mihi pedes in aeternum (Joan. XIII, 8); non advertit mysterium, et ideo ministerium recusavit; quod gravari humilitatem servi crederet, si sibi obsequium domini patienter admitteret. Cui respondit Dominus: Si non lavero tibi pedes, non habebis partem mecum. Quo audito, Petrus: Domine, non tantum pedes, inquit, sed et manus et caput. Respondit Dominus: Qui lotus est, non indiget nisi ut pedes lavet; sed est mundus totus (Ibid., 9).

31. You went up from the font; remember the Gospel lesson. For our Lord Jesus Christ in the Gospel washed the feet of His disciples. When He came to Simon Peter, Peter said: You shall never wash my feet. John 13:8 He did not perceive the mystery, and therefore he refused the service, for he thought that the humility of the servant would be injured, if he patiently allowed the Lord to minister to him. And the Lord answered him: If I wash not your feet, you will have no part with Me. Peter, hearing this, replies: Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head. The Lord answered: He that is washed needs not save to wash his feet but is clean every whit. John 13:9-10

32. Mundus erat Petrus, sed plantam lavare debebat; habebat enim primi hominis de successione peccatum: quando eum supplantavit serpens, et persuasit errorem (Gen. III, 6). Ideo planta ejus abluitur, ut haereditaria peccata tollantur; nostra enim propria per baptismum relaxantur.

32. Peter was clean, but he must wash his feet, for he had sin by succession from the first man, when the serpent overthrew him and persuaded him to sin. His feet were therefore washed, that hereditary sins might be done away, for our own sins are remitted through baptism.

33. Simul cognosce mysterium in ipso humilitatis consistere ministerio; ait enim: Si ego lavi vobis pedes Dominus et magister; quanto magis et vos debetis lavare pedes invicem vobis (Joan. XIII. 14)! Cum enim ipse auctor salutis per obedientiam nos redemerit; quanto magis nos servuli ejus humilitatis et obedientiae exhibere debemus obsequium!

33. Observe at the same time that the mystery consists in the very office of humility, for Christ says: If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; how much more ought you to wash one another’s feet. For, since the Author of Salvation Himself redeemed us through His obedience, how much more ought we His servants to offer the service of our humility and obedience.

VESTIMENTIS CANDIDIS PECCATORUM ablutionem indicari: cujus opera ut Ecclesia se nigram atque decoram diceret, effectum est. Angelos nitorem ejus sicut et Dominicae carnis miratos esse; quin immo ipsummet Christum sub variis figuris commendasse Sponsae suae formam: quorum in se mutui affectus describuntur.

The washing away of sins is indicated by the white robes of the catechumens, whence the Church speaks of herself as black and comely. Angels marvel at her brightness as at that of the flesh of the Lord. Moreover, Christ Himself commended His beauty to His Spouse under many figures. The mutual affection of the one for the other is described.

34. Accepisti post haec vestimenta candida (De Consec. dist. 4, c. Accepsiti), ut esset indicium quod exueris involucrum peccatorum, indueris innocentiae casta velamina, de quibus dixit Propheta: Asperges me hyssopo, et mundabor: lavabis me, et super nivem dealbabor (Psal. L, 9). Qui enim baptizatur, et secundum Legem et secundum Evangelium videtur esse mundatus: secundum Legem, quia hyssopi fasciculo Moyses aspergebat sanguinem agni (Exod. XII, 22): secundum Evangelium, quia Christi erant candida vestimenta sicut nix, cum resurrectionis suae gloriam in Evangelio (Matth. XVII, 2) demonstraret. Super nivem ergo dealbatur, cui culpa dimittitur. Unde et per Esaiam Dominus ait: Si fuerint peccata vestra sicut phoenicium, ut nivem dealbabo (Esai. I, 18).

34. After this white robes were given to you as a sign that you were putting off the covering of sins, and putting on the chaste veil of innocence, of which the prophet said: You shall sprinkle me with hyssop and I shall be cleansed, You shall wash me and I shall be made whiter than snow. For he who is baptized is seen to be purified both according to the Law and according to the Gospel: according to the Law, because Moses sprinkled the blood of the lamb with a bunch of hyssop; Exodus 12:22 according to the Gospel, because Christ's garments were white as snow, when in the Gospel He showed forth the glory of His Resurrection. He, then, whose guilt is remitted is made whiter than snow. So that God said by Isaiah: Though your sins be as scarlet, I will make them white as snow. Isaiah 1:18

35. Haec vestimenta habens Ecclesia per lavacrum regenerationis assumpta, dicit in Canticis: Nigra sum et decora, filiae Hierusalem (Cant. I, 4). Nigra per fragilitatem conditionis humanae, decora per gratiam: nigra, quia ex peccatoribus; decora fidei sacramento. Haec vestimenta cernentes filiae Hierusalem stupefactae dicunt: Quae est haec quae ascendit dealbata (Cant. VIII, 5)? Haec erat nigra, unde nunc subito dealbata!

35. The Church, having put on these garments through the laver of regeneration, says in the Song of Songs: I am black and comely, O daughters of Jerusalem. Song of Songs 1:4 Black through the frailty of her human condition, comely through the sacrament of faith. And the daughters of Jerusalem beholding these garments say in amazement: Who is this that comes up made white? Song of Songs 8:5 She was black, how is she now suddenly made white?

36. Dubitaverunt etiam angeli cum resurgeret Christus, dubitaverunt Potestates coelorum videntes quod caro in coelum ascenderet. Denique dicebant: Quis est iste Rex gloriae? Et cum alii dicerent: Tollite portas Principis vestri, et elevamini portae aeternales, et introibit Rex gloriae; alii dubitabant dicentes: Quis est iste Rex gloriae (Psal. XXIII, 8, 9)? In Esaia quoque habes dubitantes virtutes coelorum dixisse: Quis est iste qui ascendit ex Edom, rubor vestimentorum ejus ex Bosor, speciosus in stola candida (Esai. LXIII, 1)?

36. The angels, too, were in doubt when Christ arose; the powers of heaven were in doubt when they saw that flesh was ascending into heaven. Then they said: Who is this King of glory? And while some said Lift up your gates, O princes, and be lifted up, you everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in. In Isaiah, too, we find that the powers of heaven doubted and said: Who is this that comes up from Edom, the redness of His garments is from Bosor, He who is glorious in white apparel? Isaiah 63:1

37. Christus autem videns Ecclesiam suam in vestimentis candidis, pro qua ipse, ut habes in Zachariae libro prophetae (Zach. III, 3), sordida vestimenta susceperat, vel animam regenerationis lavacro mundam atque ablutam, dicit: Ecce formosa es, proxima mea, ecce es formosa, oculi tui sicut columbae (Cant. IV, 1); in cujus specie Spiritus sanctus descendit de coelo (Luc. III, 22). Formosi oculi sicut columbae, quia in ejus specie Spiritus sanctus descendit de coelo.

37. But Christ, beholding His Church, for whom He Himself, as you find in the book of the prophet Zechariah, had put on filthy garments, now clothed in white raiment, seeing, that is, a soul pure and washed in the laver of regeneration, says: Behold, you are fair, My love, behold you are fair, your eyes are like a dove’s, Song of Songs 4:1 in the likeness of which the Holy Spirit descended from heaven. The eyes are beautiful like those of a dove, because in the likeness of a dove the Holy Spirit descended from heaven.

38. Et infra: Dentes tui sicut grex tonsarum, quae ascenderunt de lavacro, quae omnes geminos creant, et infecunda non est in eis; ut resticula coccinea labia tua (Cantic. IV, 2, 3). Non mediocris ista laudatio. Primum dulci comparatione tonsarum; capras enim et in altis pasci sine periculo novimus, et in praeruptis securas cibum capere: deinde cum tondentur, deonerari superfluis. Harum gregi comparatur Ecclesia, multas in se habens animarum virtutes, quae per lavacrum superflua peccata deponant, quae mysticam fidem et moralem gratiam deferant Christo, quae crucem Domini Jesu loquantur.

38. And farther on: Your teeth are like a flock of sheep that are shorn, which have come up from the pool, which all bear twins, and none is barren among them, your lips are as a cord of scarlet. Song of Songs 4:2-3 This is no slight praise. First by the pleasing comparison to those that are shorn; for we know that goats both feed in high places without risk, and securely find their food in rugged places, and then when shorn are freed from what is superfluous. The Church is likened to a flock of these, having in itself the many virtues of those souls which through the laver lay aside the superfluity of sins, and offer to Christ the mystic faith and the grace of good living, which speak of the cross of the Lord Jesus.

39. In iis formosa est Ecclesia. Unde ad eam Verbum Deus dicit: Tota formosa es, proxima mea; et reprehensio non est in te; quia culpa demersa est. Ades huc a Libano, Sponsa, ades huc a Libano: transibis, et pertransibis a principio fidei (Ibid., 7, 8); eo quod renuntians mundo transierit saeculum, pertransierit ad Christum. Et iterum dicit ad eam Deus Verbum: Quid pulchra et suavis facta es charitas in deliciis tuis? Statura tua similis facta est palmae, et ubera tua botris (Cant. VII, 6, 7).

39. The Church is beautiful in them. So that God the Word says to her: You are all fair, My love, and there is no blemish in you, for guilt has been washed away. Come hither from Lebanon, My spouse, come hither from Lebanon, from the beginning of faith will you pass through and pass on,

Song of Songs 4:7-8 because, renouncing the world, she passed through things temporal and passed on to Christ. And again, God the Word says to her: How beautiful and sweet are you made, O love, in your delights! Your stature has become like that of a palm-tree, and your breasts like bunches of grapes. Song of Songs 7:6-7

40. Cui respondet Ecclesia: Quis dabit te, frater, mihi lactentem ubera matris meae? Inveniens te foris, osculabor te: et quidem non spernent me. Assumam te, et inducam te in domum matris meae, et in secretum ejus quae concepit me. Docebis me (Cant. VIII, 1, 2). Vides quemadmodum delectata munere gratiarum, ad interiora cupit mysteria pervenire, et omnes sensus suos consecrare Christo? Adhuc quaerit, adhuc suscitat charitatem, et suscitari sibi eam poscit a filiabus Hierusalem, quarum gratia, hoc est, animarum fidelium, Sponsum in amorem sui uberiorem desiderat provocari.

40. And the Church answers Him, Who will give You to me, my Brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother? If I find You without, I will kiss You, and indeed they will not despise me. I will take You, and bring You into the house of my mother; and into the secret chamber of her that conceived me. You shall teach me. Song of Songs 8:1-2 You see how, delighted with the gifts of grace, she longs to attain to the innermost mysteries, and to consecrate all her affections to Christ. She still seeks, she still stirs up His love, and asks of the daughters of Jerusalem to stir it up for her, and desires that by their beauty, which is that of faithful souls, her spouse may be incited to ever richer love for her.

41. Unde Dominus Jesus et ipse invitatus tantae studio charitatis, pulchritudine decoris et gratiae; quod nulla jam in ablutis delicta sorderent, dicit ad Ecclesiam: Pone me ut signaculum in cor tuum, ut sigillum in brachium tuum (Ibid., 6); hoc est, decora es, proxima mea, tota formosa es, nihil tibi deest. Pone me ut signaculum in cor tuum; quo fides tua pleno fulgeat sacramento. Opera quoque tua luceant, et imaginem Dei praeferant, ad cujus imaginem facta es. Charitas tua nulla persecutione minuatur, quam multa aqua excludere, flumina undare non possint (Ibid. 7).

41. So that the Lord Jesus Himself, invited by such eager love and by the beauty of comeliness and grace, since now no offenses pollute the baptized, says to the Church: Place Me as a seal upon your heart, as a signet upon your arm; Song of Songs 8:6 that is, you are comely, My beloved, you are all fair, nothing is wanting to you. Place Me as a seal upon your heart, that your faith may shine forth in the fullness of the sacrament. Let your works also shine and set forth the image of God in the Whose image you were made. Let no persecution lessen your love, which many waters cannot quench, nor many rivers drown.

42. Unde repete quia accepisti signaculum spiritale, spiritum sapientiae et intellectus, spiritum consilii atque virtutis, spiritum cognitionis atque pietatis, spiritum sancti timoris (Esai. XI, 2): et serva quod accepisti. Signavit te Deus Pater, confirmavit te Christus Dominus; et dedit pignus Spiritus in cordibus tuis, sicut Apostolica lectione didicisti (II Cor. V, 2).

42. And then remember that you received the seal of the Spirit; the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and strength, the spirit of knowledge and godliness, and the spirit of holy fear, Isaiah 11:2 and preserved what you received. God the Father sealed you, Christ the Lord strengthened you, and gave the earnest of the Spirit in your heart, 2 Corinthians 5:5 as you have learned in the lesson from the Apostle.

DE MYSTICO DOMINICI altaris convivio: quod ne quispiam minoris faciat, ostenditur Synagogae sacris antiquius esse; cum in sacrificio Melchisedech expressum fuerit: ipso autem manna longe praestantius, cum sit corpus Christi; ac inter utrumque perelegans comparatio instituitur.

Of the mystical feast of the altar of the Lord. Lest any should think lightly of it, St. Ambrose shows that it is of higher antiquity than the sacred rites of the Jews, since it was foreshadowed in the sacrifice of Melchisedech, and far better than the manna, as being the Body of Christ.

43. His abluta plebs dives insignibus, ad Christi contendit altaria, dicens: Et introibo ad altare Dei, ad Deum qui laetificat juventutem meam (Psal. XLII, 4); depositis enim inveterati erroris exuviis, renovata in aquilae juventute, coeleste illud festinat adire convivium. Venit igitur, et videns sacrosanctum altare compositum, exclamans ait: Parasti in conspectu meo mensam. Hanc loquentem inducit David dicens: Dominus pascit me, et nihil mihi deerit: in loco pascuae ibi me collocavit. Super aquam refectionis educavit me (Psal. XXII, 1, 2). Et infra: Nam etsi ambulem in medio umbrae mortis, non timebo mala; quoniam tu mecum es. Virga tua et baculus tuus, ipsa me consolata sunt. Parasti in conspectu meo mensam adversus eos qui tribulant me. Impinguasti in oleo caput meum, et poculum tuum inebrians quam praeclarum est!

43. The cleansed people, rich with these adornments, hastens to the altar of Christ, saying: I will go to the altar of God, to God Who makes glad my youth; for having laid aside the slough of ancient error, renewed with an eagle's youth, it hastens to approach that heavenly feast. It comes, and seeing the holy altar arranged, cries out: You have prepared a table in my sight. David introduces the people as speaking, where he says: The Lord feeds me, and nothing shall be wanting to me, in a place of good pasture has He placed me. He has led me forth by the water of refreshment. And later: For though I walk in the midst of the shadow of death, I will fear no evils, for You are with me. Your rod and Your staff have comforted me. You have prepared in my sight a table against them that trouble me. You have anointed my head with oil, and Your inebriating cup, how excellent it is!

44. Nunc illud consideremus, ne quis forte visibilia videns (quoniam quae sunt invisibilia, non videntur, nec possunt humanis oculis comprehendi) dicat forte: Judaeis Deus manna pluit, pluit coturnices (Exod. XVI, 13): Ecclesiae autem illi dilectae haec sunt quae praeparavit; de quibus dictum est: Quod oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit, nec in cor hominis ascendit, quae praeparavit Deus diligentibus eum (I Cor. II, 9). Ergo ne quis hoc dicat, summo studio volumus comprobare quod et antiquiora sunt sacramenta Ecclesiae quam Synagogae, et praestantiora quam manna est.

44. We must now pay attention, lest perchance any one seeing that what is visible (for things which are invisible cannot be seen nor comprehended by human eyes), should say, God rained down manna and rained down quails upon the Jews, Exodus 16:13 but for the Church beloved of Him the things which He has prepared are those of which it is said: That eye has not seen, nor ear heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man, what things God has prepared for them that love Him. 1 Corinthians 2:9 So, lest any one should say this, we will take great pains to prove that the sacraments of the Church are both more ancient than those of the synagogue, and more excellent than the manna.

45. Antiquiora docet lectio Genesis quae decursa est (Gen. XIV, 18); Synagoga enim ex lege Moysi principium sumpsit (Exod. XXXIV, 1 et seq.): Abraham vero longe anterior, qui victis hostibus, et nepote proprio recepto. cum potiretur victoria; tunc illi occurrit Melchisedech, et protulit ea quae Abraham veneratus accepit. Non Abraham protulit, sed Melchisedech; qui inducitur sine patre, sine matre, neque initium dierum, neque finem habens, similis autem Filio Dei: de quo ait Paulus ad Hebraeos: Quia manet sacerdos in perpetuum (Hebr. VII et seq.); qui interpretatione Latina dicitur rex justitiae, rex pacis.

45. The lesson of Genesis just read shows that they are more ancient, for the synagogue took its origin from the law of Moses. But Abraham was far earlier, who, after conquering the enemy, and recovering his own nephew, as he was enjoying his victory, was met by Melchisedech, who brought forth those things which Abraham reverently received. It was not Abraham who brought them forth, but Melchisedech, who is introduced without father, without mother, having neither beginning of days, nor ending, but like the Son of God, of Whom Paul says to the Hebrews: that He remains a priest for ever, Who in the Latin version is called King of righteousness and King of peace.

46. Non agnoscis quis iste sit? Potest homo esse rex justitiae, cum ipse vix justus sit? Potest esse rex pacis, cum vix possit esse pacificus? Sine matre secundum divinitatem; quia ex Patre Deo genitus est, unius substantiae cum Patre: sine patre secundum incarnationem, qui natus ex Virgine est: initium et finem non habens, quia ipse est initium et finis omnium, primus et novissimus. Non igitur humani, sed divini est muneris sacramentum quod accepisti, ab eo prolatum qui benedixit fidei patrem Abraham, illum cujus gratiam et gesta miraris.

46. Do you recognize Who that is? Can a man be king of righteousness, when himself he can hardly be righteous? Can he be king of peace, when he can hardly be peaceable? He it is Who is without mother according to His Godhead, for He was begotten of God the Father, of one substance with the Father; without a father according to His Incarnation, for He was born of a Virgin; having neither beginning nor end, for He is the beginning and end of all things, the first and the last. The sacrament, then, which you received is the gift not of man but of God, brought forth by Him Who blessed Abraham the father of faith, whose grace and deeds we admire.

47. Probatum est antiquiora esse Ecclesiae sacramenta, nunc cognosce potiora. Revera (De Consec. dist. 2, c. Revera) mirabile est quod manna Deus pluerit patribus, et quotidiano coeli pascebantur alimento. Unde dictum est: Panem angelorum manducavit homo (Psal. LXXVII, 25). Sed tamen panem illum qui manducaverunt, omnes in deserto mortui sunt: ista autem esca quam accipis, iste panis vivus qui descendit de coelo, vitae aeternae substantiam subministrat; et quicumque hunc manducaverit, non morietur in aeternum: et est corpus Christi.

47. We have proved the sacraments of the Church to be the more ancient, now recognize that they are superior. In very truth it is a marvellous thing that God rained manna on the fathers, and fed them with daily food from heaven; so that it is said, So man ate angels' food. But yet all those who ate that food died in the wilderness, but that food which you receive, that living Bread which came down from heaven, furnishes the substance of eternal life; and whosoever shall eat of this Bread shall never die, and it is the Body of Christ.

48. Considera nunc (De Consec. dist. 2, c. Revera, § Considera) utrum praestantior sit panis angelorum, an caro Christi, quae utique corpus est vitae. Manna illud e coelo, hoc supra coelum; illud coeli, hoc Domini coelorum: illud corruptioni obnoxium, si in diem alterum servaretur; hoc alienum ab omni corruptione, quod quicumque religiose gustaverit, corruptionem sentire non poterit. Illis aqua de petra fluxit (Exod. XVII, 6), tibi sanguis e Christo (Joan.VI, 55 et seq.): illos ad horam satiavit aqua, te sanguis diluit in aeternum. Judaeus bibit, et sitit: tu cum biberis, sitire non poteris: et illud in umbra, hoc in veritate.

48. Now consider whether the bread of angels be more excellent or the Flesh of Christ, which is indeed the body of life. That manna came from heaven, this is above the heavens; that was of heaven, this is of the Lord of the heavens; that was liable to corruption, if kept a second day, this is far from all corruption, for whosoever shall taste it holily shall not be able to feel corruption. For them water flowed from the rock, for you Blood flowed from Christ; water satisfied them for a time, the Blood satiates you for eternity. The Jew drinks and thirsts again, you after drinking will be beyond the power of thirsting; that was in a shadow, this is in truth.

49. Si illud quod miraris, umbra est; quantum istud est, cujus et umbram miraris! Audi quia umbra est quae apud patres facta est: Bibebant, inquit, de consequenti eos petra: petra autem erat Christus. Sed non in pluribus eorum complacitum est Deo; nam prostrati sunt in deserto (I Cor. X, 4, 5). Haec autem in figura facta sunt nostra. Cognovisti praestantiora; potior est enim lux quam umbra, veritas quam figura, corpus auctoris quam manna de coelo.

49. If that which you so wonder at is but shadow, how great must that be whose very shadow you wonder at. See now what happened in the case of the fathers was shadow: They drank, it is said, of that Rock that followed them, and that Rock was Christ. But with many of them God was not well pleased, for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were done in a figure concerning us. 1 Corinthians 10:4 You recognize now which are the more excellent, for light is better than shadow, truth than a figure, the Body of its Giver than the manna from heaven.

CAPUT IX

NE QUIS EXTERNA perculsus specie, in fide fluctuet, plurimis exemplis, quibus mutatam aut victam fuisse naturam constat, in medium allatis, e pane veram Christi carnem fieri evincit. Postremo nonnullis quae ad effectus ejus, utentium dispositiones ac similia pertinent, figurate propositis, tractatum claudit.

In order that no one through observing the outward part should waver in faith, many instances are brought forward wherein the outward nature has been changed, and so it is proved that bread is made the true body of Christ. The treatise then is brought to a termination with certain remarks as to the effects of the sacrament, the disposition of the recipients, and such like.

50. Forte dicas: Aliud video, quomodo tu mihi asseris quod Christi corpus accipiam? Et hoc nobis adhuc superest ut probemus. Quantis igitur utimur exemplis! Probemus non hoc esse quod natura formavit, sed quod benedictio consecravit: majoremque vim esse benedictionis quam naturae; quia benedictione etiam natura ipsa mutatur.

50. Perhaps you will say, I see something else, how is it that you assert that I receive the Body of Christ? And this is the point which remains for us to prove. And what evidence shall we make use of? Let us prove that this is not what nature made, but what the blessing consecrated, and the power of blessing is greater than that of nature, because by blessing nature itself is changed.

51. Virgam tenebat Moyses, projecit eam, et facta est serpens (Exod. IV, 3, 4). Rursus prehendit caudam serpentis, et in virgae naturam revertit. Vides igitur prophetica gratia bis mutatam esse naturam et serpentis et virgae? Currebant Aegypti flumina puro aquarum meatu, subito de fontium venis sanguis coepit erumpere; et non erat potus in fluviis (Exod. VII, 20 et seq.). Rursus a prophetae prece cruor cessavit fluminum, aquarum natura remeavit. Circumclusus undique erat populus Hebraeorum, hinc Aegyptiis vallatus, inde mari clausus: virgam levavit Moyses, separavit se aqua, et in murorum specie congelavit, atque inter undas via pedestris apparuit (Exod. XIV, 21 et seq.). Jordanis retrorsum conversus contra naturam in sui fontis revertit exordium (Jos. III, 16). Nonne claret naturam vel maritimorum fluctuum vel fluvialis cursus esse mutatam? Sitiebat populus patrum, tetigit Moyses petram, et aqua de petra fluxit. Numquid non praeter naturam operata est gratia, ut aquam vomeret petra, quam non habebat natura? Merrha fluvius amarissimus erat, ut sitiens populus bibere non posset. Misit Moyses lignum in aquam, et amaritudinem suam aquarum natura deposuit (Exod. XV, 23 et seq.), quam infusa subito gratia temperavit. Sub Elisaeo propheta uni ex filiis prophetarum excussum est ferrum de securi, et statim mersum est. Rogavit Elisaeum, qui amiserat ferrum: misit etiam Elisaeus lignum in aquam, et ferrum natavit (IV Reg. VI, 6). Utique et hoc praeter naturam factum cognoscimus; gravior est enim ferri species, quam aquarum liquor.

51. Moses was holding a rod, he cast it down and it became a serpent. Exodus 4:3-4 Again, he took hold of the tail of the serpent and it returned to the nature of a rod. You see that by virtue of the prophetic office there were two changes, of the nature both of the serpent and of the rod. The streams of Egypt were running with a pure flow of water; of a sudden from the veins of the sources blood began to burst forth, and none could drink of the river. Again, at the prophet’s prayer the blood ceased, and the nature of water returned. The people of the Hebrews were shut in on every side, hemmed in on the one hand by the Egyptians, on the other by the sea; Moses lifted up his rod, the water divided and hardened like walls, and a way for the feet appeared between the waves. Jordan being turned back, returned, contrary to nature, to the source of its stream. Joshua 3:16 Is it not clear that the nature of the waves of the sea and of the river stream was changed? The people of the fathers thirsted, Moses touched the rock, and water flowed out of the rock. Exodus 17:6 Did not grace work a result contrary to nature, so that the rock poured forth water, which by nature it did not contain? Marah was a most bitter stream, so that the thirsting people could not drink. Moses cast wood into the water, and the water lost its bitterness, which grace of a sudden tempered. Exodus 15:25 In the time of Elisha the prophet one of the sons of the prophets lost the head from his axe, which sank. He who had lost the iron asked Elisha, who cast in a piece of wood and the iron swam. This, too, we clearly recognize as having happened contrary to nature, for iron is of heavier nature than water.

52. Advertimus igitur majoris esse virtutis gratiam quam naturam, et adhuc tamen propheticae benedictionis numeramus gratiam? Quod si tantum valuit humana benedictio, ut naturam converteret (III Reg. XVIII, 38); quid dicimus de ipsa consecratione divina, ubi verba ipsa Domini Salvatoris operantur? Nam sacramentum istud quod accipis, Christi sermone conficitur. Quod si tantum valuit sermo Eliae, ut ignem de coelo deponeret: non valebit Christi sermo, ut species mutet elementorum? De totius mundi operibus legisti: Quia ipse dixit, et facta sunt: ipse mandavit, et creata sunt, (Psal. CXLVIII, 5.De Consec., dist. 2, c. In quibus, § Cujus clare) sermo ergo Christi qui potuit ex nihilo facere quod non erat, non potest ea quae sunt, in id mutare, quod non erant? Non enim minus est novas rebus dare, quam mutare naturas.

52. We observe, then, that grace has more power than nature, and yet so far we have only spoken of the grace of a prophet's blessing. But if the blessing of man had such power as to change nature, what are we to say of that divine consecration where the very words of the Lord and Saviour operate? For that sacrament which you receive is made what it is by the word of Christ. But if the word of Elijah had such power as to bring down fire from heaven, shall not the word of Christ have power to change the nature of the elements? You read concerning the making of the whole world: He spoke and they were made, He commanded and they were created. Shall not the word of Christ, which was able to make out of nothing that which was not, be able to change things which already are into what they were not? For it is not less to give a new nature to things than to change them.

53. Sed quid argumentis utimur? Suis utamur exemplis, incarnationisque exemplo astruamus mysterii veritatem. Numquid naturae usus praecessit, cum Jesus Dominus ex Maria nasceretur? Si ordinem quaerimus, viro mixta femina generare consuevit. Liquet igitur quod praeter naturae ordinem Virgo generavit. Et hoc quod conficimus corpus, ex Virgine est: quid hic quaeris naturae ordinem in Christi corpore, cum praeter naturam sit ipse Dominus Jesus partus ex Virgine? Vera utique caro Christi, quae crucifixa est, quae sepulta est: vere ergo carnis illius sacramentum est.

53. But why make use of arguments? Let us use the examples He gives, and by the example of the Incarnation prove the truth of the mystery. Did the course of nature proceed as usual when the Lord Jesus was born of Mary? If we look to the usual course, a woman ordinarily conceives after connection with a man. And this body which we make is that which was born of the Virgin. Why do you seek the order of nature in the Body of Christ, seeing that the Lord Jesus Himself was born of a Virgin, not according to nature? It is the true Flesh of Christ which crucified and buried, this is then truly the Sacrament of His Body.

54. Ipse clamat Dominus Jesus: Hoc est corpus meum (Matth. XXVI, 26). Ante benedictionem verborum coelestium alia species nominatur, post consecrationem corpus significatur (De Consec. dist. 10, § Haec et his). Ipse dicit sanguinem suum. Ante consecrationem aliud dicitur, post consecrationem sanguis nuncupatur. Et tu dicis: Amen, hoc est, verum est. Quod os loquitur, mens interna fateatur: quod sermo sonat, affectus sentiat.

54. The Lord Jesus Himself proclaims: This is My Body. Matthew 26:26 Before the blessing of the heavenly words another nature is spoken of, after the consecration the Body is signified. He Himself speaks of His Blood. Before the consecration it has another name, after it is called Blood. And you say, Amen, that is, It is true. Let the heart within confess what the mouth utters, let the soul feel what the voice speaks.

55. His igitur sacramentis pascit Ecclesiam suam Christus, quibus animae firmatur substantia: meritoque videns profectum ejus gratiae continentem, dicit ad eam: Quam decora facta sunt ubera tua, soror mea sponsa! Quam decora facta sunt a vino: et odor vestimentorum tuorum super omnia aromata! Favus distillans labia tua, o sponsa, mel et lac sub lingua tua, et odor vestimentorum tuorum sicut odor Libani. Hortus conclusus, soror mea sponsa, hortus conclusus, fons signatus (Cant. IV, 10 et seq.). Quo significat signatum debere apud te manere mysterium, ne violetur operibus malae vitae, atque adulterio castitatis, ne divulgetur quibus non convenit, ne garrula loquacitate dispergatur in perfidos. Bona ergo debet esse fidei tuae custodia, ut intemerata vitae ac silentii integritas perseveret.

55. Christ, then, feeds His Church with these sacraments, by means of which the substance of the soul is strengthened, and seeing the continual progress of her grace, He rightly says to her: How comely are your breasts, my sister, my spouse, how comely they are made by wine, and the smell of your garments is above all spices. A dropping honeycomb are your lips, my spouse, honey and milk are under your tongue, and the smell of your garments is as the smell of Lebanon. A garden enclosed is my sister, my spouse, a garden enclosed, a fountain sealed. By which He signifies that the mystery ought to remain sealed up with you, that it be not violated by the deeds of an evil life, and pollution of chastity, that it be not made known to thou, for whom it is not fitting, nor by garrulous talkativeness it be spread abroad among unbelievers. Your guardianship of the faith ought therefore to be good, that integrity of life and silence may endure unblemished.

56. Unde et Ecclesia altitudinem servans mysteriorum coelestium, rejicit a se graviores venti procellas, et invitat vernantis gratiae suavitatem: et sciens quod hortus suus Christo displicere non possit, ipsum advocat Sponsum dicens: Exsurge aquilo, et veni auster: perfla hortum meum, et defluant unguenta mea (Ibid., 16). Descendat frater meus in hortum suum, et edat fructum pomiferarum suarum (Cant. V, 1). Bonas enim arbores et fructiferas habet, quae radices suas tinxerint sacri fontis irriguo, et in bonos fructus novae fecunditatis germine pullulaverint; ut non jam prophetica caedantur securi, sed Evangelica ubertate fecundentur (Matth. III, 10).

56. For which reason, too, the Church, guarding the depth of the heavenly mysteries, repels the furious storms of wind, and calls to her the sweetness of the grace of spring, and knowing that her garden cannot displease Christ, invites the Bridegroom, saying: Arise, O north wind, and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, and let my ointments flow down. Let my Brother come down to His garden, and eat the fruit of His trees. For it has good trees and fruitful, which have dipped their roots in the water of the sacred spring, and with fresh growth have shot forth into good fruits, so as now not to be cut with the axe of the prophet, but to abound with the fruitfulness of the Gospel.

57. Denique fertilitate earum etiam Dominus delectatus respondet: Ingressus sum in hortum meum, soror mea Sponsa: vindemiavi myrrham meam cum unguentis meis, manducavi cibum meum cum melle meo, bibi potum meum cum lacte meo (Cant. V, 1). Quare cibum et potum dixerit, fidelis intellige. Illud autem non dubium, quod in nobis ipse manducat et bibit, sicut in nobis legisti quia in carcere esse se dicit (Matth. XXV, 36).

57. Lastly, the Lord also, delighted with their fertility, answers: I have entered into My garden, My sister, My spouse; I have gathered My myrrh with My spices, I have eaten My meat with My honey, I have drunk My drink with My milk. Song of Songs 5:1 Understand, you faithful, why He spoke of meat and drink. And there is no doubt that He Himself eats and drinks in us, as you have read that He says that in our persons He is in prison. Matthew 25:36

58. Unde et Ecclesia videns tantam gratiam, hortatur filios suos, hortatur proximos, ut ad sacramenta concurrant, dicens: Edite proximi mei, et bibite, et inebriamini, fratres mei (Cant. V, 1). Quid edamus, quid bibamus, alibi tibi per Prophetam Spiritus sanctus expressit dicens: Gustate et videte quoniam suavis est Dominus: beatus vir qui sperat in eo (Psal. XXXIII, 9). In illo sacramento (De Consec. dist. 2, cap., In illo sacram.) Christus est; quia corpus est Christi: non ergo corporalis esca, sed spiritalis est. Unde et Apostolus de typo ejus ait: Quia patres nostri escam spiritalem manducaverunt, et potum spiritalem biberunt (ICor. X, 3); corpus enim Dei corpus est spiritale: corpus Christi corpus est divini Spiritus; quia Spiritus Christus, ut legimus: Spiritus ante faciem nostram Christus Dominus (Thren. IV, 20). Et in Petri Epistola habemus: Christus pro nobis mortuus est (I Pet. II, 21). Denique cor nostrum esca ista confirmat, et potus iste laetificat cor hominis, ut Propheta memoravit (Psal. CIII, 15).

58. Wherefore, too, the Church, beholding so great grace, exhorts her sons and her friends to come together to the sacraments, saying: Eat, my friends, and drink and be inebriated, my brother. Song of Songs 5:1 What we eat and what we drink the Holy Spirit has elsewhere made plain by the prophet, saying, Taste and see that the Lord is good, blessed is the man that hopes in Him. In that sacrament is Christ, because it is the Body of Christ, it is therefore not bodily food but spiritual. Whence the Apostle says of its type: Our fathers ate spiritual food and drank spiritual drink, 1 Corinthians 10:3 for the Body of God is a spiritual body; the Body of Christ is the Body of the Divine Spirit, for the Spirit is Christ, as we read: The Spirit before our face is Christ the Lord. Lamentations 4:20 And in the Epistle of Peter we read: Christ died for us. 1 Peter 2:21 Lastly, that food strengthens our heart, and that drink makes glad the heart of man, as the prophet has recorded.

59. Unde adepti omnia, sciamus regeneratos nos esse: nec dicamus, quomodo regenerati sumus? Numquid in ventrem matris nostrae introivimus, et renati sumus? non agnosco usum naturae. Sed nullus hic naturae ordo, ubi excellentia gratiae est. Denique non semper usus naturae generationem facit: generatum ex Virgine Christum Dominum confitemur, et naturae ordinem denegamus. Non enim ex viro Maria concepit: sed de Spiritu sancto in utero accepit, ut dicit Matthaeus: Quia inventa est in utero habens de Spiritu sancto (Matth. I, 18). Si ergo superveniens Spiritus sanctus in Virginem, conceptionem operatus est, et generationis munus implevit: non utique dubitandum est quod superveniens in fontem, vel super eos qui baptismum consequuntur, veritatem regenerationis operetur.

59. So, then, having obtained everything, let us know that we are born again, but let us not say, How are we born again? Have we entered a second time into our mother’s womb and been born again? I do not recognize here the course of nature. But here there is no order of nature, where is the excellence of grace. And again, it is not always the course of nature which brings about conception, for we confess that Christ the Lord was conceived of a Virgin, and reject the order of nature. For Mary conceived not of man, but was with child of the Holy Spirit, as Matthew says: She was found with child of the Holy Spirit. Matthew 1:18 If, then, the Holy Spirit coming down upon the Virgin wrought the conception, and effected the work of generation, surely we must not doubt but that, coming down upon the Font, or upon those who receive Baptism, He effects the reality of the new birth.

MODERATIONIS LAUS. QUAM necessaria sit ea virtus praefectis Ecclesiae, potissimum Dominicae charitatis ac mansuetudinis exemplo demonstrari. Ab hac ergo cum desciverint Novatiani, eos pro Christi discipulis habendos non esse: quorum superbia et inclementia castigatur.

St. Ambrose writes in praise of gentleness, pointing out how needful that grace is for the rulers of the Church, and commended to them by the meekness of Christ. As the Novatians have fallen away from this, they cannot be considered disciples of Christ. Their pride and harshness are inveighed against.

1. Si virtutum finis ille est maximus, qui plurimorum spectat profectum, moderatio prope omnium pulcherrima est: quae ne ipsos quidem quos damnat, offendit; et quos damnaverit, dignos solet facere absolutione. Denique sola est, quae Domini quaesitam sanguine Ecclesiam propagaverit, imitatrix beneficii coelestis, et redemptionis universorum salubri fine temperans, quem ferre possint aures hominum, mentes non refugere, non pavere animi.

1. If the highest end of virtue is that which aims at the advancement of most, gentleness is the most lovely of all, which does not hurt even those whom it condemns, and usually renders those whom it condemns worthy of absolution. Moreover, it is the only virtue which has led to the increase of the Church which the Lord sought at the price of His own Blood, imitating the lovingkindness of heaven, and aiming at the redemption of all, seeks this end with a gentleness which the ears of men can endure, in presence of which their hearts do not sink, nor their spirits quail.

2. Etenim qui studet humanae infirmitatis emendare vitia, ipsam infirmitatem suis debet sustinere, et quodammodo pensare humeris (Luc. XV, 5), non abjicere. Nam pastor ille Evangelicus lassam ovem vexisse legitur, non abjecisse (De Poenit. dist. I, c. Serpens, § Nam pastor). Et Salomon ait: Noli justus esse nimium (Eccl. VII, 17); debet enim justitiam temperare moderatio. Nam quemadmodum se tibi curandum praebeat, quem fastidio habeas; qui contemptui se, non compassioni medico suo putet futurum?

2. For he who endeavours to amend the faults of human weakness ought to bear this very weakness on his own shoulders, let it weigh upon himself, not cast it off. For we read that the Shepherd in the Gospel Luke 15:5 carried the weary sheep, and did not cast it off. And Solomon says: Be not overmuch righteous; Ecclesiastes 7:17 for restraint should temper righteousness. For how shall he offer himself to you for healing whom you despise, who thinks that he will be an object of contempt, not of compassion, to his physician?

3. Ideo Dominus Jesus compassus nobis est; ut ad se vocaret, non ut deterreret. Mitis venit, venit humilis. Denique ait: Venite ad me omnes, qui laboratis, et onerati estis, et ego vos reficiam (Matth. XI, 28). Reficit ergo Dominus Jesus, non excludit, neque abjicit: meritoque tales discipulos elegit, qui Dominicae voluntatis interpretes, plebem Dei colligerent, non repudiarent. Unde liquet eos inter Christi discipulos non esse habendos, qui dura pro mitibus, superba pro humilibus sequenda opinantur: et cum ipsi quaerant Domini misericordiam, aliis eam denegant; ut sunt doctores Novatianorum, qui mundos se appellant.

3. Therefore had the Lord Jesus compassion upon us in order to call us to Himself, not frighten us away. He came in meekness, He came in humility, and so He said: Come unto Me, all you that labour and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you. Matthew 11:28 So, then, the Lord Jesus refreshes, and does not shut out nor cast off, and fitly chose such disciples as should be interpreters of the Lord's will, as should gather together and not drive away the people of God. Whence it is clear that they are not to be counted among the disciples of Christ, who think that harsh and proud opinions should be followed rather than such as are gentle and meek; persons who, while they themselves seek God's mercy, deny it to others, such as are the teachers of the Novatians, who call themselves pure.

4. Quid his superbius, cum Scriptura dicat: quia nemo mundus a peccato, nec unius diei infans (Job. XIV, 4); et David clamet: A delicto meo munda me (Psal. L, 2)? Sanctiores isti quam David, de cujus nasci familia Christus incarnationis elegit mysterio, cujus posteritas aula coelestis est, utero virginali suscipiens mundi Redemptorem? Quid autem durius, quam ut indicant poenitentiam, quam non relaxent; cum utique veniam negando, incentivum auferant poenitentiae? Nemo enim potest bene agere poenitentiam, nisi qui speraverit indulgentiam (De Poenit., dist. 1, cap. Nemo potest).

4. What can show more pride than this, since the Scripture says: No one is free from sin, not even an infant of a day old; and David cries out: Cleanse me from my sin. Are they more holy than David, of whose family Christ vouchsafed to be born in the mystery of the Incarnation, whose descendant is that heavenly Hall which received the world's Redeemer in her virgin womb? For what is more harsh than to inflict a penance which they do not relax, and by refusing pardon to take away the incentive to penance and repentance? Now no one can repent to good purpose unless he hopes for mercy.

CAPUT II.

QUOD NOVATIANI DICUNT se non nisi lapsis negare communionem, hoc neque cum Scriptura, neque cum sua ipsorum doctrina congruere: quod vero divinae potestatis reverentiam praetexunt, eos hoc ipso in illam esse injurios; cum is injuriam inferat, qui creditum sibi munus aut ejus partem nolit exercere: caeterum ligandi et solvendi jus quod haeresi non potest attribui, pulchre vindicari ab Ecclesia, quippe quae Spiritu sancto id acceperit, in quem isti superbe agunt.

The assertion of the Novatians that they refuse communion only to the lapsed agrees neither with the teaching of holy Scripture nor with their own. And whereas they allege as a pretext their reverence for the divine power, they really are contemning it, inasmuch as it is a sign of low estimation not to use the whole of a power entrusted to one. But the Church rightly claims the power of binding and loosing, which heretics have not, inasmuch as she has received it from the Holy Spirit, against Whom they act presumptuously.

5. Sed negant his oportere reddi communionem, qui praevaricatione lapsi sunt. Si unum tantum crimen exciperent sacrilegii, cui veniam negarent, dure quidem, sed tamen divinis tantum redargui viderentur sententiis, assertionibus tamen suis convenirent; Dominus enim crimen nullum excepit, qui peccata donavit omnia. At cum omnia peccata Stoicorum quodam more paribus putent aestimanda mensuris, et aeque eum qui gallum, ut aiunt, gallinaceum, atque illum qui patrem suffocaverit, perpetuo asserant coelestibus abdicandos mysteriis; quomodo unius criminis objiciunt reos, cum indignissimum esse non possint etiam ipsi negare, ut paucorum poena perveniat ad multos?

5. But they say that those should not be restored to communion who have fallen into denial of the faith. If they made the crime of sacrilege the only exception to receiving forgiveness, they would be acting harshly indeed, and, as it would seem, would be in opposition to the divine utterances only, while consistent with their own assertions. For when the Lord forgave all sins, He made an exception of none. But since, as it were after the fashion of the Stoics, they think that all sins are equal in gravity, and assert that he who has stolen a common fowl, as they say, no less than he who has smothered his father, should be for ever excluded from the divine mysteries, how can they select those guilty of one special offense, since even they themselves cannot deny that it is most unjust that the penalty of one should extend to many?

6. [Alias cap. II.] Sed aiunt se Domino deferre reverentiam, cui soli remittendorum criminum potestatem reservent. Immo nulli majorem injuriam faciunt, quam qui ejus volunt mandata rescindere, commissum munus refundere. Nam cum ipse in Evangelio suo dixerit Dominus Jesus: Accipite Spiritum sanctum; quorum remiseritis peccata, remittuntur eis: et quorum detinueritis, detenta erunt (Joan. XX, 22, 23); quis est ergo qui magis honorat, utrum qui mandatis obtemperat, an qui resistit?

6. They affirm that they are showing great reverence for God, to Whom alone they reserve the power of forgiving sins. But in truth none do Him greater injury than they who choose to prune His commandments and reject the office entrusted to them. For inasmuch as the Lord Jesus Himself said in the Gospel: Receive the Holy Spirit: whosesoever sins you forgive they are forgiven unto them, and whosesoever sins you retain, they are retained, John 20:22-23 who is it that honours Him most, he who obeys His bidding or he who rejects it?

7. Ecclesia in utroque servat obedientiam, ut peccatum et alliget et relaxet: haeresis in altero immitis, in altero inobediens; vult ligare, quod non resolvat: non vult solvere, quod ligavit; in quo se sua damnat sententia. Dominus enim par jus et solvendi esse voluit et ligandi, qui utrumque pari conditione permisit (De Poenit., dist. 1, cap. Verbum Dei, § Dominus). Ergo qui solvendi jus non habet, nec ligandi habet. Sicut enim secundum Dominicam sententiam, qui ligandi jus habet, et solvendi habet: ita istorum assertio se ipsam strangulat; ut quia solvendi sibi jus negant, negare debeant et ligandi. Quomodo igitur potest alterum licere, alterum non licere? Quibus donatum utrumque est, aut utrumque licere manifestum est, aut utrumque non licere certum est. Ecclesiae utrumque licet, haeresi utrumque non licet; jus enim hoc solis permissum sacerdotibus est. Recte igitur hoc Ecclesia vindicat, quae veros sacerdotes habet: haeresis vindicare non potest, quae sacerdotes Dei non habet. Non vindicando autem ipsa de se pronuntiat, quod cum sacerdotes non habeat, jus sibi vindicare non debeat sacerdotale. Ita impudenti contumacia pudentem cernimus confessionem.

7. The Church holds fast its obedience on either side, by both retaining and remitting sin; heresy is on the one side cruel, and on the other disobedient; wishes to bind what it will not loosen, and will not loosen what it has bound, whereby it condemns itself by its own sentence. For the Lord willed that the power of binding and of loosing should be alike, and sanctioned each by a similar condition. So he who has not the power to loose has not the power to bind. For as, according to the Lord’s word, he who has the power to bind has also the power to loose, their teaching destroys itself, inasmuch as they who deny that they have the power of loosing ought also to deny that of binding. For how can the one be allowed and the other disallowed? It is plain and evident that either each is allowed or each is disallowed in the case of those to whom each has been given. Each is allowed to the Church, neither to heresy, for this power has been entrusted to priests alone. Rightly, therefore, does the Church claim it, which has true priests; heresy, which has not the priests of God, cannot claim it. And by not claiming this power heresy pronounces its own sentence, that not possessing priests it cannot claim priestly power. And so in their shameless obstinacy a shamefaced acknowledgment meets our view.

8. Specta etiam illud, quoniam qui Spiritum sanctum accepit, et solvendi peccati potestatem et ligandi accepit. Sic enim scriptum est: Accipite Spiritum sanctum; quorum remiseritis peccata, remittuntur: et quorum detinueritis, detenta erunt (Joan XX, 22, 23). Ergo qui solvere non potest peccatum, non habet Spiritum sanctum. Munus Spiritus sancti est officium sacerdotis, jus autem Spiritus sancti in solvendis ligandisque criminibus est; quomodo igitur munus ejus vindicant, de cujus diffidunt jure et potestate?

8. Consider, too, the point that he who has received the Holy Ghost has also received the power of forgiving and of retaining sin. For thus it is written: Receive the Holy Spirit: whosesoever sins you forgive, they are forgiven unto them, and whosesoever sins you retain, they are retained. John 20:22-23 So, then, he who has not received power to forgive sins has not received the Holy Spirit. The office of the priest is a gift of the Holy Spirit, and His right it is specially to forgive and to retain sins. How, then, can they claim His gift who distrust His power and His right?

9. Quid! quod insolentiores sunt. Nam cum ad misericordiam promptior quam ad severitatem sit Spiritus Dei; quod ait se velle, id nolunt: quod nolle, hoc agunt; cum vindicare judicis sit, remittere misericordis. Tolerabilius igitur, Novatiane, remitteres, quam ligares; aliud enim quasi delinquendi parcus usurpares, aliud quasi aerumnae compassus ignosceres.

9. And what is to be said of their excessive arrogance? For although the Spirit of God is more inclined to mercy than to severity, their will is opposed to that which He wills, and they do that which He wills not; whereas it is the office of a judge to punish, but of mercy to forgive. It would be more endurable, Novatian, that you should forgive than that you should bind. In the one case you would assume the right as one who rarely offended; in the other you would forgive as one who had fellow-feeling with the misery of sin.

CAPUT III.

IISDEM NOVATIANIS VENIAM gravioribus tantum criminibus abs se denegari opponentibus, respondet S. Doctor hac sententia ab illis sectae suae parentem rursus damnari, et offendi ipsummet Deum, qui peccatorum quorumlibet remittendorum fecit potestatem: sed majoribus delictis majorem quoque poenitentiam adhibendam esse. Adjicit autem ipsos in hoc perversos sese praebere, quod hujusmodi culparum distinctio severitatis materiam Deo relinquat: cujus misericordiam in incarnatione Christi adeo mirabiliter emicantem imitari detrectant.

To the argument of the Novatians, that they only deny forgiveness in the case of greater sins, St. Ambrose replies, that this is also an offense against God, Who gave the power to forgive all sins, but that of course a more severe penance must follow in case of graver sins. He points out likewise that this distinction as to the gravity of sins assigns, as it were, severity to God, Whose mercy in the Incarnation is overlooked by the Novatians.

10. Sed aiunt se, exceptis gravioribus criminibus, relaxare veniam levioribus. Non hoc quidem auctor vestri erroris Novatianus, qui nemini poenitentiam dandam putavit; ea scilicet contemplatione, ut quod ipse non posset solvere, non ligaret; ne ligando sperari a se faceret solutionem. In eo igitur patrem vestrum propria damnatis sententia, qui distinctionem peccatorum facitis, quae solvenda a vobis putetis, et quae sine remedio esse arbitremini: sed Deus distinctionem non facit, qui misericordiam suam promisit omnibus, et relaxandi licentiam sacerdotibus suis sine ulla exceptione concessit (De Poenit., dist. 1, cap. Deus). Sed qui culpam exaggeraverit, exaggeret etiam poenitentiam; majora enim crimina majoribus abluuntur fletibus. Ita nec Novatianus probatur, qui veniam interclusit omnibus: nec vos imitatores ejusdem et condemnatores; quia ibi minuitis studia poenitentiae, ubi augeri oportet; quia graviora peccata majoribus sustentanda fulcris docuit Christi misericordia.

10. But they say that, with the exception of graver sins, they grant forgiveness to those of less weight. This is not the teaching of your father, Novatian, who thought that no one should be admitted to penance, considering that what he was unable to loose he would not bind, lest by binding he should inspire the hope that he would loose. So that your father is condemned by your own sentence, you who make a distinction between sins, some of which you consider that you can loose, and others which you consider to be without remedy. But God does not make a distinction, Who has promised His mercy to all, and granted to His priests the power of loosing without any exception. But he who has heaped up sin must also increase his penitence. For greater sins are washed away by greater weeping. So neither is Novatian justified, who excluded all from pardon; nor are you, who imitate and, at the same time, condemn him, for you diminish zeal for penance where it ought to be increased, since the mercy of Christ has taught us that graver sins must be made good by greater efforts.

11. Quae autem ista perversitas est, ut vobis vindicetis possibilia concessu: Deo, ut ipsi dicitis, impossibilia reservetis? Hoc est sibi eligere causas ignoscendi, Deo materiam saeviendi relinquere. Et ubi est illud: Sit autem Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax, sicut scriptum est: ut justificeris in sermonibus tuis, et vincas cum judicaris (Rom. III, 4)? Ut agnoscamus igitur Deum misericordiae magis indulgentem esse, quam severitatis tenacem, ipse ait: Misericordiam malo, quam sacrificium (Ose. VI, 6).

Quomodo igitur vestrum potest acceptum esse sacrificium Deo, qui negatis misericordiam; cum ipse dicat nolle se mortem peccatoris, sed correctionem (Ezech. XVIII, 32) ?

11. And what perversity it is to claim for yourselves what can be forgiven, and, as you say, to reserve to God what cannot be forgiven. This would be to reserve to oneself the cases for mercy, to God those for severity. And what as to that saying: Let God be true but every man a liar, as it is written, That You might be justified in Your words, and overcome when You are judged? Romans 3:4 In order, then, that we may recognize that the God of mercy is rather prone to indulgence than to severity, it is said: I desire mercy rather than sacrifice. Hosea 6:6 How, then, can your sacrifice, who refuse mercy, be acceptable to God, since He says that He wills not the death of a sinner, but his correction? Ezekiel 18:32

12. Cujus interpres Apostolus ait: Quia Deus Filium suum mittens in similitudinem carnis peccati, et de peccato damnavit peccatum in carne; ut justificatio Legis impleretur in nobis (Rom. VIII, 3, 4). Non in similitudinem carnis ait; quia Christus veritatem suscepit carnis humanae, non similitudinem: neque in similitudinem peccati ait; quia peccatum non fecit, sed peccatum pro nobis factus est: sed venit in similitudinem carnis peccati (II Cor. V, 2), hoc est, suscepit similitudinem carnis peccatricis; ideo similitudinem, quia scriptum est: Et homo est, et quis agnoscet eum (Jerem. XVII, 3)? Homo erat in carne secundum hominem, qui agnosceretur: virtute supra hominem, qui non agnosceretur; ita et hic carnem habet nostram, sed carnis hujus vitia non habet.

12. Interpreting which truth, the Apostle says: For God, sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the Law might be fulfilled in us. Romans 8:3-4 He does not say in the likeness of flesh, for Christ took on Himself the reality not the likeness of flesh; nor does He say in the likeness of sin, for He did no sin, but was made sin for us. Yet He came in the likeness of sinful flesh; that is, He took on Him the likeness of sinful flesh, the likeness, because it is written: He is man, and who shall know Him? He was man in the flesh, according to His human nature, that He might be recognized, but in power was above man, that He might not be recognized, so He has our flesh, but has not the failings of this flesh.

13. Non enim sicut omnis homo est, ex virili erat et feminea permixtione generatus: sed natus de Spiritu sancto et de Virgine (Matth. I, 18), immaculatum corpus susceperat, quod non solum nulla vitia maculaverant, sed nec generationis aut conceptionis concretio injuriosa fuscaverat (S. Aug. lib. II, cont. Jul. Pelag., in princ. et fin.; lib II de Pec. orig., c. 40; et l. IV, contra duas Epist. Pet. c. 11). Nam omnes homines sub peccato nascimur, quorum ipse ortus in vitio est, sicut habes lectum, dicente David: Ecce enim in iniquitatibus conceptus sum, et in delictis peperit me mater mea (Psal. L, 5). Ideo Pauli caro corpus mortis erat, sicut ipse ait: Quis me liberabit de corpore mortis hujus (Rom. VII, 24)? Christi autem caro damnavit peccatum, quod nascendo non sensit, quod moriendo crucifixit; ut in carne nostra esset justificatio per gratiam, ubi erat ante colluvio per culpam.

13. For He was not begotten, as is every man, by intercourse between male and female, but born of the Holy Spirit and of the Virgin; He received a stainless body, which not only no sins polluted, but which neither the generation nor the conception had been stained by any admixture of defilement. For we men are all born under sin, and our very origin is in evil, as we read in the words of David: For lo, I was conceived in wickedness, and in sin did my mother bring me forth. Therefore the flesh of Paul was a body of death, as he himself says: Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? Romans 7:24 But the flesh of Christ condemned sin, which He felt not at His birth, and crucified by His death, so that in our flesh there might be justification through grace, in which before there had been pollution by guilt.

14. Quid ergo dicemus ad haec, nisi quod dixit Apostolus: Si Deus pro nobis, quis contra nos? Qui Filio proprio non pepercit, sed pro nobis omnibus tradidit eum; quomodo non etiam cum illo omnia nobis donavit? Quis accusabit adversus electos Dei? Deus qui justificat, quis est qui condemnet? Christus qui mortuus est, immo qui et resurrexit, qui est in dextera Dei, qui etiam interpellat pro nobis (Rom. VIII, 31 et seq.). Pro quibus ergo Christus interpellat, eos Novatianus accusat. Quos Christus ad salutem redemit, eos Novatianus damnat ad mortem. Quibus Christus dicit: Tollite jugum meum super vos, et discite a me quia mitis sum (Matth. XI, 29); Novatianus dicit: Immitis sum. Quibus Christus dicit; Invenietis requiem animabus vestris; jugum enim meum suave est, et onus meum leve est (Ibid., 30); his grave onus, et durum imponit jugum Novatianus.

14. What, then, shall we say to this, except that which the Apostle said: If God is for us, who is against us? He who spared not His own Son, but gave Him up for us all, how has He not with Him also given us all things? Who shall lay a charge against the elect? It is God Who justifies, who is he that shall condemn? It is Christ Who died, yea, Who also rose again, Who is at the right hand of God, Who also makes intercession for us. Romans 8:31-35 Novatian then brings charges against those for whom Christ intercedes. Those whom Christ has redeemed unto salvation Novatian condemns to death. Those to whom Christ says: Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me, for I am gentle, Matthew 11:29 Novatian says, I am not gentle. On those to whom Christ says: You shall find rest for your souls, for My yoke is pleasant and My burden is light, Matthew 11:30 Novatian lays a heavy burden and a hard yoke.

CAPUT IV.

PERGIT DIVINAM PROBARE misericordiam, eamque majorem esse quam severitatem Evangelici testimonii expositione ostendit. Eos vero qui Christum negaverunt coram hominibus, non eadem omnes ratione habendos esse, athletarum exemplo palam facit.

St. Ambrose proceeds with the proof of the divine mercy, and shows by the testimony of the Gospels that it prevails over severity, and he adduces the instance of athletes to show that of those who have denied Christ before men, all are not to be esteemed alike.

15. Quam propensus igitur ad misericordiam sit Dominus Jesus, licet ista satis instruant; tamen etiam ipse te doceat, qui cum adversus impressionem persecutionis instruere nos vellet, ait: Nolite timere eos qui occidunt corpus, animam autem non possunt occidere: sed potius eum timete, qui potest animam et corpus mittere in gehennam (Matth. X, 28). Et infra: Omnis ergo qui confessus me fuerit coram hominibus, confitebor et ego eum coram Patre meo, qui est in coelis: qui autem negaverit me coram hominibus, negabo et ego eum coram Patre meo, qui est in coelis (Ibid., 32, 33).

15. Although what has been said sufficiently shows how inclined the Lord Jesus is to mercy, let Him further instruct us with His own words, when He would arm us against the assaults of persecution. Fear not, He says, those who kill the body, but cannot kill the soul, but rather fear Him Who can cast both body and soul into hell. Matthew 10:28 And farther on: Every one, therefore, who shall confess Me before men, him will I also confess before My Father, Who is in heaven, but he who shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before My Father, Who is in heaven. Matthew 10:32-33

16. Ubi confitetur, pro omnibus confitetur, omnes complectitur: ubi negat, non omnes negat. Sicut enim supra habet: Omnis qui me confessus fuerit, confitebor et ego eum, hoc est, omnem: consequens erat ut infra quoque sic redderet: Omnis autem qui negaverit me. Sed ne omnes negare videretur, ita subjecit: Qui autem negaverit me coram hominibus, negabo et ego eum. Gratiam promittit omnibus, non omnibus minatur injuriam. Quod est miserationis, exaggerat: quod ultionis, extenuat.

16. Where He says that He will confess, He will confess every one. Where He speaks of denying, He does not speak of denying every one. For, whereas in the former clause He says, Every one who shall confess Me, him will I confess, we should expect that in the following clause He would also say, Every one who shall deny Me. But in order that He might not appear to deny every one, He concludes: But he who shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny. He promises favour to every one, but He does not threaten the penalty to every one. He makes more of that which is merciful. He makes less of what is penal.

17. Atque ita scriptum est non solum in eo libro, qui secundum Matthaeum scribitur Evangelii Domini Jesu: sed etiam in eo lectum est quem secundum Lucam reperimus (Luc. XII, 8); ut scias non otiose id posuisse utrumque.

17. And this is written not only in that book of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus, which is written according to Matthew, but it is also to be read in that which we have according to Luke, Luke 12:8-9 that we might know that neither had thus related the saying by chance.

18. [Alias cap. III.] Diximus quid scriptum sit, colligamus sententiam: Omnis, inquit, qui me confessus fuerit (Math. X, 32), id est, ex quacumque vita, ex quocumque statu qui confessus me fuerit, habebit me remuneratorem confessionis suae. Cum dicitur, Omnis, nullus a remuneratione, qui fuerit confessus, excluditur. Non similiter, omnis qui negaverit, negabitur; potest enim fieri ut aliquis victus suppliciis, sermone Deum neget, et corde adoret (De Poenit., dist. I, cap. Potest fieri).

18. We have said that it is thus written. Let us now consider the meaning. Every one, He says, who shall confess Me, that is to say, of whatever age, of whatever condition he may be, who shall confess Me, he shall have Me as the Rewarder of his confession. Whereas the expression is, every one, no one who shall confess is excluded from the reward. But it is not said in like manner, Every one who shall deny shall be denied, for it is possible that a man overcome by torture may deny God in word, and yet worship Him in his heart.

19. Numquid eadem causa est ejus qui sponte negat, et ejus quem tormenta inclinaverint ad sacrilegium, non voluntas? Quam autem indignum, cum apud homines valeat certaminis gratia, ut apud Deum non valere asseratur! Nam saepe in hoc athletarum saeculari certamine etiam victos quorum fuerint certamina probata, vulgus hominum cum victoribus coronare consuevit; maxime quos viderit forte dolo aut fraude victoria exclusos. Christus ergo athletas suos quos viderit gravibus paulisper cessisse suppliciis, sine venia patietur manere?

19. Is the case the same with him who denies voluntarily, and with him whom torture, not his own will, has led to denial? How unfit were it, since with men credit is given for endurance in a struggle, that one should assert that it had no value with God! For often in this world’s athletic contests the public crown together with the victors even the vanquished whose conduct has been approved, especially if perchance they have seen that they lost the victory by some trick or fraud. And shall Christ suffer His athletes, whom He has seen to yield for a moment to severe torments, to remain without forgiveness?

20. Numquid non habebit rationem laboris, qui etiam quos projicit, non in aeternum projicit? Dicit enim David: Non in aeternum projiciet Deus (Psal. LXXVI, 8); et contra hunc audiemus haeresim dicentem: Projicit in aeternum? Nec in finem, inquit, misericordiam suam abscidet a generatione in generationem, aut obliviscetur misereri Deus (Ibid. 9, 10), clamat Propheta: et sunt qui divinae miserationis quaedam inducant oblivia?

20. Shall not He take account of their toil, Who will not cast off for ever even those whom He casts off? For David says: God will not cast off for ever, and in opposition to this shall we listen to heresy asserting, He does cast off for ever? David says: God will not for ever cut off His mercy from generation to generation, nor will He forget to be merciful. This is the prophet's declaration, and there are those who would maintain a forgetfulness of mercy on God's part.

OBJECTIONI AB IMMUTABILITATE Dei petitae respondetur, allatis Scripturae testimoniis, quibus misericordiam emergentibus e volutabro suo peccatoribus Deus promittit: additurque indulgentiam iis parari propensiorem, qui quodammodo inviti deliquerunt, quod eleganti bello captorum exemplo, et ipsiusmet diaboli prosopopaeia illustratur.

The objection from the unchangeableness of God is answered from several passages of Scripture, wherein God promises forgiveness to sinners on their repentance. St. Ambrose also shows that mercy will be more readily accorded to such as have sinned, as it were, against their will, which he illustrates by the case of prisoners taken in war, and by language put into the mouth of the devil.

21. Sed aiunt ideo se ista asserere, ne mutabilem Deum facere videantur; si his quibus fuerit iratus, ignoscat. [Alias cap. IV.] Quid ergo? Repudiabimus divina oracula, et opiniones istorum sequemur? Sed non Deus alienis assertionibus, sed suis aestimandus est vocibus. Quod enim promptius edere possumus insigne ejus misericordiae, quam quod ipse per prophetam Osee, quibus tamquam iratus minabatur, continuo tamquam reconciliatus indulget? Ait enim: Quid tibi faciam, Ephraem, aut quid faciam tibi, Juda? Misericordia vestra, etc. (Ose. VI, 4). Et infra: Quomodo te constituam? Velut Adama efficiam te, et sicut Seboim (Ose. XI, 8). In ipsa indignatione velut patrio quodam affectu haeret, quomodo ad poenam tradat errantem: etsi Judaeus meretur, Deus tamen adhuc secum examinat. Sed continuo (De Poenit., dist. I, cap. Sed contin.) qui dixerat: Sicut Adama faciam te, et sicut Seboim; quae duae urbes ex vicinia Sodomorum parilis excidii traxere consortium: Conversum est, inquit, cor meum in eo ipso, conturbata est poenitentia mea: non faciam secundum iracundiam furoris mei (Ose. XI, 8, 9).

21. But they say that they make these assertions in order not to seem to make God liable to change, as He would be if He forgave those with whom He was angry. What then? Shall we reject the utterances of God and follow their opinions? But God is not to be judged by the statements of others, but by His own words. What mark of His mercy have we more ready at hand than that He Himself, through the prophet Hosea, is at once merciful as though reconciled to those whom in His anger He had threatened? For He says: O Ephraim, what shall I do unto you, or what shall I do unto you, O Judah? Your kindness, etc. Hosea 6:4 And further on: How shall I establish you? I will make you as Admah, and as Zeboim. Hosea 11:8 In the midst of His indignation He hesitates, as it were, with fatherly love, doubting how He can give over the wanderer to punishment; for although the Jew deserves it, God yet takes counsel with Himself. For immediately after having said, I will make you as Admah and as Zeboim, which cities, owing to their nearness to Sodom, suffered together in like destruction, He adds, My heart is turned against Me, My compassion is aroused, I will not do according to the fierceness of Mine anger. Hosea 11:8

22. Nonne apparet quod ideo nobis peccantibus indignetur Dominus Jesus, ut indignationis suae nos terrore convertat? Indignatio ergo ejus non ultionis exsecutio, sed magis absolutionis est operatio; sic enim dixit: Si conversus ingemueris, salvus eris (Esai XXX, 15). Exspectat gemitus nostros, sed temporales, ut remittat perpetuos: exspectat lacrymas nostras, ut profundat pietatem suam. Sic in Evangelio, viduae matris lacrymis compassus, filium

ejus resuscitavit (Luc. VII, 13). Exspectat conversionem nostram, ut revertatur et ipse ad gratiam: quae, si nullus lapsus nobis irreperet, in nobis perseveraret: sed quia peccatis nostris contrahimus offensam, indignatur, ut humiliemur: humiliamur, ut digni simus magis miseratione quam poena.

22. Is it not evident that the Lord Jesus is angry with us when we sin in order that He may convert us through fear of His indignation? His indignation, then, is not the carrying out of vengeance, but rather the working out of forgiveness, for these are His words: If you shall turn and lament, you shall be saved. He waits for our lamentations here, that is, in time, that He may spare us those which shall be eternal. He waits for our tears, that He may pour forth His goodness. So in the Gospel, having pity on the tears of the widow, He raised her son. He waits for our conversion, that He may Himself restore us to grace, which would have continued with us had no fall overtaken us. But He is angry because we have by our sins incurred guilt, in order that we may be humbled; we are humbled, in order that we may be found worthy rather of pity than of punishment.

23. Doceat te certe Hieremias dicens: Quia non repellet in aeternum Dominus; quoniam cum humiliaverit, miserebitur secundum multitudinem misericordiae suae: qui non humiliavit toto corde suo, neque repulit filios hominum (Thren. III, 31, 32). Hoc certe in Threnis Hieremiae legimus, et ex his, vel caeteris quae sequuntur advertimus quia ideo humiliat sub pedibus suis omnes vinctos terrae, ut judicium ejus declinemus (Psal. CXII, 7). Sed nec toto corde humiliat peccatorem usque ad terram, qui etiam de terra suscitat inopem, et de stercore erigit pauperem; non enim ex toto corde humiliat, qui se veniae reservat.

23. Jeremiah, too, may certainly teach when he says: For the Lord will not cast off for ever; for after He has humbled, He will have compassion according to the multitude of His mercies, Who has not humbled from His whole heart nor cast off the children of men. Lamentations 3:31-32 This passage we certainly find in the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and from it, and from what follows, we note that the Lord humbles all the prisoners of the earth under His feet, Lamentations 3:34 in order that we may escape His judgment. But He does not bring down the sinner even to the earth with His whole heart Who raises the poor even from the dust and the needy from the dunghill. For He brings not down with His whole heart Who reserves the intention of forgiving.

24. Quod si non ex toto corde omnem humiliat peccatorem, quanto magis non ex toto corde humiliat eum, qui non ex toto corde peccavit! Nam sicut dixit de Judaeis: Populus hic labiis me honorat, cor autem eorum longe est a me (Esa. XXIX, 13; Matth. XV, 8); fortasse et de aliquibus lapsis dicat: Isti labiis me negarunt, sed corde mecum sunt. Vicit eos poena, non avertit perfidia. Sine causa autem his aliqui veniam negant, quorum fidem eousque confessus persecutor est, ut eam studeret expugnare tormentis. Negarunt semel, sed quotidie confitentur: negarunt sermone, sed confitentur gemitibus, confitentur ejulationibus, confitentur fletibus, confitentur liberis, non coactis vocibus. Cesserunt quidem ad tempus diaboli tentationi: sed etiam diabolus postea recessit ab his, quos sibi vindicare non potuit. Cessit eorum fletibus, cessit poenitentiae: quos invaserat alienos, perdidit suos.

24. But if He brings not down every sinner with His whole heart, how much less does He bring down him with His whole heart who has not sinned with his whole heart! For as He said of the Jews: This people honours Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me, Isaiah 29:13 so perhaps He may say of some of the fallen: They denied Me with their lips, but in heart they are with Me. It was pain which overcame them, not unfaithfulness which turned them aside. Matthew 15:8 But some without cause refuse pardon to those whose faith the persecutor himself confessed up to the point of striving to overcome it by torture. They denied the Lord once, but confess Him daily; they denied Him in word, but confess Him with groans, with cries, and with tears; they confess Him with willing words, not under compulsion. They yielded, indeed, for a moment to the temptation of the devil, but even the devil afterwards departed from those whom he was unable to claim as his own. He yielded to their weeping, he yielded to their repentance, and after making them his own lost those whom he attached when they belonged to Another.

25. Nonne ita istud est, ac si quis captivum victae urbis populum abducat? Captivus ducitur, sed invitus: qui in alienas terras necessitate contendat, intimo tamen non migret affectu, patriam secum animo vehat, quaerat copiam quemadmodum revertatur. Quid ergo? Cum hujuscemodi revertitur, num est aliquis qui persuadeat non recipiendum? minore scilicet honore, sed studio propensiore, ne habeat in quo insultet adversarius. Si armato ignoscis, qui pugnare potuit; non ignoscis ei, in quo sola pugnabat fides?

25. Is not the case such as when any one carries away captive the people of a conquered city? The captive is led away, but against his will. He must of necessity go to foreign lands, does not willingly make the journey; he takes his native land with him in his heart, and seeks an opportunity to return. What then? When any such return, does any one urge that they should not be received; with less honour indeed, but with readier will, that the enemy may have nothing with which to reproach them? If you pardon an armed man who was able to fight, do you not pardon him in whom faith alone waged the battle?

26. Ipsius diaboli de hujusmodi lapsis si requiramus sententiam, nonne videtur dicere: Populus hic labiis me honorat, cor autem eorum longe est a me? Quomodo enim mecum est, qui non recedit a Christo? Sine causa autem me colere videntur, qui doctrinam Jesu custodiunt: ego autem putabam quod meam docerent. Plus damnant, dum comperta deserunt. Certe Jesus in his amplius gloriatur, dum recipit revertentes. Exsultant omnes angeli; quia gaudium majus est in coelo super uno peccatore poenitentiam agente, quam in nonaginta et novem justis qui non indigent poenitentia (Luc. XV, 7). De me in coelo, de me in terris triumphus sumitur. Nihil Christo perit, quando hi qui ad me cum fletu venerant, cum desiderio ad Ecclesiam revertuntur: et horum exemplo etiam de meis periclitor, qui didicerint nihil hic esse, ubi homines praesentibus provocantur praemiis; et plurimum illic, ubi gemitus, lacrymae, jejunia meis epulis praeferuntur.

26. If we were to enquire what is the opinion of the devil concerning those who have fallen after this sort, would he not probably reply: This people honours me with their lips, but their heart is far from me? For how can he be with me who does not depart from Christ? Without any cause do they appear to honour me who keep the doctrine of Jesus, and I thought that they would teach mine. They condemn me all the more when they forsake me after trial. Indeed Jesus is more glorified in these, when He receives them on their return to Him. All the angels rejoice, for in heaven there is greater joy over one sinner that repents, than over ninety and nine just persons who need not repentance. I am triumphed over in heaven and on earth. Christ loses nothing when they who came to me with weeping return with longing to the Church, and I am in danger even as regards my own, who will learn that in reality there is nothing here where men are led on by present rewards, but that there must be very much there where groans and tears and fasts are preferred to my feasts.

CAPUT VI.

NOVATIANOS DUM PECCATORES a Christi convivio excludunt, non pii Samaritani, sed superbi legisperiti nec non sacerdotis atque levitae, qui reprehenduntur in Evangelio, imitatores esse, immo iisdem etiam inclementiores.

CHAPTER 6

The Novatians, by excluding such from the banquet of Christ, imitate not indeed the good Samaritan, but the proud lawyer, the priest, and the Levite who are blamed in the Gospel, and are indeed worse than these.

27. [Alias cap. V.] Hos ergo, Novatiani, excluditis? Quid est enim aliud excludere, nisi spem veniae denegare? Sed neque semivivum illum derelictum a latronibus Samaritanus praeteriit: et vulnera ejus oleo vinoque curavit, prius infundens oleum quo foveret: supra jumentum suum imposuit vulneratum, in quo ejus peccata vexit omnia (Luc. X, 33, 34); nec ovem pastor despexit errantem (Luc. XV, 4).

27. Do you then, O Novatians, shut out these? For what is it when you refuse the hope of forgiveness but to shut out? But the Samaritan did not pass by the man who had been left half dead by the robbers; he dressed his wounds with oil and wine, first pouring in oil in order to comfort them; he set the wounded man on his own beast, on which he bore all his sins; nor did the Shepherd despise His wandering sheep.

28. Vos autem dicitis: Noli me tangere. Vos dicitis volentes justificare vos ipsos: Non est proximus noster, superbiores quam legisperitus ille qui Christum tentare cupiebat; ille enim dixit: Quis est meus proximus (Luc. X, 29)? Ille interrogat, vos negatis; sicut sacerdos ille descendentes, et sicut levita praeterientes, quem curandum suscipere debuistis, nec recipientes hospitio, pro quo Christus du onumeravit aera, cujus te proximum fieri Christus jubet, ut facias in eum misericordiam. Ipse enim est proximus, quem non solum conformis natura conjunxerit, sed etiam misericordia copulaverit. Ab eo te alienum superbia facis, extollens te frustra inflatus mente carnis tuae, et non tenens caput. Si enim caput teneres, adverteres non tibi eum deserendum, pro quo Christus mortuus est. Si caput teneres, adverteres corpus omne compaginando potius quam solvendo, in incrementum Dei per copulam charitatis, et redemptionem crescere peccatoris.

28. But you say: Touch me not. You who wish to justify yourselves say, He is not our neighbour, being more proud than that lawyer who wished to tempt Christ, for he said Who is my neighbour? He asked, you deny, going on like that priest, like that Levite passing by him whom you ought to have taken and tended, and not receiving them into the inn for whom Christ paid the two pence, whose neighbour Christ bids you to become that you might show mercy to him. For he is our neighbour whom not only a similar condition has joined, but whom mercy has bound to us. You make yourself strange to him through pride, in vain puffing up yourself in your carnal mind, and not holding the Head. Colossians 2:18 For if you held the Head you would consider that you must not forsake him for whom Christ died. If you held the Head you would consider that the whole body, by joining together rather than by separating, grows unto the increase of God Colossians 2:19 by the bond of charity and the rescue of a sinner.

29. Cum igitur fructum omnem aufertis poenitentiae, quid aliud dicitis, nisi hoc: Nemo de vulneratis nostrum ingrediatur hospitium: nemo sanetur in nostra Ecclesia? Apud nos non curantur aegroti: sani sumus, medicum non habemus necessarium; quia ipse ait: Non opus est sanis medicus, sed his qui male habent (Matth. IX, 12).

29. When, then, you take away all the fruits of repentance, what do you say but this: Let no one who is wounded enter our inn, let no one be healed in our Church? With us the sick are not cared for, we are whole, we have no need of a physician, for He Himself says: They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.

CAPUT VII.

CHRISTUM UT OMNES ad coenam suam invitet obtestatus, Novatianos nec ipsos ad eam ingredi, nec aliis ingressum permittere significat, quod Ecclesia sancta non imitatur. Deinde eosdem haereticos cum Christo, qui omnes salvos fieri cupiat, partem habere non posse planum facit.

St. Ambrose, addressing Christ, complains of the Novatians, and shows that they have no part with Christ, Who wishes all men to be saved.

30. [Alias cap. VI.] Ergo, Domine Jesu, ad Ecclesiam tuam totus adveni, quoniam Novatianus excusat. Novatianus dicit: Juga boum emi (Luc. XIV, 19), qui jugum Christi suave non suscipit, et onus grave collo imponit suo, quod portare non queat. Novatianus servos tuos a quibus invitabatur, tenuit, et contumelia affectos occidit quos iterati baptismatis labe inquinavit. Mitte ergo ad exitus viarum, et collige bonos et malos (Luc, XIV, 21): et debiles, et caecos, et claudos introduc in Ecclesiam tuam. Jube impleatur domus tua: introduc omnes ad coenam tuam; quia quem tu vocaveris, dignum facies, si sequatur. Ille sane rejicitur, qui non habuerit vestem nuptialem, hoc est, amictum charitatis, velamen gratiae. Mitte, inquam, ad universos.

30. So, then, Lord Jesus, come wholly to Your Church, since Novatian makes excuse. Novatian says, I have bought a yoke of oxen, and he puts not on the light yoke of Christ, but lays upon his shoulders a heavy burden which he is not able to bear. Novatian held back Your servants by whom he was invited, treated them contemptuously and slew them, polluting them with the stain of a reiterated baptism. Send forth, therefore, into the highways, and gather together good and bad, Luke 14:21 bring the weak, the blind, and the lame into Your Church. Command that Your house be filled, bring in all unto Your supper, for You will make him whom You shall call worthy, if he follow You. He indeed is rejected who has not the wedding garment, that is, the vestment of charity, the veil of grace. Send forth I pray You to all.

51. Non excusat Ecclesia tua a coena tua, excusat Novatianus. Non dicit familia tua: Sana sum, medicum non requiro; sed dicit: Sana me, Domine, et sanabor: salva me, et salvabor (Jerem. XVII, 14). Denique Ecclesiae tuae species est in illa, quae accessit retro, et tetigit fimbriam vestimenti tui, dicens intra se: Quia si tetigero vestimentum ejus, salva ero (Matth. IX, 21). Haec ergo Ecclesia confitetur vulnera sua, haec curari cupit.

31. Your Church does not excuse herself from Your supper, Novatian makes excuse. Your family says not, I am whole, I need not the physician, but it says: Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved. Jeremiah 17:14 The likeness of Your Church is that woman who went behind and touched the hem of Your garment, saying within herself: If I do but touch His garment I shall be whole. Matthew 9:21 So the Church confesses her wounds, but desires to be healed.

32. Et tu quidem, Domine, omnes cupis sanare, sed non omnes curari volunt. Non vult Novatianus, qui se putat esse sanum. Tu, Domine, aegrum te esse dicis, et in minimo nostram sentis infirmitatem, dicens: Aeger eram, et visitastis me (Matth. XXV, 36): Novatianus illum minimum visitare nescit, in quo tu desideras visitari. Tu dicis Petro (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Potest fieri, § Dicis Petro) excusanti, ne ei pedes lavares: Nisi lavero tibi pedes, non habebis partem mecum (Joan. XIII, 8). Quod ergo isti possunt consortium tecum habere, qui claves regni non suscipiunt, negantes quod dimittere peccata debeant?

32. And You indeed, O Lord, desire that all should be healed, but all do not wish to be healed. Novatian wishes not, who thinks that he is whole. You, O Lord, say that You are sick, and feel our infirmity in the least of us, saying: I was sick and you visited Me. Matthew 25:36 Novatian does not visit that least one in whom You desire to be visited. You said to Peter when he excused himself from having his feet washed by You: If I wash not your feet, you will have no part with Me. John 13:8 What fellowship, then, can they have with You, who receive not the keys of the kingdom of heaven, saying that they ought not to remit sins?

33. Quod quidem recte de se fatentur; non habent enim Petri haereditatem, qui Petri sedem non habent, quam impia divisione discerpunt: sed hoc improbe, quod etiam in Ecclesia donari peccata negant posse, cum Petro dictum sit: Tibi dabo claves regni coelorum, et quaecumque ligaveris super terram, erunt ligata et in coelo: et quaecumque solveris super terram, erunt soluta et in coelis (Matth. XVI, 19); cum et ipse vas electionis Dominicae dicat: Si cui autem quid donastis, et ego; nam et ego quod donavi, propter vos in persona Christi (II Cor. II, 10). Cur igitur Paulum legunt, si eum tam impie arbitrabantur errasse, ut jus sibi vindicaret Domini sui? Sed vindicavit acceptum, non usurpavit indebitum.

33. And this confession is indeed rightly made by them, for they have not the succession of Peter, who hold not the chair of Peter, which they rend by wicked schism; and this, too, they do, wickedly denying that sins can be forgiven even in the Church, whereas it was said to Peter: I will give unto you the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever you shall bind on earth shall be bound also in heaven, and whatsoever you shall loose on earth shall be loosed also in heaven. Matthew 16:19 And the vessel of divine election himself said: If you have forgiven anything to any one, I forgive also, for what I have forgiven I have done it for your sakes in the person of Christ. 2 Corinthians 2:10 Why, then, do they read Paul's writings, if they think that he has erred so wickedly as to claim for himself the right of his Lord? But he claimed what he had received, he did not usurp that which was not due to him.

CAPUT VIII.

QUANTA DISCIPULIS SUIS Christus contulerit. Novatianos dum manus imponunt ac baptismum conferunt, a se ipsis redargui; quippe quod eadem auctoritate peccata remittantur in poenitentia atque in baptismate. Ad extremum eorum tumor maxime Dominico exemplo castigatur.

It was the Lord's will to confer great gifts on His disciples. Further, the Novatians confute themselves by the practices of laying on of hands and of baptism, since it is by the same power that sins are remitted in penance and in baptism. Their conduct is then contrasted with that of our Lord.

34. [Alias cap. VII.] Vult Dominus plurimum posse discipulos suos, vult a servulis suis ea fieri in nomine suo, quae faciebat ipse positus in terris (Joan. XIV, 12). Denique ait: Et majora his facietis (Matth. X, 8). Dedit ut mortuos suscitarent. Et cum ipse Saulo reddere posset usum videndi, eum tamen ad Ananiam discipulum suum misit; ut ejus benedictione Saulo refunderentur oculi, quos amiserat (Act. IX, 7). Petrum quoque secum in mari jussit ambulare, et quia titubavit, reprehendit illico, eo quod doni gratiam fidei pusillitate minuisset (Matth. XIV, 29). Dedit etiam discipulis ut lux mundi essent per gratiam (Matth. V, 14), qui erat ipse lux mundi. Et quia descensurus esset e coelo, et in coelum ascensurus, Eliam ad coelum levavit (IV Reg. II, 11), inde eum in terris complacito redditurus tempore. Baptizaturus quoque in Spiritu sancto et igne (Matth. III, 11) per Joannem baptismatis sacramenta praemisit.

34. It is the will of the Lord that His disciples should possess great powers; it is His will that the same things which He did when on earth should be done in His Name by His servants. For He said: You shall do greater things than these. He gave them power to raise the dead. And whereas He could Himself have restored to Saul the use of his sight, He nevertheless sent him to His disciple Ananias, that by his blessing Saul's eyes might be restored, the sight of which he had lost. Acts 9:17 Peter also He bade walk with Himself on the sea, and because he faltered He blamed him for lessening the grace given him by the weakness of his faith. Matthew 14:31 He Who Himself was the light of the world granted to His disciples to be the light of the world through grace. Matthew 5:14 And because He purposed to descend from heaven and to ascend there again, He took up Elijah into heaven to restore him again to earth at the time which should please Him. And being baptized with the Holy Spirit and with fire, He foreshadowed the Sacrament of Baptism at the hands of John. Matthew 3:11

35. Omnia denique donavit discipulis suis, de quibus ait: In nomine meo daemonia ejicient, linguis loquentur novis, serpentes tollent; et si mortiferum quid biberint, non eis nocebit: supra aegros manus imponent, et bene habebunt (Marc. XVI, 17, 18). Omnia ergo dedit, sed nulla in his hominis potestas est, ubi divini muneris gratia viget.

35. And in fine He gave all gifts to His disciples, of whom He said: In My Name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they shall drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall do well. Mark 16:17-18 So, then, He gave them all things, but there is no power of man exercised in these things, in which the grace of the divine gift operates.

36. Cur ergo manus imponitis, et benedictionis opus creditis, si quis forte revaluerit aegrotus? Cur praesumitis aliquos a colluvione diaboli per vos mundari posse? Cur baptizatis, si per hominem peccata dimitti non licet? In baptismo utique remissio peccatorum omnium est: quid interest, utrum per poenitentiam, an per lavacrum hoc jus sibi datum sacerdotes vindicent? Unum in utroque mysterium est.

36. Why, then, do you lay on hands, and believe it to be the effect of the blessing, if perchance some sick person recovers? Why do you assume that any can be cleansed by you from the pollution of the devil? Why do you baptize if sins cannot be remitted by man? If baptism is certainly the remission of all sins, what difference does it make whether priests claim that this power is given to them in penance or at the font? In each the mystery is one.

37. Sed dicis quia in lavacro operatur mysteriorum gratia. Quid in poenitentia? Nonne Dei nomen operatur? Quid ergo? Ubi vultis, vindicatis vobis Dei gratiam: ubi vultis, repudiatis? Sed hoc insolentis arrogantiae, non sancti timoris est; ut fastidio vobis sint, qui volunt agere poenitentiam. Perpeti videlicet flentium lacrymas non potestis. Non ferunt oculi vestri vilia vestimentorum, illuviem sordidatorum, superbo oculo et tumido corde delicati mei, indignanti voce dicentes singuli: Nolite me tangere, quia mundus sum.

37. But you say that the grace of the mysteries works in the font. What works, then, in penance? Does not the Name of God do the work? What then? Do you, when you choose, claim for yourselves the grace of God, and when you choose reject it? But this is a mark of insolent presumption, not of holy fear, when those who wish to do penance are despised by you. You cannot, forsooth, endure the tears of the weepers; your eyes cannot bear the coarse clothing, the filth of the squalid; with proud eyes and puffed-up hearts you delicate ones say with angry tones, Touch me not, for I am pure.

38. Dicit quidem Dominus ad Mariam Magdalenam: Noli me tangere (Joan. XX, 17); sed non dixit, quia mundus sum, qui mundus erat: tu audes, Novatiane, mundum te dicere, qui etsi operibus mundus esses, hoc solo verbo fieres immundus? Esaias dicit: O miser ego, et compunctus corde; quia cum sim homo, et immunda labia habeam, in medio quoque populi immunda labia habentis habitem (Esai. VI, 5)! et tu dicis, mundus sum, cum mundus non sit, ut scriptum est, nec unius diei infans (Job. XIV, 4)? David dicit: Et a delicto meo munda me (Psal. L, 4), quem utique misericordem saepe Domini justificavit gratia: tu mundus, cum tam injustus sis, ut non miserearis; ut festucam in oculo fratris tui videas, trabem autem quae in oculo tuo est, non consideres (Matth. VII, 3)? Immundus enim apud Deum omnis iniquus. Quid autem injustius, quam ut velis tibi dimitti peccata tua, cum roganti ipse non putes remittenda? Quid injustius, quam ut te justifices, in quo damnas alterum; cum graviora committas?

38. The Lord said indeed to Mary Magdalene, Touch Me not, John 20:17 but He Who was pure did not say, because I am pure. Do you, Novatian, dare to call yourself pure, while, even if you were pure as regards your acts, you would be made impure by this saying alone? Isaiah says: O wretched that I am, and pricked to the heart; for that being a man, and having unclean lips, I dwell also in the midst of a people having unclean lips, Isaiah 6:5 and do you say, I am clean, when, as it is written, not even an infant of a day old is pure? David says, And cleanse me from my sin, whom for his tender heart the grace of God often cleansed; are you pure who are so unrighteous as to have no tenderness, as to see the mote in your brother’s eye, but not to consider the beam which is in your own eye? For with God no one who is unjust is pure. And what is more unjust than to desire to have your sins forgiven you, and yet yourself to think that he who entreats you ought not to be forgiven? What is more unjust than to justify yourself in that wherein you condemn another, while you yourself are committing worse offenses?

39. Denique remissionem celebraturus peccatorum nostrorum Dominus Jesus dicenti sibi Joanni: Ego a te debeo baptizari, et tu venis ad me! respondit: Sine modo; sic enim decet nos implere omnem justitiam (Matth. III, 14, 15). Et Dominus quidem venit ad peccatorem, cum peccatum ipse non haberet; et baptizari voluit, cui mundari necesse non erat: vos quis ferat, qui putatis vobis opus non esse mundari per poenitentiam; quia mundatos vos esse dicitis per gratiam, quasi jam peccare vobis impossibile sit?

39. Then, too, the Lord Jesus when about to consecrate the forgiveness of our sins replied to John, who said: I ought to be baptized by You, and You come to me? Suffer it now, for thus it becomes us to fulfil all righteousness. Matthew 3:14-15 And the Lord indeed came to a sinner, though indeed He had no sin, and desired to be baptized, having no need of cleansing; who, then, can tolerate you, who think there is no need for you to be cleansed by penance, because you say you are cleansed by grace, as though it were now impossible for you to sin?

CAPUT IX.

SCRIPTURAE VERBIS, SI autem in Dominum peccaverit homo, quis orabit pro eo? collatione similium locorum ostenditur non significari neminem rogaturum, sed dignum deprecatorem inquirendum esse, quales fuerunt Moyses ac Jeremias, quorum precibus populo Israelitico pepercisse Deus legitur.

By collating similar passages with 1 Samuel 3:25 , St. Ambrose shows that the meaning is not that no one shall intercede, but that the intercessor must be worthy as were Moses and Jeremiah, at whose prayers we read that God spared Israel.

40. [Alias cap. VIII.] Sed dicitis: Scriptum est: Si peccaverit homo in hominem, orabunt pro eo ad Dominum: si autem in Dominum peccaverit homo, quis orabit pro eo (I Reg. II, 25)? Primum, ut supra jam dixi, tunc te ista paterer objicere, si solis praevaricantibus non relaxares poenitentiam. Tamen quid scrupuli ista affert quaestio? Non enim scriptum est: Nullus orabit pro eo: sed, Quis orabit, hoc est, quis ille sit, qui in tali causa orare possit, quaeritur, non excluditur.

40. But you say, It is written: If a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him? First of all, as I already said before, I might allow you to make that objection if you refused penance to those only who denied the faith. But what difficulty does that question produce? For it is not written, No one shall entreat for him; but, Who shall entreat? that is to say, the question is, Who in such a case can entreat? The entreaty is not excluded.

41. Denique habes in psalmo decimo quarto: Domine, quis habitabit in tabernaculo tuo, aut quis requiescet in monte sancto suo (Psal. XIV, 1)? Non enim nullus, sed probatus habitabit: nec hoc dicit quod nemo requiescat, sed requiescat electus. Ut scias hoc esse verum, non multo post in psalmo vigesimo tertio ait: Quis ascendet in montem Domini, aut quis stabit in loco sancto ejus (Psal. XXIII, 3)? id est, non quicumque de vulgo, nec plebeiae vilitatis aliquis; sed vitae egregiae, singularisque meriti. Et ut scias quia cum quis dicitur, non intelligitur nullus, sed aliquis significatur, cum dixisset: Quis ascendet in montem Domini? subjecit: Innocens manibus, et mundo corde, qui non accipit in vano animam suam (Ibid., 4). Et alibi: Quis sapiens, et intelliget haec (Ose. XIV, 10)? Numquid dicit quia nullus intelliget? Et in Evangelio: Quis fidelis dispensator et prudens, quem constituet Dominus super familiam suam, ut det illis in tempore tritici mensuram (Luc. XII, 42)? Et ut comprehendas quia de eo dixit, qui utique est, non de eo qui non est, subjunxit: Beatus ille servus, quem cum venerit Dominus, invenerit sic facientem (Ibid., 43). Et illud ita opinor dictum: Deus, quis similis tibi (Psal. LXXXII, 1)? non utique nullus; quia imago Patris Filius est (De Poenit. dist. 1, c. Si sacerdos, § Deus).

41. Then you have in the fifteenth Psalm: Lord, who shall dwell in Your tabernacle, or who shall rest upon Your holy hill? It is not that no one, but that he who is approved shall dwell there, nor does it say that no one shall rest, but he who is chosen shall rest. And that you may know that this is true, it is said not much later in the twenty-fourth Psalm: Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in His holy place? The writer implies, not any ordinary person, or one of the common sort, but only a man of excellent life and of singular merit. And that we may understand that when the question is asked, Who? It does not imply no one, but some special one is meant, after having said Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? the Psalmist adds: He that has clean hands and a pure heart, who has not lift up his mind unto vanity. And elsewhere it is said: Who is wise and he shall understand these things? Hosea 14:10 And in the Gospel: Who is the faithful and wise steward, whom the Lord shall set over His household to give them their measure of wheat in due season? Luke 12:42 And that we may understand that He speaks of such as really exist, the Lord added: Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when He comes shall find so doing. Luke 12:43 And I am of opinion that where it is said, Lord, who is like You? it is not meant that none is like, for the Son is the image of the Father.

42. Similiter igitur accipiendum: Quis orabit pro eo (Hebr. I, 3)? hoc est, singularis vitae aliquis debet orare pro eo, qui peccavit in Dominum. Quo major culpa, eo majora sunt quaerenda suffragia (I Reg. II, 25). Non enim quicumque de vulgo pro Judaeorum populo, sed Moyses rogavit, quando vituli caput fidei immemores adoraverunt (Exod. XXXII, 31). Numquid erravit Moyses? Atqui non erravit, qui quod rogavit, et meruit et impetravit. Quid enim talis affectus non impetraret, quando se objecit pro populo, dicens: Et nunc si dimittis illis peccatum, dimitte; sin autem, dele me de libro vitae (Ibid., 32)? Vides quia non tamquam deliciosus intercessor, et fastidii plenus sibi consulat, ne offensionem contrahat, quod Novatianus metuere se dicit: sed magis omnium memor, sui immemor, offendere non timebat ipse, ut plebem ab offensionis periculo exueret et liberaret.

42. We must then understand in the same manner, Who shall entreat for him? as implying: It must be some one of excellent life who shall entreat for him who has sinned against the Lord. The greater the sin, the more worthy must be the prayers that are sought. For it was not any one of the common people who prayed for the Jewish people, but Moses, Exodus 32:31 when forgetful of their covenant they worshipped the head of the calf. Was Moses wrong? Certainly he was not wrong in praying, who both merited and obtained that for which he asked. For what should such love not obtain as that of his when he offered himself for the people and said: And now, if You will forgive their sin, forgive; but if not, blot me out of the book of life. Exodus 32:32 We see that he does not think of himself, like a man full of fancies and scruples, whether he may incur the risk of some offense, as Novatian says he dreads that he might, but rather, thinking of all and forgetful of himself, he was not afraid lest he should offend, so that he might rescue and free the people from danger of offense.

43. Merito ergo scriptum est: Quis orabit pro eo? hoc est, talis qualis Moyses, qui se offerat pro peccantibus: talis qualis Hieremias, cui prophetae cum esset dictum a Domino Deo nostro: Noli orare pro populo isto (Jerem. VII, 16); tamen oravit, et veniam meruit. Denique intercessione prophetica, et obsecratione tanti vatis inflexus Dominus dicit ad Hierusalem; quoniam ea quoque poenitentiam pro delictis egerat, dicens: Domine omnipotens, Deus Israel, anima in angustiis, et spiritus anxius clamat ad te: audi, Domine, et miserere (Baruch. III, 1, 2). Et jubet luctus vestimenta deponi, et abjici gemitus poenitentiae; sic enim scriptum est in fine libri: Exue te, Hierusalem, stola luctus et vexationis tuae, et indue te decorem ejus, quae a Deo data est tibi gloria in aeternum (Baruch. V, 1).

43. Rightly, then, is it said: Who shall entreat for him? It implies that it must be such an one as Moses to offer himself for those who sin, or such as Jeremiah, who, though the Lord said to him, Pray not for this people, Jeremiah 7:16 and yet he prayed and obtained their forgiveness. For at the intercession of the prophet, and the entreaty of so great a seer, the Lord was moved and said to Jerusalem, which had meanwhile repented for its sins, and had said: O Almighty Lord God of Israel, the soul in anguish, and the troubled spirit cries unto You, hear, O Lord, and have mercy. And the Lord bids them lay aside the garments of mourning, and to cease the groanings of repentance, saying: Put off, O Jerusalem, the garment of your mourning and affliction. and clothe yourself in beauty, the glory which God has given you forever. Baruch 5:1

CAPUT X.

JOANNEM NON ABSOLUTE ac simpliciter prohibuisse ne pro sontibus peccati ad mortem fieret oratio; cum pro similibus Moysen, Jeremiam ac Stephanum orasse non ignoraverit; et ipse quoque iisdem veniam significaverit non denegandam.

CHAPTER 10

St. John did not absolutely forbid that prayer should be made for those who sin unto death, since he knew that Moses, Jeremiah, and Stephen had so prayed, and he himself implies that forgiveness is not to be denied them.

44. [Alias cap. IX.] Tales igitur deprecatores in delictis maximis sunt requirendi; nam si quicumque de populo orent, non exaudiuntur.

44. Such intercessors, then, must be sought for after very grievous sins, for if any ordinary persons pray they are not heard.

45. Unde nec illa quaestio vestra quidquam poterit afferre ponderis, quam sumitis de epistola Joannis dicentis: Qui scit fratrem suum peccare peccatum non ad mortem, petat, et dabit illi vitam Deus; quia non peccat ad mortem. Est peccatum ad mortem, non de illo dico, ut oret (I Joan. V, 16); non enim ad Moysen et Hieremiam loquebatur, sed ad populum, qui suorum peccatorum alium precatorem deberet adhibere: cui satis est si pro levioribus delictis Deum precetur, graviorum veniam justorum orationibus reservandam putet. Nam (De Poenit. dist. 1, c. Si sacerdos, § Nam quomodo) quomodo Joannes diceret non orandum pro delicto graviore, qui legisset Moysen rogasse et impetrasse; ubi erat praevaricatio voluntaria: qui sciret etiam Hieremiam rogasse (Jerem. XIV, 13).

45. So that point of yours will have no weight, which you take from the Epistle of John, where he says: He who knows that his brother sins a sin not unto death, let him ask, and God will give him life, because he sinned not unto death. There is a sin unto death: not concerning it do I say, let him ask. 1 John 5:16 He was not speaking to Moses and Jeremiah, but to the people, who must seek another intercessor for their sins; the people, for whom it is sufficient they entreat God for their lighter faults, and consider that pardon for weightier sins must be reserved for the prayers of the just. For how could John say that graver sins should not be prayed for, when he had read that Moses prayed and obtained his request, where there had been wilful casting off of faith, and knew that Jeremiah also had entreated?

46. Quomodo Joannes diceret non orandum pro peccato quod esset ad mortem, qui ipse in Apocalypsi scripsit mandatum Angelo Ecclesiae Pergami (Apoc. II, 12)? Habes illic tenentes doctrinam Balaam, qui docebat Balaac mittere scandalum coram filiis Israel, manducare immolata, et fornicari; ita et tu habes tenentes doctrinam Nicolaitarum, similiter age poenitentiam: caeterum venio tibi cito. Vides quod Deus qui poenitentiam exigit, veniam polliceatur! Denique et ibi dicit: Qui habet aures, audiat quid Spiritus dicat Ecclesiis: Vincenti dabo manducare manna absconditum (Apoc. II, 7).

46. How could John say that we should not pray for the sin unto death, who himself in the Apocalypse wrote the message to the angel of the Church of Pergamos? You have there those that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to put a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. So have you also them that hold the doctrines of the Nicolaitans. Repent likewise, or else I will come to you quickly. Revelation 2:14-16 Do you see that the same God Who requires repentance promises forgiveness? And then He says: He that has ears let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches: To him that overcomes will I give to eat of the hidden manna. Revelation 2:17

47. Nonne ipse Joannes cognoverat Stephanum pro persecutoribus suis, qui Christi nomen audire non poterant, deprecatum; cum de ipsis a quibus lapidabatur diceret: Domine, ne statuas illis hoc peccatum (Act. VII, 59)? Cujus precationis effectum in Apostolo videmus; Paulus enim qui lapidantium Stephanum vestimenta servabat (Act. IX, 15), non multo postea per gratiam Christi factus est apostolus, qui fuerat ante persecutor.

47. Did not John himself know that Stephen prayed for his persecutors, who had not been able even to listen to the Name of Christ, when he said of those very men by whom he was being stoned: Lord, lay not this sin to their charge? Acts 7:60 And we see the result of this prayer in the case of the Apostle, for Paul, who kept the garments of those who were stoning Stephen, not long after became an apostle by the grace of God, having before been a persecutor.

CAPUT XI.

SUPERIOR JOANNIS SENTENTIA illustratur alio ejusdem testimonio, quo credentibus in Christum salus promittitur. Unde arguuntur Novatiani ut qui lapsis fidem suadeant, quibus negent veniam. Additur multos martyrum post lapsum duplicem gratiam consecutos esse; nec non pii Samaritani exemplo declaratur eos in quibus vel tenuissima fides spiret, non deserendos.

The passage quoted from St. John's Epistle is confirmed by another in which salvation is promised to those who believe in Christ, which refutes the Novatians who try to induce the lapsed to believe, although denying them pardon. Furthermore, many who had lapsed have received the grace of martyrdom, while the example of the good Samaritan shows that we must not abandon those in whom even the faintest amount of faith is still alive.

48. [Alias cap. X.] Ergo quia de Joannis generali epistola sermo est, ipsius Joannis in Evangelio scripta interrogemus, utrum cum vestra interpretatione conveniant. Scribit enim dixisse Dominum: Quia sic dilexit Deus hunc mundum, ut Filium suum unigenitum daret; ut omnis qui credit in eum, non pereat, sed habeat vitam aeternam (Joan. III, 16). Si quem ergo lapsum revocare cupias; ut credat, an ut non credat, hortaris? Utique ut credat. Sed qui credit juxta Domini sententiam, habebit vitam aeternam. Quomodo ergo prohibebis orare pro eo, cui aeterna vita debetur? cum divinae sit gratiae fides, sicut Apostolus in divisionibus gratiarum docet, quia alii datur in eodem Spiritu fides (I Cor. XII, 9); et discipuli Domino dicant: Adauge nobis fidem (Luc. XVII, 5). Qui ergo fidem habet, habet vitam: qui vitam habet, non est utique exclusus a venia. Omnis, inquit, qui credit in eum, non pereat. Cum omnis dicitur, nullus excluditur, nullus excipitur; non enim excipit eum qui lapsus est, si tamen postea bene credat.

48. Since, then, we have spoken of the general Epistle of St. John, let us enquire whether the writings of John in the Gospel agree with your interpretation. For he writes that the Lord said: God so loved this world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that every one that believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life. John 3:16 If, then, you wish to reclaim any one of the lapsed, do you exhort him to believe, or not to believe? Undoubtedly you exhort him to believe. But, according to the Lord's words, he who believes shall have everlasting life. How, then, will you forbid to pray for him, who has a claim to everlasting life? Since faith is of divine grace, as the Apostle teaches where he speaks of the differences of gifts, for to another is given faith by the same Spirit. 1 Corinthians 12:9 And the disciples say to the Lord: Increase our faith. Luke 17:5 He then who has faith has life, and he who has life is certainly not shut out from pardon; that every one, it is said, that believes in Him should not perish. Since it is said, Every one, no one is shut out, no one is excepted, for He does not except him who has lapsed, if only afterwards he believes effectually.

49. Plurimos comperimus se denuo reformasse post lapsum, et pro nomine Dei passos: num possumus his martyrum consortia negare, quibus Dominus Jesus non negavit? Audemus igitur dicere non esse his vitam redditam, quibus Christus coronam reddidit? Sicut ergo post lapsum plerisque si patiantur, corona redditur; ita si credant, et fides redditur. Quae fides Dei donum est; sicut habes scriptum: Quia a Deo vobis datum est, non solum ut credatis in eum, sed etiam ut pro illo patiamini (Philip. I, 29). Numquid is qui Dei donum habet, potest non habere indulgentiam?

49. We find that many have at length recovered themselves after a fall, and have suffered for the Name of God. Can we deny fellowship with the martyrs to these to whom the Lord Jesus has not denied it? Do we dare to say that life is not restored to those to whom Christ has given a crown? As, then, a crown is given to many after they have lapsed, so, too, if they believe, their faith is restored, which faith is the gift of God, as you read: Because unto you it has been granted by God not only to believe in Him, but also to suffer in His behalf. Philippians 1:29 Is it possible that he who has the gift of God should not have His forgiveness?

50. Non una autem, sed duplex gratia est, ut omnis qui credit, et patiatur pro Domino Jesu. Habet igitur qui credit suam gratiam: habet autem alteram, si fides ejus passionibus coronetur. Neque enim priusquam pateretur Petrus, sine gratia fuit: sed ubi passus est, acquisivit alteram. Et plerique qui non habuerunt gratiam, ut pro Jesu paterentur; habuerunt tamen gratiam, ut in Jesum crederent.

50. Now it is not a single but a twofold grace that every one who believes should also suffer for the Lord Jesus. He, then, who believes receives his grace, but he receives a second, if his faith be crowned by suffering. For neither was Peter without grace before he suffered, but when he suffered he received a second gift. And many who have not had the grace to suffer for Christ have nevertheless had the grace of believing on Him.

51. Ideo dicitur: Ut omnis qui credit in eum, non pereat (Joan. XX, 31). Omnis, inquit, hoc est, ex quocumque statu, ex quocumque lapsu, si credat, perire non timeat. Potest enim fieri ut aliquem de Hierusalem descendentem in Hiericho (Luc. X, 33), hoc est de martyrii certamine relapsum in istius vitae cupiditatem saecularemque gratiam, vulneratum a latronibus, hoc est, a persecutoribus, et semivivum derelictum Evangelicus ille Samaritanus inveniat, qui nostrarum custos animarum est (Samaritanus enim custos dicitur), et non praetereat eum, sed curet et sanet.

51. Therefore it is said: That every one that believes in Him should not perish. Let no one, that is, of whatever condition, after whatever fall, fear that he will perish. For it may come to pass that the good Samaritan of the Gospel may find some one going down from Jerusalem to Jericho, that is, falling back from the martyr's conflict to the pleasures of this life and the comforts of the world; wounded by robbers, that is, by persecutors, and left half dead; that good Samaritan, Who is the Guardian of our souls (for the word Samaritan means Guardian), may, I say, not pass by him but tend and heal him.

52. Fortasse ideo non praeterit eum, quia aliquid in eo vitale agnoscit; unde is possit vitam resumere. Nonne vobis videtur ille qui lapsus est, semivivus esse, si vitale aliquid fides spiret? Nam qui penitus Deum ex suo corde abjicit, ille mortuus est. Qui ergo non penitus abjicit, sed per impressionem tormentorum ad tempus negavit, semivivus est. Aut si mortuus est, cur ei dicitis, agendam poenitentiam, qui jam curari non potest? Si semivivus est, infunde oleum et vinum, non vinum sine oleo, scilicet quod et foveat et remordeat. Tolle eum in jumentum tuum, trade stabulario, duo aera ad ejus curam impende, esto ei proximus (Ibid., XXXIV, 35). Proximus autem esse non potes, nisi facias misericordiam; nemo enim potest dici proximus, nisi qui curaverit, non occiderit. Si autem vis dici proximus, dicit tibi Christus: Vade, et tu fac similiter (Ibid., 37).

52. Perchance He therefore passes him not by, because He sees in him some signs of life, so that there is hope that he may recover. Does it not seem to you that he who has fallen is half alive if faith sustains any breath of life?

For he is dead who wholly casts God out of his heart. He, then, who does not wholly cast Him out, but under pressure of torments has denied Him for a time, is half dead. Or if he be dead, why do you bid him repent, seeing he cannot now be healed? If he be half dead, pour in oil and wine, not wine without oil, that may be the comfort and the smart. Place him upon your beast, give him over to the host, lay out two pence for his cure, be to him a neighbour. But you cannot be a neighbour unless you have compassion on him; for no one can be called a neighbour unless he have healed, not killed, another. But if you wish to be called a neighbour, Christ says to you: Go and do likewise. Luke 10:37

CAPUT XII.

LOCIS EX JOANNIS Evangelio jam citatis alius indidem adjungitur. Tum servandorum Dei mandatorum necessitatem objicientibus facile respondetur non ei soli qui semper, sed etiam ei qui post lapsum illa servaverit, vitam promitti. Quod ubi ex Davide comprobatum est, quamdam tamen esse inter utrumque differentiam declaratur.

CHAPTER 12

Another passage of St. John is considered. The necessity of keeping the commandments of God may be complied with by those who, having fallen, repent, as well as by those who have not fallen, as is shown in the case of David.

53. [Alias cap. XI.] Aliud simile consideremus: Qui credit in Filium, habet vitam aeternam: qui autem non credit Filio, non videbit vitam, sed ira Dei manet super eum (Joan. III, 16). Quod manet utique jam coepit, et ex delicto aliquo coepit; quia ante non credidit. Ubi ergo quis credit, ira Dei discedit, vita autem accedit (Ibid., 36). Credere ergo in Christum, lucrum vitae est; qui enim credit in eum, non judicatur.

53. Let us consider another similar passage: He that believes in the Son has eternal life, but he that believes not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abides on him. John 3:36 That which abides has certainly had a commencement, and that from some offense, viz., that first he not believe. When, then, any one believes, the wrath of God departs and life comes. To believe, then, in Christ is to gain life, for he that believes in Him is not judged. John 3:18

54. Sed referunt hoc loco quoniam is qui credit in Christum, custodire debeat sermonem ejus; sic enim aiunt scriptum, dicente Domino: Ego lux in hunc mundum veni, ut omnis qui credit in me, in tenebris non maneat: et si quis audierit sermonem meum, et custodierit eum, ego non judico eum (Joan. XII, 46, 47). Ille non judicat, et tu judicas? Ille dicit: Ut qui credit in me, in tenebris non maneat, hoc est, et si fuerit in tenebris, non permaneat in eis, errorem emendet, culpam corrigat, custodiat mandata mea; dixi enim: Nolo mortem peccatoris, sed correctionem (Ezech. XXXIII, 11). Dixi supra: Quoniam qui in me credit, non judicatur; et hoc custodio: Non enim veni, ut judicem mundum, sed ut salvetur mundus per me (Joan. III. 17). Libenter ignosco (De Poenit., dist. 1, cap. Libenter), prompte indulgeo: Misericordiam malo, quam sacrificium (Ose. VI, 6); quia per sacrificium justus commendatur, per misericordiam peccator redimitur. Non veni vocare justos, sed peccatores (Matth. IX, 13). In Lege sacrificium, in Evangelio misericordia est: Lex per Moysen data est, per me gratia (Joan. I, 17). Quid hoc evidentius?

54. But with reference to this passage they allege that he who believes in Christ ought to keep His sayings, and say that it is written in the Lord’s own words: I have come a light into this world, that whosoever believes in Me may not abide in darkness. And if any man hear My word and keep it, I judge him not. He judges not, and do you judge? He says, that whosoever believes in Me may not abide in darkness, that is, that if he be in darkness he may not remain therein, but may amend his error, correct his fault, and keep My commandments, for I have said, I will not the death of the wicked, but the correction. Ezekiel 23:11 I said above that he that believes in Me is not judged, and I keep to this: For I am not come to judge the world, but that the world may be saved through Me. John 3:17 I pardon willingly, I quickly forgive, I will have mercy rather than sacrifice, Hosea 6:6 because by sacrifice the just is rendered more acceptable, by mercy the sinner is redeemed. I come not to call the righteous but sinners. Matthew 9:13 Sacrifice was under the Law, in the Gospel is mercy. The Law was given by Moses, grace by Me. John 1:17

55. Denique et subter ait: Qui spernit me, et non accipit verba mea, habet qui judicet eum (Joan. XII, 48). Num tibi videtur accipere verba Christi, qui se non correxerit? Profecto non videtur. Qui ergo corrigit se, accipit verbum ejus, hoc est enim verbum ejus, ut se unusquisque revocet a culpa. Aut excludas igitur necesse est hanc ejus sententiam: aut si negare non potes, acquiescas.

55. And again further on He says: He that despises Me, and receives not My words, has one that judges him. John 12:48 Does he seem to you to have received Christ's words who has not corrected himself? Undoubtedly not. He, then, who corrects himself receives His word, for this is His word, that every one should turn back from sin. So, then, of necessity you must either reject this saying of His, or if you cannot deny it you must accept it.

56. Oportet eum quoque mandata custodire Dominica, qui peccare desinat, delictis renuntiet. Non ergo de eo debes interpretari dictum, qui semper custodierit; si enim hoc sensisset, addidisset, semper: non addendo autem, de eo pronuntiavit, qui quod audivit, custodierit: audivit autem ut corrigeret errorem: custodivit igitur quod audivit.

56. It is also necessary that he who leaves off sinning must keep the commandments of God and renounce his sins. We ought not, then, to interpret this saying of him who has always kept the commandments, for if this had been His meaning He would have added the word always, but by not adding it He shows that He was speaking of him who has kept what he has heard, and what he heard has led him to correct his faults; he has then kept what he has heard.

57. [Alias cap. XII.] Quam vero durum sit ut ad poenam vocetur perpetuam, qui vel postea custodit Domini mandata, ipse te doceat, qui etiam non custodientibus mandata sua veniam non denegavit, sicut habes in psalmi corpore: Si justitias meas profanaverint, et mandata mea non custodierint; visitabo in virga iniquitates eorum, et in flagellis delicta eorum: misericordiam autem meam non disperdam ab eis (Psal. LXXXVIII, 32, 33). Omnibus igitur promittit misericordiam.

57. But how hard it is to condemn to penance for life one who even afterwards keeps the commandments of the Lord, let Him teach us Himself Who has not refused forgiveness. Even to those who do not keep His commandments, as you read in the Psalm: If they profane My statutes and keep not My commandments, I will visit their offenses with the rod and their sins with scourges, but My mercy will I not take from them. So, then, He promises mercy to all.

58. Sed ne sine judicio hanc esse misericordiam putetis, est discretio inter eos qui perpetuam detulerint obedientiam mandatis coelestibus, et inter eos qui aliquando vel errore, vel necessitate lapsi sint. Et ne nostro circumscribi te argumento putes, Christi judicium accipe; etenim ait: Si sciens servus voluntatem domini sui non fecit, vapulabit multis: si autem nescivit, vapulabit paucis (Luc. XII, 47, 48). Uterque igitur si credat, recipitur, quia castigat omnem filium Deus, quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 6): et quem castigat, morti utique non tradit; quia scriptum est: Castigans castigavit me Dominus, et morti non tradidit me (Psal. CXVII, 18).

58. Yet that we may not think that this mercy is without judgment, there is a distinction made between those who have paid continual obedience to God’s commandments, and those who at some time, either by error or by compulsion, have fallen. And that you may not think that it is only our arguments which press you, consider the decision of Christ, Who said: If the servant knew his Lord's will and did it not, he shall be beaten with many stripes, but if he knew it not, he shall be beaten with few stripes. Luke 12:47-48 Each, then, if he believes, is received, for God chastens every son whom He receives, Hebrews 12:6 and him whom He chastens He does not give over unto death, for it is written: The Lord has chastened me sore, but He has not given me over unto death.

CAPUT XIII.

QUI PECCATUM AD mortem fecerint, non deserendos, sed poenitentiae subjiciendos ex Paulo docetur. Quid sit tradi Satanae in interitum carnis, et quam hoc optandum. Satanam corpori debilitates inferre, sed eas in spiritus utilitatem converti; unde magna Dei elucet potentia, qua illum ut sibi noceat, et nobis prosit, cogit invitum.

They who have committed a sin unto death are not to be abandoned, but subjected to penance, according to St. Paul. Explanation of the phrase Deliver unto Satan. Satan can afflict the body, but these afflictions bring spiritual profit, showing the power of God, Who thus turns Satan's devices against himself.

59. Denique Paulus docet non deserendos eos qui peccatum ad mortem fecerint, sed potius lacrymarum panibus, et potu coercendos flebili; ita tamen ut ipsa moderata esset tristitia. Hoc enim significat: Potum dabis eis in lacrymis in mensura (Psal. LXXIX, 6); ut ipsa moestitia mensuram habeat, ne forte abundantiore tristitia absorbeatur (II Cor. II, 5 et seq.), qui agit poenitentiam, sicut scripsit ad Corinthios: Quid vultis? In virga veniam ad vos, an in charitate, spirituque mansuetudinis (I Cor. IV, 21)? Sed nec virga gravis est, quoniam legerat: Tu quidem percuties eum virga, animam autem ejus a morte liberabis (Prov. XXIII, 14).

59. Lastly, Paul teaches us that we must not abandon those who have committed a sin unto death, but that we must rather coerce them with the bread of tears and tears to drink, yet so that their sorrow itself be moderated.

For this is the meaning of the passage: You have given them to drink in large measure, that their sorrow itself should have its measure, lest perchance he who is doing penance should be consumed by overmuch sorrow, as was said to the Corinthians: What will you? Shall I come to you with a rod, or in love and a spirit of meekness? 1 Corinthians 4:21 But even the rod is not severe, since he had read: You shall beat him indeed with the rod, but shall deliver his soul from death. Proverbs 23:13

60. Quid esset in virga venire, docet invectio fornicationis, accusatio incesti, reprehensio tumoris, quod inflati essent, quos magis lugere oporteret; postremo condemnatio rei, ut tolleretur a consortio communionis, et traderetur adversario, non ad interitum animae, sed carnis (I Cor. V, 1 et seq.). Sicut enim Dominus in animam sancti Job potestatem non dedit, sed in carnem ejus permisit licentiam (Job II, 6); ita et hic traditur Satanae in interitum carnis, ut serpens terram ejus lingeret, animae non noceret (Mich. VII, 17).

60. What the Apostle means by the rod is shown by his invective against fornication, his denunciation of incest, his reprehension of pride, because they were puffed up who ought rather to be mourning, and lastly, his sentence on the guilty person, that he should be excluded from communion, and delivered to the adversary, not for the destruction of the soul but of the flesh. For as the Lord did not give power to Satan over the soul of holy Job, but allowed him to afflict his body, Job 2:6 so here, too, the sinner is delivered to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the serpent might lick the dust Micah 7:17 of his flesh, but not hurt his soul.

61. Moriatur ergo caro nostra cupiditatibus, sit captiva, sit subdita, nec legi mentis nostrae repugnet, sed bonae servituti subjecta moriatur; sicut in Paulo qui castigabat corpus suum (I Cor. IX, 27), ut servituti redigeret; quo probabilior fieret praedicatio, is lex carnis ejus cum lege mentis congrueret et conveniret. Interit enim caro, cum sapientia ejus transit in spiritum; ut jam non quae carnis sunt, sapiat, sed quae sunt spiritus. Utinam videam infirmari carnem meam! utinam non trahar captivus in legem peccati! utinam non in carne vivam, sed in fide Christi (Rom. VII, 23)! Et ideo major in infirmitate corporis gratia, quam in salute. Denique et Paulum quem multum dilexit (Galat. II, 20), noluit liberare ab infirmitate carnis, cui petenti ut discederet a se infirmitas, respondit: Sufficit tibi gratia mea; nam virtus in infirmitate perficitur (I Cor. XII, 8, 9). Et Paulus plus sibi in infirmitatibus placet, dicens: Cum infirmor, tunc potens sum (Ibid., 10); consummatur enim carnis infirmitatibus animae fortitudo.

61. Let, then, our flesh die to lusts, let it be captive, let it be subdued, and not war against the law of our mind, but die in subjection to a good service, as in Paul, who buffeted his body that he might bring it into subjection, in order that his preaching might become more approved, if the law of his flesh agreed and was consonant with the law of his flesh. For the flesh dies when its wisdom passes over into the spirit, so that it no longer has a taste for the things of the flesh, but for the things of the spirit. Would that I might see my flesh growing weak, would that I were not dragged captive into the law of sin, would that I lived not in the flesh, but in the faith of Christ! And so there is greater grace in the infirmity of the body than in its soundness.

62. [Alias cap. XIII]. Explanavimus Pauli sententiam; nunc verba ipsa consideremus, qua ratione dixerit quod tradiderit eum Satanae in interitum carnis; quia tentator noster diabolus est. Nam debilitates membris singulis infert, et aegritudines toti solet movere corpori. Denique percussit sanctum Job ulcere malo a pedibus usque ad caput, quia in potestate acceperat interitum carnis ejus, dicente Deo: Ecce trado tibi eum, tantummodo animam ejus custodi (Job II, 6). Hoc iisdem verbis Apostolus transtulit; dicens quod tradiderit hujusmodi hominem Satanae in interitum carnis, ut spiritus salvus sit in die Domini nostri Jesu Christi (I Cor. V, 5).

62. Having explained Paul's meaning, let us now consider the words themselves, in what sense he said that he had delivered him to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, for the devil it is who tries us. For he brings ailments on each of our limbs, and sickness on our whole bodies. And then, too, he smote holy Job with evil sores from the feet to the head, because he had received the power of destroying his flesh, when God said: Behold, I give him up unto you, only preserve his life. Job 2:6 This the Apostle took up in the same words, giving up this man to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that his spirit might be saved in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Corinthians 5:5

63. Magna potestas, magna gratia, quae imperat diabolo, ut se ipse destruat. Se enim destruit, cum hominem quem tentando supplantare studet, ex infirmo fortiorem efficit; quia dum carnem debilitat, mentem ejus corroborat. Aegritudo enim carnis (De Poenit., dist. 1, cap. Potest, § Aegritudo) peccatum repellit: luxuria autem carnis culpam adolet.

63. Great is the power, great is the gift, which commands the devil to destroy himself. For he destroys himself when he makes the man whom he is seeking to overthrow by temptation stronger instead of weak, because while he is weakening the body he is strengthening his soul. For sickness of the body restrains sin, but luxury sets on fire the sin of the flesh.

64. Illuditur ergo diabolus, ut se ipse morsu suo vulneret, et contra se armet, quem debilitandum putavit. Sic et sanctum Job magis amavit, posteaquam vulneravit: qui totum corpus diris perfusus ulceribus, diaboli quidem morsum pertulit, sed venena non sensit. Et ideo bene ei dictum est: Adduces draconem in hamo, illudes eum sicut avem: ligabis eum sicut passerem puer, imponens super eum manum (Job XL, 24).

64. The devil is then deceived so as to wound himself with his own bite, and to arm against himself him whom he thought to weaken. So he armed holy Job the more after he wounded him, who, with his whole body covered with sores, endured indeed the bite of the devil, but felt not his poison. And so it is well said of him, You shall draw out the dragon with an hook, you will play with him as with a bird, you shall bind him as a boy does a sparrow, you shall lay your hand upon him.

65. Vides quemadmodum a Paulo illudatur, ut in cavernam ejus, sicut puer ille propheticus (Esai. XI, 8, 9), manum mittat, et nihil serpens noceat ei, de latebris eruat eum, de veneno ejus faciat spiritale antidotum; ut quod venenum est, medicamentum fiat: venenum est ad interitum carnis, medicamentum fit ad salutem spiritus. Quod enim nocet corpori, juvat spiritum (De Poenit, dist. 1, cap. Potest, § Quod nocet).

65. You see how he is mocked by Paul, so that, like the child in prophecy, he lays his hand on the hole of the asp, and the serpent injures him not; he draws him out of his hiding-places, and makes of his venom a spiritual antidote, so that what is venom becomes a medicine, the venom serves to the destruction of the flesh, it becomes medicine to the healing of the spirit. For that which hurts the body benefits the spirit.

66. Manducet ergo terram meam serpens, dentem carni infigat, conterat corpus, dicat Dominus et de me: Trado tibi eum, tantummodo animam ejus custodi (Job II, 6). Quanta vis Christi, ut custodia hominis imperetur etiam ipsi diabolo, qui semper vult nocere. Dominum ergo Jesum nobis propitiemus: imperante Christo, et diabolus ipse fit praedae suae custos, vel invitus mandatis obsecundat coelestibus: et quamvis immitis, tamen mansuetis obsequitur imperiis.

66. Let, then, the serpent bite the earthy part of me, let him drive his tooth into my flesh, and bruise my body; and may the Lord say of me: I give him up unto you, only preserve his life. How great is the power of Christ, that the guardianship of man is made a charge even to the devil himself, who always desires to injure him. Let us then make the Lord Jesus favourable to ourselves. At the command of Christ the devil himself becomes the guardian of his prey. Even unwillingly he carries out the commands of heaven, and, though cruel, obeys the commands of gentleness.

67. Sed quid ego commendo obsequium ejus? Sit ille semper malus, ut sit bonus Deus semper, qui malitiam ejus nobis in gratiam convertit. Vult nocere ille, sed non potest, si Christus obsistat: carnem ulcerat, sed custodit animam: terram devorat, sed reservat spiritum. Denique scriptum est: Tunc lupi et agni simul pascentur: leo et bos paleam manducabunt, serpens autem terram ut panem: et non nocebunt, neque vastabunt in monte sancto meo, dicit Dominus (Esai. XI, 6 et seq.). Damnati enim serpentis haec est sententia: Erit tibi terra cibus (Gen. III, 14). Quae terra? Ea utique de qua dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Ibid., 19).

67. But why do I commend his obedience? Let him be ever evil that God may be ever good, Who converts his ill-will into grace for us. He wishes to injure us, but cannot if Christ resist him. He wounds the flesh but preserves the life. And then it is written: Then shall the wolves and the lambs feed together, the lion and the ox shall eat straw, and they shall not hurt nor destroy in My holy mountain, says the Lord. For this is the sentence of condemnation on the serpent: Dust shall be your food. Genesis 3:14 What dust? Surely that of which it is said: Dust you are, and into dust shall you return. Genesis 3:19

CAPUT XIV.

QUOD SUPRA DIXERIT Ambrosius carnem ad interitum Satanae traditam a serpente comedi, hoc ita demum docet fieri, si anima carnalibus cupiditatibus liberetur. Quamobrem multa praecipit ad oculorum mentisque custodiam necessaria: quae castissimi Josephi exemplo firmat: dehinc omnes ad retia quibus in voluptatis ignem trahimur, declinanda hortatus; ne timeamus quominus a serpente caro nostra edatur, suadet.

St. Ambrose explains that the flesh given to Satan for destruction is eaten by the serpent when the soul is set free from carnal desires. He gives, therefore, various rules for guarding the senses, points out the snares laid for us by means of pleasures, and exhorts his hearers not to fear the destruction of the flesh by the serpent.

68. Hanc terram serpens manducat, si propitius est nobis Dominus Jesus, ut non compatiatur anima carnis debilitati, non accendatur vapore carnis, et calore membrorum. Bonum est nubere magis quam uri (I Cor. VII, 9); est enim flamma quae interna urit (Prov. VI, 27). Unde hunc ignem non alligemus in sinu mentis, et recessu pectoris, ne interioris nostri uramus exuvias, et forense hoc nostrae animae vestimentum, velamenque carnale edax libidinis flamma consumat, sed transeamus per ignem (Esai. XLIII, 2). Et si quis incidit amoris incendium, transiliat, et transeat: non alliget adulterinam cupiditatem vinculis cogitationum, nullos sibi nodos assiduae nexu meditationis astringat; non intendat saepius in formam mulieris meretricis, nec adolescentula ad vultum juvenis oculos levet. Et si fortuitu aspexit, et capta est; quanto magis capietur, si curiosa aspexit!

68. The serpent eats this dust, if the Lord Jesus is favourable to us, that our spirit may not sympathize with the weakness of the flesh, nor be set on fire by the vapours of the flesh and the heat of our members. It is better to marry than to burn, for there is a flame which burns within. Let us not then suffer this fire to approach the bosom of our minds and the depths of our hearts, lest we burn up the covering of our inmost hearts, and lest the devouring fire of lust consume this outward garment of the soul and its fleshy veil, but let us pass through the fire. Isaiah 43:2 And should any one fall into the fire of love let him leap over it and pass forth; let him not bind to himself adulterous lust with the bands of thoughts, let him not tie knots around himself by the fastenings of continual reflection, let him not too often turn his attention to the form of a harlot, and let not a maiden lift her eyes to the countenance of a youth. And if by chance she has looked and is caught, how much more will she be entangled if she gazes with curiosity.

69. Vel consuetudo nos doceat. Ideo velamine obnubit caput suum mulier, ut etiam in publico tuta verecundia sit: non facile vultus ejus adolescentis oculis occurrat, nuptiali velamine tecta sit; ne vel fortuitis occursibus pateat ad vulnus vel alienum, vel suum: sed utrumque suum vulnus est. Quod si tegmine caput velat (I Cor. XI, 5 et seq.), ne temere aut videatur, aut videat (dum enim caput velatur, vultus absconditur), quanto magis velare se debet pudoris tegmine, ut etiam in publico habeat suum ipsa secretum!

69. Let custom itself teach us. A woman covers her face with a veil for this reason, that in public her modesty may be safe. That her face may not easily meet the gaze of a youth, let her be covered with the nuptial veil, so that not even in chance meetings she might be exposed to the wounding of another or of herself, though the wound of either were indeed hers. But if she cover her head with a veil that she may not accidentally see or be seen (for when the head is veiled the face is hidden), how much more ought she to cover herself with the veil of modesty, so as even in public to have her own secret place.

70. Verum esto, inciderit oculus, sed non intendat affectus. Non enim vidisse crimen est, sed cavendum ne origo sit criminis. Videt carnalis oculus, sed premat cordis oculos, maneat mentis verecundia. Habemus moralem et indulgentem Dominum; dixit quidem propheta: Nolo intendas in formam mulieris fornicariae; sed tamen Dominus dixit: Qui viderit mulierem ad concupiscendum eam, jam adulteravit eam in corde suo (Prov. V, 2). Non dixit: Si quis viderit, adulteravit; sed: Si quis ad concupiscendum viderit, non aspectum obligavit, sed affectum quaesivit. Bonus tamen pudor, qui ipsos corporis oculos sic premere consuevit, ut saepe non videamus etiam quod videmus. Etenim specie aspicere videmur, quidquid occurrerit; sed si non misceatur animi intentio, hic quoque secundum carnis officium noster aspectus vanescit; ita plus videmus animo, quam corpore.

70. But granted that the eye has fallen upon another, at least let not the inward affection follow. For to have seen is no sin, but one must be careful that it be not the source of sin. The bodily eye sees, but let the eye of the heart be closed; let modesty of mind remain. We have a Lord Who is both strict and indulgent. The prophet indeed said: Look not upon the beauty of a woman that is all harlot. But the Lord said: Whoever shall look on a woman to lust after her, has committed adultery with her already in his heart. Matthew 5:28 He does not say, Whosoever shall look has committed adultery, but Whosoever shall look on her to lust after her. He condemned not the look but sought out the inward affection. But that modesty is praiseworthy which has so accustomed itself to close the bodily eyes as often not to see what we really behold. For we seem to behold with the bodily sight whatever meets us; but if there be not joined to this any attention of the mind, the sight also, according to what is usual in the body, fades away, so that in reality we see rather with the mind than with the body.

71. Et si viderit caro ignem, non alligemus ignem in sinu, hoc est, in secreto mentis, animique arcano. Non implicemus ignem hunc ossibus, non ipsi nobis nodos injiciamus; non misceamus sermonem aliquem cum hujusmodi, unde exaestuet ignis adulterinus. Sermo juvenculae nodus adolescentium est: verba adolescentis vincula sunt amoris.

71. And if the flesh has seen the flame, let us not cherish that flame in our bosoms, that is, in the depths of the heart and the inward part of the mind. Let us not instil this fire into our bones, let us not bind bonds upon ourselves, let us not join in conversation with such as may be the cause to us of unholy fires. The speech of a maiden is a snare to a youth, the words of a youth are the bonds of love.

72. Vidit hunc ignem Joseph, quando eum adulterii cupida mulier allocuta est (Gen. XXXIX, 7); voluit eum capere sermone, misit laqueos labiorum suorum, sed pudicum virum ligare non potuit. Solvit enim vincula mulieris vox pudoris, sermo gravitatis, habena cautelae, fidei custodia, castimoniae disciplina. Capere igitur eum retibus suis impudica non potuit: misit manum, et apprehendit vestem ejus, ut nodo stringeret. Verba petulantis mulieris cupiditatum retia sunt, manus ejus amoris nodus est (Prov. VII, 21): sed nec retibus capi potuit mens pudica, nec nodo: excussa vestis, solutus est nodus; et ideo quia non alligavit ignem in sinu mentis suae, non combussit corpus suum.

72. Joseph saw the fire when the woman eager for adultery spoke to him. Genesis 39:7 She wished to catch him with her words. She set the snares of her lips, but was not able to capture the chaste man. For the voice of modesty, the voice of gravity, the rein of caution, the care for integrity, the discipline of chastity, loosed the woman's chains. So that unchaste person could not entangle him in her meshes. She laid her hand upon him; she caught his garment, that she might tighten the noose around him. The words of a lascivious woman are the snares of lust, and her hands the bonds of love; but the chaste mind could not be taken either by snares or by bonds. The garment was cast off, the bonds were loosed, and because he did not admit the fire into the bosom of his mind, his body was not burnt.

73. [Alias cap. XIV.] Vides ergo, quia animus noster culpae est auctor? Itaque innocens caro, sed plerumque peccati ministra. Ergo non te vincat formae concupiscentia. Multa retia tenduntur a diabolo, multi laquei. Oculus meretricis laqueus amatoris est. Ipsi nobis oculi nostri retia sunt; et ideo scriptum est: Neque capiaris oculis tuis (Prov. VI, 25). Ipsi nobis ergo tendimus retia, quibus involvimur et implicamur. Ipsi nobis vincula nectimus, sicut legimus: Quia vinculis peccatorum suorum unusquisque constringitur (Prov. VI, 2).

73. You see, then, that our mind is the cause of our guilt. And so the flesh is innocent, but is often the minister of sin. Let not, then, desire of beauty overcome you. Many nets and many snares are spread by the devil. The look of a harlot is the snare of him who loves her. Our own eyes are nets to us, wherefore it is written: Be not taken with your eyes. Proverbs 6:25 So, then, we spread nets for ourselves in which we are entangled and hampered. We bind chains on ourselves, as we read: For every one is bound with the chains of his own sins.

74. Et ideo transeamus ignem adolescentiae, ardoremque juvenilis aetatis: transeamus aquam, non remaneamus in aqua; ne flumina nos profunda concludant. Transeamus magis, ut et nos dicamus: Torrentem pertransivit anima nostra (Psal. CXXIII, 5); qui enim transit, salvus est. Denique Dominus sic ait: Si transeas per aquam, tecum sum, flumina te non concludent (Esai. XLIII, 2); et Propheta dicit: Vidi impium superexaltatum ultra cedros Libani: et transivi, et ecce non erat (Psal. XXXVI, 35, 36). Transi saecularia, et cecidisse aspicies altitudines impiorum. Moyses quoque transiens saecularia flumina, vidit visum magnum, et ait: Transiens videbo hoc visum (Exod. III, 3); si enim fuisset in corporis vitiis et saeculi istius lubricis voluptatibus, tanta non vidisset mysteria.

74. Let us then pass through the fires of youth and the glow of early years; let us pass through the waters, let us not remain therein, lest the deep floods shut us in. Let us rather pass over, that we too may say: Our soul has passed over the stream, for he who has passed over is safe. And lastly, the Lord speaks thus: If you pass through the water, I am with you, the rivers shall not overflow you. Isaiah 43:2 And the prophet says: I have seen the wicked exalted above the cedars of Libanus, and I passed by, and lo, he was not. Pass by things of this world, and you will see that the high places of the wicked have fallen. Moses, too, passing by things of this world, saw a great sight and said: I will turn aside and see this great sight, Exodus 3:3 for had he been held by the fleeting pleasures of this world he would not have seen so great a mystery.

75. Transeamus ergo et nos ignem hunc libidinis, quem timens Paulus, sed nobis timens, qui castigando corpus suum, fecerat ut jam non timeret sibi, dicit nobis: Fugite fornicationem (I Cor. VI, 18). Fugiamus ergo tamquam sequentem, quae non post nos, sed in nobis sequitur nosmetipsos. Ergo videamus diligenter, ne dum illam fugimus, nobiscum eam portemus. Volumus enim plerumque fugere, sed si non penitus eam de nostro excutimus animo, tollimus eam magis, quam relinquimus. Transiliamus ergo eam, ne nobis dicatur: Ambulate in igne flammae vestrae, quem accendistis vobis (Esai. L, 11). Quoniam sicut ille qui alligat ignem in sinu vestimenta comburit (Prov. VI, 27); sic qui ambulat super ignem, pedes comburat necesse est; quoniam scriptum est: Ambulabit quis super carbones ignis, pedes autem non comburet (Prov. I, 28)?

75. Let us also pass over this fire of lust, fearing which Paul — but fearing for us, inasmuch as by buffeting his body he had come no longer to fear for himself — says to us: Flee fornication. 1 Corinthians 6:18 Let us then flee it as though following us, though indeed it follows not behind us, but within our very selves. Let us then diligently take heed lest while we are fleeing from it we carry it with ourselves. For we wish for the most part to flee, but if we do not wholly cast it out of our mind, we rather take it up than forsake it. Let us then spring over it, lest it be said to us: Walk in the flame of your fire, which you have kindled for yourselves. Isaiah 50:11 For as he who takes fire into his bosom burns his clothes, Proverbs 6:27 so he who walks upon fiery coals must of necessity burn his feet, as it is written: Can one walk upon coals of fire and not burn his feet? Proverbs 6:28

76. Gravis ignis est, et ideo non demus illi alimenta luxuriae. Pascitur libido conviviis, nutritur deliciis, vino accenditur, ebrietate inflammatur. Graviora his sunt fomenta verborum, quae vino quodam Sodomitanae vitis mentem inebriant. Caveamus tamen et hujus abundantiam vini; ubi enim caro inebriatur, mens titubat, animus vacillat, cor fluctuat. Et ideo ad utrumque utile praeceptum est, quo monetur Timotheus: vino modico utere propter frequentes tuas infirmitates (I Tim. V, 23). Cum calet corpus, trahit vaporem: cum alget morbi frigore caro, refrigeratur anima tua: cum dolet corpus tuum, tristis est mens tua, sed tristitia tua in gaudium veniet.

76. This fire is dangerous, let us then not feed it with the fuel of luxury. Lust is fed by feastings, nourished by delicacies, kindled by wine, and inflamed by drunkenness. Still more dangerous than these are the incentives of words, which intoxicate the mind as it were with a kind of wine of the vine of Sodom. Let us be on our guard against abundance of this wine, for when the flesh is intoxicated the mind totters, the heart wavers, the heart is carried to and fro. And so with regard to each that precept is useful wherein Timothy is warned: Drink a little wine because of your frequent infirmities. 1 Timothy 5:23 When the body is heated, it excites the glow of the mind; when the flesh is chilled with the cold of disease the spirit is chilled; when the body is in pain, the mind is sad, but the sadness shall become joy.

77. Noli ergo timere si manducetur caro tua, anima tua non devoratur. Ideo David non timere se dicit; quia carnem ejus, non animam inimici edebant, sicut legimus: Dum appropinquant super me nocentes, ut edant carnes meas: qui tribulant me inimici mei, ipsi infirmati sunt, et ceciderunt (Psal. XXVI, 2). Ruinam igitur solam facit sibi serpens; ideo serpenti traditur, qui a serpente elisus est; ut quem dejecit, hunc erigat: et fiat ruina serpentis hominis resurrectio. Satanam autem corporalis hujus contritionis et carnalis auctorem debilitatis Scriptura ostendit, Paulo dicente: Datus est mihi stimulus carnis meae angelus Satanae, qui me colaphizet, ut non extollar (II Cor. XII, 7). Sic ergo curare Paulus didicit, quemadmodum ipse sanatus est.

77. Do not then fear if your flesh be eaten away, the soul is not consumed. And so David says that he does not fear, because the enemy were eating up his flesh but not his soul, as we read: When evil-doers come near upon me to eat up my flesh, my foes who trouble me, they were weakened and fell. So the serpent works overthrow for himself alone, therefore is he who has been injured by the serpent given over to the serpent that he may raise up again him whom he cast down, and the overthrow of the serpent may be the raising again of the man. And Scripture testifies that Satan is the author of this bodily suffering and weakness of the flesh, where Paul says: There was given unto me a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet me, that I should not be exalted. 2 Corinthians 12:7 So Paul learned to heal even as he himself had been made whole.

CAPUT XV.

REDIENS A DIGRESSIONE, quid sit venire in virga vel in spiritu mansuetudinis docet. Sequestrandum graviter lapsum, sed eum Apostoli exemplo sacris reddendum, ubi piae plebis oratione atque lacrymis fuerit expiatus. Expurgari vetus fermentum, cum litterae durities mollioris explicationis farina temperatur. Quomodo Ecclesiae farina omnes conspergi ac cibo charitatis pasci debeant; ne similes evadant invidi illius fratris, quem aemulantur Novatiani, quorum tumor illic notatur.

Returning from this digression, St. Ambrose explains what is the meaning of St. Paul where he speaks of coming with a rod or in the spirit of meekness. One who has grievously fallen is to be separated, but to be again restored to religious privileges when he has sufficiently repented. The old leaven is purged out when the hardness of the letter is tempered by the meal of a milder interpretation. All should be sprinkled with the Church's meal and fed with the food of charity, lest they become like that envious elder brother, whose example is followed by the Novatians.

78. Bonus itaque doctor dum promittit alterum de duobus, utrumque donavit. Venit in virga, quia a communione sacra convictum removit. Et bene dicitur tradi satanae, qui separatur a Christi corpore. Venit etiam in charitate, spirituque mansuetudinis, vel quia sic tradidit, ut spiritum ejus salvum faceret, vel quia eum quem ante sequestraverat postea sacramentis reddidit.

78. That faithful teacher, having promised one of two things, gave each. He came with a rod, for he separated the guilty man from the holy fellowship. And well is he said to be delivered to Satan who is separated from the body of Christ. But he came in love and with the spirit of meekness, whether because he so delivered him up as to save his soul, or because he afterwards restored to the sacraments him whom he had before separated.

79. Nam et sequestrari oportet graviter lapsum, ne modicum fermentum totam massam corrumpat: et expurgandum est vetus fermentum, vel in singulis vetus homo, hoc est, exterior homo cum actibus suis, vel in populo inveteratus peccatis, vitiisque concretus. Et bene dixit expurgandum, non projiciendum: quod enim expurgatur, non totum judicatur inutile; ideo enim purgatur, ut utile ab inutili separetur: quod autem projicitur, nihil in se utile habere creditur.

79. For it is needful to separate one who has grievously fallen, lest a little leaven corrupt the whole lump. And the old leaven must be purged out, or the old man in each person; that is, the outward man and his deeds, he who among the people has grown old in sin and hardened in vices. And well did he say purged, not cast forth, for what is purged is not considered wholly valueless, for to this end is it purged, that what is of value be separated from the worthless, but that which is cast forth is considered to have in itself nothing of value.

80. [Alias cap. XV.] Jam tunc igitur Apostolus reddendum sacramentis judicavit coelestibus, si purgari se ipse vellet. Et bene ait: Expurgate; velut enim operibus quibusdam totius populi purgatur, et plebis lacrymis abluitur, qui orationibus et fletibus plebis redimitur a peccato, et in homine mundatur interiore. Donavit enim Christus Ecclesiae suae, ut unum per omnes redimeret, quae Domini Jesu meruit adventum, ut per unum omnes redimerentur.

80. The Apostle then judged that the sinner should then at once be restored to the heavenly sacraments if he himself wished to be cleansed. And well is it said Purge, for he is purged as by certain things done by the whole people, and is washed in the tears of the multitude, and redeemed from sin by the weeping of the multitude, and is purged in the inner man. For Christ granted to His Church that one should be redeemed by means of all, as she herself was found worthy of the coming of the Lord Jesus, in order that through One all might be redeemed.

81. Hic sensus Pauli est, quem verba obscuriorem faciunt. Consideremus ipsum Apostoli sermonem: Expurgate, inquit, vetus fermentum; ut sitis nova conspersio, sicut estis azymi (I Cor. V, 7). Sive quod tota Ecclesia suscipiat onus peccatoris, cui compatiendum et fletu, et oratione, et dolore est: et quasi fermento ejus se totam conspergat; ut per universos ea quae superflua sunt in aliquo poenitentiam agente, virilis misericordiae aut compassionis velut collativa quadam admixtione, purgentur. Sive ut illa mulier Evangelica docet (Luc. XIII, 21), quae typum praetendit Ecclesiae, eo quod fermentum abscondat in farina sua, donec fermentetur totum; ut mundum omne sumatur.

81. This is Paul’s meaning which the words make more obscure. Let us consider the exact words of the Apostle: Purge out, says he, the old leaven, that you may be a new lump, even as you are unleavened. 1 Corinthians 5:7 Either that the whole Church takes up the burden of the sinner, with whom she has to suffer in weeping and prayer and pain, and, as it were, covers herself with his leaven, in order that by means of all that which is to be done away in the individual doing penance may be purged by a kind of contribution and commixture of compassion and mercy offered with manly vigor. Or one may understand it as that woman in the Gospel teaches us, who is a type of the Church, when she hid the leaven in her meal, till all was leavened, and the whole could be used as pure.

82. Docuit me Dominus in Evangelio quid sit fermentum, dicens: Non intelligitis quia non de pane dixi: Attendite a fermento Pharisaeorum et Sadducaeorum (Matth. XVI, 11)? Tunc, inquit, intellexerunt quia non dixit a panibus, sed a doctrina Pharisaeorum et Sadducaeorum attenderent sibi. Hoc ergo fermentum, hoc est, doctrinam Pharisaeorum, et disputationem Sadducaeorum abscondit Ecclesia in farina sua; cum litteram legis duriorem spiritali interpretatione mollivit, et velut mola quadam suae disputationis infregit, proferens velut de folliculis litterarum mysteriorum interna secreta, et resurrectionis fidem astruens; qua Dei misericordia praedicatur, qua reparari vita creditur mortuorum.

82. The Lord taught me in the Gospel what leaven is when He said: Do you not understand that I said not concerning bread, Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees? Matthew 16:11 Then, it is said, they understood that He spoke not of bread, but that they should beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees. This leaven, then — that is, the doctrine of the Pharisees and the contentiousness of the Sadducees — the Church hides in her meal, when she softened the hard letter of the Law by a spiritual interpretation, and ground it as it were in the mill of her explanations, bringing out as it were from the husks of the letter the inner secrets of the mysteries, and setting forth the belief in the Resurrection, wherein the mercy of God is proclaimed, and wherein it is believed that the life of those who are dead is restored.

83. Non absurda autem videtur ad hunc locum assumptio comparationis hujus. Siquidem regnum coelorum est peccatoris redemptio: et ideo farina Ecclesiae conspergamur omnes boni et mali, ut simus omnes nova conspersio. Ne quis autem vereretur, ne fermenti vitiosioris admixtio massam decoloraret, ideo dixit: Ut sitis nova conspersio, sicut estis azymi (I Cor. V, 7); hoc est, tales conspersio vos reddet, qualis erat innocentiae vestrae pura sinceritas. Ita si misereamur, non fuscamur peccato alieno: sed redemptionem ejus acquirimus nostrae gratiae; ut qualis erat puritas, perseveret. Et ideo addidit: Etenim pascha nostrum immolatus est Christus (Ibid.), hoc est, passio Domini omnibus profuit, et peccatoribus donavit redemptionem, quos flagitii poenituit admissi.

83. Now this comparison seems to be not unfitly brought forward in this place, since the kingdom of heaven is redemption from sin, and therefore we all, both bad and good, are mingled with the meal of the Church that we all may be a new lump. But that no one may be afraid that an admixture of evil leaven might injure the lump, the Apostle said: That you may be a new lump, even as you are unleavened; 1 Corinthians 5:7 that is to say, This mixture will render you again such, as in the pure integrity of your innocence. If we thus have compassion, we are not stained with the sins of others, but we gain the restoration of another to the increase of our own grace, so that our integrity remains as it was. And therefore he adds: For Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us; 1 Corinthians 5:7 that is, the Passion of the Lord profited all, and gave redemption to sinners who repented of the sins they had committed.

84. Itaque epulemur bonum cibum, poenitentiam gerentes, laeti redemptione; nullus enim cibus est benevolentia et pietate dulcior: epulis nostris atque laetitiae nulla de peccatore servato invidia admisceatur; ne se ipse a domo Patris, quemadmodum expositus in Evangelio invidus ille frater, excludat, qui fratrem receptum doluit, quem in perpetuum gaudebat exclusum (Luc. XV, 28).

84. Let us then keep the feast on good food, doing penance yet joyful in our redemption, for no food is sweeter than kindness and gentleness. Let no envy towards the sinner who is saved be mingled with our feasts and joy, lest that envious brother, as is set forth in the Gospel, exclude himself from the house of his Father, because he grieved at the reception of his brother, at whose lasting exile he was wont to rejoice.

85. Cujus vos similes esse, Novatiani, non potestis negare, qui ideo, ut dicitis, in Ecclesiam non convenitis, quia per poenitentiam tributa spes fuerat his qui lapsi sunt, revertendi. Sed hoc praetentum est specie. Caeterum episcopatus amissi dolore succensus Novatianus schisma composuit.

85. And you Novatians cannot deny that you are like him, who, as you say, do not come together to the Church because by penance a hope of return had been given to those who had lapsed. But this is only a pretence, for Novatian contrived his schism through grief at his loss of the episcopal office.

86. Sed non intelligitis quia de vobis quoque prophetavit Apostolus, et vobis dicit: Et vos inflati estis, et non magis luctum habuistis; ut tollatur de medio vestrum, qui hoc opus fecit (I Cor. V, 2)? Utique tunc penitus tollitur, cum aboletur peccatum ejus; non enim excludendum ab Ecclesia dicit Apostolus, qui suadet esse purgandum.

86. But do you not understand that the Apostle also prophesied of you and says to you: And you are puffed up and did not rather mourn, that he who did this deed might be taken away from among you? 1 Corinthians 5:2 He is, then, wholly taken away when his sin is done away, but the Apostle does not say that the sinner is to be shut out of the Church who counsels his cleansing.

CAPUT XVI.

NOVATIANI CUM APOSTOLO comparantur. Quam pulchre illis conveniat Domini verbum: Nescitis cujus spiritus estis. Poenitentiae studium ab eis exstingui, dum ejus fructum e medio tollunt. Hoc pacto Christi promissis privari peccatores; qui tamen non cito admittendi ad mysteria. Denique poenitentium quorumdam exempla proponuntur.

CHAPTER 16

Comparison between the apostles and Novatians. The fitness of the words, You know not what spirit you are of, when applied to them. The desire of penance is extinguished by them when they take away its fruit. And thus are sinners deprived of the promises of Christ, though, indeed, they ought not to be too soon admitted to the mysteries. Some examples of repentance.

87. Cum igitur apostolus peccatum remiserit, qua vos auctoritate dimittendum negatis? Quis reverentior Christi, Novatianus, an Paulus? Sed noverat Paulus Dominum misericordem; noverat Dominum Jesum severitate magis discipulorum offensum, quam misericordia (II Cor. II, 10).

87. Inasmuch, then, as the Apostle forgave sins, by what authority do you say that they are not to be forgiven? Who has the most reverence for Christ, Paul or Novatian? But Paul knew that the Lord was merciful. He knew that the Lord Jesus was offended more by the harshness of the disciples than by their pitifulness.

88. Denique Jacobum et Joannem dicentes quod ignem de coelo peterent, qui consumeret eos, qui Dominum recipere nolebant, confutavit Jesus dicens: Nescitis cujus spiritus estis; Filius enim hominis non venit animas hominum perdere, sed salvas facere (Luc. IX, 55, 56). Et illis quidem dixit: Nescitis cujus spiritus estis, qui ipsius erant spiritus; vobis autem dicit: Non estis spiritus mei, qui meam clementiam non tenetis, qui meam refutatis misericordiam; qui excluditis poenitentiam, quam ego per apostolos meos praedicari volui in nomine meo.

88. Furthermore, Jesus rebuked James and John when they spoke of bringing down fire from heaven to consume those who refused to receive the Lord, and said to them: You know not whose spirit you are of; for the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives but to save them. Luke 9:55-56 To them, indeed, He said, You know not whose spirit you are of, who were of His spirit; but to you He says, You are not of My spirit, who hold not fast My clemency, who reject My mercy, who refuse repentance which I willed to be preached by the apostles in My Name.

89. Frustra enim dicitis vos praedicare poenitentiam, qui tollitis fructum poenitentiae (Luc. XXIV, 47). Homines enim ad aliquod studium aut praemiis aut fructibus incitantur: omne autem studium torpescit dilatione. Et ideo Dominus ut praesentium fructu cumularetur devotio discipulorum, dixit quoniam qui dimisisset omnia sua, et Deum secutus esset, septies tantum reciperet et hic et in futurum (Matth. XIX, 29). Prius hic promisit, ut fastidia dilationis auferret: addidit et in futurum, ut hic disceres credere in futurum quoque solvenda tibi praemia. Remuneratio igitur praesentium, testimonium futurorum est.

89. For it is in vain that you say that you preach repentance who remove the fruits of repentance. For men are led to the pursuit of anything either by rewards or results, and every pursuit grows slack by delay. And for this reason the Lord, in order that the devotion of His disciples might be increased, said that every one who had left all that was his, and followed

God, should receive sevenfold more both here and hereafter. Matthew 19:29 First of all He promised the reward here, to do away with the tedium of delay, and again hereafter, that we might learn to believe that rewards will also be given to us hereafter. Present rewards are then an earnest of those hereafter.

90. Si quis igitur occulta crimina habens, propter Christum tamen studiose poenitentiam egerit; quomodo ista recipit, si ei communio non refunditur? Volo veniam reus speret, petat eam lacrymis, petat gemitibus, petat populi totius fletibus; ut ignoscatur, obsecret: et cum secundo et tertio fuerit dilata ejus communio, credat remissius se supplicasse, fletus augeat, miserabilior postea revertatur, teneat pedes brachiis, osculetur osculis, lavet fletibus, nec dimittat; ut de ipso dicat Dominus Jesus: Remissa sunt peccata ejus multa; quoniam dilexit multum (Luc. VII, 47).

90. If, then, any one, having committed hidden sins, shall nevertheless diligently do penance, how shall he receive those rewards if not restored to the communion of the Church? I am willing, indeed, that the guilty man should hope for pardon, should seek it with tears and groans, should seek it with the aid of the tears of all the people, should implore forgiveness; and if communion be postponed two or three times, that he should believe that his entreaties have not been urgent enough, that he must increase his tears, must come again even in greater trouble, clasp the feet of the faithful with his arms, kiss them, wash them with tears, and not let them go, so that the Lord Jesus may say of him too: His sins which are many are forgiven, for he loved much. Luke 7:47

91. Cognovi quosdam in poenitentia sulcasse vultum lacrymis, exarasse continuis fletibus genas, stravisse corpus suum calcandum omnibus; jejuno ore semper et pallido, mortis speciem spiranti in corpore praetulisse.

91. I have known penitents whose countenance was furrowed with tears, their cheeks worn with constant weeping, who offered their body to be trodden under foot by all, who with faces ever pale and worn with fasting bore about in a yet living body the likeness of death.

CAPUT XVII.

SEVERITATI PIETATEM ADDENDAM esse, quod Apostolus praestitisse ostenditur in Corinthio. Hunc baptismate contra Novatianorum cavillos initiatum fuisse astruitur. Quibus additur non destructionem, sed castigationem carnis, per vocem interitum significari, quod etiam terrae similitudine confirmatur.

That gentleness must be added to severity, as is shown in the case of St. Paul at Corinth. The man had been baptized, though the Novatians argue against it. And by the word destruction is not meant annihilation but severe chastening.

92. Quid exspectamus ut mortui mereantur veniam, qui mortem sibi intulerunt, cum viverent? Satis est, inquit, ei qui talis est, objurgatio haec quae fit a pluribus; ita ut e contrario magis donetis et consolemini; ne forte abundantiore tristitia absorbeatur (II Cor. II, 6). Si satis ad condemnationem est objurgatio, quae fit a pluribus, satis est quoque ad remissionem peccati obsecratio, quae fit a pluribus. Moralis magister et nostrae fragilitatis conscius, et pietatis divinae interpres, vult donari peccatum, vult consolationem adhiberi; ne tristitia poenitentem taedio longae dilationis absorbeat.

92. Why do we postpone the time of pardon for those who have mortified themselves, who during life have done themselves to death? Sufficient, says St. Paul, to such a one is this punishment which is inflicted by the many; so that contrariwise, you should rather forgive him and comfort him, lest by any means he should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow. 2 Corinthians 2:6 If the punishment which is inflicted by the many is sufficient for condemnation, the intercession which is made by many is also sufficient for the remission of sin. The Master of morals, Who both knows our weakness and is the interpreter of the will of God, wills that comfort should be given, lest sorrow through the weariness of long delay should swallow up the penitent.

93. Ideo ergo donavit apostolus, nec solum donavit, sed etiam confirmari in eum charitatem voluit. Qui charus est, non habet duritiam, sed mansuetudinem. Nec solum donavit ipse, sed voluit etiam omnes donare, et se propter alios donasse dixit; ne multi propter unum diutius contristarentur. Si cui, inquit, donastis, et ego; nam et ego propter vos in persona Christi, ut non circumveniamur a Satana; nec enim versutias ejus ignoramus (Ibid., 10). Recte potest serpentem cavere, qui ejus potest versutias non ignorare, quae multae ad nocendum sunt. Vult semper nocere, semper circumvenire; ut mortem inferat: sed debemus cavere ne remedium nostrum fiat ejus triumphus; circumvenimur enim ab eo, si per nimiam tristitiam pereat, qui potest liberari per indulgentiam.

93. The Apostle then forgave him, and not only forgave him, but desired that love to him should again grow strong. He who is loved receives not harshness but mercy. And not only did he himself forgive him only, but willed that all should forgive him, and says that he forgave for the sake of others, lest many should be longer saddened on account of one. To whom, says he, you have forgiven anything, I forgive also, for I also have forgiven for your sakes in the person of Christ, for we are not ignorant of his devices. 2 Corinthians 2:10 Rightly can he be on his guard against the serpent who is not ignorant of his devices, of which there are so many to our detriment. He is always desirous to do harm, always desirous to circumvent us, that he may cause death; but we ought to take heed lest our remedy become an occasion of triumph for him; for we are circumvented by him, if any one perish through overmuch sorrow, who might be set free by pitifulness.

94. Et ut sciremus quia de baptizato dicit, addidit: Scripsi vobis in epistola, ne commisceamini fornicariis hujus mundi (I Cor. V, 9). Et infra subjunxit: Nunc autem scripsi vobis, non commisceri, si quis frater nominatur fornicator, aut avarus, aut idolis serviens (Ibid., 11). Quos simul junxit ad poenam, simul voluit etiam ad veniam pertinere. Si quis autem talis est, inquit, cum hoc nec cibum sumas (Ibid.). Quam severus pertinacibus, quam indulgens rogantibus! Adversum illos Christi armatur injuria, his Christi invocatio suffragatur.

94. And that we may know that this person was baptized, he added: I wrote to you in my epistle to have no company with fornicators, not altogether with fornicators of this world. 1 Corinthians 5:9 And farther on he adds: But now I write unto you not to keep company if any man that is named a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator. 1 Corinthians 5:11 Those whom he has joined together under one penalty, he willed to attain together to forgiveness. If any be such, he says, with him not to eat. 1 Corinthians 5:11 How severe he is with the obstinate, how indulgent to those who seek. Against those rises up in arms the injury done to Christ, while the calling upon Christ aids these.

95. At ne quis forte eo moveatur, quia scriptum est: Tradidi hujusmodi hominem Satanae in interitum carnis (Ibid., 5), et dicat: Quomodo potuit ad veniam pertinere, cujus omnis interierat caro; cum manifestum sit in utroque redemptum hominem, in utroque salvari: neque animam sine carne, neque carnem sine anima, cum sibi sint gestorum operum consortiis copulatae, sine consortio vel poenae esse vel praemii? Is sibi responsum hoc habeat, quod interitus non consummatam absumptionem carnis significet, sed castigationem. Sicut enim mortuus peccato, Deo vivit: ita illecebrae carnis intereunt, et cupiditatibus suis moritur caro: ut castitati caeterisque bonis operibus reviviscat.

95. But lest any one be perplexed because it is written: I have delivered such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, 1 Corinthians 5:5 and should say: How can he attain forgiveness whose whole flesh has perished, seeing that it is evident that man was redeemed both in body and soul, and is saved in both and that neither the soul without the body, nor yet the body without the soul, since both are united by their fellowship in the deeds that have been done, can be without fellowship either in punishment or in reward? Let this suffice for an answer to him: That destruction does not mean the complete annihilation of the flesh, but its chastening. For as he who is dead to sin lives to God, so the allurements of the flesh perish, and the flesh dies to its lusts, in order that it may live again to purity and to other good works.

96. Et quod aptius exemplum, quam de matre sumamus? Namque ipsa de qua assumpti sumus, terra, intermisso exercitio cultuque, videtur deserta: et aut vinetis quibus consitus est ager, aut oleis moritur; succum tamen proprium velut quamdam sui animam non amittit. Denique repetita cultione, et creditis seminibus, quibus habilis aestimatur, feracior assurgit fructibus. Non ergo alienum si etiam nostra caro interire sic dicitur; ut repressa magis, quam absumpta credatur.

96. And what more suitable example can we take than one from our common mother? For the earth itself, from which we are all taken, when it is not worked and cultivated, seems to be desert; and the field dies to the vines or olive-trees with which it was planted, and yet it does not lose its own nutritive power, which is, as it were, its life. And then later, when cultivation begins once more, and the seed is sown for which the land seems suitable, it breaks forth again more fruitful than before with its products. It is not, then, anything so strange if our flesh is said to die, and yet is understood to be subdued rather than annihilated.

LIBER SECUNDUS.

BOOK II.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

AMBROSIUS LIBRI SUPERIORIS praeceptis nova subtexurus, necessitatem mature agendi poenitentiam allegorice insinuat, quam et suadet agendam: deinde illius forma in Apostolo imitationi proposita, varios ejusdem fructus strictim proponit.

CHAPTER 1

St. Ambrose gives additional rules concerning repentance, and shows that it must not be delayed.

1. Etsi non pauca quae ad cohortationem poenitentiae proficiant, scripta sint in libro superiore; tamen cum adjici possint complura, ne velut semesas verborum nostrorum epulas reliquisse videamur, inceptum persequamur convivium.

1. Although in the former book we have written many things which may tend to the more perfect practice of repentance, yet inasmuch as a great deal more may be added, we will continue the repast so as not to seem to have relinquished the provisions of our teaching only half consumed.

2. Agenda est enim poenitentia non solum sollicite, sed etiam mature: ne forte Evangelicus ille paterfamilias qui arborem ficum plantavit in vinea sua, veniat; et quaerens fructum in ea, si non invenerit, dicat cultori vineae: Succide illam. Ut quid etiam terram occupat (Luc. XIII, 7)? Et nisi cultor vineae interveniat dicens: Domine, remitte illam et hoc anno, usque dum fodiam circa illam; et mittam cophinum stercoris: et si quidem fecerit fructum; sin autem, excidatur ficulnea (Ibid., 8, 9).

2. For repentance must be taken in hand not only anxiously, but also quickly, lest perchance that father of the house in the Gospel who planted a fig-tree in his vineyard should come and seek fruit on it, and finding none, say to the vine-dresser: Cut it down, why does it cumber the ground? Luke 13:7 And unless the vine-dresser should intercede and say: Lord, let it alone this year also, until I dig about it and dung it, and if it bear fruit — well; but if not let it be cut down. Luke 13:8-9

3. Stercoremus ergo et nos agrum hunc quem possidemus, et imitemur laboriosos agricolas, quos non pudet fimo pingui satiare terram, et immundo cinere agrum aspergere, ut fructus uberiores colligant.

3. Let us then dung this field which we possess, and imitate those hard-working farmers, who are not ashamed to satiate the land with rich dung and to scatter the grimy ashes over the field, that they may gather more abundant crops.

4. Et quemadmodum stercoremus, docet Apostolus dicens: Et aestimo omnia ut stercora, ut Christum lucrifaciam (Philip. III, 8); qui per infamiam et bonam famam meruit Christo placere. Legerat enim quod Abraham dum se stercus et cinerem fatetur, summa humilitate invenit Dei gratiam (Gen. XVIII, 3). Legerat quod Job in stercore sedens omnia quae amiserat, recuperavit (Job. XXIV). Legerat prophetante David, quod Deus de terra suscitat inopem, et de stercore erigit pauperem (Psal. CXII, 7).

4. And the Apostle teaches us how to dung it, saying: I count all things but dung, that I may gain Christ, Philippians 3:8 and he, through evil report and good report, attained to pleasing Christ. For he had read that Abraham, when confessing himself to be but dust and ashes, Genesis 18:27 in his deep humility found favour with God. He had read how Job, sitting among the ashes, Job 2:8 regained all that he had lost. Job 42:10 He had heard in the utterance of David, how God raises the poor out of the dust, and lifts the needy out of the dunghill.

5. Et nos ergo non erubescamus fateri Domino peccata nostra? Pudor est ut unusquisque crimina sua prodat: sed ille pudor agrum suum arat, spinas tollit perpetuas, sentes amputat, fructus adolet, quos inter mortuos esse credebat. Sequere illum qui bene arando agrum suum, fructus quaesivit aeternos. Maledicimur, inquit, et benedicimus: persecutionem patimur, et sustinemus: blasphemamur, et obsecramus: tamquam purgamenta hujus mundi facti sumus (I Cor. IV, 12, 13). Si et tu sic araveris, seminabis spiritalia. Ara, ut peccatum auferas, fructum acquiras. Ille aravit, ut persecutoris in se eradicaret affectum. Quid plus potuit nobis conferre Christus ad studium correctionis, quam ut converteret, et daret nobis ex persecutore doctorem?

5. Let us then not be ashamed to confess our sins unto the Lord. Shame indeed there is when each makes known his sins, but that shame, as it were, ploughs his land, removes the ever-recurring brambles, prunes the thorns, and gives life to the fruits which he believed were dead. Follow him who, by diligently ploughing his field, sought for eternal fruit: Being reviled we bless, being persecuted we endure, being defamed we entreat, we are made as the offscouring of the world. 1 Corinthians 4:12-13 If you plough after this fashion you will sow spiritual seed. Plough that you may get rid of sin and gain fruit. He ploughed so as to destroy in himself the last tendency to persecution. What more could Christ give to lead us on to the pursuit of perfection, than to convert and then give us for a teacher one who was a persecutor?

CAPUT II.

APOSTOLICUM LOCUM AB haereticis contra poenitentiam objectum solvit, eumque de baptismatis iteratione intelligendum cum singularum illius partium expositione, tum praemissa ibidem legalium baptismatum mentione ostendit; quamvis subjungat eo quoque illum posse referri, ut quod impossibile sit hominibus, Deo impossibile nequaquam habeatur.

A passage quoted by the heretics against repentance is explained in two ways, the first being that Hebrews 6:4 refers to the impossibility of being baptized again; the second, that what is impossible with man is possible with God.

6. Cum igitur tam evidenti et ipsius Apostoli, et scriptorum ejus exemplo redarguantur, tamen adhuc obniti volunt, et auctoritatem aiunt Apostolicae sibi suffragari sententiae, allegantes scriptum ad Hebraeos: Impossibile est enim hos qui semel illuminati sunt, et gustaverunt donum coeleste, et participes facti sunt Spiritus sancti, et bonum gustaverunt Dei verbum, virtutesque futuri saeculi, lapsos iterum renovari in poenitentiam, rursus crucifigentes Filium Dei, et ostentatione triumphantes (Heb. VI, 4 et seq.).

6. Being then refuted by the clear example of the Apostle and by his writings, the heretics yet endeavour to resist further, and say that their opinion is supported by apostolic authority, bringing forward the passage in the Epistle to the Hebrews: For it is impossible that those who were once enlightened, and have tasted the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, should if they fall away be again renewed unto repentance, crucifying again the Son of God, and put Him to open shame.

7. Numquid Paulus adversus factum suum praedicare potuit? Donavit Corinthio peccatum per poenitentiam (II Cor. II, 10); quomodo hic potuit sententiam suam ipse reprehendere? Ergo quia non potuit quod aedificaverat destruere, non contrarium dixisse eum, sed diversum advertimus. Quod enim contrarium est, se ipsum impugnat: quod diversum est, distinctam solet habere rationem. Ita autem contrarium non est, ut alterum suffragetur alteri. Etenim quia de remittenda praedicavit poenitentia, debuit et de iis qui iterandum putant baptismum, non silere: et prius sollicitudinem nobis auferri oportuit, ut sciremus etiam post baptismum, si qui peccarent, donari eis posse peccatum; ne spe veniae destitutos iterandi baptismatis opinio vana perverteret: deinde iterandum non esse baptisma rationabili disputatione suadendum fuit.

7. Could Paul teach in opposition to his own act? He had at Corinth forgiven sin through penance, how could he himself speak against his own decision? Since, then, he could not destroy what he had built, we must assume that what he says was different from, but not contrary to, what had gone before. For what is contrary is opposed to itself, what is different has ordinarily another meaning. Things which are contrary are not such that one can support the other. Inasmuch, then, as the Apostle spoke of remitting penance, he could not be silent as to those who thought that baptism was to be repeated. And it was right first of all to remove our anxiety, and to let us know that even after baptism, if any sinned their sins could be forgiven them, lest a false belief in a reiterated baptism should lead astray those who were destitute of all hope of forgiveness. And secondly, it was right to set forth in a well-reasoned argument that baptism is not to be repeated.

8. De baptismate autem dictum verba ipsa declarant, quibus significavit impossibile esse lapsos renovari in poenitentiam; per lavacrum enim renovamur, per quod renascimur, sicut ipse Paulus dicit: Consepulti enim sumus cum illo per baptismum in mortem, ut quemadmodum surrexit Christus ex mortuis per gloriam Patris, ita et nos in novitate vitae ambulemus (Rom. VI, 4). Et alibi: Renovamini spiritu mentis vestrae, et induite novum hominem, qui secundum Deum creatus est (Ephes. IV, 23, 24). Et alibi: Renovabitur sicut aquilae juventus tua (Psal. CII, 3): quod etiam aquila, cum fuerit mortua, ex suis reliquiis renascitur, sicut per baptismatis sacramentum, cum fuerimus peccato mortui, renascimur Deo, ac reformamur. Unum ergo baptisma docet, sicut alibi: Una fides; unum, inquit, baptisma (Ephes. IV, 5).

8. And that the writer was speaking of baptism is evident from the very words in which it is stated that it is impossible to renew unto repentance those who were fallen, inasmuch as we are renewed by means of the laver of baptism, whereby we are born again, as Paul says himself: For we are buried with Him through baptism into death, that, like as Christ rose from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we, too, should walk in newness of life. Romans 6:4 And in another place: Be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and put on the new man which is created after God. Ephesians 4:23 And elsewhere again: Your youth shall be renewed like the eagle, because the eagle after death is born again from its ashes, as we being dead in sin are through the Sacrament of Baptism born again to God, and created anew. So, then, here as elsewhere, he teaches one baptism. One faith, he says, one baptism. Ephesians 4:5

9. Illud quoque evidens, quod in eo qui baptizatur, crucifigitur Filius Dei; quia non potuit caro nostra abolere peccatum, nisi crucifixa esset in Christo Jesu. Denique scriptum est, quia quicumque baptizati sumus in Christo

Jesu, in mortem ipsius baptizati sumus (Rom. VI, 3). Et infra: Si enim complantati sumus similitudini mortis ejus, simul et resurrectionis erimus, scientes quia vetus homo noster simul confixus est cruci (Ibid., 5, 6.). Et ad Colossenses ait: Consepulti ei per baptismum, in quo et consurrexistis (Coloss. II, 12). Quod ideo scriptum est, ut credamus quia ipse crucifigitur in nobis; ut per illum peccata nostra mundentur, ut ipse chirographum nostrum affigat cruci, qui solus potest donare delicta. Ipse in nobis principatus et potestates triumphat; quoniam de ipso scriptum est: Principatus et potestates ostentavit, triumphans eos in semetipso (Coloss. II, 15).

9. This, too, is plain, that in him who is baptized the Son of God is crucified, for our flesh could not do away sin unless it were crucified in Jesus Christ. And then it is written that: All we who were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death. Romans 6:3 And farther on: If we have been planted in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection, knowing that our old man was fastened with Him to His cross. Romans 6:5-6 And to the Colossians he says: Buried with Him by baptism, wherein you also rose again with Him. Colossians 2:12 Which was written to the intent that we should believe that He is crucified in us, that our sins may be purged through Him, that He, Who alone can forgive sins, may nail to His cross the handwriting which was against us. Colossians 2:14 In us He triumphs over principalities and powers, as it is written of Him: He made a show of principalities and powers, triumphing over them in Himself. Colossians 2:15

10. Ergo quod ait in hac epistola quae scribitur ad Hebraeos, impossibile esse lapsos renovari in poenitentiam, rursus crucifigentes Filium Dei, et ostentatione triumphantes (Hebr. VI, 6), eo spectat, ut de baptismo dictum credamus, in quo crucifigimus Filium Dei in nobis; ut per illum nobis mundus crucifigatur, qui quadam triumphamus specie, dum similitudinem mortis ejus assumimus, qui principatus et potestates in sua cruce ostentavit ac triumphavit; ut in mortis ejus similitudinem nos quoque de principatibus quorum jugum deponimus, triumphemus. Semel autem crucifixus est Christus, semel peccato mortuus; et ideo unum, non plura baptismata.

10. So, then, that which he says in this Epistle to the Hebrews, that it is impossible for those who have fallen to be renewed unto repentance, crucifying again the Son of God, and putting Him to open shame, must be considered as having reference to baptism, wherein we crucify the Son of God in ourselves, that the world may be by Him crucified for us, who triumph, as it were, when we take to ourselves the likeness of His death, who put to open shame upon His cross principalities and powers, and triumphed over them, that in the likeness of His death we, too, might triumph over the principalities whose yoke we throw off. But Christ was crucified once, and died to sin once, and so there is but one, not several baptisms.

11. Quid, quod et supra doctrinam baptismorum praemisit? Et quia multa erant baptismata in lege, merito reprehendit illos qui perfecta dimittant, et principium verbi requirant. Docet nos scire oportere destructa esse universa legis baptismata, unum baptisma esse in Ecclesiae sacramentis. Hortatur autem nos, ut relinquentes initium verbi, ad perfectum tendamus: Et hoc faciemus, inquit, si quidem permiserit Deus (Hebr. VI, 3); non potest enim sine favore Dei aliquis esse perfectus.

11. But what of the passage wherein the doctrine of baptisms is spoken of? Because under the Law there were many baptisms or washings, he rightly rebukes those who forsake what is perfect and seek again the first principles of the word. He teaches us that the whole of the washings under the Law are done away with, and that there is one baptism in the sacraments of the Church. But he exhorts us that leaving the first principles of the word we should go on to perfection. And this, he says, we will do, if God permits, Hebrews 6:3 for no one can be perfect without the grace of God.

12. Possem quidem etiam illud dicere ei, qui hoc de poenitentia dictum putat; quia quae impossibilia sunt apud homines, possibilia sunt apud Deum: et potens est Deus quando vult donare nobis peccata, etiam quae putamus non posse concedi. Et ideo quod nobis impossibile impetratu videtur, Deo donare possibile est. Nam et impossibile videbatur, ut peccatum ablueret aqua: denique Naaman Syrus lepram suam mundari per aquam posse non credidit. Sed quod impossibile erat, fecit Deus esse possibile, qui tantam nobis donavit gratiam (IV Reg. V, 11). Similiter impossibile videbatur per poenitentiam peccata dimitti: concessit hoc Christus apostolis suis, quod ab apostolis ad sacerdotum officia transmissum est (Joan. XX, 22). Factum est igitur possibile quod impossibile videbatur. Sed tamen de baptismo dictum, ne quis iteraret, vera ratione persuadet.

12. And indeed I might also say to any one who thought that this passage spoke of repentance, that things which are impossible with men are possible with God; and God is able whenever He wills to forgive us our sins, even those which we think cannot be forgiven. And so it is possible for God to give us that which it seems to us impossible to obtain. For it seemed impossible that water should wash away sin, and Naaman the Syrian thought that his leprosy could not be cleansed by water. But that which was impossible God made to be possible, Who gave us so great grace. In like manner it seemed impossible that sins should be forgiven through repentance, but Christ gave this power to His apostles, which has been transmitted to the priestly office. That, then, has become possible which was impossible. But, by a true reasoning, he convinces us that the reiteration by any one of the Sacrament of Baptism is not permitted.

SUPERIOREM SOLUTIONEM CONFIRMAT proposita ex Evangelio prodigi parabola, cujus singulas partes exponens, easdem contra Novatianas assertiones ita convertit, ut inde necessario deducat etiam gravissimi criminis reo, siquidem digne poenituerit, reconciliationem non denegandam.

Explanation of the parable of the Prodigal Son, in which St. Ambrose applies it to refute the teaching of the Novatians, proving that reconciliation ought not to be refused to the greatest offender upon suitable proof of repentance.

13. Neque enim Apostolus contra evidentem Christi doctrinam veniret, qui de peccatore poenitentiam agente comparationem posuit eo quod peregre profectus acceptam a patre omnem substantiam devoraverit vivendo luxuriose, et postea panem patris desideraverit, cum vesceretur siliquis: et meruit stolam, annulum, calceamentum, immolationem quoque vituli, quae speciem habet passionis Dominicae, per quam coeleste sacramentum nobis donatur (Luc. XV, 13 et seq.).

13. And the Apostle does not contradict the plain teaching of Christ, Who set forth, as a comparison of a repentant sinner, one going to a foreign country after receiving all his substance from his father, wasted it in riotous living, and later, when feeding upon husks, longed for his father’s bread and then gained the robe, the ring, the shoes, and the slaying of the calf, which is a likeness of the Passion of the Lord, whereby we receive forgiveness.

14. Bene dicitur quia peregre profectus est, qui erat a sacris altaribus separatus; hoc est enim ab Jerusalem illa quae in coelo est, civico quodam et domestico sanctorum separari domicilio. Unde et apostolus ait: Ergo jam non estis advenae atque peregrini, sed cives sanctorum et domestici Dei (Ephes. II, 9).

14. Well is it said that he went into a foreign country who is cut off from the sacred altar, for this is to be separated from that Jerusalem which is in heaven, from the citizenship and home of the saints. For which reason the Apostle says: Therefore now you are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God. Ephesians 2:19

15. Et consumpsit, inquit, substantiam suam. Merito consumpsit eam, cujus fides in operibus claudicabat: Fides enim eorum quae sperantur, substantia est, rerum argumentum non apparentium (Heb. XI, 1). Et bona substantia fides, in qua spei est nostrae patrimonium.

15. And, it is said, wasted his substance. Rightly, for he whose faith halts in bringing forth good works does consume it. For, faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Hebrews 11:1 And faith is a good substance, the inheritance of our hope.

16. Nec mirum si fame peribat, qui divino alimento egebat; cujus desiderio compulsus: Surgam, inquit, et ibo ad patrem meum, et dicam illi: Pater, peccavi in coelum, et coram te (Luc. XV, 18.) Nonne advertitis id evidenter nobis expositum, quod emerendi gratia sacramenti ad precandum impellimur; et hoc auferre vultis, propter quod agitur poenitentia? Tolle gubernatori perveniendi spem, et in mediis fluctibus incertus errabit. Tolle luctatori coronam, lentus jacebit in stadio. Tolle piscatori capiendi efficaciam, desinit jactare retia. Quomodo ergo potest qui famen patitur animae suae, studiosius Deum precari, si sacram desperet alimoniam?

16. And no wonder if he was perishing for hunger, who lacked the divine nourishment, impelled by the want of which he says: I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him: Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before you. Do you not see it plainly declared to us, that we are urged to prayer for the sake of gaining the sacrament? And do you wish to take away that for the sake of which penance is undertaken? Deprive the pilot of the hope of reaching port, and he will wander uncertainly here and there on the waves. Take away the crown from the athlete, and he will fail and lie on the course. Take from the fisher the power of catching his booty, and he will cease to cast the nets. How, then, can he, who suffers hunger in his soul, pray more earnestly to God, if he has no hope of the heavenly food?

17. Peccavi, inquit, in coelum et coram te.

Fatetur utique peccatum ad mortem, ne quem vos agentem cujuslibet criminis poenitentiam jure excludi putaretis; quando is qui in coelum peccavit, vel in regnum coeleste, vel in animam suam, quod est peccatum ad mortem; et peccavit eoram Deo, cui soli dicitur: Tibi soli peccavi et malum coram te feci (Psal. L, 6).

17. I have sinned, he says, against heaven, and before you. He confesses what is clearly a sin unto death, that you may not think that any one doing penance is rightly shut out from pardon. For he who has sinned against heaven has sinned either against the kingdom of heaven, or against his own soul, which is a sin unto death, and against God, to Whom alone is said: Against You only have I sinned, and done evil before You.

18. Tam cito veniam meretur, ut venienti et adhuc longe posito occurrat pater, osculum tribuat, quod insigne est sacrae pacis: stolam proferri jubeat, quae vestis est nuptialis, quam si quis non habuerit, a convivio nuptiali excluditur: det annulum in manu ejus, quod est fidei pignus, et sancti

spiritus signaculum: calceamenta deferri praecipiat (Exod. XII, 11); celebraturus enim pascha Domini, epulaturus agnum, tectum debet adversus omnes incursus bestiarum spiritalium, morsusque serpentis habere vestigium: vitulum praecipiat occidi; quia Pascha nostrum immolatus est Christus (I Cor. V, 7). Etenim quotiescumque sanguinem Domini sumimus, mortem Domini annuntiamus (I Cor. XI, 26). Sicut ergo semel pro omnibus immolatus est, ita quotiescumque peccata donantur, corporis ejus sacramentum suminus, ut per sanguinem ejus fiat peccatorum remissio (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Potest fieri, § Sicut semel).

18. So quickly does he gain forgiveness, that, as he is coming, and is still a great way off, his father meets him, gives him a kiss, which is the sign of sacred peace; orders the robe to be brought forth, which is the marriage garment, which if any one have not, he is shut out from the marriage feast; places the ring on his hand, which is the pledge of faith and the seal of the Holy Spirit; orders the shoes to be brought out, Exodus 12:11 for he who is about to celebrate the Lord's Passover, about to feast on the Lamb, ought to have his feet protected against all attacks of spiritual wild beasts and the bite of the serpent; bids the calf to be slain, for Christ our Passover has been sacrificed. 1 Corinthians 5:7 For as often as we receive the Blood of the Lord, we proclaim the death of the Lord. 1 Corinthians 11:26 As, then, He was once slain for all, so whenever forgiveness of sins is granted, we receive the Sacrament of His Body, that through His Blood there may be remission of sins.

19. Ergo evidentissime Domini praedicatione mandatum est etiam gravissimi criminis reis, si ex toto corde, et manifesta confessione peccati poenitentiam gerant, sacramenti coelestis refundendam gratiam. Unde nihil vobis ad excusationem resedisse certum est.

19. Therefore most evidently are we bidden by the teaching of the Lord to confer again the grace of the heavenly sacrament on those guilty even of the greatest sins, if they with open confession bear the penance due to their sin.

ALIAM OBJECTIONEM EX blasphemia in Spiritum sanctum petitam retorquet in ipsos Novatianos; ostenditque per eam blasphemiam intelligi debere fidem non rectam: quod ubi Petri adversus Simonem magum sententia, nec non Evangelico testimonio confirmavit, eosdem haereticos ad reditum in Ecclesiam cohortatur, ac tantam Domini clementiam esse asserit, ut Judae traditori veniam si apud Christum poenituisset, non fuisset denegaturus.

St. Ambrose turns against the Novatians themselves another objection concerning blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, showing that it consists in an erroneous belief, proving this by St. Peter's words against Simon Magus, and other passages, exhorting the Novatians to return to the Church, affirming that such is our Lord's mercy that even Judas would have found forgiveness had he repented.

20. Perlatum est tamen ad nos, etiam illud vos objicere solere, quod dicatis scriptum esse: Omne peccatum et blasphemia remittetur hominibus: Spiritus autem blasphemiae non remittetur hominibus. Et quicumque dixerit verbum contra Filium hominis, remittetur ei: qui autem dixerit contra Spiritum sanctum, non remittetur ei, neque in hoc saeculo, neque in futuro (Matth. XII, 31 et seq). Quo exemplo omnis assertio vestra destruitur et absolvitur; scriptum est enim: Omne peccatum et blasphemia remittetur hominibus. Cur igitur non remittitis? Cur alligatis vincula, quae non solvitis? Cur nodos nectitis, quos non relaxatis? Remittite caeteris: agite de iis, quos peccantes in Spiritum sanctum Evangelica auctoritate in perpetuum astringi putatis.

20. But we have heard that you are accustomed to bring forward as an objection that which is written: Every sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but blasphemies against the Spirit shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him, but whosoever shall speak against the Holy Spirit, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in that which is to come. Matthew 12:31-32 By which quotation the whole of your assertion is destroyed and done away, for it is written: Every sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men. Why, then, do you not remit them? Why do you bind chains which you do not loose? Why do you tie knots which you do not unfasten? Forgive the others, and deal with those who you think are bound for ever by the authority of the Gospel for sinning against the Holy Spirit.

21. Et tamen quos astringat, consideremus, repetentes superiora lectionis ipsius, ut evidentius comprehendamus. Dicebant Judaei: Hic non ejicit daemonia nisi in Beelzebub principe daemoniorum. Respondit Jesus: Omne regnum divisum contra se destruetur, et omnis civitas vel domus divisa contra se, non stabit; si enim Satanas Satanam ejicit, adversum se divisus est: quomodo ergo stabit regnum ejus? Quod si ego in Beelzebub ejicio daemonia, filii vestri in quo ejiciunt (Matt. XII, 24 et seq.)?

21. But let us consider the case of those whom the Lord so binds, going back to the words before the passage quoted, that we may understand it more clearly: The Jews were saying: This man does not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub, prince of the devils. Jesus replied: Every kingdom divided against itself shall be destroyed, and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand; for if Satan casts out Satan, he is divided against himself, how then shall his kingdom stand? But if I cast out devils by Beelzebub, by whom do your sons cast them out?

22. De his utique expressum videmus, qui Dominum Jesum in Beelzebub ejicere daemonia loquebantur, quibus sic respondit Dominus, quod Satanae haereditas in iis esset, qui Satanae compararent Salvatorem omnium, et in regno diaboli constituerent gratiam Christi. Et ut cognosceremus quia de hac dixit blasphemia, adjunxit: Progenies viperarum, quomodo potestis bona loqui, cum sitis mali? Hos ergo qui haec loquuntur, negat ad veniam pertinere.

22. Now we see plainly here that the words are expressly used of those who were saying that the Lord Jesus cast out devils through Beelzebub, to whom the Lord gave that answer, because they were of the heritage of Satan, who compared the Saviour of all to Satan, and attributed the grace of Christ to the kingdom of the devil. And that we might know that He was speaking of this blasphemy, He added: O generation of vipers, how can you speak good, being yourselves evil? He says, then, that those who thus speak attain not to forgiveness.

23. Denique (Decr. ca. I, q. 1, cap. Petrus) Petrus Simoni, qui magicae artis consuetudine depravatus, putasset quod gratiam Christi per impositionem manus, atque infusionem Spiritus sancti compararet pecunia, ait: Non est tibi pars, neque sors in hac fide; quia cor tuum non est rectum apud Deum. Poenitentiam itaque age ab hac nequitia tua, et precare Dominum, si forte remittatur tibi haec recordatio cordis tui; in obligatione enim iniquitatis, et amaritudine fellis video te esse (Act. VIII, 21 et seq.). Vides quod hunc magica vanitate blasphemantem in Spiritu sancto Apostolica auctoritate condemnet; et eo magis quia puram conscientiam fidei non habebat: et tamen non interclusit ei spem veniae, quem invitavit ad poenitentiam?

23. Then, when Simon, depraved by long practice of magic, had thought he could gain by money the power of conferring the grace of Christ and the infusion of the Holy Spirit, Peter said: You have neither part nor lot in this faith, for your heart is not right with God. Repent therefore of this your wickedness, and pray the Lord, if perchance this thought of your heart may be forgiven you, for I see that you are in the bond of iniquity and in the bitterness of gall. We see that Peter by his apostolic authority condemns him who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit through magic vanity, and all the more because he had not the clear consciousness of faith. And yet he did not exclude him from the hope of forgiveness, for he called him to repentance.

24. Responsum est igitur a Domino blasphemiae Pharisaeorum; et ideo (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Iis potestatis) his potestatis suae gratiam negat, quae in remissione peccatorum est, qui coelestem ejus potestatem diabolico fultam suffragio vindicarent. Eos quoque asserit diabolico uti spiritu, qui separarent Ecclesiam Domini; ut omnium temporum haereticos et schismaticos comprehenderet, quibus indulgentiam negat, quod omne peccatum circa singulos est, hoc in universos. Soli enim sunt qui volunt solvere Christi gratiam, qui Ecclesiae membra discerpunt, propter quam passus est Dominus Jesus, Spiritusque sanctus datus est nobis.

24. The Lord then replies to the blasphemy of the Pharisees, and refuses to them the grace of His power, which consists in the remission of sins, because they asserted that His heavenly power rested on the help of the devil. And He affirms that they act with satanic spirit who divide the Church of God, so that He includes the heretics and schismatics of all times, to whom He denies forgiveness, for every other sin is concerned with single persons, this is a sin against all. For they alone wish to destroy the grace of Christ who rend asunder the members of the Church for which the Lord Jesus suffered, and the Holy Spirit was given us.

25. Denique ut sciatis quia de dispersoribus dicit, sic habemus scriptum: Qui non est mecum, contra me est: et qui non colligit mecum, dispergit (Matt. XII, 30). Et ut sciremus de his dictum, statim subjunxit: Ideo dico vobis: omne peccatum et blasphemia remittetur hominibus, Spiritus autem blasphemiae non remittetur hominibus (Ibid., 31). Cum dicit: Ideo dico vobis: nonne evidenter hoc prae caeteris a nobis intelligi voluit? Meritoque adjunxit: Arbor bona bonos fructus facit, mala autem arbor malos fructus facit (Matth. VII, 17); congregatio enim mala bonum facere fructum non potest. Arbor itaque congregatio est, fructus bonae arboris filii Ecclesiae sunt.

25. Lastly, that we may know that He is speaking of those who destroy the unity of the Church, we find it written: He that is not with Me is against Me, and he that gathered not with Me, scatters. Matthew 12:30 And that we might know that He is speaking of these, He at once added: Therefore I say unto you, every sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but blasphemies against the Spirit shall not be forgiven unto men. When He says, Therefore say I unto you, is it not evident that He intended the words following to be laid to heart by us beyond the others? And He rightly added: A good tree brings forth good fruits, but a bad tree brings forth bad fruits, Matthew 7:17 for an evil association cannot produce good fruits. The tree, then, is the association; the fruits of the good tree are the children of the Church.

26. Et ideo revertimini ad Ecclesiam, si qui vos separastis impie. Omnibus enim conversis pollicetur veniam; quia scriptum est: Omnis quicumque invocaverit nomen Domini, salvus erit (Joel II, 32). Denique etiam Judaeorum populus qui dicebat de Domino Jesu: Daemonium habet (Joan.

VIII, 48); qui dicebat: In Beelzebub ejicit daemonia (Luc. XI, 15); qui crucifixit Dominum Jesum, Petri praedicatione vocatur ad baptismum, ut sceleris tanti merita deponat.

26. Return, then, to the Church, those of you who have wickedly separated yourselves. For He promises forgiveness to all who are converted, since it is written: Whosoever shall call on the Name of the Lord shall be saved. Joel 2:32 And lastly, the Jewish people who said of the Lord Jesus, He has a devil, John 8:43 and He casts out devils through Beelzebub, and who crucified the Lord Jesus, are, by the preaching of Peter, called to baptism, that they may put away the guilt of so great a wickedness.

27. [Alias cap. V.] Sed quid mirum (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Iis potestatis, § quid mirum), si salutem negatis aliis, qui vestram recusatis, licet illi nihil differant, qui a vobis poenitentiam petunt. Arbitror enim quod etiam Judas potuisset tanta Dei miseratione non excludi a venia, si poenitentiam non apud Judaeos, sed apud Christum egisset. Peccavi, inquit, quod tradiderim sanguinem justum (Matth. XXVII, 54). Responderunt: Quid ad nos? Tu videris. Quae vox alia vestra est, cum etiam minoris peccati reus vobis factum proprium confitetur? Quid respondetis aliud, nisi hoc: Quid ad nos? Tu videris. Hunc sermonem laqueus sequitur: eo feraliore poena, quo culpa est minor.

27. But what wonder is it if you should deny salvation to others, who reject your own, though they lose nothing who seek for penance from you? For I suppose that even Judas might through the exceeding mercy of God not have been shut out from forgiveness, if he had expressed his sorrow not before the Jews but before Christ. I have sinned, he said, in that I have betrayed righteous blood. Matthew 27:5 Their answer was: What is that to us, you see to that. What other reply do you give, when one guilty of a smaller sin confesses his deed to you? What do you answer but this: What is that to us, you see to that? The halter followed on those words, but the punishment is all the more severe, the smaller the sin is.

28. Sed si isti non convertuntur, vel vos revertimini, qui lapsu vario de innocentiae fideique praecelso fastigio decidistis. Bonum dominum habemus, qui velit donare omnibus, qui te per prophetam vocavit dicens: Ego sum, ego sum qui deleo iniquitates; et memor non ero: tu autem memor esto, et judicemur (Esai. XLIII, 25).

28. But if they be not converted, do you at least repent, who by many a slip have fallen from the lofty pinnacle of innocence and faith. We have a good Lord, Whose will it is to forgive all, Who called you by the prophet, and said: I, even I, am He that blots out transgressions, and I will not remember, but you remember, and let us plead together.

CAPUT V.

QUOD SIMONI MAGO veniam a Petro affirmate promissam negant, refertur primo eum apostolum propter cognitam magi illius perfidiam dubia locutione uti potuisse: secundo autem apte ad causam per adverbium forte affirmationem etiam significari ex pluribus veteris Testamenti locis, ex profanorum auctorum usu, denique ex ipsis evangelistis confirmatur. Deinde addit apostolos poenitentiam cujus a Davide fructus ostenduntur, ad nos transmisisse. Postremo exemplum adducit Ephraemitarum, ad quorum instar poenitentiam nostram agendam tradit, ut ei divina misericordia et sacramenta concedantur.

As to the words of St. Peter to Simon Magus, from which the Novatians infer that there was no forgiveness for the latter, it is pointed out that St. Peter, knowing his evil heart, might well use words of doubt, and then by some Old Testament instances it is pointed out that perchance does not exclude forgiveness. The apostles transmitted to us that penitence, the fruits of which are shown in the case of David. St. Ambrose then adduces the example of the Ephraimites, whose penitence must be followed in order to gain the divine mercy and the sacraments.

29.Referunt tamen quaestionem de verbis apostoli Petri. Quia dixit: Ne forte (Act. VIII, 22), putant non confirmasse Petrum, ut agenti poenitentiam peccatum remitteretur. Sed considerent de quo loquatur, hoc est, de Simone, qui non ex fide crederet, sed dolum cogitaret. Denique et Dominus dicenti ei, cujus non plenam sinceritatem videret: Sequar te, ait: Vulpes foveas habent (Matth. VIII, 20). Quem ergo Dominus ante baptismum prohibuit sequi, quoniam fraudulentum videbat; miraris si post baptismum praevaricantem non absolvit apostolus, quem in obligatione iniquitatis manere pronuntiavit?

29. The Novatians bring up a question from the words of the Apostle Peter. Because he said, if perchance, they think that he did not imply that forgiveness would be granted on repentance. But let them consider concerning whom the words were spoken: of Simon, who did not believe through faith, but was meditating trickery. So too the Lord to him who said, Lord, I will follow You withersoever You go, replied, Foxes have holes. Matthew 8:19-20 For He knew that the man's sincerity was not wholly perfect. If, then, the Lord refused to him who was not baptized permission to follow Him, because He saw that he was not sincere, do you wonder that the Apostle did not absolve him who after baptism was guilty of deceit, and whom he declared to be still in the bond of iniquity?

30. Sed hoc illis responsum sit. Ego autem nec Petrum dubitasse dico, nec verbi unius praejudicio tantam causam strangulandam arbitror. Nam si putant dubitasse Petrum, numquid et Deus dubitavit? qui ait ad Jeremiam Prophetam: Sta in atrio domus Domini, et responsum dabis omni Judae, iis qui veniunt adorare in domo Domini, omnia verba quae constitui tibi respondere illis, noli auferre verbum: forsitan audient, et avertentur (Jerem. XXVI, 2, 3). Dicant ergo et Deum ignorasse quid esset futurum.

30. But let this be my answer to them. As to myself, I say that Peter did not doubt, and I do not think that so great a question can be burked by the questionable interpretation of a single word. For if they think that Peter doubted, did God doubt, Who said to the prophet Jeremiah: Stand in the court of the Lord's house, and you shall give an answer to all Judah, to those who come to worship in the Lord's house, even all the words which I have appointed for you to answer them. Keep not back a word, perchance they will hearken and be converted. Jeremiah 26:2-3 Let them say, then, that God also knew not what would happen.

31. Sed non ignorantia eo verbo exprimitur, sed in Scripturis divinis frequens hujusmodi consuetudo advertitur; eo quod simplex sit elocutio. Siquidem et ad Ezechielem dicit Dominus: Fili hominis, mittam ego te ad domum Israel, ad eos qui me exacerbaverunt ipsi, et patres eorum usque in hodiernum, et dices ad eos: Haec dicit Dominus, si forte audient et terrebuntur (Ezech. II, 4, 5). Nesciebat ergo eos posse aut non posse converti? Non ergo semper dubitantis ista est elocutio.

31. But ignorance is not implied in that word, but the common custom of holy Scripture is observed, in order to simplicity of utterance. Inasmuch as the Lord says also to Ezekiel: Son of man, I will send you unto the house of Israel, to those who have angered Me, both themselves and their fathers, unto this day, and you shall say unto them, Thus says the Lord, if perchance they will hear and be afraid. Ezekiel 2:4-5 Did He not know that they could or could not be converted? So, then, that expression is not always a proof of doubt.

32. Denique ipsi sapientes saeculi, qui omnem gloriam suam statuunt in expressione verborum, quod Latine forte dicimus, Graece τάχα non ubique pro dubitatione posuerunt. Aiunt itaque dixisse primum suorum poetam Ἦ τάχα χήρα ἔσομαι, quod est: Cito vidua ero. Et alibi: τάχα γάρ σε κατακτανέουσιν Ἀχαιοὶ πάντες ἐφορμηθέντες (Homer. lib. III Iliad.). Non enim dubitaret in omnibus simul insurgentibus, unum facile ab universis posse prosterni.

32. Lastly, the wise men of this world, who stake all their reputation on expressions and words, do not everywhere use the Latin word forte, perchance, or its Greek equivalent τάχα, as an expression of doubt. And so they say that their earliest poet used the words, which is, I shall soon be a widow; and the passage goes on:

...ἦ ˙ τάχα χήρη

... τάχα γάρ σε κατακνέουσιν ᾽Αχαιοὶ
πάντες εφορμηθέντες .

But he had no doubt that when all were Joining in the attack one might well be laid low by all.

33. Sed nos nostris magis quam alienis utamur. Denique habes in Evangelio quia ipse Filius de Patre ait (cum misisset servos ad vineam suam, et occidissent). dixisse Patrem: Mittam Filium meum dilectissimum, forsitan ipsum verebuntur (Matth. XXI, 37). Et alibi ex sua persona Filius ait: Neque me scitis, neque Patrem meum. Si enim me sciretis, et Patrem meum forsitan sciretis (Joan. VIII, 19).

33. But let us use our own instances rather than foreign ones. You find in the Gospel that the Son Himself says of the Father (when He had sent His servants to His vineyard, and they had been slain), that the Father said, I will send My well-beloved Son, perchance they will reverence Him. Matthew 21:37 And in another place the Son says of Himself: You know neither Me nor My Father; for if you knew Me, you would perchance know My Father also. John 8:19

34. Si ergo his verbis usus est Petrus, quibus Deus usus est sine praejudicio scientiae suae; cur non accipiamus et Petrum his usum sermonibus sine suae fidei praejudicio? Neque enim poterat dubitare de Christi munere, qui sibi solvendorum peccatorum dederat potestatem (Matth. XVI, 19); praesertim cum versutiis haereticorum locum non deberet relinquere, qui ideo volunt spem hominum destituere, ut iterandi baptismatis apud desperantes facilius inducant persuasionem.

34. If, then, Peter used those words which were used by God without any prejudice to His knowledge, why should we not assume that Peter also used them without prejudice to his belief? For he could not doubt concerning the gift of Christ, Who had given him the power of forgiving sins; especially since he was bound not to leave any place for the craftiness of heretics who desire to deprive men of hope, in order the more easily to insinuate into the despairing their opinion as to the reiteration of baptism.

35. Sed apostoli hoc habentes, secundum Christi magisterium poenitentiam docuerunt; spoponderunt veniam, culpam relaxaverunt, sicut et docuit David dicens: Beati quorum remissae sunt iniquitates, et quorum tecta sunt peccata. Beatus vir cui non imputavit Dominus peccatum (Psal. XXXI, 1, 2). Utrumque enim beatum dixit, et cujus iniquitas remittitur per lavacrum, et cujus peccatum tegitur operibus bonis. Qui enim agit poenitentiam, non solum diluere lacrymis debet peccatum suum, sed etiam emendatioribus factis operire et tegere delicta superiora, ut non ei imputetur peccatum (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Iis potestatis, § Qui agit).

35. But the apostles, having this baptism according to the direction of Christ, taught repentance, promised forgiveness, and remitted guilt, as David taught when he said: Blessed are they whose transgressions are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord has not imputed sin. He calls each blessed, both him whose sins are remitted by the font, and him whose sin is covered by good works. For he who repents ought not only to wash away his sin by his tears, but also to cover and hide his former transgressions by amended deeds, that sin may not be imputed to him.

36. Ergo tegamus lapsus nostros posterioribus factis, mundemus fletibus; ut audiat nos Dominus Deus noster ingemiscentes, sicut audivit lacrymantem Ephraem, quemadmodum scriptum est, dicente Deo: Audiens audivi Ephraem lacrymantem (Jerem. XXXI, 18). Et ipsa verba Ephraem lamentantis expressit dicens: Castigasti me, et castigatus sum, sicut vitulus non sum edoctus (Ibid.). Vitulus enim ludit, et praesepia deserit; et ideo Ephraem sicut vitulus non est edoctus, longe positus a praesepi, quia praesepe Domini deseruit, et Jeroboam secutus, vitulos adoravit (Tob. I, 5), quod prophetia futurum per Aaron indicaverat, sic lapsurum populum Judaeorum. Ideoque agens poenitentiam dicit: Converte me, et convertar; quia tu es Dominus Deus meus. Quia in novissimo captivitatis meae poenitentiam egi: et postquam cognovi, ingemui super dies confusionis, et subjectus sum tibi; quia accepi opprobrium, et demonstravi te (Jerem. XXXI, 19).

36. Let us, then, cover our falls by our subsequent acts; let us purify ourselves by tears, that the Lord our God may hear us when we lament, as He heard Ephraim when weeping, as it is written: I have surely heard Ephraim weeping. Jeremiah 31:18 And He expressly repeats the very words of Ephraim: You have chastised me and I was chastised, like a calf I was not trained. Jeremiah 31:18 For a calf disports itself, and leaves its stall, and so Ephraim was untrained like a calf far away from the stall; because he had forsaken the stall of the Lord, followed Jeroboam, Sirach 47:23 and worshipped the calves, which future event was prophetically indicated through Aaron, Exodus xxxi namely, that the people of the Jews would fall after this manner. And so repenting, Ephraim says: Turn me, and I shall be turned, for You are the Lord my God. Surely in the end of my captivity I repented, and after I learned I mourned over the days of confusion, and subjected myself to You because I received reproach and made You known.

37. [Alias cap. VI.] Advertimus quomodo agenda sit poenitentia, quibus sermonibus, quibus fletibus; ut peccati dies, dies confusionis appelletur; confusio est enim, quando Christus negatur.

37. We see how to repent, with what words and with what acts, that the days of sin are called days of confusion; for there is confusion when Christ is denied.

38. Et ideo subjiciamus nos Deo, et non subditi simus peccato: et delictorum nostrorum memoriam recensentes, tamquam opprobrium crubescamus; non velut quamdam gloriam praedicemus, sicut quidam expugnata pudicitia, et oppressa justitia gloriantur: et tanta fiat conversio, ut qui Deum non agnoscebamus, ipsi eum jam aliis demonstremus: motus autem Dominus tali conversione nostra, respondeat: A juventute mea dilectus mihi est filius Ephraem, puer in deliciis; quoniam eo quod sermones mei in ipso sunt, memoria memor ero ejus; propterea festinavi super illum, misericordia miserebor ejus, dicit Dominus (Jerem. XXXI, 20).

38. Let us, then, submit ourselves to God, and not be subject to sin, and when we ponder the remembrance of our offenses, let us blush as though at some disgrace, and not speak of them as a glory to us, as some boast of overcoming modesty, or putting down the feeling of justice. Let our conversion be such, that we who did not know God may now ourselves declare Him to others, that the Lord, moved by such a conversion on our part, may answer to us: Ephraim is from youth a dear son, a pleasant child, for since My words are concerning him, I will verily remember him, therefore have I hastened to be over him; I will surely have mercy on him, says the Lord.

39. Quam autem misericordiam nobis polliceatur, infra ostendit dicens: Inebriavi omnem animam sitientem, et omnem animam esurientem satiavi.

Ideo exsurrexi, et vidi, et somnus meus mihi dulcis est (Ibid., 25, 26). Advertimus quod peccantibus Dominus sacramenta promittat sua; et ideo omnes convertamur ad Dominum.

39. And what mercy He promises us, the Lord also shows, when He says further on: I have satiated every thirsty soul, and have satisfied every hungry soul. Therefore, I awaked and beheld, and My sleep was sweet unto Me. Jeremiah 31:25-26 We observe that the Lord promises His sacraments to those who sin. Let us, then, all be converted to the Lord.

CAPUT VI.

A FIDE VEL innocentia lapsos denuo hortaturus ad poenitendum, ex Esaia quid eos a Deo exspectare, quidve ipsosmet praestare oporteat, docet. Hinc memorata Christi adversus Judaeos proverbiali reprehensione, per ejus occasionem saltationes et choreas perstringens, idem proverbium ad spiritalem traducit intellectum. Deinde ex Jeremia poenitentiam suscipiente pro Jerusalem, quas conditiones ea virtus requirat, aperit. Denique ut quantae sit efficaciae haec illa medicina, clarius exhibeat, qui eadem vel pro se vel pro aliis uti voluerint, multos numerat.

St. Ambrose teaches out of the prophet Isaiah what they must do who have fallen. Then referring to our Lord's proverbial expression respecting piping and dancing, he condemns dances. Next by the example of Jeremiah he sets forth the necessary accompaniments of repentance. And lastly, in order to show the efficacy of this medicine of penance, he enumerates the names of many who have used it for themselves or for others.

40. Sed si isti non convertuntur, vel vos revertimini, qui lapsu vario de innocentiae fideique praecelso fastigio decidistis. Bonum Dominum habemus qui velit donare omnibus, qui te per prophetam vocavit dicens: Ego sum, ego sum qui deleo iniquitates tuas, et memor non ero: tu autem memor esto, ut judicemur (Esai. XLIII, 25). Ego, inquit, memor non ero: tu autem memor esto, hoc est: Non revoco illa, quaecumque delicta donavi tibi, velut quadam oblivione tecta sint: tu autem memor esto. Ego, inquit, memor non ero propter gratiam, tu memor esto propter correctionem:

memor esto, ut scias donatum esse peccatum; ne glorieris quasi innocens, ne te justificando, plus ingraves: sed si vis justificari, fatere delictum tuum. Solvit enim criminum nexus verecunda confessio peccatorum.

40. But if they be not converted, do you at least repent, who by many a slip have fallen from the lofty pinnacle of innocence and faith. We have a good Lord, Whose will it is to forgive all, Who called you by the prophet and said: I, even I, am He that blots out your transgressions, and I will not remember, but you remember that we may plead together. I, He says, will not remember, but remember, that is to say, I do not recall those transgressions which I have forgiven you, which are covered, as it were, with oblivion, but remember them. I will not remember them because of My grace, remember them in order to correction; remember, you may know that the sin is forgiven, boast not as though innocent, that you aggravate not the sin, but you will be justified, confess your sin. For a shamefaced confession of sins looses the bands of transgression.

41. Vides quid a te exigat Deus tuus, ut memor sis ejus quam accepisti gratiae, et non glorieris quasi non acceperis. Vides qua remissionis pollicitatione te provocet ad confitendum: vide ne reluctando mandatis coelestibus, in indevotionem Judaeorum incidias, quibus dicit Dominus Jesus: Cantavimus vobis, et non saltastis: lamentavimus, et non plorastis (Luc. VII, 32).

41. You see what God requires of you, that you remember that grace which you have received, and boast not as though you had not received it. You see by how complete a promise of remission He draws you to confession. Take heed, lest by resisting the commandments of God you fall into the offense of the Jews, to whom the Lord Jesus said: We piped to you and you danced not; we wailed and you wept not. Luke 7:32

42. Vilis sermo, sed non vile mysterium. Et ideo cavendum ne quis vulgari quadam sermonis hujus deceptus interpretatione, putet nobis saltationis lubricae histrionicos motus, et scenae deliramenta mandari; haec etiam in adolescentula aetate vitiosa sunt: sed saltationem mandavit, quam saltavit David ante arcam Domini. Totum enim decet, quidquid defertur religioni; ut nullum obsequium quod proficiat ad cultum et observantiam Christi, erubescamus.

42. The words are ordinary words, but the mystery is not ordinary. And so one must be on one's guard, lest, deceived by any common interpretation of this saying, one should suppose that the movements of wanton dances and the madness of the stage were commended; for these are full of evil in youthful age. But the dancing is commended which David practised before the ark of God. For everything is seemly which is done for religion, so that we need be ashamed of no service which tends to the worship and honouring of Christ.

43. Non ergo illa deliciarum comes, atque luxuriae praedicatur saltatio, sed qua unusquisque corpus attollat impigrum, nec humi pigra jacere membra, vel tardis sinat torpere vestigiis. Saltabat spiritaliter Paulus, cum se pro nobis extenderet, et posteriora obliviscens, priora appetens, contenderet ad bravium Christi. Tu quoque cum ad baptismum venis, manus elevare, pedes quibus ad aeterna conscendas, velociores habere moneris (Phil. III, 13, 14). Haec saltatio fidei socia, gratiae comes.

43. Dancing, then, which is an accompaniment of pleasures and luxury, is not spoken of, but spiritually such as that wherewith one raises the eager body, and suffers not the limbs to lie slothfully on the ground, nor to grow stiff in their accustomed tracks. Paul danced spiritually, when for us he stretched forward, and forgetting the things which were behind, and aiming at those which were before, he pressed on to the prize of Christ. Philippians

2:13-14 And you, too, when you come to baptism, are warned to raise the hands, and to cause your feet wherewith you ascend to things eternal to be swifter. This dancing accompanies faith, and is the companion of grace.

44. Hoc est ergo mysterium: Cantavimus vobis, novi utique canticum Testamenti: et non saltastis, hoc est, non elevastis animam ad spiritalem gratiam. Lamentavimus, et non plorastis, hoc est, non egistis poenitentiam. Et ideo derelictus est Judaeorum populus; quia nec egit poenitentiam, et gratiam refutavit. Per Joannem poenitentia, per Christum gratia. Istam quasi Dominus donat, illam quasi servus annuntiat. Utrumque igitur Ecclesia custodit, ut et consequatur gratiam, et non abjiciat poenitentiam; gratia enim munus largientis est, poenitentia delinquentis remedium.

44. This, then, is the mystery. We piped to you, singing in truth the song of the New Testament, and you danced not. That is, did not raise your souls to the spiritual grace. We wailed, and you wept not. That is, you did not repent. And therefore was the Jewish people forsaken, because it did not repent, and rejected grace. Repentance came by John, grace by Christ. He, as the Lord, gives the one; the other is proclaimed, as it were, by the servant. The Church, then, keeps both that it may both attain to grace and not cast away repentance, for grace is the gift of One Who confers it; repentance is the remedy of the sinner.

45. Scivit Jeremias magnum remedium esse poenitentiae, quam in Threnis suis suscepit pro Jerusalem, et ipsam inducit agentem Jerusalem dicens: Plorans ploravit in nocte, et lacrymae ejus in maxillis ejus, nec est qui consoletur eam ab omnibus qui diligunt eam. Viae Sion lugent (Thren. I, 2). Et adjecit: In his ergo fleo, oculi mei caligaverunt a fletu, quia elongavit a me, qui me consolabatur (Thren. I, 16). Advertimus quod hunc malorum suorum acerbissimum cumulum arbitrabatur, quia deerat qui consolaretur moerentem. Quomodo ergo vos ipsam consolationem aufertis, qui spem relaxandae negatis poenitentiae?

45. Jeremiah knew that penitence was a great remedy, which he in his Lamentations took up for Jerusalem, and brings forward Jerusalem itself as repenting, when he says: She wept sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks, nor is there one to comfort her of all who love her. The ways of Sion do mourn. And he says further: For these things I weep, my eyes have grown dim with weeping, because he who used to comfort me is gone far from me. Lamentations 1:16 We notice that he thought this the bitterest addition to his woes, that he who used to comfort the mourner had gone far from him. How, then, can you take away the very comfort by refusing to repentance the hope of forgiveness?

46. Sed audiant qui agunt poenitentiam, quomodo agere debeant, quo studio, quo affectu, qua mentis intentione, qua intimorum concussione viscerum, qua cordis conversione: Vide, inquit, Domine, quia tribulor, venter meus turbatus est a fletu meo, conversum est cor meum in me (Ibid., 20).

46. But let those who repent learn how they ought to carry it out, with what zeal, with what affection, with what intention of mind, with what shaking of the inmost bowels, with what conversion of heart: Behold, he says, O Lord, that I am in distress, my bowels are troubled by my weeping, my heart is turned within me. Lamentations 1:20

47. Cognovisti intentionem animi, fidem mentis cognosce, et habitum corporis. Sederunt, inquit, in terra, tacuerunt seniores filiae Sion, et imposuerunt terram super caput suum, praecinxerunt se cilicio, deduxerunt in terram principes, virgines Jerusalem defecerunt in lacrymis, oculi mei caligaverunt, turbatus est venter meus, effusa est in terra gloria mea (Thren. II, 10, 11).

47. Here you recognize the intention of the soul, the faithfulness of the mind, the disposition of the body: The elders of the daughters of Sion sat, he says, upon the ground, they put dust upon their heads, they girded themselves with haircloth, the princes hung their heads to the ground, the virgins of Jerusalem fainted with weeping, my eyes grew dim, my bowels were troubled, my glory was poured on the earth. Lamentations 2:10-11

48. Sic flevit et Ninive populus, et denuntiatum excidium civitatis evasit (Jonae III, 5); tanta est enim poenitentiae medicina, ut mutare videatur suam Deus sententiam. In te est igitur ut evadas: vult rogari Dominus, vult de se sperari, vult sibi supplicari. Homo es, et vis rogari, ut ignoscas, et putas Deum tibi non roganti ignoscere?

48. So, too, did the people of Nineveh mourn, and escaped the destruction of their city. Jonah 3:5 Such is the remedial power of repentance, that God seems because of it to change His intention. To escape is, then, in your own power; the Lord wills to be entreated, He wills that men should hope in Him, He wills that supplication should be made to Him. You are a man, and willest to be asked to forgive, and do you think that God will pardon you without asking Him?

49. Ipse Dominus Jerusalem flevit (Luc. XIX, 41), ut quia ipsa flere nolebat, Domini lacrymis ad veniam pertineret. Ipse nos flere vult, ut evadere possimus, sicut habes scriptum in Evangelio: Filiae Jerusalem, nolite me flere, sed vos ipsas flete (Luc. XXIII, 28).

49. The Lord Himself wept over Jerusalem, that, inasmuch as it would not weep itself, it might obtain forgiveness through the tears of the Lord. He wills that we should weep in order that we may escape, as you find it in the Gospel: Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves. Luke 23:28

50. Flevit David, et meruit ut mortem populi pereuntis divina removeret misericordia (II Reg. XXIV, 10); quando tribus sibi propositis optionibus, eam tamen in qua majorem Domini miserationem experiretur, elegit. Quid erubescis tu peccata tua flere; cum Deus etiam prophetas jusserit flere pro populis?

50. David wept, and obtained of the divine mercy the removal of the death of the people who were perishing, when of the three things proposed for his choice he selected that in which he might have the most experience of the divine mercy. Why do you blush to weep for your sins, when God commanded even the prophets to weep for the people?

51. Denique et Ezechiel jussus est flere Jerusalem, et accepit librum, in cujus capite scripta erat: Lamentatio, et melos et vae (Ezech. II, 9), duo tristia et unum delectabile; quoniam ille salvus erit in futurum, qui in hoc saeculo plus fleverit: Cor enim sapientium in domo luctus, et cor stultorum in domo epularum (Eccl. VII, 5). Et ipse Dominus ait: Beati qui nunc fletis; quia ridebitis (Luc. VI, 21).

51. And, lastly, Ezekiel was bidden to weep for Jerusalem, and he took the book, at the beginning of which was written: Lamentation, and melody, and woe, two things sad and one pleasant, for he shall be saved in the future who has wept most in this age. For the heart of the wise is in the house of mourning, and the heart of fools in the house of feasting. Ecclesiastes 7:4 And the Lord Himself said: Blessed are you that weep now, for you shall laugh. Luke 6:21

CAPUT VII.

AD FLENDA ET confitenda peccata hortatur, asserens peccatoris et Ecclesiae lacrymis Christum excitari, ut illum justificet: quod accommodata Lazari suscitati historia mire illustrat. Ubi postquam ostendit Novatianos Judaeorum de interficiendo Lazaro cogitantium successores esse, perfectam cujuscumque peccati justificationem per odorem unguenti a Maria in Christi pedes effusi expressam docet: rursusque eosdem haereticos in Judae, cum caeteri gauderent, invidentis persona signatos monstrat.

An exhortation to mourning and confession of sins for Christ is moved by these and the tears of the Church. Illustration from the story of Lazarus. After showing that the Novatians are the successors of those who planned to kill Lazarus, St. Ambrose argues that the full forgiveness of every sin is signified by the odour of the ointment poured by Mary on the feet of Christ; and further, that the Novatian heretics find their likeness in Judas, who grudged and envied when others rejoiced.

52. Fleamus igitur ad tempus, ut exsultemus in aeternum. Timeamus Dominum, praeveniamus eum confitendo peccata nostra, corrigamus lapsus nostros, emendemus errorem; ne et de nobis dicatur: Heu me, anima mea! quia periit reverens a terra, et qui corrigat in hominibus non est (Mich. VII, 2).

52. Let us, then, mourn for a time, that we may rejoice for eternity. Let us fear the Lord, let us anticipate Him with the confession of our sins, let us correct our backslidings and amend our faults, lest of us too it be said: Woe is me, my soul, for the godly man is perished from the earth, and there is none among men to correct them.

53. Quid vereris apud bonum dominum tuas iniquitates fateri? Dic, inquit, iniquitatis tuas, ut justificeris (Esai. XLIII, 26). Adhuc reo culpae justificationis praemia proponuntur; ille enim justificatur, qui proprium crimen sponte agnoverit: denique justus in exordio sermonis accusator est sui (Prov. XVIII, 17). Novit omnia Dominus, sed exspectat vocem tuam; non ut puniat, sed ut ignoscat: non vult ut insultet tibi diabolus, et celantem peccata tua arguat. Praeveni accusatorem tuum: si te ipse accusaveris, accusatorem nullum timebis: si te detuleris ipse, etsi mortuus fueris, revivisces.

53. Why do you fear to confess your sins to our good Lord? Set them forth, He says, that you may be justified. The rewards of justification are set before him who is still guilty of sin, for he is justified who voluntarily confesses his own sin; and lastly, the just man is his own accuser in the beginning of his speaking. Proverbs 18:17 The Lord knows all things, but He waits for your words, not that He may punish, but that He may pardon. It is not His will that the devil should triumph over you and accuse you when you conceal your sins. Be beforehand with your accuser: if you accuse yourself, you will fear no accuser; if you report yourself, though you were dead you shall live.

54. Veniet ad monumentum tuum Christus, et si viderit flere pro te Martham boni feminam ministerii, flere Mariam quae attente audiebat verbum Dei, sicut sancta Ecclesia quae optimam partem sibi elegit; movebitur misericordia, cum viderit in tuo obitu lacrymas plurimorum, et dicet: Ubi posuistis eum (Joan. XI, 34)? hoc est, in quo reorum statu est, in quo poenitentium ordine. Videam quem fletis; ut lacrymis suis ipse me moveat. Videam si jam peccato ei cujus venia poscitur, defunctus est.

54. Christ will come to your grave, and if He finds there weeping for you Martha the woman of good service, and Mary who carefully heard the Word of God, like holy Church which has chosen the best part, He will be moved with compassion, when at your death He shall see the tears of many and will say: Where have you laid him? John 11:34 that is to say, in what condition of guilt is he? In which rank of penitents? I would see him for whom you weep, that he himself may move Me with his tears. I will see if he is already dead to that sin for which forgiveness is entreated.

55. Dicet ei plebs: Veni, et vide (Ibid.). Quid est, veni? Hoc est, veniat peccatorum remissio, veniat defunctorum vita, mortuorum resurrectio, veniat et in hunc peccatorem regnum tuum.

55. The people will say to Him, Come and see. John 11:34 What is the meaning of Come? It means, Let forgiveness of sins come, let the life of the departed come, the resurrection of the dead, let Your kingdom come to this sinner also.

56. Veniet, et levari lapidem jubebit, quem cervicibus peccatoris lapsus imposuit. Potuit removere lapidem imperio sermonis; jubenti enim Christo etiam insensibilis solet natura obedire: poterat tacita vi operationis occultae transferre saxum sepulcri in cujus passione remotis subito lapidibus, plurima defunctorum sepulcra patuerunt: sed hominibus jussit ut removerent lapidem; in veritate quidem, ut increduli crederent quod videbant, et aspicerent resurgentem mortuum: in typo autem, quod nobis donaret ut levaremus delictorum onera, moles quasdam reorum. Nostrum est onera removere; illius est resuscitare, illius educere de sepulcris exutos vinculis.

56. He will come and will command that the stone be taken away which his fall has laid on the shoulders of the sinner. He could have removed the stone by a word of command, for even inanimate nature is wont to obey the bidding of Christ. He could by the silent power of His working have removed the stone of the sepulchre, at Whose Passion the stones being suddenly removed many sepulchres of the dead were opened, but He bade men remove the stone, in very truth indeed, that the unbelieving might believe what they saw, and see the dead rising again, but in a type that He might give us the power of lightening the burden of sins, the heavy pressure as it were upon the guilty. Ours it is to remove the burdens, His to raise again, His to bring forth from the tombs those set free from their bands.

57. Videns itaque grave onus peccatoris, illacrymat Dominus Jesus; solam enim flere non patitur Ecclesiam. Compatitur dilectae suae, et dicit defuncto: Veni foras (Joan. XI, 43), hoc est: Qui jaces in tenebris conscientiae, et delictorum tuorum sordibus, quodam reorum carcere, exi foras, delictum proprium prode, ut justificeris: Ore enim confessio fit ad salutem (Rom. X, 10).

57. So the Lord Jesus, seeing the heavy burden of the sinner, weeps, for the Church alone He suffers not to weep. He has compassion with His beloved, and says to him that is dead, Come forth, John 11:43 that is, You who lies in darkness of conscience, and in the squalor of your sins, as in the prison-house of the guilty, come forth, declare your sins that you may be justified. For with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Romans 10:10

58. Si confessus fueris, a Christo vocatus, claustra rumpentur, et omnia solventur vincula, etiam si corruptelae corporeae fetor gravis sit. Quatriduum enim habebat ille, cujus fetebat in tumulo caro: cujus autem caro non vidit corruptionem, triduo fuit in sepulcro; carnis enim vitia nescivit, quae ex quatuor constat elementorum substantiis. Quantuslibet ergo (De Poenit., dist. I, cap. Quantuslibet) mortui fetor sit, aboletur omnis, ubi sacrum redoleverit unguentum: et resurgit defunctus, et solvi jubentur ejus vincula, qui adhuc in peccato est: tollitur velamen de facie ejus, quod veritatem gratiae quam acceperat, obumbrabat. Sed quia venia donatus est, revelare faciem, aperire vultum jubetur: non habet enim quod erubescat, cui peccatum remissum est.

58. If you have confessed at the call of Christ the bars will be broken, and every chain loosed, even the stench of the bodily corruption be grievous. For he had been dead four days and his flesh stank in the tomb; but He Whose flesh saw no corruption was three days in the sepulchre, for He knew no evils of the flesh, which consists of the substances of the four elements. However great, then, the stench of the dead body may be, it is all done away so soon as the sacred ointment has shed its odour; and the dead rises again, and the command is given to loose his hands who till now was in sin; the covering is taken from his face which veiled the truth of the grace which he had received. But since he has received forgiveness, the command is given to uncover his face, to lay bare his features. For he whose sin is forgiven has nothing whereof to be ashamed.

59. In tanta vero Domini gratia, tantoque divini muneris miraculo, cum oporteret universos laetari, commovebantur impii, et adversus Christum concilium congregabant: Lazarum quoque interficere volebant (Joan. XI, 47). Nonne merito eorum successores vos fore cognoscitis, quorum duritiae haeredes estis (Joan. XII, 10)? Nam et vos indignamini, et contra Ecclesiam congregatis concilium; quia videtis mortuos in Ecclesia reviviscere, et peccatorum indulta venia resuscitari. Itaque quod in vobis est, per invidiam rursus vultis interficere suscitatos.

59. But in the presence of such grace given by the Lord, of such a miracle of divine bounty, when all ought to have rejoiced, the wicked were stirred up and gathered a council against Christ, John 11:47 and wished moreover to kill Lazarus also. John 12:10 Do you not recognize that you are the successors of those whose hardness you inherit? For you too are angry and gather a council against the Church, because you see the dead come to life again in the Church, and to be raised again by receiving forgiveness of their sins. And thus, so far as in you, you desire to slay again through envy those who are raised to life.

60. Sed Jesus non revocat beneficia, immo cumulo liberalitatis amplificat: revisit sollicite resuscitatum, et celebratae resurrectionis gratia laetus ad coenam venit, quam ei sua praeparavit Ecclesia, in qua ille qui fuerat mortuus, unus inter discumbentes cum Christo invenitur.

60. But Jesus does not revoke His benefits, nay, rather He amplifies them by additions of His liberality, He anxiously revisits him who was raised again, and rejoicing in the gift of the restored life, He comes to the feast which His Church has prepared for Him, at which he who had been dead is found as one among those sitting down with Christ.

61. Tunc mirantur omnes qui vident puro utique obtutu mentis, qui invidere non norunt; tales enim Ecclesia filios habet. Mirantur, ut dixi quomodo ille qui jacebat in tumulo heri et nudiustertius (Ibid., 3), unus sit de discumbentibus cum Domino Jesu.

61. Then all wonder who look upon him with the pure gaze of the mind, who are free from envy, for such children the Church has. They wonder, as I said, how he who yesterday and the day before lay in the tomb is one of those sitting with the Lord Jesus.

62. Ipsa Maria mittit unguentum in pedes Domini Jesu. Ideo forte in pedes, quia unus de infimis ereptus est morti; omnes enim corpus Christi sumus, sed alii forte superiora membra sunt (I Cor. X, 17). Os erat Christi Apostolus, qui dicebat: Experimentum quaeritis ejus, qui in me loquitur Christus (II Cor. XIII, 3).

Os ejus prophetae, per quos loquebatur futura: utinam et ego pes ejus esse merear, et mittat in me Maria unguentum suum pretiosum, et ungat, et peccatum extergat!

62. Mary herself pours ointment on the feet of the Lord Jesus. John 12:3 Perchance for this reason on His feet, because one of the lowliest has been snatched from death, for we are all the body of Christ, 1 Corinthians 12:27 but others perchance are the more honourable members. The Apostle was the mouth of Christ, for he said, You seek a proof of Christ that speaks in me. 2 Corinthians 13:3 The prophets through whom He spoke of things to come were His mouth, would that I might be found worthy to be His foot, and may Mary pour on me her precious ointment, and anoint me and wipe away my sin.

63. [Alias cap. VIII.] Quod igitur de Lazaro legimus, in unoquoque debemus converso peccatore credere: qui licet fetorem habeat, tamen fidei pretioso emundatur unguento: tantum enim gratiae fides habet, ut ubi ante diem fetebat mortuus, illic bono odore tota repleatur domus.

63. What, then, we read concerning Lazarus we ought to believe of every sinner who is converted, who, though he may have been stinking, nevertheless is cleansed by the precious ointment of faith. For faith has such grace that there where the dead stank the day before, now the whole house is filled with good odour.

64. Fetebat Corinthia domus, quando scriptum est de ea: Auditur inter vos fornicatio, et talis fornicatio, qualis nec inter gentes (I Cor. V, 1). Fetor erat, quia modicum fermentum totam massam corruperat. Coepit bene olere, cum dicitur: Si cui quid donastis, et ego. Nam et ego quod donavi, propter vos in persona Christi (II Cor. II, 10). Itaque, liberato peccatore, factum est in ea gaudium magnum, et redoluit domus tota suavitate gratiae. Unde bene conscius Apostolus quod omnes Apostolicae remissionis perfudisset unguento, ait: Christi bonus odor sumus Deo in his, qui salvi fiunt (Ibid., 15).

64. The house of Corinth stank, when it was written concerning it: It is reported that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not even among the Gentiles. 1 Corinthians 5:1 There was a stench, for a little leaven had corrupted the whole lump. A good odour began when it was said: If you forgive anything to any one I forgive also. For what I also have forgiven, for your sakes have I done it in the person of Christ. 2 Corinthians 2:10 And so, the sinner being set free, there was great joy in that place, and the whole house was filled with the odour of the sweetness of grace. Wherefore the Apostle, knowing well that he had shed upon all the ointment of apostolic forgiveness, says: We are a sweet savour of Christ unto God in them that are saved. 2 Corinthians 2:15

65. Hujus igitur effusione unguenti laetantur omnes, solus Judas contradicit (Joan. XII, 4). Ergo et nunc qui praevaricator est, contradicit; reprehendit, qui proditor: sed a Christo ipse reprehenditur, qui Dominicae remedium mortis ignorat, et tantae mysterium sepulturae non intelligit. Ideo enim et passus et mortuus est Dominus, ut nos redimeret a morte. Hoc excellentissimum indicat pretium suae mortis, quo peccator absolvitur, et in novam assumitur gratiam; ut veniant et mirentur omnes quomodo cum Christo recumbat, et laudantes Deum, dicant: Manducemus et epulemur; quia hic mortuus erat, et revixit: perierat, et inventus est (Luc. XV, 24). Si quis autem infidelis objecerit, quare cum publicanis et peccatoribus manducat; respondetur ei: Non opus est sanis medicus, sed his qui male habent (Matth. IX, 12).

65. At the pouring forth, then, of this ointment all rejoice; Judas alone speaks against it. John 12:4 So, too, now he who is a sinner speaks against it, he who is a traitor blames it, but he is himself blamed by Christ, as he knows not the remedy of the Lord's death, and understands not the mystery of that so great burial. For the Lord both suffered and died that He might redeem us from death. This is manifest from the most excellent value from His death, which is sufficient for the absolution of the sinner, and his restoration to fresh grace; so that all may come and wonder at his sitting at table with Christ, and may praise God, saying: Let us eat and feast, for he was dead and is alive again, had perished and is found. Luke 15:24 But any one devoid of faith objects: Why does He eat with publicans and sinners? This is his answer: They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick. Matthew 9:11-12

CAPUT VIII.

AD CONFESSIONEM ET lacrymas urgere pergens ad se convertit orationem. Et ubi significavit desiderium emundandorum Domini pedum instar evangelicae mulieris, in cujus actione traditam poenitentiae formam dicit; si quis tamen hujus exemplaris perfectionem non assequatur, nihilominus Christum ad sepulcrum illius accessurum. Eum ut se in suo invisat ac resuscitet demississimo animo rogat; maxime vero ut det condolere peccatoribus, quorum delicta suis ipsius leviora esse persuasum habet. Non ergo insultandum iis pro quibus mortuus est Christus, a quo inter stipulas quas non negligit, se quoque colligi desiderat.

In urging repentance St. Ambrose turns to his own case, expressing the wish that he could wash our Lord's feet like the woman in the Gospel, which is a great pattern of penitence, though such as cannot attain to it find acceptance. He prays for himself, especially that he may sorrow with sinners, who are better than himself. Those for whom Christ died are not to be contemned.

66. Ostende igitur medico vulnus tuum, ut sanari possis. Etsi non monstraveris, novit: sed a te expetit audire vocem tuam. Absterge lacrymis cicatrices tuas. Sic peccatum mulier illa in Evangelio (Matth. IX, 22), fetoremque sui erroris abstersit, sic culpam diluit; cum Jesu pedes lacrymis lavat.

66. Show, then, your wound to the Physician that He may heal it. Though you show it not, He knows it, but waits to hear your voice. Do away your scars by tears. Thus did that woman in the Gospel, and wiped out the stench of her sin; thus did she wash away her fault, when washing the feet of Jesus with her tears.

67. Utinam mihi quoque pedum tuorum lutum, Jesu, reserves, quos dum in me deambulas, inquinasti? Utinam sordes vestigiorum tuorum detergendas mihi offeras, quas ego actu meo tuis affixi gressibus! Sed unde mihi aqua viva, qua pedes tuos possim lavare? Si aquam non habeo, habeo lacrymas, quibus dum pedes tuos lavo, utinam me ipsum diluam! Unde mihi, ut de me dicas: Dimissa sunt ejus peccata multa, quoniam dilexit multum (Luc. VII, 47)? Plus debuisse me fateor, et plus dimissum mihi qui de forensium strepitu jurgiorum, et a publicae terrore administrationis ad sacerdotium vocatus sum; et ideo vereor ne ingratus inveniar, si minus diligam, cui plus dimissum est (Ibid., 44).

67. Would that You, Lord Jesus, might reserve for me the washing off from Your feet of the stains contracted since You walk in me! O that You might offer to me to cleanse the pollution which I by my deeds have caused on Your steps! But whence can I obtain living water, wherewith I may wash Your feet? If I have no water I have tears, and while with them I wash Your feet I trust to cleanse myself. Whence is it that You should say to me: His sins which are many are forgiven, because he loved much? I confess that I owe more, and that more has been forgiven me who have been called to the priesthood from the tumult and strife of the law courts and the dread of public administration; and therefore I fear that I may be found ungrateful, if I, to whom more has been forgiven, love less.

68. Sed non omnes mulierem istam aequare possunt, quae etiam Simoni, qui prandium Domino dabat, merito praelata est: quae omnibus qui volunt veniam promereri, magisterium praestitit osculando pedes Christi, lacrymis lavando, tergendo crinibus, ungendo unguento.

68. But all are not able to equal that woman, who was deservedly preferred even to Simon, who was giving the feast to the Lord; who gave a lesson to all who desire to gain forgiveness, by kissing the feet of Christ, washing them with her tears, wiping them with her hair, and anointing them with ointment.

69. In osculo insigne charitatis est; et ideo dicit Dominus Jesus: Osculetur me ab osculo oris sui (Cant. I, 1). Capilli quid significant, nisi ut noveris, inclinata omni infularum dignitate saecularium, obsecrandam indulgentiam; ut ad terram flens te ipse prosternas, ut humi jacens moveas misericordiam? In unguento quoque bonae conversionis exprimitur odor. Rex nempe erat David, et dicebat: Lavabo per singulas noctes lectum meum, lacrymis meis stratum meum rigabo (Psal. VI, 7). Et ideo tantam gratiam meruit, ut ex ejus familia virgo eligeretur, quae nobis partu proprio Christum ederet. Ideo et ista in Evangelio praedicatur mulier.

69. In a kiss is the sign of love, and therefore the Lord Jesus says: Let her kiss Me with the kisses of her mouth. Song of Songs 1:2 What is the meaning of the hair, but that you may learn that, having laid aside all the pomp of worldly trappings, you must implore pardon, throw yourself on the earth with tears, and prostrate on the ground move pity. In the ointment, too, is set forth the savour of a good conversation. David was a king, yet he said: Every night will I wash my bed, I will water my couch with tears. And therefore he obtained such a favour, as that of his house the Virgin should be chosen, who by her child-bearing should bring forth Christ for us. Therefore is this woman also praised in the Gospel.

70. Tamen si hanc aequare non possumus, scit Dominus Jesus et infirmis subvenire, ubi non est quae possit parare convivium, quae deferre unguentum (Joan. XII, 7), quae fontem aquae vivae secum portare. Venit ipse ad sepulcrum.

70. Nevertheless if we are unable to equal her, the Lord Jesus knows also how to aid the weak, when there is no one who can prepare the feast, or bring the ointment, or carry with her a spring of living water. He comes Himself to the sepulchre.

71. Utinam ergo ad hoc monumentum meum digneris accedere (Joan. XI, 34), Domine Jesu, tuis me lacrymis laves; quoniam durioribus oculis non habeo tantas lacrymas, ut possim mea lavare delicta! Si illacrymaveris pro me, salvus ero: si dignus fuero lacrymis tuis, fetorem abstergo delictorum omnium: si fuero dignus ut paulisper illacrymes, vocabis me de monumento hujus corporis, et dices: Exi foras (Ibid., 43), ut non intra corporis hujus angustias inclusae teneantur cogitationes meae: sed egrediantur ad Christum, in lumine versentur; ut non cogitem opera tenebrarum, sed opera lucis. Qui enim peccatum cogitat, intra suam conscientiam studet se ipse includere.

71. Would that You would vouchsafe to come to this sepulchre of mine, O Lord Jesus, that You would wash me with Your tears, since in my hardened eyes I possess not such tears as to be able to wash away my offense. If You shall weep for me I shall be saved; if I am worthy of Your tears I shall cleanse the stench of all my offenses; if I am worthy that You weep but a little, You will call me out of the tomb of this body and will say: Come forth, that my meditations may not be kept pent up in the narrow limits of this body, but may go forth to Christ, and move in the light, that I may think no more on works of darkness but on works of light. For he who thinks on sins endeavours to shut himself up within his own consciousness.

72. Voca ergo foras servum tuum. Quamvis ligatus vinculis peccatorum meorum, vinctos habeam pedes, innexas manus, et cogitationibus et operibus mortuis jam sepultus; te vocante, liber egrediar, et inveniar unus de discumbentibus in convivio tuo, et domus tua pretioso replebitur unguento; siquidem redimere dignatus es, custodieris. Dicetur enim: Ecce ille non in Ecclesiae nutritus sinu, non edomitus a puero, sed raptus a tribunalibus, abductus de vanitatibus saeculi hujus, a praeconis voce ad psalmistae assuefactus canticum, in sacerdotio manet non virtute sua, sed Christi gratia, et inter convivas mensae coelestis recumbit.

72. Call forth, then, Your servant. Although bound with the chain of my sins I have my feet fastened and my hands tied; being now buried in dead thoughts and works, yet at Your call I shall go forth free, and shall be found one of those sitting at Your feast, and Your house shall be filled with precious ointment. If You have vouchsafed to redeem any one, You will preserve him. For it shall be said, See, he was not brought up in the bosom of the Church, nor trained from childhood, but hurried from the judgment-seat, brought away from the vanities of this world, growing accustomed to the singing of the choir instead of the shout of the crier, but he continues in the priesthood not by his own strength, but by the grace of Christ, and sits among the guests at the heavenly table.

73. Serva, Domine, munus tuum, custodi donum quod contulisti etiam refugienti. Ego enim sciebam quod non eram dignus vocari episcopus; quoniam dederam me saeculo huic: sed gratia tua sum quod sum. Et sum quidem minimus omnium episcoporum et infimus merito; tamen quia et ego laborem aliquem pro sancta Ecclesia tua suscepi, hunc fructum tuere; ne quem perditum vocasti ad sacerdotium, eum sacerdotem perire patiaris. Ac primum da ut condolere norim peccantibus affectu intimo; haec enim summa virtus, quia scriptum est: Et non gaudebis super filios Juda in die perditionis eorum, et ne magna loquaris in die tribulationis eorum (Abdi., 12): sed quotiescumque peccatum alicujus lapsi exponitur, compatiar: nec superbe increpem, sed lugeam et defleam; ut dum alium fleo, me ipsum defleam dicens: Justificata est magis Thamar, quam ego (Gen. XXXVIII, 26).

73. Preserve, O Lord, Your work, guard the gift which You have given even to him who shrank from it. For I knew that I was not worthy to be called a bishop, because I had devoted myself to this world, but by Your grace I am what I am. And I am indeed the least of all bishops, and the lowest in merit; yet since I too have undertaken some labour for Your holy Church, watch over this fruit, and let not him whom when lost You called to the priesthood, to be lost when a priest. And first grant that I may know how with inmost affection to mourn with those who sin; for this is a very great virtue, since it is written: And you shall not rejoice over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction, and speak not proudly in the day of their trouble. Obadiah 12 Grant that so often as the sin of any one who has fallen is made known to me I may suffer with him, and not chide him proudly, but mourn and weep, so that weeping over another I may mourn for myself, saying, Tamar has been more righteous than I. Genesis 38:26

74. Fortasse adolescentula lapsa sit, occasionibus quae delictorum fomites sunt, decepta ac praecipitata sit; peccamus et seniores. Repugnat in nobis lex hujus carnis, legi mentis nostrae, et captivos nos trahit in peccatum, ut faciamus quod nolumus (Rom. VII, 23). Illi de aetate suppetit excusatio, mihi jam nulla; illa enim debet discere nos docere. Ergo justificata est magis Thamar, quam ego (I Tim. VI, 10).

74. Perchance a maiden may have fallen, deceived and hurried away by those occasions which are the sources of sins. Well, we who are older sin, too. In us, too, the law of this flesh wars against the law of our mind, and makes us captives of sin, so that we do what we would not. Her youth is an excuse for her, I now have none, for she ought to learn, we ought to teach. So that Tamar has been more righteous than I.

75. Incusamus alicujus avaritiam, recordemur si nihil ipsi avare fecimus: et si fecimus, quoniam radix est malorum avaritia, et tamquam sub terra occulte in nostro serpit corpore, dicamus singuli: Justificata est magis Thamar, quam ego.

75. We inveigh against some one's covetousness, let us call to mind whether we ourselves have never done anything covetously; and if we have, since covetousness is the root of all evils, and is working in our bodies like a serpent secretly under the earth, let each of us say: Tamar has been more righteous than I.

76. Si commoti fuerimus in quemquam graviter, leviorem causam laicus habet quam episcopus, eo quod commotus egerit aliquid; retractemus nobiscum, et dicamus: Justificatus est magis iste, qui commotionis arguitur, quam ego. Haec enim si dicamus, ipsi nobis cavemus; ne dicat nobis Dominus Jesus, aut quisquam de discipulis ejus: Festucam in oculo fratris tui vides; trabem autem quae in oculo tuo est, non vides. Hypocrita, ejice primum trabem de oculo tuo, et tunc videbis ejicere festucam de oculo fratris tui (Matth. VII, 4, 5).

76. If we have been seriously moved against any one, a layman may act hastily for a smaller matter than a bishop. Let us ponder that with ourselves and say, He who is reproved for quick temper is more righteous than I. For if we thus speak, we guard ourselves against this, that the Lord Jesus or one of His disciples should say to us: You behold the mote in your brother's eye, but behold not the beam which is in your own eye. You hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of your own eye, and then shall you see to cast out the mote out of your brother's eye. Matthew 7:4-5

77. Non ergo crubescamus dicere graviorem nostram culpam esse, quam ejus quem arguendum putamus; quia dixit hoc Judas qui arguebat Thamar; et recordatus suam ipse culpam, ait: Justificata est magis Thamar, quam ego (Gen. XXXVIII, 26). In quo et altitudo mysterii est, et morale praeceptum: et ideo culpae ejus deputatum non est; quia ipse se accusavit prius, quam ab aliis accusaretur.

77. Let us, then, not be ashamed to say that our fault is more serious than that of him whom we think we must reprove, for this is what Judah did who reprimanded Tamar, and remembering his own fault said: Tamar is more righteous than I. In which saying there is a deep mystery and a moral precept; and therefore is his offense not reckoned to him, because he accused himself before he was accused by others.

78. Non ergo gaudeamus super alicujus peccato, sed magis lugeamus; quia scriptum est: Noli supergaudere mihi, inimica mea; quia cecidi: sed resurgam; quoniam si sedero in tenebris, Dominus illuminabit me. Iram Domini sustinebo, quia peccavi ei; donec justificet causam meam, et faciat judicium meum, et educat me ad lumen, et videbo justitiam ejus: et videbit inimica mea, et cooperietur confusione, quae dicit ad me: Ubi est Dominus Deus tuus? Oculi mei videbunt eam, et erit in conculcationem sicut tutum in via (Mich. VII, 8 et seq.). Nec immerito, quoniam qui lapsu alieno gaudet, diaboli gaudet victoria. Et ideo doleamus magis cum audimus perisse hominem, pro quo Christus mortuus est, qui nec in messe stipulam negligit.

78. Let us, then, not rejoice over the sin of any one, but rather let us mourn, for it is written: Rejoice not against me, O my enemy, because I have fallen, for I shall arise; for if I sit in darkness the Lord shall be a light unto me, I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against Him, until He maintain my cause, and execute judgment for me, and bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold His righteousness. Mine enemy, too, shall see it and shall be covered with confusion, which said to me, Where is the Lord your God? My eyes shall behold her, and she shall be for treading down as the mire in the streets. And this not unreservedly, for he who rejoices at the fall of another rejoices at the victory of the devil. Let us, then, rather mourn when we hear that one has perished for whom Christ died, Who despises not even the straw in time of harvest.

79. Atque utinam hanc stipulam in messe, hoc est, inanem avenam fructus mei non abjiciat, sed colligat, sicut ait quidam: Heu me, quia factus sum sicut qui colligit stipulam in messe, et racemum in vindemia (Mich. VII, 1)! ut vel primitiva manducet in me gratiae suae, etsi posteriora non approbet.

79. O that He may not cast away this straw at His harvest, the empty stalks of my produce; but may He gather it in, as is said by some one: Woe is me, for I have become as one that gathers straw in harvest, and grape gleanings in the vintage, Micah 7:1 that He may eat of the firstfruits at least of His grace in me, though He approve not the later fruit.

CAPUT IX.

QUO PACTO FIDES ad poenitentiam necessaria? Quot etiam solvendi subsidia cuique suppetant? Orationem, fletus ac jejunia pecuniis potiora esse. Quod ubi exemplis confirmavit, additoque ad veniam liberalitatem multum valere, sed fidei cunjunctam, vitia ejusdem liberalitatis nonnulla refert. His alios quosdam poenitentiae jungit defectus, eorum nempe vel qui statim reconciliari expetunt de solito luxu nihil remittentes, vel qui poenitentiam in sola sacramentorum abstinentia locant, vel demum qui spe poenitentiae effunduntur in libidines.

In what way faith is necessary for repentance. Means for paying our debts, in which work, prayer, tears, and fasting are of more value than money. Some instances are adduced, and St. Ambrose declares that generosity is profitable, but only when joined with faith; it is, moreover, liable to certain defects. He goes on to speak of some defects in repentance, such as too great haste in seeking reconciliation, considering abstinence from sacraments all that is needed, of committing sin in hope of repenting later.

80. Ergo et agendam poenitentiam, et tribuendam veniam credere nos convenit; ut veniam tamen tamquam ex fide speremus, non tamquam ex debito; aliud est enim mereri, aliud praesumere. Tamquam ex syngrapho fides impetrat: praesumptio autem arroganti est propior, quam roganti. Prius solve quod debitum est; ut quod speraveris, impetrare merearis. Solve boni affectum debitoris, ut versuram non facias, sed fidei tuae censu contracti nominis fenus evacues.

80. So, then, it is fitting for us to believe both that sinners must repent and that forgiveness is to be given on repentance, yet still as hoping for forgiveness as granted upon faith, not as a debt, for it is one thing to earn, and another presumptuously to claim a right. Faith asks for forgiveness, as it were, by covenant, but presumption is more akin to demand than to request. Pay first that which you owe, that you may be in a position to ask for what you have hoped. Come with the disposition of an honest debtor, that you may not contract a fresh liability, but may pay that which is due of the existing debt with the possessions of your faith.

81. Plura solvendi habet subsidia, qui Deo quam is qui homini debet. Homo pecuniam pro pecunia reposcit, quae non semper debitori praesto est: Deus affectum exigit, qui in tua potestate est. Nemo pauper est qui Deo debet, nisi qui se ipsum pauperem fecerit. Et si non habet quae vendat, habet quae solvat. Oratio, lacrymae, jejunia, debitoris boni census est, multoque uberior, quam si quis ex pretiis fundorum pecuniam sine fide deferat.

81. He who owes a debt to God has more help towards payment than he who is indebted to man. Man requires money for money, and this is not always at the debtor’s command. God demands the affection of the heart, which is in our own power. No one who owes a debt to God is poor, except one who has made himself poor. And even if he have nothing to sell, yet has he wherewith to pay. Prayer, fasting, and tears are the resources of an honest debtor, and much more abundant than if one from the price of his estate offered money without faith.

82. Denique pauper erat Ananias, cum vendito agro, pecuniam deferret ad apostolos; unde nec solvere se potuit, sed implicavit (Act. V, 1, 2). Dives illa vidua quae duo aera minuta in gazophylacium misit, de qua dictum est: Haec vidua paupercula plus omnibus misit (Luc. XXI, 2). Non enim pecuniam Deus, sed fidem quaerit.

82. Ananias was poor, when after selling his land he brought the money to the apostles, and was not able with it to pay his debt, but involved himself the more. Acts 5:1-2 That widow was rich who cast her two small pieces into the treasury, of whom Christ said: This poor widow has cast in more than they all. Luke 21:3 For God requires not money but faith.

83. [Alias cap. IX.] Neque ego abnuo liberalitatibus in pauperes factis posse minui peccatum; sed si fides commendet expensas. Quid enim prodest collatio patrimonii sine gratia charitatis?

83. And I do not deny that sins may be diminished by liberal gifts to the poor, but only if faith commend what is spent. For what would the giving of one's whole property benefit without charity?

84. Sunt qui ad jactantiam solam decorem largitatis affectent; ut eo se probatos vulgo videri velint, quod sibi nihil reliquerint: sed dum praesentis saeculi mercedem requirunt, non recondunt futuri; et quia hic perceperunt mercedem suam, illic sperare non possunt.

84. There are some who aim at the credit of generosity for pride alone, because they wish thereby to gain the good opinion of the multitude for leaving nothing to themselves; but while they are seeking rewards in this life, they are laying up none for the life to come, and having received their reward here they cannot hope for it there.

85. Sunt qui opes suas tumultuario mentis impulsu, non judicio perpetuo, ubi Ecclesiae contulerunt, postea revocandas putarunt: quibus nec prima merces rata est, nec secunda; quia nec prima judicium habuit, et secunda habuit sacrilegium (17, q. 4, c. Sunt qui opes).

85. Some again, having, through impulsive excitement and not after long consideration, given their possessions to the Church, think that they can claim them back. These gain neither the first nor the second reward, for the gift was made thoughtlessly, its recall sacrilegiously.

86. Sunt quos poenituerit opes suas divisisse pauperibus: sed eos qui poenitentiam agunt, hoc solum poenitere non debet, ne ipsius poenitentiae agant poenitentiam. Nam plerique futuri supplicii metu peccatorum suorum conscii, poenitentiam petunt, et cum acceperint, publicae supplicationis revocantur pudore. Hi videntur malorum petiisse poenitentiam agere bonorum.

86. Some repent of having distributed their property to the poor. But they who are doing penance must not repent of this, lest they repent of their own repentance. For many seek for penance through fear of future punishment, being conscious of their sins, and having received their penance are held back by fear of the public entreaties. These persons seem to have sought for repentance for their evil deeds, but to exercise it for their good ones.

87. Nonnulli ideo poscunt poenitentiam, ut statim sibi reddi communionem velint. Hi non tam se solvere cupiunt, quam sacerdotem ligare; suam enim conscientiam culpa non exuunt, et sacerdotis induunt, cui praeceptum est: Nolite sanctum dare canibus, neque miseritis margaritas vestras ante porcos; hoc est, immundis impuritatibus sacrae communionis non impertienda consortia.

87. Some seek penance because they wish to be at once restored to communion. These wish not so much to loose themselves as to bind the priest, for they do not put off the guilt from their own conscience, but lay it on that of the priest, to whom the command is given: Give not that which is holy to the dogs, neither cast your pearls before the swine; Matthew 7:6 that is to say, that partaking of the holy Communion is not to be allowed to those polluted with impurity.

88. Itaque videas eos mutata veste incedere, quos lugere et gemere oportebat; quia vestem illam ablutionis et gratiae sordidarunt: feminas autem margaritis onerare aures, curvare cervices, quas bene Christo, non auro, inclinarent: quae se ipsas flere debebant, quod margaritam quae de coelo est, perdiderunt.

88. And so one may see those walking in other attire, who ought to be weeping and groaning because they had defiled the robe of sanctification and grace; and women loading their ears with pearls, and weighing down their necks, who had better have bent to Christ than to gold, and who ought to be weeping for themselves, because they have lost the pearl from heaven.

89. Sunt etiam qui arbitrentur hoc esse poenitentiam, si abstineant a sacramentis coelestibus. Hi saeviores in se judices sunt, qui poenam praescribunt sibi, declinant remedium, quos vel poenam suam conveniebat dolere; quia coelesti fraudarentur gratia (De Poenit., dist. I, cap. Sunt qui arbitrentur).

89. There are, again, some who think that it is penitence to abstain from the heavenly sacraments. These are too cruel judges of themselves, who prescribe a penalty for themselves but refuse the remedy, who ought to be mourning over their self-imposed penalty, because it deprives them of heavenly grace.

90. Alii proposita spe agendae poenitentiae, licentiam sibi delinquendi propagatam putant; cum poenitentia remedium peccati sit, non peccandi incentivum. Vulneri enim medicamentum necessarium est, non vulnus medicamento; quia propter vulnus medicamentum quaeritur, non propter medicamentum vulnus desideratur. Infirma deinde spes quae committitur tempori; cum omne tempus incertum sit, omni spes tempori non sit superstes.

90. Others think that licence is granted them to sin, because the hope of penitence is before them, whereas penitence is the remedy, not an incentive to sin. For the salve is necessary for the wound, not the wound for the salve, since a salve is sought because of the wound, the wound is not wished for on account of the salve. The hope which is put off to a future season is but feeble, for every season is uncertain, and hope does not outlive all time.

CAPUT X.

UT PUDOR QUO revocantur a publica poenitentia fontes, depellatur, profanorum agendi ratione proposita, utilitatem precum ab omni Ecclesia simul emissarum, ac lugentium sanctorum exempla promit. Tum reprehensis qui eamdem poenitentiam ducunt saepius iterandam, quam difficulter bene agatur, quove modo exsequenda sit, explicat.

In order to do away with the feeling of shame which holds back the guilty from public penance, St. Ambrose points out the advantage of prayers offered by the whole Church, and sets forth the example of saints who have sorrowed. Then, after reproving those who imagine that penance may be often repeated, he points out the difficulty of repentance, and how it is to be carried out.

91. An quisquam ferat ut erubescas Deum rogare, qui non erubescis rogare hominem? et pudeat te Deo supplicare, quem non lates; cum te non pudeat peccata tua homini, quem lateas, confiteri? An testes precationis et conscios refugis, cum si homini satisfaciendum sit, multos necesse est ambias, obsecres, ut dignentur intervenire; ad genua te ipse prosternas, osculeris vestigia, filios offeras culpae adhuc ignaros, paternae etiam veniae precatores?

Hoc ergo in Ecclesiae facere fastidis, ut Deo supplices, ut patrocinium tibi ad obsecrandum sanctae plebis requiras; ubi nihil est quod pudori esse debeat, nisi non fateri, cum omnes simus peccatores: ubi ille laudabilior, qui humilior; ille justior, qui sibi abjectior.

91. Can any one endure that you should blush to entreat God, when you do not blush to entreat a man? That you should be ashamed to entreat Him Who knows you fully, when you are not ashamed to confess your sins to a man who knows you not? Do you shrink from witnesses and sympathizers in your prayers, when, if you have to satisfy a man, you must visit many and entreat them to be kind enough to intervene; when you throw yourself at a man's knees, kiss his feet, bring your children, still unconscious of guilt, to entreat also for their father's pardon? And you disdain to do this in the Church in order to entreat God, in order to gain for yourself the support of the holy congregation; where there is no cause for shame, except indeed not to confess, since we are all sinners, among whom he is the most praiseworthy who is the most humble; he is the most just who feels himself the lowest.

92. Fleat pro te (De Poenit., dist. I, cap. Fleat) mater Ecclesia, et culpam tuam lacrymis lavet, videat te Christus moerentem, ut dicat: Beati tristes, quia gaudebitis (Luc. VI, 21). Amat ut pro uno multi rogent. Denique in Evangelio motus viduae lacrymis, quia plurimi pro ea flebant, filium ejus resuscitavit (Luc. VII, 13). Ideo citius exaudivit Petrum, ut Dorcas resurgeret (Act. IX, 36); quia pauperes mortem mulieris ingemiscebant. Ideo ipsi Petro statim remisit, quia amarissime flevit. Et tu si amarissime fleas, Christus ad te respiciet, culpa discedet (Luc. XXII, 62). Usus enim doloris ablegat luxuriam criminis, erroris delicias. Ita dum dolemus admissa, admittenda excludimus, et fit quaedam de condemnatione culpae disciplina innocentiae.

92. Let the Church, our Mother, weep for you, and wash away your guilt with her tears; let Christ see you mourning and say, Blessed are you that are sad, for you shall rejoice. It pleases Him that many should entreat for one. In the Gospel, too, moved by the widow's tears, because many were weeping for her, He raised her son. He heard Peter more quickly when He raised Dorcas, because the poor were mourning over the death of the woman. He also immediately forgave Peter, for he wept most bitterly. And if you weep bitterly Christ will look upon you and your guilt shall leave you. For the application of pain does away with the enjoyment of the wickedness and the delight of the sin. And so while mourning over our past sins we shut the door against fresh ones, and from the condemnation of our guilt there arises as it were a training in innocence.

93. Nihil ergo te revocet a poenitentia, haec tibi communis cum sanctis est: utinamque imitanda talis, qualis sanctorum deploratio. David manducabat sicut panem cinerem, et potum suum cum lacrymis temperabat (Psal. CI, 10); ideo nunc amplius gaudet, quia amplius flevit: Per exitus aquarum descenderunt, inquit, oculi mei (Psal. CXVIII, 136).

93. Let, then, nothing call you away from penitence, for this you have in common with the saints, and would that such sorrowing for sin as that of the saints were copied by you. David, as it were, ate ashes for bread, and mingled his drink with weeping, and therefore now rejoices the more because he wept the more: My eyes ran down, he said, with rivers of water.

94. Joannes multum ploravit, et revelata sibi dicit Christi mysteria (Apoc. V, 4). At vero illa mulier, quae cum esset in peccatis, et deberet flere, gaudebat, et veste purpurea atque coccinea operiebatur, et auro se multo et pretiosis lapidibus ornabat, aeterni fletus nunc luget aerumnam (Apoc. XVII, 4).

94. John wept sore, Revelation 5:4 and, as he tells us, the mysteries of Christ were revealed to him. But that woman who, when she was in sin and ought to have wept, nevertheless rejoiced, and covered herself with a robe of purple and scarlet, Revelation 17:4 and adorned herself with much gold and precious stones, now mourns the misery of eternal weeping.

95. Merito reprehenduntur (De Poenit., dist. 3, c. Reperiuntur) qui saepius agendam poenitentiam putant; quia luxuriantur in Christo. Nam si vere agerent poenitentiam, iterandam postea non putarent; quia sicut unum baptisma, ita una poenitentia, quae tamen publice agitur; nam quotidiani nos debet poenitere peccati: sed haec delictorum leviorum, illa graviorum.

95. Deservedly are they blamed who think that they often do penance, for they are wanton against Christ. For if they went through their penance in truth, they would not think that it could be repeated again; for as there is but one baptism, so there is but one course of penance, so far as the outward practice goes, for we must repent of our daily faults, but this latter has to do with lighter faults, the former with such as are graver.

96. Facilius autem (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Sunt qui, § Facilius) inveni qui innocentiam servaverint, quam qui congrue egerint poenitentiam. An quisquam illam poenitentiam putat, ubi acquirendae ambitio dignitatis, ubi vini effusio, ubi ipsius copulae conjugalis usus? Renuntiandum saeculo est: somno ipsi minus indulgendum, quam natura postulat; interpellandus est gemitibus, interrumpendus est suspiriis, sequestrandus orationibus: vivendum ita, ut vitali huic moriamur usui, se ipsum sibi homo abneget, et totus mutetur: sicut quemdam adolescentem fabulae ferunt propter amores meretricios peregre profectum, et abolito amore regressum, postea veteri occurrisse dilectae, quae ubi se non interpellavit, mirata putaverit non recognitam, rursus occurrens dixerit: Ego sum; responderit ille: Sed ego non sum ego.

96. But I have more easily found such as had preserved their innocence than such as had fittingly repented. Does any one think that that is penitence where there still exists the striving after earthly honours, where wine flows, and even conjugal connection takes place? The world must be renounced; less sleep must be indulged in than nature demands; it must be broken by groans, interrupted by sighs, put aside by prayers; the mode of life must be such that we die to the usual habits of life. Let the man deny himself and be wholly changed, as in the fable they relate of a certain youth, who left his home because of his love for a harlot, and, having subdued his love, returned; then one day meeting his old favourite and not speaking to her, she, being surprised and supposing that he had not recognized her, said, when they met again, It is I. But, was his answer, I am not the former I.

97. Unde bene Dominus ait: Qui vult post me venire, abneget semetipsum sibi, et tollat crucem suam, et sequatur me (Matth. XVI, 24). Etenim qui mortui et sepulti in Christo sunt, non debent iterum velut viventes de hoc mundo decernere. Ne tetigeritis, inquit, nec attaminaveritis quae sunt omnia ad corruptelam ipso usu (Coloss. II, 20), eo quod ipse hujus vitae usus corruptela sit integritatis.

97. Well then did the Lord say: If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me. Matthew 16:24 For they who are dead and buried in Christ ought not again to make their conclusions as though living in the world. Touch not, it is said, nor attend to those things which tend to corruption by their very use, for the very customs of this life corrupt integrity.

UBI PRAEMISIT QUOMINUS ad mortem usque baptismus rejiciatur, in causa esse poenitentiam; eos a quibus ipsa procrastinatur, allatis Scripturae testimoniis urget. Subjungit tamen tum agendam illam non esse, cum adhuc fervent cupiditates, at quoad eaedem resederint, exspectandum.

CHAPTER 11

The possibility of repentance is a reason why baptism should not be deferred to old age, a practice which is against the will of God in holy Scripture. But it is of no use to practise penance while still serving lusts. These must be first subdued.

98. Bona ergo poenitentia, quae si non esset, omnes ad senectutem differrent ablutionis gratiam. Quibus satis responsi est quia melius est ut habeam quod sarciam, quam non habeam quod vestiar: sed sicut semel assuta redintegrantur, ita frequenter suta solvuntur.

98. Good, then, is penitence, and if there were no place for it, every one would defer the grace of cleansing by baptism to old age. And a sufficient reason is that it is better, to have a robe to mend, than none to put on; but as that which has been repaired once is restored, so that which is frequently mended is destroyed.

99. Eos autem qui poenitentiam differunt, satis ipse Dominus admonuit dicens: Poenitentiam agite; appropinquavit enim regnum coelorum (Matth. IV, 17). Nescimus ergo qua hora fur venerit, nescimus an proxima nocte a nobis nostra reposcatur anima. Adam (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Adam) post culpam statim de paradiso Deus ejecit, non distulit: sed statim separavit a deliciis, ut ageret poenitentiam: statim tunicam vestivit pelliceam, non sericam (Gen. III, 21).

99. And the Lord has given a sufficient warning to those who put off repentance, when He says: Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Matthew 4:17 We know not at what hour the thief will come, we know not whether our soul may be required of us this next night. God cast Adam out of Paradise immediately after his fault; there was no delay. At once the fallen were severed from all their enjoyments that they might do penance; at once God clothed them with garments of skins, not of silk.

100. Quid enim est quod differas? An ut plura peccata committas? Ergo quia Deus bonus est, ideo tu malus, et divitias bonitatis ejus et patientiae contemnis (Rom. II, 4)? Sed bonitas Domini magis ad poenitentiam te debet adducere. Ideo ad omnes sanctus David dicit: Venite adoremus, et procidamus ante eum, et ploremus ante Dominum nostrum, qui fecit nos (Psal. XCIV, 6). De peccatore autem sine poenitentia mortuo, quia nihil aliud superest nisi graviter moerere, nisi flere, habes plorantem ipsum et dicentem: Filius meus Abessalon, filius meus Abessalon (II Reg. XVIII, 33). Qui enim penitus est mortuus, sine ulla exceptione defletur.

100. And what reason is there for putting off? Is it that you may sin yet more? Then because God is good you are evil, and despise the riches of His goodness and long-suffering. Romans 2:4 But the goodness of the Lord ought rather to draw you to repentance. Wherefore holy David says to all: Come, let us worship and fall down before Him, and mourn before our Lord Who made us. But for a sinner who has died without repentance, because nothing remains but to mourn grievously and to weep, you find him groaning and saying: O my son Absalom! My son Absalom! For him who is wholly dead mourning is without alleviation.

101. De his autem qui exsules atque peregrini limitum paternorum, quos lex Moysi sancta praescripsit, mundanis implicabuntur erroribus, audis canentem: Super flumina Babylonis illic sedimus et flevimus, dum recordaremur Sion (Psal. CXXXVI, 1). Inducit enim lapsorum gemitus, in ipso temporum praesentium et rerum labentium adhuc positos statu debere resipiscere; eorum videlicet exemplo, qui propter peccati pretium deducti erant in captivitatis aerumnam.

101. But of those who as exiles and banished from their ancestral homes, which the holy law of Moses had assigned them, will be entangled in the errors of the world, you hear him saying: By the waters of Babylon we sat down and wept, when we remembered Zion. He sets forth the wailings of those who have fallen, and shows that they who are living in this condition of passing time and changing circumstances ought to repent, after the example of those who, as a reward for sin, had been led into miserable captivity.

102. Nihil est autem (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Sunt qui, § Nihil est) quod tam summo dolori sit, quam ut unusquisque positus sub captivitate peccati, recordetur unde lapsus sit, atque unde deciderit; eo quod ad corporea atque terrena ab illa speciosa ac pulchra divinae cognitionis intentione deflexerit.

102. But nothing causes such exceeding grief as when any one, lying under the captivity of sin, calls to mind whence he has fallen, because he turned aside to carnal and earthly things, instead of directing his mind in the beautiful ways of the knowledge of God.

103. Sic habes Adam abscondentem se, ubi Deum cognovit esse praesentem, et quaesitum latere voluisse, et vocatum a Domino ea voce quae latentis morderet affectum, hoc est: Adam, ubi es (Gen. III, 9)? Hoc est, cur te abscondis? cur lates? cur fugis eum, quem videre desiderabas? Ita gravis culpa est conscientiae, ut sine judice ipsa se puniat, et velare se cupiat; et tamen apud Deum nuda sit.

103. So you find Adam concealing himself, when he knew that God was present, and wishing to be hidden when called by God with that voice which wounded the soul of him who was hiding: Adam, where are you? Genesis 3:9 That is to say, Why are you hiding yourself? Why are you concealed? Why do you avoid Him, Whom you once longed to see? A guilty conscience is so burdensome that it punishes itself without a judge, and wishes for covering, and yet is bare before God.

104. Et ideo nemo in peccato positus arrogare sibi debet auctoritatem aut usurpationem sacramentorum (De Poenit., dist. I, c. Sunt qui, § Nemo); quia scriptum est: Peccasti, quiesce (Gen. IV, 10). Quod in praesenti psalmo David dicit: In salicibus (De Poenit., dist. 3, c. In salicibus), inquit, in medio ejus suspendimus organa nostra; et infra: Quomodo cantabimus canticum Domini in terra aliena (Psal. CXXXVI, 1, 2)? Si enim caro menti repugnat, nec subdita est animi gubernaculo, et mentis imperio, aliena est terra quae non domatur exercitio cultoris, et ideo non potest fructus charitatis, patientiae, ac pacis afferre. Melius est ergo tunc quiescere, cum exercere non queas opera poenitentiae; ne in ipsa poenitentia fiat, quod postea indigeat poenitentia. Quae si semel fuerit usurpata, nec jure celebrata, nec prioris fructum obtinet, et auferet usum posterioris (De Poenit., dist. III, c. Si quis, § Poenitentia).

104. And so no one in a state of sin ought to claim a right to or the use of the sacraments, for it is written: You have sinned, be still. As David says in the Psalm lately quoted: We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof; and again: How shall we sing the Lord’s song in a strange land? For if the flesh wars against the mind, and is not subject to the guidance of the Spirit, that is a strange land which is not subdued by the toil of the cultivator, and so cannot produce the fruits of charity, patience, and peace. It is better, then, to be still when you cannot practise the works of repentance, lest in the very acts of repentance there be that which afterward will need further repentance. For if it be once entered upon and not rightly carried out, it obtains not the result of a first repentance and takes away the use of a later one.

105. Sane et cum caro repugnat, mens ad Deum debet esse intenta: et si opera non sequuntur, fides non deserat: et si impugnant vel carnis illecebrae, vel potestates adversariae, maneat mens Deo dedita (Rom. VII, 23). Tunc enim maxime urgemur, cum caro cedit: et sunt qui vehementer incumbant miserae animae, quaerentes omne auferre praesidium. Unde illud est: Exinanite, exinanite usque ad fundamentum in ea (Psal. CXXXVI, 7).

105. When, then, the flesh resists, the soul must be intent upon God, and if results do not follow, let not faith fail. And if the enticements of the flesh come upon us, or the powers of the enemy attack us, let the soul keep in submission to God. For we are then specially oppressed when the flesh yields. And some there are who trouble heavily the wretched soul, seeking to deprive it of all protection. To which case the words apply: Rase it, rase it, even to the foundations.

106. Quam miseratus David ait: Filia Babylonis misera (Ibid., 8). Misera utique, quia Babylonis filia est, quae Dei filia esse desivit. Cui tamen medicum invitat, dicens: Beatus qui tenebit, et allidet parvulos tuos ad petram (Ibid., 9), hoc est, qui infirmas et lubricas cogitationes elidat ad Christum, qui omnes irrationabiles motus sui reverentia et disceptatione comminuat; ut si adulterimo quis amore raptatur, excludat ignem, copulamque meretricis, et se studio suo abdicet, ut Christum acquirat.

106. And David, pitying her, says: O wretched daughter of Babylon. Wretched indeed, as being the daughter of Babylon, when she ceased to be the daughter of Jerusalem. And yet he calls for a healer for her, and says: Blessed is he who shall take your little ones and dash them against the rock. That is to say, shall dash all corrupt and filthy thoughts against Christ, Who by His fear and His rebuke will break down all motions against reason, so as, if any one is seized by an adulterous love, to extinguish the fire, that he may by his zeal put away the love of a harlot, and deny himself that he may gain Christ.

107. Didicimus ergo (De Poenit., dist. 1, c. Sunt qui, § Didicimus) et agendam poenitentiam, et eo agendam tempore quo culpae defervescat luxuria: et in captivitate peccati positos, reverentiores nos, non usurpatores esse debere. Nam si Moysi propius accedere gestienti, ut cognitionem mysterii coelestis hauriret, dicitur: Solve calceamentum pedum tuorum (Exod. III, 5); quanto magis nos animae nostrae pedes exuere vinculis corporalibus, et gressus omnes mundi istius nexu debemus absolvere?

107. We have then learned that we must do penance, and this at a time when the heat of luxury and sin is giving way; and that we, when under the dominion of sin, must show ourselves Godfearing by refraining, rather than allowing ourselves in evil practices. For if it is said to Moses when he was desiring to draw nearer: Put off your shoes from off your feet, Exodus 3:5 how much more must we free the feet of our soul from the bonds of the body, and clear our steps from all connection with this world.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

AMBROSIUS AB UNOQUOQUE verborum talentorumque suorum reddendam Deo rationem intelligens, ad scribendum mentem appellit; tum recensitis aliquot divinae misericordiae exemplis, provocat sese ad bene sperandum: sed mox illi officio imparem se esse confessus, ut secum tamquam cum evangelica ficu agatur, optat; quo tamen os censoribus opprimat suis, sperare se testatur verba sibi non defutura, qui loquatur Christum.

CHAPTER 1.

St. Ambrose, reflecting upon the account he will have to give of his talents, determines to write, and consoles himself with certain examples of God's mercy. Then recognizing his own deficiencies desires that he may be dealt with like the fig-tree in the Gospel, and expresses a hope that words will not fail him in his endeavour to preach Christ.

1. Si, iuxta coelestis sententiam veritatis (Matth. XII, 36) , verbi totius, quodcumque otiosum fuerimus locuti, habemus praestare rationem: vel si unusquisque servus credita sibi talenta gratiae spiritalis, quae nummulariis dividenda forent, ut crescentibus multiplicarentur usuris, intra terram suam vel quasi timidus fenerator, vel quasi avarus possessor absconderit (Matth. XXV, 14 et seq.) , non mediocrem, domino revertente, offensam incidet; iure nobis verendum est, quibus licet ingenium tenue, necessitas tamen maxima eloquia Dei credita populi fenerare mentibus, ne vocis quoque nostrae poscatur usura: praesertim cum studium a nobis Dominus, non profectum requirat. Unde scribendi aliquid sententia fuit. Maiore siquidem pudoris periculo auditur vox nostra quam legitur; liber enim non erubescit.

1. If, according to the decree of heavenly truth, we have to give account of every idle word which we have spoken, Matthew 12:36 and if every servant will incur no small blame when his lord returns, who, either like a timid money-lender or covetous owner, has hidden in the earth the talents of spiritual grace which were entrusted to him in order that they might be multiplied by increasing interest, I, who, although possessed of but moderate ability, yet have a great necessity laid on me of making increase of the sayings of God entrusted to me, must rightly fear lest an account of the profit of my words be demanded of me, especially seeing that the Lord exacts of us effort, not profit. Wherefore I determined to write something, since, too, my words are listened to with greater risk to modesty than when they are written, for a book has no feeling of modesty.

2. Et quidem ingenio diffisus, sed divinae misericordiae provocatus exemplis, sermonem meditari audeo; nam, volente Deo, etiam asina locuta est (Num. XXII, 28) . Quod si mihi sub istius saeculi oneribus constituto assistat angelus, ego quoque muta diu ora laxabo; potest enim solvere impedimenta imperitiae, qui in illa asina solvit naturae. In arca veteris Testamenti virga floruit sacerdotis (Num. XVII, 8): facile Deo ut in sancta Ecclesia de nostris quoque nodis flos germinet. Cur autem desperandum quod Dominus loquatur in hominibus, qui est locutus in sentibus (Exod. III, 4 et seq.) ? Deus nec rubum est dedignatus. Atque utinam meas quoque illuminet spinas! Erunt fortassis qui etiam in nostris sentibus aliquem mirentur lucere fulgorem, erunt quos spina nostra non urat; erunt quibus de rubo audita vox nostra solvat de pedibus calceamentum, ut impedimentis corporalibus exuatur mentis incessus.

2. And so distrusting indeed my own ability, but encouraged by the instances of divine mercy, I venture to compose an address, for when God willed even the ass spoke. Numbers 22:28 And I will open my mouth long dumb, that the angel may assist me also, engaged in the burdens of this world, for He can do away with the hindrances of unskilfulness, Who in the ass did away those of nature. In the ark of the Old Testament the priest's rod budded; Numbers 17:8 with God it is easy that in Holy Church a flower should spring from our knots also. And why should we despair that God should speak in men, Who spoke in the thorn bush? Exodus 3:4 God did not despise the bush, and would He might give light also to my thorns. Perhaps some may wonder that there is some light even in our thorns; some our thorns will not burn; there will be some whose shoes shall be put off their feet at the sound of my voice, that the steps of the mind may be freed from bodily hindrances.

3. Sed haec sanctorum merita virorum. Utinam me sub illa infructuosa (Ioan. I, 48) adhuc ficu iacentem ex aliqua Iesus parte respiceret! ferret quoque post triennium fructus et nostra ficus (Luc. XIII, 6 et seq.) . Sed unde tantum peccatoribus spei? Utinam saltem ille Evangelicus Dominicae cultor vineae ficum nostram fortasse iam iussus excidere, remittat illam et hoc anno, usque dum fodiat, et mittat cophinum stercoris; ne forte de terra suscitet inopem, et de stercore erigat pauperem! Beati qui sub vite et olea equos suos alligant (Gen. XLIX, 11) , laborum cursus suorum luci et laetitiae consecrantes: me ficus adhuc, id est, illecebrosa deliciarum obumbrat prurigo mundi, humilis ad altitudinem, fragilis ad laborem, mollis ad usum, sterilis ad fructum.

3. But these things are gained by holy men. Would that Jesus would cast a glance upon me still lying under that barren fig-tree, John 1:48 and that my fig-tree might also after three years bear fruit. But whence should sinners have so great hope? Would that at least that Gospel dresser of the vineyard, perhaps already bidden to cut down my fig-tree, would let it alone this year also, until he dig about it and dung it, that he may perchance lift the helpless out of the dust, and lift the poor out of the mire. Blessed are they who bind their horses under the vine and olive, Genesis 49:11 consecrating the course of their labours to light and joy: the fig-tree, that is, the tempting attraction of the pleasures of the world, still overshadows me, low in height, brittle for working, soft for use, and barren of fruit.

4. Ac fortasse miretur aliquis cur scribere audeo, qui loqui nequeo. Et tamen si repetamus quae legimus in Evangelicis Scripturis (Luc. I, 63, 64) et sacerdotalibus factis, ac nobis sanctus Zacharias propheta documento sit, inveniet esse quod vox non explicet, et stylus signet. Quod si nomen Ioannis reddidit patri vocem, ego quoque desperare non debeo quod vocem licet mutus accipiam, si loquar Christum: cuius quidem generationem iuxta propheticum dictum quis enarrabit (Esai. LIII, 8) ? Et ideo quasi servus, Domini familiam praedicabo; immaculatus enim Dominus immaculatam sibi familiam etiam in hoc pleno colluvionum fragilitatis humanae corpore consecravit.

4. And perhaps some one may wonder why I, who cannot speak, venture to write. And yet if we consider what we read in the writings of the Gospel, and the deeds of the priests, and the holy prophet Zacharias is taken as an instance, he will find that there is something which the voice cannot explain, but the pen can write. And if the name John restored speech to his father, Luke 1:63-64 I, too, ought not to despair that although dumb I may yet receive speech, if I speak of Christ, of Whom, according to the prophet’s word: Who shall declare the generation? Isaiah 53:8 And so as a servant I will announce the family of the Lord, for the Lord has consecrated to Himself a family even in this body of humanity replete with frailty.

CAPUT II.

DOCET LIBRI SUI auspicato proferri exordium, cum natalis dies esset virginis, beatae Agnetis videlicet: quam a nomine, a pudore, a martyrio elegantissime commendat: sed potissimum ab aetate; quippe quae annos duodecim nata, terrores, promissa, cruciatus, mortem denique ipsam virili prorsus constantia devicerit.

CHAPTER 2.

This treatise has a favourable beginning, since it is the birthday of the holy Virgin Agnes, of whose name, modesty, and martyrdom St. Ambrose speaks in commendation, but more especially of her age, seeing that she, being but twelve years old, was superior to terrors, promises, tortures, and death itself, with a courage wholly worthy of a man.

5. Et bene procedit, ut quoniam hodie natalis est virginis, de virginibus sit loquendum, et a praedicatione liber sumat exordium. Natalis est virginis, integritatem sequamur. Natalis est martyris, hostias immolemus. Natalis est sanctae Agnes, mirentur viri, non desperent parvuli; stupeant nuptae, imitentur innuptae. Sed quid dignum de ea loqui possumus, cuius ne nomen quidem vacuum luce laudis fuit? Devotio supra aetatem, virtus supra naturam; ut mihi videatur non hominis habuisse nomen, sed oraculum martyris, quo indicavit quid esset futura.

5. And my task begins favourably, that since today is the birthday of a virgin, I have to speak of virgins, and the treatise has its beginning from this discourse. It is the birthday of a martyr, let us offer the victim. It is the birthday of St. Agnes, let men admire, let children take courage, let the married be astounded, let the unmarried take an example. But what can I say worthy of her whose very name was not devoid of bright praise? In devotion beyond her age, in virtue above nature, she seems to me to have borne not so much a human name, as a token of martyrdom, whereby she showed what she was to be.

6. Habeo tamen unde mihi subsidium comparetur. Nomen virginis titulus est pudoris. Appellabo martyrem, praedicabo virginem. Satis prolixa laudatio est, quae non quaeritur, sed tenetur. Facessant igitur ingenia, eloquentia conticescat, vox una praeconium est. Hanc senes, hanc iuvenes, hanc pueri canant. Nemo est laudabilior, quam qui ab hominibus laudari potest. Quot homines, tot praecones, qui martyrem praedicant, dum loquuntur.

6. But I have that which may assist me. The name of virgin is a title of modesty. I will call upon the martyr, I will proclaim the virgin. That panegyric is long enough which needs no elaboration, but is within our grasp. Let then labour cease, eloquence be silent. One word is praise enough. This word old men and young and boys chant. No one is more praiseworthy than he who can be praised by all. There are as many heralds as there are men, who when they speak proclaim the martyr.

7. Haec duodecim annorum martyrium fecisse traditur. Quo detestabilior crudelitas, quae nec minusculae pepercit aetati: immo magna vis fidei, quae etiam ab illa testimonium invenit aetate. Fuitne in illo corpusculo vulneri locus? Et quae non habuit quo ferrum reciperet, habuit quo ferrum vinceret. At istius aetatis puellae torvos etiam vultus parentum ferre non possunt, et acu districta solent puncta flere, quasi vulnera. Haec inter cruentas carnificum impavida manus, haec stridentium gravibus immobilis tractibus catenarum, nunc furentis mucroni militis totum offerre corpus, mori adhuc nescia, sed parata: vel si ad aras invita raperetur, tendere Christo inter ignes manus, atque in ipsis sacrilegis focis tropaeum Domini signare victoris: nunc ferratis colla manusque ambas inserere nexibus: sed nullus tam tenuia membra poterat nexus includere.

7. She is said to have suffered martyrdom when twelve years old. The more hateful was the cruelty, which spared not so tender an age, the greater in truth was the power of faith which found evidence even in that age. Was there room for a wound in that small body? And she who had no room for the blow of the steel had that wherewith to conquer the steel. But maidens of that age are unable to bear even the angry looks of parents, and are wont to cry at the pricks of a needle as though they were wounds. She was fearless under the cruel hands of the executioners, she was unmoved by the heavy weight of the creaking chains, offering her whole body to the sword of the raging soldier, as yet ignorant of death, but ready for it. Or if she were unwillingly hurried to the altars, she was ready to stretch forth her hands to Christ at the sacrificial fires, and at the sacrilegious altars themselves, to make the sign of the Lord the Conqueror, or again to place her neck and both her hands in the iron bands, but no band could enclose such slender limbs.

8. Novum martyrii genus? Nondum idonea poenae, et iam matura victoriae: certare difficilis, facilis coronari: magisterium virtutis implevit, quae praeiudicium vehebat aetatis. Non sic ad thalamum nupta properaret, ut ad supplicii locum laeta successu, gradu festina virgo processit, non intorto crine caput compta, sed Christo: non flosculis redimita, sed moribus. Flere omnes, ipsa sine fletu. Mirari plerique quod tam facile vitae suae prodiga, quam nondum hauserat, iam quasi perfuncta donaret. Stupere universi, quod iam divinitatis testis existeret, quae adhuc, arbitra sui per aetatem esse non posset. Effecit denique ut ei de Deo crederetur, cui de homine adhuc non crederetur. Quia quod ultra naturam est, de auctore naturae est.

8. A new kind of martyrdom! Not yet of fit age for punishment but already ripe for victory, difficult to contend with but easy to be crowned, she filled the office of teaching valour while having the disadvantage of youth. She would not as a bride so hasten to the couch, as being a virgin she joyfully went to the place of punishment with hurrying step, her head not adorned with plaited hair, but with Christ. All wept, she alone was without a tear. All wondered that she was so readily prodigal of her life, which she had not yet enjoyed, and now gave up as though she had gone through it. Every one was astounded that there was now one to bear witness to the Godhead, who as yet could not, because of her age, dispose of herself. And she brought it to pass that she should be believed concerning God, whose evidence concerning man would not be accepted. For that which is beyond nature is from the Author of nature.

9. Quanto terrore egit carnifex ut timeretur, quantis blanditiis ut suaderet! quantorum vota ut sibi ad nuptias perveniret! At illa: Et haec Sponsi iniuria est exspectare placiturum. Qui me sibi prior elegit, accipiet. Quid, percussor, moraris? Pereat corpus quod amari potest oculis quibus nolo. Stetit, oravit, cervicem inflexit. Cerneres trepidare carnificem, quasi ipse addictus fuisset: tremere percussoris dextram, pallere ora alieno timentis periculo, cum puella non timeret suo. Habetis igitur in una hostia duplex martyrium, pudoris et religionis. Et virgo permansit, et martyrium obtinuit.

9. What threats the executioner used to make her fear him, what allurements to persuade her, how many desired that she would come to them in marriage! But she answered: It would be an injury to my spouse to look on any one as likely to please me. He who chose me first for Himself shall receive me. Why are you delaying, executioner? Let this body perish which can be loved by eyes which I would not. She stood, she prayed, she bent down her neck. You could see the executioner tremble, as though he himself had been condemned, and his right hand shake, his face grow pale, as he feared the peril of another, while the maiden feared not for her own. You have then in one victim a twofold martyrdom, of modesty and of religion. She both remained a virgin and she obtained martyrdom.

CAPUT III.

ARIIS E CAPITIBUS virginitatis laudes petuntur, sed hinc imprimis quod e coelo Verbum elicere in terram ipsa meruerit; unde postea eius studium quod sub antiquo foedere in paucis floruerat, propagatum est in innumeris.

CHAPTER 3.

Virginity is praised on many grounds, but chiefly because it brought down the Word from heaven, and hence its pursuit, which existed in but few under the old covenant, has spread to countless numbers.

10. Invitat nunc integritatis amor, et tu, soror sancta, vel mutis tacita moribus, ut aliquid de virginitate dicamus; ne veluti transitu quodam perstricta videatur, quae principalis est virtus. Non enim ideo laudabilis virginitas, quia et in martyribus reperitur, sed quia ipsa martyres faciat.

10. And now the love of purity draws me on, and you, my holy sister, even though not speaking in your silent habit, to say something about virginity, lest that which is a principal virtue should seem to be passed by with only a slight reference. For virginity is not praiseworthy because it is found in martyrs, but because itself makes martyrs.

11. Quis autem humano eam possit ingenio comprehendere, quam nec natura suis inclusit legibus? Aut quis naturali voce complecti, quod supra usum naturae sit? E coelo accersivit quod imitaretur in terris. Nec immerito vivendi sibi usum quaesivit e coelo, quae sponsum sibi invenit in coelo. Haec nubes, aera, angelos, sideraque transgrediens, Verbum Dei in ipso sinu Patris invenit, et toto hausit pectore. Nam quis tantum cum invenerit, relinquat boni? Unguentum enim exinanitum est nomen tuum: propterea adolescentulae dilexerunt te, et attraxerunt te (Cant. I, 1) . Postremo non meum est illud, quoniam quae non nubent, neque nubentur, erunt sicut angeli in coelo (Matth. XXII, 30) . Nemo ergo miretur si angelis comparentur, quae angelorum Domino copulantur. Quis igitur neget hanc vitam fluxisse de coelo, quam non facile invenimus in terris, nisi postquam Deus in haec terreni corporis membra descendit (IV Reg. II, 11) ? Tunc in utero virgo concepit, et Verbum caro factum est, ut caro fieret Deus (Matth. XVII, 3) .

11. But who can comprehend that by human understanding which not even nature has included in her laws? Or who can explain in ordinary language that which is above the course of nature? Virginity has brought from heaven that which it may imitate on earth. And not unfittingly has she sought her manner of life from heaven, who has found for herself a Spouse in heaven. She, passing beyond the clouds, air, angels, and stars, has found the Word of God in the very bosom of the Father, and has drawn Him into herself with her whole heart. For who having found so great a Good would forsake it? For Your Name is as ointment poured out, therefore have the maidens loved You, and drawn You. And indeed what I have said is not my own, since they who marry not nor are given in marriage are as the angels in heaven. Let us not, then, be surprised if they are compared to the angels who are joined to the Lord of angels. Who, then, can deny that this mode of life has its source in heaven, which we don’t easily find on earth, except since God came down into the members of an earthly body? Then a Virgin conceived, and the Word became flesh that flesh might become God.

12. Dicet aliquis: Sed etiam Elias nullis corporei coitus fuisse permixtus cupiditatibus invenitur. Ideo ergo curru raptus ad coelum, ideo cum Domino apparet in gloria, ideo Dominici venturus est praecursor adventus (Malac. IV, 3) . Et Maria tympanum sumens pudore virgineo choros duxit (Exod. XV, 20) . Sed considerate cuius illa speciem tunc gerebat. Nonne Ecclesiae, quae religiosos populi coetus qui carmina divina concinerent, immaculato virgo spiritu copulavit? Nam etiam templo Hierosolymis fuisse legimus virgines deputatas. Sed quid Apostolus dicit? Haec autem in figura contingebant illis, ut essent indicia futurorum (I Cor. X, 11) ; figura enim in paucis est, vita in pluribus.

12. But some one will say: But Elijah is seen to have had nothing to do with the embraces of bodily love. And therefore was he carried by a chariot into heaven, therefore he appeared glorified with the Lord, Matthew 17:3 and therefore he is to come as the forerunner of the Lord's advent. Malachi 4:5 And Miriam taking the timbrel led the dances with maidenly modesty. Exodus 15:20 But consider whom she was then representing. Was she not a type of the Church, who as a virgin with unstained spirit joins together the religious gatherings of the people to sing divine songs? For we read that there were virgins appointed also in the temple at Jerusalem. But what says the Apostle? These things happened to them in a figure, that they might be signs of what was to come. 1 Corinthians 10:11 For the figure is shown in few, the life exists in many.

13. At vero posteaquam Dominus in corpus hoc veniens, contubernium divinitatis et corporis sine ulla concretae confusionis labe sociavit, tunc toto orbe diffusus corporibus humanis vitae coelestis usus inolevit. Hoc illud est quod ministrantes in terris angeli (Matth. IV, 11) declararunt futurum genus, quod ministerium Domino immaculati corporis obsequiis exhiberet. Haec est coelestis illa militia, quam laudantium exercitus angelorum promittebat in terris. Habemus ergo auctoritatem vetustatis a saeculo, plenitudinem professionis a Christo.

13. But in truth after that the Lord, coming in our flesh, joined together the Godhead and flesh without any confusion or mixture, then the practice of the life of heaven spreading throughout the whole world was implanted in human bodies. This is that which angels ministering on earth signified should come to pass, Matthew 4:11 which ministry should be offered to the Lord with the service of an unstained body. This is that heavenly service which the host of rejoicing angels spoke of for the earth. Luke 2:13-14 We have, then, the authority of antiquity from of old, the fullness of the setting forth from Christ Himself.

CAPUT IV.

NEGATUR VIRGINITATIS DECUS in ethnicis ullis umquam exstitisse, puta in Vestalibus sacris deae Phrygiae ac Liberi patris, atque etiam in philosophis: ubi et de Pythagorea virgine, in qua tametsi laudatur animi magnitudo, continentia tamen desideratur; cum utraque in nostris virginibus emineat.

CHAPTER 4.

The comeliness of virginity never existed amongst the heathen, neither with the vestal virgins, nor amongst philosophers, such as Pythagoras.

14. Certe non est hoc mihi commune cum gentibus, non populare cum barbaris, non cum caeteris animantibus usitatum: cum quibus etsi unum eumdemque vitalem aeris huius carpimus spiritum, vulgarem terreni corporis participamus statum, generandi quoque non discrepamus usu; hoc solo tamen naturae parilis convicia declinamus, quod virginitas affectatur a gentibus, sed consecrata violatur: incursatur a barbaris, nescitur a reliquis.

14. I certainly have not this in common with the heathen, nor in regard to it am I associated with barbarians, nor practise it with other animals, with whom, although we breathe one and the same vital air, and have a common condition of an earthly body, and from whom we differ not in the mode of generation, in this point alone we nevertheless avoid the reproach of likeness, that virginity is aimed at by the heathen, but when consecrated it is violated, it is attacked by barbarians, and is unknown to others.

15. Quis mihi praetendit Vestae virgines et Palladis sacerdotes? Qualis ista est non morum pudicitia, sed annorum: quae non perpetuitate, sed aetate praescribitur! Petulantior est talis integritas, cuius corruptela seniori servatur aetati. Ipsi docent virgines suas non debere perseverare, nec posse, qui virginitati finem dederunt. Qualis autem est illa religio, ubi pudicae adolescentes iubentur esse, impudicae anus? Sed nec illa pudica est, quae lege retinetur: et illa impudica, quae lege dimittitur. O mysteria! o mores! ubi necessitas imponitur castitati, auctoritas libidini datur. Itaque nec casta est, quae metu cogitur: nec honesta, quae mercede conducitur: nec pudor ille, qui intemperantium oculorum quotidiano expositus convicio, flagitiosis aspectibus verberatur. Conferuntur immunitates, offeruntur pretia; quasi non hoc maximum petulantiae sit indicium, castitatem vendere. Quod pretio promittitur, pretio solvitur: pretio addicitur, pretio annumeratur. Nescit redimere castitatem, quae vendere solet.

15. Who will allege to me the virgins of Vesta, and the priests of Pallas? What sort of chastity is that which is not of morals, but of years, which is appointed not for ever, but for a term! Such purity is all the more wanton of which the corruption is put off for a later age. They teach their virgins ought not to persevere, and are unable to do so, who have set a term to virginity. What sort of a religion is that in which modest maidens are bidden to be immodest old women? Nor is she modest who is bound by law, and she immodest who is set free by law. O the mystery! O the morals! Where chastity is enforced by law and authority given for lust! And so she is not chaste, who is constrained by fear; nor honourable, who is hired for a price; nor is that modesty which, exposed to the daily importunity of lascivious eyes, is attacked by disgraceful looks. Exemptions are bestowed upon them, prices are offered them, as though to sell one’s chastity were not the greatest sign of wantonness. That which is promised for a price is given up for a price; is made over for a price; is considered to have its price. She who is wont to sell her chastity knows not how to redeem it.

16. Quid de sacris Phrygiis loquar, in quibus impudicitia disciplina est, atque utinam sexus fragilioris! Quid de orgiis Liberi, ubi religionis mysterium est incentivum libidinis? Qualis igitur potest ibi vita esse sacerdotum, ubi colitur stuprum deorum? Non habent igitur sacram virginem.

16. What shall I say of the Phrygian rites, in which immodesty is the rule, and that too of the weaker sex? What of the orgies of Bacchus, where the mystery of the rites is an incentive to lust? Of what sort can the lives of priests be, then, where the adulteries of the gods are matters of religion. So then they have no sacred virgins.

17. Videamus ne forte aliquam vel philosophiae praecepta formaverint, quae magisterium sibi omnium solet vindicare virtutum. Pythagorea quaedam una ex virginibus celebratur fabula, cum a tyranno cogeretur secretum prodere, ne quid in se ad extorquendam confessionem vel tormentis liceret, morsu linguam abscidisse, atque in tyranni faciem despuisse; ut qui interrogandi finem non faciebat, non haberet quam interrogaret.

17. Let us see whether perchance the precepts of philosophers have formed any, for they are wont to claim the teaching of all virtues. A certain Pythagorean virgin is spoken of in story, whom a tyrant was endeavouring to compel to reveal the secret, and lest it should be possible even in her torments for revelation to be extorted from her, she bit off her tongue and spat it in the tyrant’s face, that he who would not make an end of questioning might not have anything to question.

18. Eadem tamen forti animo, sed tumenti utero, exemplum taciturnitatis et proluvium castitatis, victa est cupiditatibus, quae tormentis vinci nequivit. Igitur quae mentis potuit tegere secretum, corporis non texit opprobrium.

Vicit naturam, sed non tenuit disciplinam. Quam vellet in voce munimentum sui pudoris existere! Eoque fortasse erudierat illam patientia, ut culpam negaret. Non igitur invicta undique; nam et tyrannus, licet non potuerit invenire quod interrogabat, tamen quod non interrogabat, invenit.

18. But that same virgin, so constant in mind, was overcome by lust, though she could not be overcome by torments. And so she who could keep the secret of her mind could not conceal the shame of her body. She overcame nature, but observed not discipline. How she would desire that her speech had existed as a defense of her chastity! So she was not unconquered on every side, for although the tyrant could not find out that which he sought, yet he did find what he sought not.

19. Quanto nostrae virgines fortiores, quae vincunt etiam quas non vident potestates: quibus non tantum de carne et sanguine, sed etiam de ipso mundi principe saeculique rectore victoria est! Aetate utique Agnes minor, sed virtute maior, triumpho numerosior, constantia confidentior, non sibi linguam propter metum abstulit, sed propter tropaeum reservavit. Nihil enim habuit quod prodi timeret, cuius non erat criminosa sed religiosa confessio. Itaque illa secretum tantummodo celavit; haec probavit Dominum, quem quia aetas nondum poterat confiteri, natura confessa est.

19. How much stronger are our virgins, who overcome even those powers which they do not see; whose victory is not only over flesh and blood, but also over the prince of this world, and ruler of this age! In age, Agnes indeed was less, but in virtue greater, triumphing over more, more constant in her confidence; she did not destroy her tongue through fear, but kept it for a trophy. For there was nothing in her which she feared to betray, since that which she acknowledged was holy, not sinful. And so the former merely concealed her secret, the latter bore witness to the Lord, and confessed Him in her body, Whom her age did not yet suffer to confess.

CAPUT V.

VIRGINITATIS PATRIAM COELUM esse, auctorem vero Dei Filium: qui cum virgo esset ante virginem, ex virgine tamen editus virginem Ecclesiam duxit uxorem. Ab ipsa susceptos nos omnes esse, cuius dotes nonnullae commemorantur. Eiusdem filias hinc praecellere quod virginitas non subiiciatur praecepto, quodque ad pietatis cultum facultatem suppeditet quam expeditissimam.

CHAPTER 5.

Heaven is the home of virginity, and the Son of God its Author, Who though He was a Virgin before the Virgin, yet being of the Virgin took the Virgin Church as His bride. Of her we have all been born. Some of her gifts are enumerated. Her daughters have a special excellence in that virginity is not a matter of precept, and that it is a most powerful help in the pursuit of piety.

20. In laudationibus solet patria praedicari et parentes; ut commemoratione auctoris dignitas successionis exaggeretur: ego licet laudationem non susceperim virginitatis, sed expressionem; ad rem tamen pertinere arbitror, ut quae sit ei patria, quis auctor, appareat. Ac prius ubi sit patria definiamus. Si enim ibi est patria, ubi genitale domicilium: in coelo profecto est patria castitatis. Itaque hic advena, ibi incola est.

20. It is the custom in encomiums to speak of country and parentage of the subject, that the greatness of the offspring may be enhanced by mention of the father. Now I, who have not undertaken to praise but to set forth virginity, yet think it to the purpose to make known its country and its parent. First, let us settle where is its country. Now, if one’s country be there where is the home of one’s birth, without doubt heaven is the native country of chastity. And so she is a stranger here, but a denizen there.

21. Quid autem est castitas virginalis, nisi expers contagionis integritas? Atque eius auctorem quem possumus aestimare, nisi immaculatum Dei Filium, cuius caro non vidit corruptionem, divinitas non est experta contagionem? Videte igitur quanta virginitatis merita sint. Christus ante virginem, Christus ex virgine; a Patre quidem natus ante saecula, sed ex virgine natus ob saecula. Illud naturae suae, hoc nostrae utilitatis est. Illud erat semper, hoc voluit.

21. And what is virginal chastity but purity free from stain? And whom can we judge to be its author but the immaculate Son of God, Whose flesh saw no corruption, Whose Godhead experienced no infection? Consider, then, how great are the merits of virginity. Christ was before the Virgin, Christ was of the Virgin. Begotten indeed of the Father before the ages, but born of the Virgin for the ages. The former was of His own nature, the latter is for our benefit. The former always was, the latter He willed.

22. Spectate et aliud virginitatis meritum: Christus virginis sponsus, et si dici potest, Christus virgineae castitatis; virginitas enim Christi, non virginitatis est Christus. Virgo est ergo quae nupsit, virgo quae nos suo utero portavit, virgo quae genuit, virgo quae proprio lacte nutrivit, de qua legimus: Quanta fecit virgo Hierusalem! Non deficient de petra ubera, neque nix a Libano, aut declinabit aqua valido vento quae portatur (Ierem. XVIII, 13 et seq.) . Qualis est haec virgo quae Trinitatis fontibus irrigatur: cui de petra fluunt aquae, non deficiunt ubera, mella funduntur? Petra autem est iuxta Apostolum Christus. Ergo a Christo non deficiunt ubera, claritas a Deo, flumen ab Spiritu. Haec est Trinitas quae Ecclesiam suam irrigat, Pater, Christus, et Spiritus.

22. Consider, too, another merit of virginity. Christ is the spouse of the Virgin, and if one may so say of virginal chastity, for virginity is of Christ, not Christ of virginity. He is, then, the Virgin Who was espoused, the Virgin

Who bare us, Who fed us with her own milk, of whom we read: How great things has the virgin of Jerusalem done! The teats shall not fail from the rock, nor snow from Lebanon, nor the water which is borne by the strong wind. Who is this virgin that is watered with the streams of the Trinity, from whose rock waters flow, whose teats fail not, and whose honey is poured forth? Now, according to the Apostle, the rock is Christ. 1 Corinthians 10:4 Therefore, from Christ the teats fail not, nor brightness from God, nor the river from the Spirit. This is the Trinity which waters their Church, the Father, Christ, and the Spirit.

23. Sed et iam a matre descendamus ad filias. De virginibus, inquit sanctus Apostolus, praeceptum Domini non habeo (I Cor. X, 4) . Si Doctor gentium non habuit, habere quis potuit? Et praeceptum quidem non habuit, sed habuit exemplum. Non enim imperari potest virginitas, sed optari; nam quae supra nos sunt, in voto magis quam in magisterio sunt. Sed volo vos, inquit, sine sollicitudine esse. Nam qui sine uxore est, sollicitus est quae Domini sunt, quomodo placeat Deo . . . et virgo cogitat quae Domini sunt, ut sit sancta corpore et spiritu. Nam quae nupta est, cogitat quae mundi sunt, quomodo placeat viro suo (I Cor. VII, 32-34).

23. But let us now come down from the mother to the daughters. Concerning virgins, says the Apostle, I have no commandment of the Lord. 1 Corinthians 7:25 If the teacher of the Gentiles had none, who could have one? And in truth he had no commandment, but he had an example. For virginity cannot be commanded, but must be wished for, for things which are above us are matters for prayer rather than under mastery. But I would have you, he says, be without carefulness. For he who is without a wife is careful for the things which are the Lord’s, how he may please God....And the virgin takes thought for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy in body and in spirit. For she that is married takes thought for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

CAPUT VI.

SANCTUS VIR A se minime damnari matrimonium contestatus, tamen ut bona mulierum ac virginum inter se componat, primo quae mala fecunditatem comitentur, puta dolores pariendi, molestias educandi, addictam viro servitutem, nimiam formae atque ornamentorum curam, proponit: tum illis opponit maiorem virginum formae gratiam felicioremque fecunditatem; quibus eas Ecclesiae perquam similes fieri asseverat.

CHAPTER 6.

St. Ambrose explains that he is not speaking against marriage, and proceeds to compare the advantages and disadvantages of the single and married state.

24. Non ego quidem dissuadeo matrimonium, sed virginitatis attexo beneficium. Qui infirmus est, inquit, olera manducet (Rom. XIV, 2) . Aliud exigo, aliud admiror. Alligatus es uxori? Noli quaerere solutionem. Solutus es ab uxore? Ne quaesieris uxorem (I Cor. VII, 27) . Hoc praeceptum est copulatis. De virginibus autem quid ait? Et qui matrimonio iungit virginem suam, bene facit: et qui non iungit, melius facit (Ibid., 38) . Illa non peccat, si nubat: haec si non nubat, aeterna est. Ibi remedium infirmitatis, hic gloria castitatis. Illa non reprehenditur, ista laudatur.

24. I am not indeed discouraging marriage, but am enlarging upon the benefits of virginity. He who is weak, says the Apostle, eats herbs. Romans 14:2 I consider one thing necessary, I admire another. Are you bound to a wife? Seek not to be loosed. Are you free from a wife? Seek not a wife. 1 Corinthians 7:27 This is the command to those who are. But what does he say concerning virgins? He who gives his virgin in marriage does well, and he who gives her not does better. 1 Corinthians 7:38 The one sins not if she marries, the other, if she marries not, it is for eternity. In the former is the remedy for weakness, in the latter the glory of chastity. The former is not reproved, the latter is praised.

25. Conferamus, si placet, bona mulierum cum ultimis virginum. Iactet licet fecundo se mulier nobilis partu: quo plures generaverit, plus laborat. Numeret solatia filiorum, sed numeret pariter et molestias. Nabit et plorat. Qualia sunt vota, quae flentur! Concipit et gravescit. Prius utique impedimentum fecunditas incipit afferre, quam fructum. Parturit, et aegrotat. Quam dulce pignus quod a periculo incipit, et in periculis desinit, prius dolori futurum, quam voluptati! Periculis emitur, nec pro arbitrio possidetur.

25. Let us compare, if it pleases you, the advantages of married women with that which awaits virgins. Though the noble woman boasts of her abundant offspring, yet the more she bears the more she endures. Let her count up the comforts of her children, but let her likewise count up the troubles. She marries and weeps. How many vows does she make with tears. She conceives, and her fruitfulness brings her trouble before offspring. She brings forth and is ill. How sweet a pledge which begins with danger and ends in danger, which will cause pain before pleasure! It is purchased by perils, and is not possessed at her own will.

26. Quid recenseam nutriendi molestias, instituendi et copulandi? Felicium sunt istae miseriae. Habet mater haeredes, sed auget dolores. Nam de adversis non oportet dicere, ne sanctissimorum parentum animi contremiscant. Vide, mi soror, quam grave sit pati, quod non oportet audiri. Et haec in praesenti saeculo. Venient autem dies, quando dicant: Beatae steriles, et ventres qui non genuerunt (Luc. XXIII, 29) . Filiae enim huius saeculi generantur, et generant: filia autem regni abstinet a voluptate viri, et a voluptate carnis; ut sit sancta corpore et spiritu.

26. Why speak of the troubles of nursing, training, and marrying? These are the miseries of those who are fortunate. A mother has heirs, but it increases her sorrows. For we must not speak of adversity, lest the minds of the holiest parents tremble. Consider, my sister, how hard it must be to bear what one must not speak of. And this is in this present age. But the days shall come when they shall say: Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare. Luke 23:29 For the daughters of this age are conceived, and conceive; but the daughter of the kingdom refrains from wedded pleasure, and the pleasure of the flesh, that she may be holy in body and in spirit.

27. Quid ergo famulatus graves et addicta viris servitia replicem feminarum, quas ante iussit Deus servire quam servos (Gen. III, 16) ? Quae eo prosequor, ut indulgentius obsequantur; quibus hoc si probae, merces est charitatis: si improbae, poena delicti.

27. Why should I further speak of the painful ministrations and services due to their husbands from wives, to whom before slaves God gave the command to serve? Genesis 3:16 And I mention these things that they may comply more willingly, whose reward, if approved, is love; if not approved, punishment for the fault.

28. Hinc (Cf. S. Aug. lib. IV, de Doctr. Christ. ca) illa nascuntur incentiva vitiorum, ut quaesitis coloribus ora depingant, dum viris displicere formidant, et de adulterio vultus meditantur adulterium castitatis. Quanta hic amentia, effigiem mutare naturae, picturam quaerere; et dum verentur maritale iudicium, prodere suum! Prior enim de se pronuntiat, quae cupit mutare quod nata est. Ita dum aliis studet placere, prius sibi ipsa displicet. Quem iudicem, mulier, veriorem requirimus deformitatis tuae, quam te ipsam, quae videri times! Si pulchra es, quid absconderis? Si deformis, cur te formosam esse mentiris, nec tuae conscientiae, nec alieni gratiam erroris habitura? Ille enim alteram diligit, tu alteri vis placere. Et irasceris si amet aliam, qui adulterare in te docetur? Mala magistra es iniuriae tuae. Lenocinari enim refugit, etiam quae passa lenonem est; ac licet vilis mulier, non alteri tamen, sed sibi peccat: tolerabilioraque propemodum in altero crimina sunt; ibi enim pudicitia, hic natura adulteratur.

28. And in this position spring up those incentives to vice, in that they paint their faces with various colors, fearing not to please their husbands; and from staining their faces, come to think of staining their chastity. What madness is here, to change the fashion of nature and seek a painting, and while fearing a husband's judgment to give up their own. For she is the first to speak against herself who wishes to change that which is natural to her. So, while studying to please others, she displeases herself. What truer witness to your unsightliness do we require, O woman, than yourself who art afraid to be seen? If you are beautiful, why are you hiding yourself? If unsightly, why do you falsely pretend to beauty, so as to have neither the satisfaction of your own conscience, nor of the error of another? For he loves another, you desire to please another. And are you angry if he love another, who is taught to do so in your own person? You are an evil teacher of your own injury.

29. Iam quanto pretio opus est, ne etiam pulchra displiceat! Hinc pretiosa collo dependent monilia, inde per humum vestis trahitur aurata. Emitur igitur haec species, an habetur? Quid, quod etiam ad odorem variae adhibentur illecebrae! Gemmis onerantur aures, oculis color alter infunditur. Quid ibi remanet suum, ubi tam multa mutantur? Sensus suos amittit mulier, et vivere posse se credit?

29. And next, what expense is necessary that even a beautiful wife may not fail to please? Costly necklaces on the one hand hang on her neck, on the other a robe woven with gold is dragged along the ground. Is this display purchased, or is it a real possession? And what varied enticements of perfumes are made use of! The ears are weighed down with gems, a different color from nature is dropped into the eyes. What is there left which is her own, when so much is changed? The married woman loves her own perceptions, and does she think that this is to live?

30. Vos vero, beatae virgines, quae talia tormenta potius quam ornamenta nescitis: quibus pudor sanctus verecunda suffusus ora, et bona castitas est decori: non humanis addictae oculis, alieno errore merita vestra pensatis. Habetis sane et vos vestrae militiam pulchritudinis, cui virtutis militat forma, non corporis: quam nulla exstinguit aetas, nulla eripere mors potest, nulla aegritudo corrumpere. Solus formae arbiter petatur Deus, qui etiam in corpore minus pulchro diligat animas pulchriores. Non uteri onus notum, non dolor partus; et tamen numerosior soboles piae mentis, quae omnes pro liberis habet: fecunda successoribus, sterilis orbitatibus, nescit funera, novit haeredes.

30. But you, O happy virgins, who know not such torments, rather than ornaments, whose holy modesty, beaming in your bashful cheeks, and sweet chastity are a beauty, you do not, intent upon the eyes of men, consider as merits what is gained by the errors of others. You, too, have indeed your own beauty, furnished by the comeliness of virtue, not of the body, to which age puts not an end, which death cannot take away, nor any sickness injure. Let God alone be sought as the judge of loveliness, Who loves even in less beautiful bodies the more beautiful souls. You know nothing of the burden and pain of childbearing, but more are the offspring of a pious soul, which esteems all as its children, which is rich in successors, barren of all bereavements, which knows no deaths, but has many heirs.

31. Sic sancta Ecclesia immaculata coitu, fecunda partu, virgo est castitate, mater est prole. Parturit itaque nos virgo non viro plena, sed spiritu. Parit nos virgo non cum dolore membrorum, sed cum gaudiis angelorum. Nutrit nos virgo non corporis lacte, sed Apostoli (I Cor. III, 2) , quo infirmam adhuc crescentis populi lactavit aetatem. Quae igitur nupta plures liberos habet quam sancta Ecclesia, quae virgo est sacramentis, mater est populis, cuius fecunditatem etiam Scriptura testatur dicens: Quoniam plures filii desertae magis quam eius quae habet virum (Esai. LIV, 1) ? Nostra virum non habet, sed habet sponsum; eo quod sive Ecclesia in populis, sive anima in singulis, Dei verbo, sine ullo flexu pudoris, quasi sponso innubit aeterno, effeta iniuriae, feta rationis.

31. So the holy Church, ignorant of wedlock, but fertile in bearing, is in chastity a virgin, yet a mother in offspring. She, a virgin, bears us her children, not by a human father, but by the Spirit. She bears us not with pain, but with the rejoicings of the angels. She, a virgin, feeds us, not with the milk of the body, but with that of the Apostle, wherewith he fed the tender age of the people who were still children. 1 Corinthians 3:2 For what bride has more children than holy Church, who is a virgin in her sacraments and a mother to her people, whose fertility even holy Scripture attests, saying, For many more are the children of the desolate than of her that has an husband? She has not an husband, but she has a Bridegroom, inasmuch as she, whether as the Church among nations, or as the soul in individuals, without any loss of modesty, she weds the Word of God as her eternal Spouse, free from all injury, full of reason.

CAPUT VII.

PARENTES UT AD virginitatem filias instituant, hortatur, eisque quot molestiae nascantur ex voluptate quam illi quaerunt in nepotibus, ponit ob oculos. Negat tamen a se prohiberi nuptias; quin immo illas contra haereticos earumdem adversarios tuetur: caeterum ipsis virginitatem anteponens, quanta sit virginum sponsi pulchritudo, quibusve ab eo muneribus illae donentur, explicat: tum expositis in eam rem Canticorum locis aliquot, inde morum ac virtutum praecepta exprimit virginum conditioni accommodata.

CHAPTER 7.

St. Ambrose exhorts parents to train their children to virginity, and sets before them the troubles arising from their desire to have grandchildren. He says however that he does not forbid marriage, but rather defends it against heretics who oppose it. Still setting virginity before marriage, he speaks of the beauty of their spouse, and of the gifts wherewith He adorns them, and applies to these points certain verses of the Song of Songs.

32. Audistis, parentes, quibus erudire virtutibus, quibus instituere disciplinis filias debeatis; ut habere possitis quarum meritis vestra delicta redimantur. Virgo Dei donum est, munus parentis, sacerdotium castitatis. Virgo matris hostia est, cuius quotidiano sacrificio vis divina placatur. Virgo individuum pignus parentum, quae non dote sollicitet, non emigratione destituat, non offendat iniuriis.

32. You have heard, O parents, in what virtues and pursuits you ought to train your daughters, that you may possess those by whose merits your faults may be redeemed. The virgin is an offering for her mother, by whose daily sacrifice the divine power is appeased. A virgin is the inseparable pledge of her parents, who neither troubles them for a dowry, nor forsakes them, nor injures them in word or deed.

33. Sed nepotes aliquis habere desiderat, et avi nomen acquirere. Primum suos tradit, dum quaerit alienos: deinde certis defraudari incipit, dum sperat incertos: confert opes proprias, et adhuc poscitur; nisi dotem solvat, exigitur: si diu vivat, onerosus est. Emere istud est generum, non acquirere, qui parentibus filiae vendat aspectus. Ideone tot mensibus gestatur utero, ut in alienum transeat potestatem? Ideo commendandae virginis cura suscipitur, ut citius parentibus auferatur?

33. But some one perhaps wishes to have grandchildren, and to be called grandfather. In the first place, such a one gives up what is his own, while seeking what is another's, and is already losing what is certain, while hoping to gain what is uncertain; he gives away his own riches, and still more is asked for; if he does not pay the dowry, it is exacted; if he lives long, he becomes a burden. This is to buy a son-in-law, not to gain one who would sell a sight of their daughter to her parents. Was she borne so long in her mother's womb in order that she might pass under the power of another? And so the parents take the charge of setting off their virgin that she may so be the sooner removed from them.

34. Dicet aliquis: Ergo dissuades nuptias? Ego vero suadeo, et eos damno qui dissuadere consuerunt; ut pote qui Sarae ac Rebeccae et Rachel, caeterarumque veterum coniugia feminarum pro documentis singularium virtutum recensere soleam. Qui enim copulam damnat, damnat et filios: et ductam per successionum seriem generis societatem damnat humani. Nam quemadmodum duratura in saeculum aetas succedere posset aetati, nisi gratia nuptiarum procreandae studium sobolis incitaret? Aut quomodo praedicari potest quod immaculatus Isaac ad altaria Dei victima paternae pietatis accessit (Gen. XXI, 2) , quod Israel humano situs in corpore Deum vidit (Gen. XXXII, 27) , et religiosum populo dedit nomen, quorum originem damnat? Unum sane habent homines licet sacrilegi, quod in his etiam a sapientissimis probetur; quia coniugia damnando, profitentur se non debuisse nasci.

34. Some one may say, Do you, then, discourage marriage? Nay, I encourage it, and condemn those who are wont to discourage it, so much so, that indeed I am wont to speak of the marriages of Sarah, Rebecca, and Rachel, and other women of old time, as instances of singular virtues. For he who condemns marriage, condemns the birth of children, and condemns the fellowship of the human race, continued by a series of successive generations. For how could generation succeed generation in a continual order, unless the gift of marriage stirred up the desire of offspring? Or how could one set forth that Isaac went to the altar of God as a victim of his father’s piety, or that Israel, when yet in the body, saw God, Genesis 32:28 and gave a holy name to the people while speaking against that whereby they came into being? Those men, though wicked, have one point at any rate, wherein they are approved even by the wise persons, that in speaking against marriage they declare that they ought not to have been born.

35. Non itaque dissuadeo nuptias, sed fructus sacratae virginitatis enumero. Paucarum quippe hoc munus est, illud omnium. Nec potest esse virginitas, nisi habeat unde nascatur. Bona cum bonis comparo, quo facilius quid praestet, eluceat. Neque meam ullam sententiam affero, sed eam repeto, quam edidit Spiritus sanctus per prophetam: Melior est, inquit, sterilitas cum virtute (Sap. IV, I) .

35. I do not then discourage marriage, but recapitulate the advantages of holy virginity. This is the gift of few only, that is of all. And virginity itself cannot exist, unless it have some mode of coming into existence. I am comparing good things with good things, that it may be clear which is the more excellent. Nor do I allege any opinion of my own, but I repeat that which the Holy Spirit spoke by the prophet: Blessed is the barren that is undefiled. Wisdom 3:13

36. Primum enim quod nupturae prae caeteris concupiscunt, ut sponsi decore se iactent, eo necesse est impares sacris se fateantur esse virginibus, quibus solis contingit dicere: Speciosus forma prae filiis hominum, diffusa est gratia in labiis tuis (Psal. XLIV, 3) . Quis est iste sponsus? Non vilibus addictus obsequiis, non caducis superbus divitiis: sed cuius sedes in saeculum saeculi. Filiae regum in honore eius. Astitit regina a dextris tuis in vestitu deaurato, varietate circumamicta virtutum. Audi igitur, filia, et vide, et inclina aurem tuam, et obliviscere populum tuum et domum patris tui; quoniam concupivit Rex speciem tuam, quia ipse est Deus tuus (Ibid., 30 et seq.) .

36. First of all, in that which those who purpose to marry desire above all things, that they may boast of the beauty of their husband, they must of necessity confess that they are inferior to virgins, to Whom alone it is suitable to say: You are fairer than the children of men, grace is poured on Your lips. Who is that Spouse? One not given to common indulgences, not proud of possessing riches, but He Whose throne is for ever and ever. The king’s daughters share in His honour: At Your right hand stood the queen in a vesture of gold, clothed with variety of virtues. Hearken, then, O daughter, and consider, and incline your ear, and forget your own people and your father’s house; for the king has desired your beauty, for He is your God.

37. Et adverte quantum tibi Spiritus sanctus Scripturae divinae testificatione detulerit, regnum, aurum, pulchritudinem: regnum, vel quia sponsa es regis aeterni, vel quia invictum animum gerens, ab illecebris voluptatum non captiva haberis, sed quasi regina dominaris: aurum, quia sicut illa materies examinata igne pretiosior est, ita corporis species virginalis Spiritui consecrata divino, formae suae acquirit augmentum: pulchritudinem vero quis potest maiorem existimare decore eius, quae amatur a Rege, probatur a Iudice, dicatur Domino, consecratur Deo: semper sponsa, semper innupta; ut nec amor finem habeat, nec damnum pudor.

37. And observe what a kingdom the Holy Spirit by the witness of the divine Scriptures has assigned to you — gold, and beauty; gold, either because you are the bride of the Eternal King, or because having an unconquered mind, you are not taken captive by the allurements of pleasures, but rulest over them like a queen. Gold again, because as that metal is more precious when tried by fire, so the appearance of the virginal body, consecrated to the Divine Spirit, gains an increase of its own comeliness, for who can imagine a loveliness greater than the beauty of her who is loved by the King, approved by the judge, dedicated to the Lord, consecrated to God; ever a bride, ever unmarried, so that neither does love suffer an ending, nor modesty loss.

38. Haec profecto vera pulchritudo est, cui nihil deest, quae sola meretur audire a Domino: Tota es formosa, proxima mea, et reprehensio non est in te. Sponsa, veni huc a Libano, veni huc a Libano, transibis et pertransibis a principio fidei, a capite Sanir et Hermon, a latibulis leonum, a montibus pardorum (Cant. IV, 7, 8) . Quibus indiciis ostenditur perfecta, et irreprehensibilis virginalis animae pulchritudo, altaribus consecrata divinis, inter occursus et latibula spiritalium bestiarum non inflexa mortalibus, sed intenta mysteriis Dei meruisse dilectum, cuius ubera plena laetitiae: Vinum enim laetificat cor hominis (Psal. CIII, 15).

38. This is indeed true beauty, to which nothing is wanting, which alone is worthy to hear the Lord saying: You are all fair, My love, and no blemish is in you. Come hither from Lebanon, My spouse, come hither from Lebanon. You shall pass and pass through from the beginning of faith, from the top of Sanir and Hermon, from the dens of the lions, from the mountains of the leopards. Song of Songs 4:7-8 By which references is set forth the perfect and irreproachable beauty of a virgin soul, consecrated to the altars of God, not moved by perishable things amidst the haunts and dens of spiritual wild beasts, but intent, by the mysteries of God, on being found worthy of the Beloved, Whose breasts are full of joy. For wine makes glad the heart of man.

39. Odor, inquit, vestimentorum tuorum super omnia aromata (Cant. IV, 10) . Et infra: Et odor vestimentorum tuorum sicut odor Libani (Ibid., 11) . Vide quem nobis tribuas, virgo, processum. Primus enim odor tuus super omnia aromata, quae in Salvatoris missa sunt sepulturam (Ioan. XIX, 39) ; et emortuos corporis motus, membrorumque redolet obiisse delicias. Secundus odor tuus sicut odor Libani, Dominici corporis integritatem, virgineae florem castitatis exhalat.

39. The smell of your garments, says He, is above all spices. Song of Songs 4:10 And again: And the smell of your garments is like the smell of Lebanon. Song of Songs 4:11 See what progress you set forth, O Virgin. Your first odour is above all spices, which were used upon the burying of the Saviour, John 19:39 and the fragrance arises from the mortified motions of the body, and the perishing of the delights of the members. Your second odour, like the odour of Lebanon, exhales the incorruption of the Lord’s body, the flower of virginal chastity.

CAPUT VIII.

LOCUM SEQUENTEM CANTICORUM, Favus distillans, etc. , sic edisserit, ut inde ansam arripiat cum apibus sacras virgines comparandi.

CHAPTER 8.

Taking the passage concerning the honeycomb in the Song of Songs, he expounds it, comparing the sacred virgins to bees.

40. Favum itaque mellis tua opera componant (Cant. IV, 11); digna enim virginitas quae apibus comparetur: sic laboriosa, sic pudica, sic continens. Rore pascitur apis, nescit concubitus, mella componit. Ros quoque virginis est sermo divinus; quia sicut ros, Dei verba descendunt. Pudor virginis est intemerata natura. Partus virginis fetus est labiorum, expers amaritudinis, fertilis suavitatis. In commune labor, communis est fructus.

40. Let, then, your work be as it were a honeycomb, for virginity is fit to be compared to bees, so laborious is it, so modest, so continent. The bee feeds on dew, it knows no marriage couch, it makes honey. The virgin’s dew is the divine word, for the words of God descend like the dew. The virgin’s modesty is unstained nature. The virgin’s produce is the fruit of the lips, without bitterness, abounding in sweetness. They work in common, and their fruit is in common.

41. Quam te velim, filia, imitatricem esse huius apiculae cui cibus flos est, ore soboles legitur, ore componitur! Hanc imitare tu, filia. Verba tua nullum doli velamen obtendant, nullum habeant fraudis involucrum; ut et puritatem habeant, et gravitatis plena sint.

41. How I wish you, my daughter, to be an imitator of these bees, whose food is flowers, whose offspring is collected and brought together by the mouth. Do imitate her, my daughter. Let no veil of deceit be spread over your words; let them have no covering of guile, that they may be pure, and full of gravity.

42. Meritorum quoque tuorum tibi aeterna posteritas tuo ore pariatur. Nec soli tibi, sed etiam pluribus congreges, (qui scis enim quando a te anima tua reposcatur?) ne receptacula horreorum frumentis coacervata dimittens, nec vitae tuae usui profutura, nec meritis, rapiaris eo quo thesaurum tuum ferre non possis. Dives igitur esto, sed pauperibus; ut naturae participes tuae, participes sint etiam facultatum.

42. And let an eternal succession of merits be brought forth by your mouth. Gather not for yourself alone (for how do you know when your soul shall be required of you?), lest leaving your granaries heaped full with grain, which will be a help neither to your life nor to your merits, you be hurried there where you cannot take your treasure with you. Be rich then, but towards the poor, that as they share in your nature they may also share your goods.

43. Florem quoque tibi demonstro carpendum, illum utique qui dixit: Ego flos campi, et lilium convallium. Tamquam lilium in medio spinarum (Cant. II, 1, 2); quod est evidentis indicii, spiritalium nequitiarium sentibus virtutes obsideri; unde nemo fructum referat, nisi qui cautus accedat.

43. And I also point out to you what flower is to be culled, that one it is Who said: I am the Flower of the field, and the Lily of the valleys, as a lily among thorns, which is a plain declaration that virtues are surrounded by the thorns of spiritual wickedness, so that no one can gather the fruit who does not approach with caution.

CAPUT IX.

PERGIT ALIOS E Canticis canticorum locos aptare subiecto argumento, et primum virginem ad Christum inquirendum exhortatus, ubinam ille inveniatur, exponit: tum descripta eiusdem secundum utramque naturam praestantia, quibus ab eo perfectionibus Sponsa exornetur, quibusve muniatur praesidiis, aperit: postremo eamdem cum angelis ob castitatem confert, nec non illi eorum parti quos e coelo intemperantia deturbavit, praefert.

CHAPTER 9.

Other passages from the Song of Songs are considered with relation to the present subject, and St. Ambrose exhorting the virgin to seek for Christ, points out where He may be found. A description of His perfections follows, and a comparison is made between virgins and the angels.

44. Sume igitur alas, virgo, sed spiritus; ut supervoles vitia, si contingere cupis Christum: In altis habitat, et humilia respicit (Psal. CXII, 5) ; et species eius sicut cedrus Libani, qui comam nubibus, radicem terris inserit. Principium enim eius e coelo, posteriora eius in terris, fructus coelo proximos edit. Scrutare diligentius tam bonum florem, necubi eum in pectoris tui convalle reperias; humilibus enim frequenter inhalatur.

44. Take, then, O Virgin, the wings of the Spirit, that you may fly far above all vices, if you wish to attain to Christ: He dwells on high, but beholds lowly things; and His appearance is as that of a cedar of Lebanon, which has its foliage in the clouds, its roots in the earth. For its beginning is from heaven, its ending on earth, and it produces fruit very close to heaven. Search diligently for so precious a flower, if perchance you may find it in the recesses of your breast, for it is most often to be enjoyed in lowly places.

45. Amat generari in hortis, in quibus eum Susanna dum deambularet, invenit: mori prius, quam violari parata (Dan. XIII, 7) . Qui sint autem horti, ipse demonstrat dicens: Hortus conclusus, soror mea Sponsa, hortus conclusus, fons signatus (Cant. IV, 12) ; eo quod in hortis huiusmodi impressa signaculis imagine Dei, sinceri fontis unda resplendeat; ne volutabris spiritalium bestiarum sparsa coeno fluenta turbentur. Hinc ille murali septus spiritu pudor clauditur, ne pateat ad rapinam. Itaque sicut hortus furibus inaccessus vitem redolet, flagrat oleam, rosam renidet; ut in vite religio, in olea pax, in rosa pudor sacratae virginitatis inolescat. Hic est odor quem Iacob patriarcha flagravit, quando meruit audire: Ecce odor filii mei sicut odor agri pleni (Gen. XXVII, 27) . Nam licet plenus omnibus fere fructibus patriarchae sancti fuerit ager; ille tamen fruges maiore virtutis labore generavit, hic flores.

45. It loves to grow in gardens, in which Susanna, while walking, found it, and was ready to die rather than it should be violated. But what is meant by the gardens He Himself points out, saying: A garden enclosed is My sister, My spouse, a garden enclosed, a fountain sealed; because in gardens of this kind the water of the pure fountain shines, reflecting the features of the image of God, lest its streams mingled with mud from the wallowing places of spiritual wild beasts should be polluted. For this reason, too, that modesty of virgins fenced in by the wall of the Spirit is enclosed lest it should lie open to be plundered. And so as a garden inaccessible from without smells of the violet, is scented with the olive, and is resplendent with the rose, that religion may increase in the vine, peace in the olive, and the modesty of consecrated virginity in the rose. This is the odour of which the patriarch Jacob smelt when he heard his father say: See the smell of my son is as the smell of a field which is full. Genesis 27:27 For although the field of the holy patriarch was full of almost all fruits, the other brought forth its crops with greater labour, the latter flowers.

46. Accingere itaque, virgo, et si vis huiuscemodi tibi ut hortus aspiret, propheticis eum claude praeceptis. Pone custodiam ori tuo, et ostium circumstantiae labiis tuis (Psal. CXL, 3) ; ut etiam tu possis dicere: Tamquam malus in lignis nemoris, ita fraternus meus in medio filiorum. In umbra eius concupivi et sedi, et fructus eius dulcis in faucibus meis (Cant. II, 3) . Inveni quem dilexit anima mea, tenui eum, et non relinquam (Cant. III, 4) . Descendit fraternus meus in hortum suum, ut manducet fructum pomorum suorum (Cant. V, 1) . Veni, fraterne mi, exeamus in agrum (Cant. VII, 11) . Pone me ut sigillum in cor tuum, et velut signaculum super brachium tuum (Cant. VIII, 6) . Fraternus meus candidus et rubeus (Cant. V, 10) . Decet enim ut plene noveris, virgo, quem diligis, atque omne in eo et ingenitae divinitatis et assumptae mysterium incorporationis agnoscas. Candidus merito, quia patris splendor: rubeus, quia partus est virginis. Color in eo fulget et rutilat utriusque naturae. Memento tamen antiquiora in eo divinitatis insignia, quam corporis sacramenta; quia non coepit a virgine, sed qui erat, venit in virginem.

46. To work, then, O Virgin, and if you wish your garden to be sweet after this sort, enclose it with the precepts of the prophets: Set a watch before your mouth, and a door to your lips, that you, too, may be able to say: As the apple-tree among the trees of the wood, so is my Beloved among the sons. In His shadow I delighted and sat down, and His fruit was sweet to my palate. I found Him Whom my soul loved, I held Him and would not let him go. My beloved came down into His garden to eat the fruit of His trees. Come, my Beloved, let us go forth into the field. Set me as a signet upon Your heart, and as a seal upon Your arm. My Beloved is white and ruddy.

For it is fitting, O Virgin, that you should fully know Him Whom you love, and should recognize in Him all the mystery of His Divine Nature and the Body which He has assumed. He is white fittingly, for He is the brightness of the Father; and ruddy, for He was born of a Virgin. The color of each nature shines and glows in Him. But remember that the marks of His Godhead are more ancient in Him than the mysteries of His body, for He did not take His origin from the Virgin, but, He Who already existed came into the Virgin.

47. Ille discretus a militibus, ille lancea vulneratus (Matth. XXVII, 29 et seq.) , ut nos sacri vulneris cruore sanaret, respondebit tibi profecto (est enim mitis et humilis corde (Ioan. XIX, 34) , blandus aspectu): Exsurge, Aquilo, et veni, Auster, aspira hortum meum, et fluant aromata mea (Cant. IV, 16) . Ex omnibus enim partibus mundi odor sacratae religionis inolevit, dilectaeque virginis membra flagrarunt. Formosa es, proxima mea, ut bona opinio: pulchra, ut Hierusalem (Cant. VI, 3) . Non caduci itaque corporis pulchritudo vel morbo peritura, vel senio; sed nullis obnoxia casibus opinio bonorum numquam moritura meritorum, virginibus est decori.

47. He Who was spoiled by the soldiers, Who was wounded by the spear, that He might heal us by the blood of His sacred wounds, will assuredly answer you (for He is meek and lowly of heart, and gentle in aspect): Arise, O north wind, and come, O south, and blow upon My garden, that My spices may flow out. For from all parts of the world has the perfume of holy religion increased, and the limbs of the consecrated Virgin have glowed. You are beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem. So it is not the beauty of the perishable body, which will come to an end with sickness or old age, but the reputation for good deserts, subject to no accidents and never to perish, which is the beauty of virgins.

48. Et quoniam non humanis iam, sed coelestibus, quorum vitam vivis in terris, digna es comparari: accipe a Domino praecepta quae serves. Pone me ut sigillum, inquit, in cor tuum, et velut signaculum super brachium tuum (Cant. VIII, 6) : quo signatiora prudentiae tuae factorumque documenta promantur, in quibus figura Dei Christus eluceat, qui paternae ambitum exaequans naturae, totum quidquid a Patre divinitatis assumpsit, expressit. Unde etiam apostolus Paulus in Spiritu nos dicit esse signatos (Ephes. I, 13) ; quoniam Patris imaginem habemus in Filio, sigillum Filii habemus in Spiritu. Hac Trinitate signati caveamus diligentius, ne quod accepimus pignus in cordibus nostris, aut morum levitas, aut ullius adulterii fraus resignet.

48. And since you are worthy to be compared not now with men but with heavenly beings, whose life you are living on earth, receive from the Lord the precepts you are to observe: Set Me as a signet upon your heart, and as a seal upon your arm; that clearer proofs of your prudence and actions may be set forth, in which Christ the Figure of God may shine, Who, equalling fully the nature of the Father, has expressed the whole which He took of the Father’s Godhead. Whence also the Apostle Paul says that we are sealed in the Spirit; Ephesians 1:13 since we have in the Son the image of the Father, and in the Spirit the seal of the Son. Let us, then, sealed by this Trinity, take more diligent heed, lest either levity of character or the deceit of any unfaithfulness unseal the pledge which we have received in our hearts.

49. Sed facessat hic sacris virginibus metus, quibus tanta praesidia tribuit primum Ecclesia, quae tenerae prolis sollicita successu, ipsa quasi murus abundantibus in modum turrium increscit uberibus, donec soluto obsidionis hostilis incursu, pacem validae iuventuti, maternae praesidio virtutis, acquirat (Cant. VIII, 10) . Unde et Propheta ait: Fiat pax in virtute tua, et abundantia in turribus tuis (Psal. CXXI, 7) .

49. But let fear secure this for the holy virgins, for whom the Church first provided such protection, who, anxious for the prosperity of her tender offspring, herself as a wall with breasts as many towers, increases her care for them, until, the fear of hostile attack being at an end, she obtains by the care of a mother’s love peace for her vigorous children. Wherefore the prophet says: Peace be on your virtue, and abundance in your towers.

50. Tum ipse pacis Dominus postquam validioribus brachiis commissa sibi vineta complexus, palmites suos gemmare conspexerit, vultu praesule, nascentibus fructibus auras temperat, sicut ipse testatur dicens: Vinea mea est in conspectu meo, mille Salomoni, et ducenti qui servant fructum eius (Cant. VIII, 12) .

50. Then the Lord of peace Himself, after having embraced in His strong arms the vineyards committed to Him, and beholding their shoots putting forth buds, with glad looks, tempers the breezes to the young fruits, as Himself testifies, saying: My vineyard is in My sight, a thousand for Solomon, and two hundred who keep the fruit thereof. Song of Songs 8:12

51. Supra ait: Sexaginta potentes in circumitu propaginis eius, strictis armatos ensibus, et eruditos praeliaribus disciplinis (Cant. III, 7, 8) ; hic mille et ducentos. Crevit numerus, ubi crevit et fructus; quia quo sanctior quisque, eo communitior. Sic Elisaeus propheta exercitus angelorum praesidia sibi adesse monstravit (IV Reg. VI, 17) : sic Iesus Nave ducem militiae coelestis agnovit (Iosue V, 14) . Possunt igitur fructum in nobis custodire, qui possunt etiam militare pro nobis. Vobis autem, virgines sanctae, speciale praesidium est, quae intemerato pudore sacrum Domini servatis cubile. Neque mirum si pro vobis angeli militant, quae angelorum moribus militatis. Meretur eorum praesidium castitas virginalis, quorum vitam meretur.

51. Above it is said: Sixty strong men round about its offspring, armed with drawn swords, and expert in warlike discipline, Song of Songs 3:7-8 here there are a thousand and two hundred. The number has increased, where the fruit has increased, for the more holy each is, the more is he guarded. So Elisha the prophet showed the hosts of angels who were present to guard him; so Joshua the Son of Nun recognized the Captain of the heavenly host. They, then, who are able also to fight for us are able to guard the fruit that is in us. And for you, holy virgins, there is a special guardianship, for you who with unspotted chastity keep the couch of the Lord holy. And no wonder if the angels fight for you who war with the mode of life of angels. Virginal chastity merits their guardianship whose life it attains to.

52. Et quid pluribus exsequar laudem castitatis? Castitas etiam angelos fecit. Qui eam servavit, angelus est: qui perdidit, diabolus. Hinc religio etiam nomen accepit. Virgo est, quae Deo nubit: meretrix, quae deos fecit. Nam de resurrectione quid dicam, cuius praemia iam tenetis? In resurrectione autem neque nubent, neque ducent uxores: sed erunt sicut angeli, inquit, in coelo (Matth. XXII, 30) . Quod nobis promittitur, vobis praesto est, votorumque nostrorum usus apud vos. De hoc mundo estis, et non estis in hoc mundo. Saeculum vos habere meruit, tenere non potuit.

52. Why should I continue the praise of chastity in more words? For chastity has made even angels. He who has preserved it is an angel; he who has lost it a devil. And hence has religion also gained its name. She is a virgin who is the bride of God, a harlot who makes gods for herself. What shall I say of the resurrection of which you already hold the rewards: For in the resurrection they will neither be given in marriage, nor marry, but shall be, He says, as the angels in heaven. Matthew 22:30 That which is promised to us is already present with you, and the object of your prayers is with you;

you are of this world, and yet not in this world. This age has held you, but has not been able to retain you.

53. Quam praeclarum autem angelos propter intemperantiam suam in saeculum cecidisse de coelo, virgines propter castimoniam in coelum transisse de saeculo? Beatae virgines, quas non illecebra sollicitat corporum, non colluvio praecipitat voluptatum! Cibus parcimoniae, potus abstinentiae docet vitia nescire, qui docet causas nescire vitiorum. Causa peccandi etiam iustos saepe decepit. Hinc populus Dei postquam sedit manducare et bibere, Deum negavit (Exod. XXXII, 6) . Hinc Loth concubitus filiarum ignoravit, et pertulit (Gen. XIX, 33) . Hinc inversis vestigiis filii Noe patris quondam pudenda texerunt (Gen. IX, 22) : quae procax vidit, modestus erubuit, pius texit, offensurus si et ipse vidisset. Quanta vini est vis, ut quem diluvia non nudaverunt, vina nudarent!

53. But what a great thing it is that angels because of incontinence fell from heaven into this world, that virgins because of chastity passed from the world into heaven. Blessed virgins, whom the delights of the flesh do not allure, nor the defilement of pleasures cast down. Sparing food and abstinence in drink train them in ignorance of vices, seeing they keep them from knowing the causes of vices. That which causes sin has often deceived even the just. In this way the people of God after they sat down to eat and drink denied God. Exodus 32:5 In this way, too, Lot knew not, and so endured his daughters' wickedness. Genesis 19:32-33 So, too, the sons of Noah going backward covered their father's nakedness, which he who was wanton saw, he who was modest blushed at and dutifully hid, fearful of offending if he too saw it. Genesis 9:22 How great is the power of wine, so that wine made him naked which the waters of the deluge could not.

CAPUT X.

ULTIMA VIRGINITATIS LAUS proponitur, avaritiae nimirum immunitas. Huius occasione sanctus Praesul sorori in mentem revocat, quanta sit illius felicitas quae non cogatur luxui atque vanitati, quibus nupturae mancipantur, morem gerere.

CHAPTER 10.

Finally, another glory of virginity is mentioned, that it is free from avarice. St. Ambrose, addressing his sister, reminds her of the great happiness of those who are free from those troubles as to luxury and vanity which come upon those who are about to marry.

What then? What happiness it is that no desire of possessions inflames you! The poor man demands what you have, he does not ask for what you have not. The fruit of your labour is a treasure for the needy, and two mites, if they be all one has, are wealth on the part of the giver.

54. Quid illud? Quantae felicitatis est, quod nulla vos habendi cupiditas inflammat? Pauper quod habes poscit, quod non habes non requirit. Fructus laboris tui thesaurus est inopi, et duo aera si sola sint, census est largientis.

54 . Audi ergo, soror, quantis careas. Nam cavere quid debeas, nec meum est docere, nec tuum discere; perfectae enim virtutis usus magisterium non desiderat, sed informat. Cernis ut pomparum ferculis similis incedat, quae se componit ut placeat, omnium in se vultus et ora convertens, eo ipso quo studet placere, deformior; prius enim populo displicet, quam placeat viro. At in vobis reiecta decoris cura plus decet: et hoc ipsum quod vos non ornatis, ornatus est.

54. Listen, then, my sister, from what you escape. For it is not for me to teach nor for you to learn what you ought to guard against, for the practice of perfect virtue does not require teaching, but instructs others. You see how like she is to the litters at processions, who lays herself out to please, attracting to herself the look and gaze of all; less beautiful is she because she strives to please, for she displeases the people before she pleases her husband. But in you the rejection of all care for splendour is far more becoming, and the very fact that you do not adorn yourselves is an ornament.

55. Cerne laceras vulneribus aures, et depressae onera miserare cervicis. Non sunt allevamenta poenarum discrimina metallorum. Hinc collum catena constringit, inde pedem compes includit. Nihil refert auro corpus oneretur an ferro. Sic cervix premitur, sic gravatur incessus. Nil pretium iuvat; nisi quod vos mulieres, ne pereat vobis poena, trepidatis. Quid interest, utrum aliena sententia, an vestra vos damnet? Hinc vos etiam miserabiliores quam qui publico iure damnantur, quod illi optant exui, vos ligari.

55. Look at the ears pierced with wounds, and pity the neck weighed down with burdens. That the metals are different does not lighten the suffering. In one case a chain binds the neck, in another a fetter encloses the foot. It makes no difference whether the body be loaded with gold or with iron. Thus the neck is weighed down and the steps are hindered. The price makes it no better, except that you women are afraid lest that which causes you suffering be lost. What is the difference whether the sentence of another or your own condemn you? Nay, you, even more wretched than those, are condemned by public justice, since they desire to be set free, you to be bound.

56. Quam vero miserabilis illa conditio, quod tamquam mancipii forma venalis, nuptura licitatur; ut qui pretio vicerit, emat. Tolerabilius tamen mancipia veneunt, quae saepe sibi dominos eligunt: virgo si eligat, crimen est; si non eligat, contumelia. Quae quamvis pulchra sit et decora, et timet et cupit videri: cupit, ut se charius vendat: timet, ne hoc ipsum dedeceat quod videtur. Quanta autem votorum ludibria, et ad procorum eventus suspecti metus, ne pauper illudat, ne dives fastidiat, ne pulcher irrideat, ne nobilis spernat!

56. But how wretched a position, that she who is marriageable is in a species of sale put up as it were to auction to be bid for, so that he who offers the highest price purchases her. Slaves are sold on more tolerable conditions, for they often choose their masters; if a maiden chooses it is an offense, if not it is an insult. And she, though she be beautiful and comely, both fears and wishes to be seen; she wishes it that she may sell herself for a better price; she fears lest the fact of her being seen should itself be unbecoming. But what absurdities of wishes and fears and suspicions are there as to how the suitors will turn out, lest a poor man may beguile her, or a rich one contemn her, lest a handsome suitor mock her, lest a noble one despise her.

CAPUT XI.

OBIICIENTIBUS FREQUENTIUM AMBROSII ad virginitatem exhortationum nullum fructum esse ut satisfaciat, adducit exempla cum aliarum virginum, tum Mauritanensium ac Bononiensium: sed harum imprimis virtutes ac propagandae virginitatis ardorem laudat.

CHAPTER 11.

St. Ambrose answers objections made to the uselessness of his exhortations in favour of virginity, and brings forward instances of virgins especially in various places he mentions, and speaks of their zeal in the cause.

57. Dicet aliquis: Tu nobis quotidie virginum canis laudes. Quid faciam qui eadem quotidie cantito, et proficio nihil? Sed non mea culpa. Denique de Placentino sacrandae virgines veniunt, de Bononiensi veniunt, de Mauritania veniunt, ut hic velentur. Magnam rem videtis. Hic tracto, et alibi persuadeo. Si ita est, alibi tractemus, ut vobis persuadeamus.

57. Some one may say, you are always singing the praises of virgins. What shall I do who am always singing them and have no success? But this is not my fault. Then, too, virgins come from Placentia to be consecrated, or from Bononia, and Mauritania, in order to receive the veil here. You see a striking thing here. I treat the matter here, and persuade those who are elsewhere. If this be so, let me treat the subject elsewhere, that I may persuade you.

58. Quid, quod etiam qui me non audiunt, sequuntur: qui audiunt, non sequuntur? Nam plerasque virgines cognovi velle, et prohiberi etiam prodire a matribus, et quod est gravius, viduis, cum quibus hic mihi sermo est.

Nempe si hominem vellent amare filiae vestrae, per leges possent eligere quem vellent. Quibus igitur hominem eligere licet, Deum non licet?

58. What is it, then, that even they who hear me not follow my teaching, and those who hear me follow me not? For I have known many virgins who had the desire, but were prevented from going forward by their mothers, and, which is more serious, mothers who were widows, to whom I will now address myself. For if your daughters desired to love a man, they could, by law, choose whom they would. Are they, then, who are allowed to choose a man not allowed to choose God?

59. Contuemini quam dulcis pudicitiae fructus sit, qui barbaricis quoque inolevit affectibus. Ex ultimis infra ultraque Mauritaniae partibus deductae virgines hic sacrari gestiunt; et cum sint omnes familiae in vinculis, pudicitia tamen nescit esse captiva. Profitetur regnum aeternitatis, quae moeret iniuriam servitutis.

59. Behold how sweet is the fruit of modesty, which has sprung up even in the affections of barbarians. Virgins coming from the most distant on this and that side of Mauritania desire to be consecrated here; and though all the families be in bonds, yet modesty cannot be bound. She who mourns over the hardship of slavery avows an eternal kingdom.

60. Nam quid de Bononiensibus virginibus loquar, fecundo pudoris agmine, quae mundanis se deliciis abdicantes, sacrarium virginitatis incolunt? Sine contubernali sexu, contubernali pudore provectae ad vicenarium numerum, et centenarium fructum, relictoque parentum hospitio, tendunt in tabernaculis Christi, indefessae milites castitatis: nunc canticis spiritalibus personant, nunc victum operibus exercent, liberalitati quoque subsidium manu quaerunt.

60. And what shall I say of the virgins of Bononia, a fertile band of chastity, who, forsaking worldly delights, inhabit the sanctuary of virginity? Not being of the sex which lives in common, attaining in their common chastity to the number of twenty, and fruit to an hundredfold, leaving their parents' dwelling they press into the houses of Christ, as soldiers of unwearied chastity; at one time singing spiritual songs, they provide their sustenance by labour, and seek with their hands supplies for their liberality.

61. Quod si investigandi virgines inoleverit odor (namque prae caeteris speculandi venatum pudoris explorant), totis curarum vestigiis praedam latentem usque ad ipsa cubilia persequuntur: aut si liberior alicuius volatus affulserit, totis omnes videas assurgere alis, concrepare pennis, emicare plausu; ut casto pudicitiae choro cingant volantem, donec albenti delectata comitatu, in plagas pudoris et indaginem castitatis domus patriae oblita, succedat.

61. But if the attraction of searching for virgins has grown strong (for they beyond others follow up the search and watch for purity), they follow up their hidden prey with the greatest perseverance to its very chambers; or, if the flight of any one shall have seemed more free, one may see them rise on the wing, hear the rustling of their feathers, and the bursting of applause; so as to surround the one on wing with a chaste band of modesty, until rejoicing in that fair companionship, forgetful of her father's house, she enters the regions of modesty and the fenced-in home of chastity.

CAPUT XII.

UT OPTABILE SIT virgini favere parentes suos, eam tamen laude maiori dignam esse, quam iis reluctantibus divinus amor ad hoc propositum instigaverit. Non timendam igitur nec vim parentum nec patrimonii iacturam; quod memorabili nobilis ac piae virginis facto confirmatur.

CHAPTER 12.

It is very desirable that parents should encourage the desire for the virgin life, but more praiseworthy when the love of God draws a maiden even against their will. The violence of parents and the loss of property are not to be feared, and an instance of this is related by St. Ambrose.

62. Bonum itaque si virgini studia parentum quasi flabra pudoris aspirent: sed illud gloriosius, si tenerae ignis aetatis etiam sine veteribus nutrimentis sponte se rapiat in fomitem castitatis. Dotem negabunt parentes: sed habes divitem sponsum cuius contenta thesauro, patriae successionis emolumenta non quaeras. Quanto dotalibus praestat compendiis casta paupertas!

62. It is a good thing, then, that the zeal of parents, like favouring gales, should aid a virgin; but it is more glorious if the fire of tender age even without the incitement of those older of its own self burst forth into the flame of chastity. Parents will refuse a dowry, but you have a wealthy Spouse, satisfied with Whose treasures you will not miss the revenues of a father’s inheritance. How much is poverty to chastity superior to bridal gifts!

63. Et tamen quam audistis aliquando propter studium integritatis, legitimae factam successionis extorrem? Contradicunt parentes: sed volunt vinci. Resistunt primo, quia credere timent: indignantur frequenter, ut discas vincere: abdicationem minantur, ut tentent si potes damnum saeculi non timere: quaesitis blandiuntur illecebris, ut videant si variarum mollire te non queat blanditia voluptatum. Exerceris, virgo, dum cogeris. Et haec tibi prima certamina, anxia parentum vota proponunt. Vince prius, puella, pietatem. Si vincis domum, vincis saeculum.

63. And yet of whom have you heard as ever, because of her desire for chastity, having been deprived of her lawful inheritance? Parents speak against her, but are willing to be overcome. They resist at first because they are afraid to believe; they often are angry that one may learn to overcome; they threaten to disinherit to try whether one is able not to fear temporal loss; they caress with exquisite allurements to see if one cannot be softened by the inducement of various pleasures. You are being exercised, O virgin, while you are being urged. And the anxious entreaties of your parents are your first battles. Conquer your affection first, O maiden. If you conquer your home, you conquer the world.

64. Sed esto maneant vos damna patrimonii: nonne caducarum et fragilium dispendia facultatum futura coeli regna compensant? Quamquam si verbis coelestibus credimus, nemo est qui reliquerit domum, aut parentes, aut fratres, aut uxorem, aut filios, propter regnum Dei, et non recipiat septies tantum in hoc tempore: in saeculo autem venturo vitam aeternam possidebit (Matth. XIX, 29) . Crede fidem tuam Deo: quae homini pecuniam credis, fenerare Christo. Bonus depositae spei custos multiplicatis fidei tuae talentum solvit usuris. Non fallit veritas, non circumscribit iustitia, non decipit virtus. Quod si non creditis oraculo, vel exemplis credite.

64. But suppose that the loss of your patrimony awaits you; are not the future realms of heaven a compensation for perishable and frail possessions? For if we believe the heavenly message, there is no one who has forsaken house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive sevenfold more in this present time, and in the world to come shall have everlasting life. Luke 18:29-30 Entrust your faith to God, who entrust your money to man; lend to Christ. The faithful keeper of the deposit of your hope pays the talent of your faith with manifold interest. The Truth does not deceive, Justice does not circumvent, Virtue does not deceive. But if you believe not God's word, at least believe instances.

65. Memoriae nostrae puella dudum nobilis in saeculo, nunc nobilior Deo, cum urgeretur ad nuptias a parentibus et propinquis, ad sacrosanctum altare confugit. Quo enim melius virgo, quam ubi sacrificium virginitatis offertur? Ne is quidem finis audaciae. Stabat ad aram Dei pudoris hostia, victima castitatis: nunc capiti dexteram sacerdotis imponens, precem poscens, nunc iustae impatiens morae, ac summum altari subiecta verticem. Num melius, inquit, maforte me quam altare velabit, quod sanctificat ipsa velamina? Plus talis decet flammeus, in quo caput omnium Christus quotidie consecratur. Quid agitis vos, propinqui? quid exquirendis adhuc nuptiis sollicitatis animum? Iamdudum provisas habeo. Sponsum offertis? Meliorem reperi. Quaslibet exaggerate divitias, iactate nobilitatem, praedicate potentiam: habeo eum cui nemo se comparet, divitem mundo, potentem imperio, nobilem coelo. Si talem habetis, non refuto optionem: si non reperitis, non providetis mihi, parentes, sed invidetis.

65. Within my memory a girl once noble in the world, now more noble in the sight of God, being urged to a marriage by her parents and kinsfolk, took refuge at the holy altar. Whither could a virgin better flee, than there where the Virgin Sacrifice is offered? Nor was even that the limit of her boldness. She, the oblation of modesty, the victim of chastity, was standing at the altar of God, now placing upon her head the right hand of the priest, asking his prayers, and now impatient at the righteous delay, placing the top of her head under the altar. Can any better veil, she said, cover me better than the altar which consecrates the veils themselves? Such a bridal veil is most suitable on which Christ, the Head of all, is daily consecrated. What are you doing, my kinsfolk? Why do you still trouble my mind with seeking marriage? I have long since provided for that. Do you offer me a bridegroom? I have found a better. Make the most you can of my wealth, boast of his nobility, extol his power, I have Him with Whom no one can compare himself, rich in the world, powerful in empire, noble in heaven. If you have such an one, I do not reject the choice; if you do not find such, you do me not a kindness, my relatives, but an injury.

66. Silentibus caeteris, unus abruptius: Quid si, inquit, pater tuus viveret, innuptam te manere pateretur? Tum illa maiori religione, moderatiore pietate: Et ideo fortasse deficit, ne quis impedimentum possit afferre. Quod ille responsum de patre, de se oraculum, maturo sui probavit exitio. Ita caeteri eadem sibi quisque metuentes, favere coeperunt, qui impedire quaerebant: nec dispendium debitarum attulit virginitas facultatum, sed etiam emolumentum integritatis accepit. Habetis, puellae, devotionis praemium: parentes, cavete offensionis exemplum.

66. When the others were silent, one burst forth somewhat roughly: If, he said, your father were alive, would he suffer you to remain unmarried? Then she replied with more religion and more restrained piety: And perchance he is gone that no one may be able to hinder me. Which answer concerning her father, but warning as to himself, he made good by his own speedy death. So the others, each of them, fearing the same for himself, began to assist and not to hinder her as before, and her virginity involved not the loss of the property due to her, but also received the reward of her integrity. You see, maidens, the reward of devotion, and do you, parents, be warned by the example of transgression.

LIBER II

BOOK II.

CAPUT I.

AMBROSIUS HOC LIBRO virginum mores instituendos esse cum agnosceret, cur exemplorum viam sibi proposuerit, docet: inde praesumptionis invidia abs se quam modestissime derivata, cur scripto potius quam voce id aggressus sit, monet.

CHAPTER 1.

In this book St. Ambrose purposes to treat of the training of virgins, using examples rather than precepts, and explains why he does so in writing rather than by word of mouth.

1. Superiore libro quantum virginitatis munus sit, voluimus (non enim potuimus) explicare; ut per se coelestis gratia muneris invitet legentem. Secundo libro virginem institui decet, et tamquam competentium praeceptorum magisteriis erudiri.

1. In the former book I wished (though I was not able) to set forth how great is the gift of virginity, that the grace of the heavenly gift might of itself invite the reader. In the second book it is fitting that the virgin should be instructed and, as it were, be educated by the teaching of suitable precepts.

2. Sed quoniam nos infirmi ad monendum sumus, et impares ad docendum (debet enim is qui docet supra eum qui docetur excellere), ne vel susceptum deseruisse munus, vel nobis arrogasse amplius videremur, exemplis potius quam praeceptis putavimus imbuendam: licet amplius proficiatur exemplo; quoniam nec difficile quod iam factum est aestimatur, et utile quod probatum, et religiosum quod haereditario quodam paternae virtutis usu in nos est successione transfusum.

2. But, inasmuch as I am feeble in advising and unequal to teaching (for he who teaches ought to excel him who is taught), lest I should seem to have abandoned the task I have undertaken, or to have taken too much upon myself, I thought it better to instruct by examples than by precepts; for more progress may be made by means of an example, inasmuch as that which has been already done is considered to be not difficult, and that which has been tried to be expedient, and that which has been transmitted in succession to us by a kind of hereditary practice of ancestral virtue to be binding in religion.

3. Quod si quis nos praesumptionis arguit, arguat potius sedulitatis; quia rogantibus virginibus ne hoc quidem putavi negandum. Malui enim me in periculum deduci pudoris, quam non obsequi voluntati earum, quarum studiis etiam Deus noster placido se indulget assensu.

3. But if any one rebukes me for presumption, let him rather rebuke me for zeal, because I thought that I ought not to refuse even this to the virgins who asked it of me. For I preferred rather to run the risk of perilling my own modesty, than not to fulfil the wish of those whose pursuits even our God favours with kindly approbation.

4. Sed neque praesumptio notari potest, quoniam cum haberent unde discerent, affectum potius quam magisterium quaesiverunt meum: et excusari sedulitas; quoniam cum haberent auctoritatem martyris ad observantiam disciplinae, non superfluum iudicavi, si nostri sermonis blanditiam derivarem ad professionis illecebram. Ille docere facilis, qui severo vitia coercet affectu: nos qui docere non possumus, blandiamur.

4. Nor can the mark of presumption be set on my task, since, when they had those from whom they could learn, they sought my good-will rather than my teaching, and my zeal may be excused, since when they had the guidance of a martyr for the observance of discipline, I did not think it superfluous if I could turn the persuasion of my discourse into an allurement to profession. He who teaches with facility restrains fault with severity; I, who cannot teach, entice.

5. Et quoniam pleraeque absentes nostri desiderabant sermonis usum, volumen hoc condidi: quo profectae ad se vocis meae munus tenentes, deesse non crederent, quem tenerent. Sed proposita persequamur.

5. And because many who were absent desired to have the use of my discourse, I compiled this book, in order that holding in their hands the substance of what my voice had uttered to them, they might not think that he whom they were holding failed them. But let us go on with our plan.

CAPUT II.

VIRGINIBUS EXEMPLUM MARIAE proponitur, cuius variae virtutes enumerantur, castitas, humilitas, vitae asperitas, secessus amor; quae quidem virtus ubi testimonio Evangelico probata est, inde etiam eius pietas erga propinquas, discendi sedulitas, atque adeundi templi studium commendatur. Narratur denique quemadmodum illa tot muneribus exornata, innumeris virginibus obviam ventura sit, nec sine magnifico triumpho ad thalamum Sponsi, et coelestia altaria quibus ob castitatem similes fuere, deductura.

CHAPTER 2.

The life of Mary is set before virgins as an example, and her many virtues are dwelt upon, her chastity, humility, hard life, love of retirement, and the like; then her kindness to others, her zeal in learning, and love of frequenting the temple. St. Ambrose then sets forth how she, adorned with all these virtues, will come to meet the numberless bands of virgins and lead them with great triumph to the bridal chamber of the Spouse.

6. Sit igitur vobis tamquam in imagine descripta virginitas vita Mariae, de qua velut speculo refulgeat species castitatis et forma virtutis. Hinc sumatis licet exempla vivendi, ubi tamquam in exemplari magisteria expressa probitatis, quid corrigere, quid effingere, quid tenere debeatis, ostendunt.

6. Let, then, the life of Mary be as it were virginity itself, set forth in a likeness, from which, as from a mirror, the appearance of chastity and the form of virtue is reflected. From this you may take your pattern of life, showing, as an example, the clear rules of virtue: what you have to correct, to effect, and to hold fast.

7. Primus discendi ardor nobilitas est magistri. Quid nobilius Dei matre? quid splendidius ea, quam Splendor elegit? quid castius ea quae corpus sine corporis contagione generavit? Nam de caeteris eius virtutibus quid loquar? Virgo erat (Cf. S. Aug. lib. IV de Doct. Christ. c. 21) non solum corpore, sed etiam mente, quae nullo doli ambitu sincerum adulteraret affectum: corde humilis, verbis gravis, animi prudens, loquendi parcior, legendi studiosior: non in incerto divitiarum, sed in prece pauperum spem reponens: intenta operi, verecunda sermone, arbitrum mentis solita non hominem, sed Deum quaerere: nullum laedere, bene velle omnibus, assurgere maioribus natu, aequalibus non invidere, fugere iactantiam, rationem sequi, amare virtutem. Quando ista vel vultu laesit parentes? quando dissensit a propinquis? quando fastidivit humilem? quando derisit debilem? quando vitavit inopem; eos solos solita coetus virorum invisere, quos misericordia non erubesceret, neque praeteriret verecundia? Nihil torvum in oculis, nihil in verbis procax, nihil in actu inverecundum: non gestus fractior, non incessus solutior, non vox petulantior; ut ipsa corporis species simulacrum fuerit mentis, figura probitatis. Bona quippe domus in ipso vestibulo debet agnosci, ac primo praetendat ingressu nihil intus latere tenebrarum; ut mens nostra nullis repagulis corporalibus impedita, tamquam lucernae lux intus posita foris luceat.

7. The first thing which kindles ardour in learning is the greatness of the teacher. What is greater than the Mother of God? What more glorious than she whom Glory Itself chose? What more chaste than she who bore a body without contact with another body? For why should I speak of her other virtues? She was a virgin not only in body but also in mind, who stained the sincerity of its disposition by no guile, who was humble in heart, grave in speech, prudent in mind, sparing of words, studious in reading, resting her hope not on uncertain riches, but on the prayer of the poor, intent on work, modest in discourse; wont to seek not man but God as the judge of her thoughts, to injure no one, to have goodwill towards all, to rise up before her elders, not to envy her equals, to avoid boastfulness, to follow reason, to love virtue. When did she pain her parents even by a look? When did she disagree with her neighbours? When did she despise the lowly? When did she avoid the needy? Being wont only to go to such gatherings of men as mercy would not blush at, nor modesty pass by. There was nothing gloomy in her eyes, nothing forward in her words, nothing unseemly in her acts, there was not a silly movement, nor unrestrained step, nor was her voice petulant, that the very appearance of her outward being might be the image of her soul, the representation of what is approved. For a well-ordered house ought to be recognized on the very threshold, and should show at the very first entrance that no darkness is hidden within, as our soul hindered by no restraints of the body may shine abroad like a lamp placed within.

8. Quid ego exsequar ciborum parcimoniam, officiorum redundantiam: alterum ultra naturam superfuisse, alterum pene ipsi naturae defuisse: illic nulla intermissa tempora, hic congeminatos ieiunio dies? Et siquando reficiendi successisset voluntas, cibus plerumque obvius, qui mortem arceret, non delicias ministraret. Dormire non prius cupiditas quam necessitas fuit; et tamen cum quiesceret corpus, vigilaret animus: qui frequenter in somnis aut lecta repetit, aut somno interrupta continuat, aut disposita gerit, aut gerenda praenuntiat.

8. Why should I detail her spareness of food, her abundance of services — the one abounding beyond nature, the other almost insufficient for nature? And there were no seasons of slackness, but days of fasting, one upon the other. And if ever the desire for refreshment came, her food was generally what came to hand, taken to keep off death, not to minister to comfort. Necessity before inclination caused her to sleep, and yet when her body was sleeping her soul was awake, and often in sleep either went again through what had been read, or went on with what had been interrupted by sleep, or carried out what had been designed, or foresaw what was to be carried out.

9. Prodire domo nescia, nisi cum ad Ecclesiam conveniret, et hoc ipsum cum parentibus, aut propinquis. Domestico operosa secreto, forensi stipata comitatu; nullo meliore tamen sui custode quam se ipsa: quae incessu affatuque venerabilis, non tam vestigium pedis tolleret, quam gradum virtutis attolleret. Ut tamen alios habeat virgo membrorum custodes suorum, morum autem suorum se habeat ipsa custodem: plures erunt de quibus discat, si ipsa se doceat quae virtutes magistras habet: quia quidquid egerit, disciplina est. Sic Maria intendebat omnibus, quasi a pluribus moneretur: sic omnia implebat virtutis officia, ut non tam disceret, quam doceret.

9. She was unaccustomed to go from home, except for divine service, and this with parents or kinsfolk. Busy in private at home, accompanied by others abroad, yet with no better guardian than herself, as she, inspiring respect by her gait and address, progressed not so much by the motion of her feet as by step upon step of virtue. But though the Virgin had other persons who were protectors of her body, she alone guarded her character; she can learn many points if she be her own teacher, who possesses the perfection of all virtues, for whatever she did is a lesson. Mary attended to everything as though she were warned by many, and fulfilled every obligation of virtue as though she were teaching rather than learning.

10. Talem hanc evangelista monstravit (Luc I, 27) , talem angelus reperit, talem Spiritus sanctus elegit. Quid enim in singulis morer, ut eam parentes dilexerint, extranei praedicaverint, quae digna fuit ex qua Dei Filius nasceretur? Haec ad ipsos ingressus angeli inventa domi in penetralibus, sine comite, ne quis intentionem abrumperet, ne quis obstreperet; neque enim comites feminas desiderabat, quae bonas cogitationes comites habebat. Quin etiam tum sibi minus sola videbatur, cum sola esset. Nam quemadmodum sola, cui tot libri adessent; tot archangeli, tot prophetae?

10. Such has the Evangelist shown her, such did the angel find her, such did the Holy Spirit choose her. Why delay about details? How her parents loved her, strangers praised her, how worthy she was that the Son of God should be born of her. She, when the angel entered, was found at home in privacy, without a companion, that no one might interrupt her attention or disturb her; and she did not desire any women as companions, who had the companionship of good thoughts. Moreover, she seemed to herself to be less alone when she was alone. For how should she be alone, who had with her so many books, so many archangels, so many prophets?

11. Denique et Gabriel eam ubi revisere solebat, invenit: et angelum Maria quasi virum specie mota trepidavit, quasi non incognitum audito nomine recognovit (Ibid., 28 et seq.) . Ita peregrinata est in viro, quae non est peregrinata in Angelo; ut agnoscas aures religiosas, oculos verecundos. Denique salutata obmutuit, et appellata respondit: sed quae primo turbaverat affectum, postea promisit obsequium.

11. And so, too, when Gabriel visited her, Luke 1:28 did he find her, and Mary trembled, being disturbed, as though at the form of a man, but on hearing his name recognized him as one not unknown to her. And so she was a stranger as to men, but not as to the angel; that we might know that her ears were modest and her eyes bashful. Then when saluted she kept silence, and when addressed she answered, and she whose feelings were first troubled afterwards promised obedience.

12. Quam vero religiosa in propinquas fuerit, Scriptura divina significat (Ibid., 45) . Nam et humilior facta est, ubi se a Deo cognovit electam, et statim ad cognatam suam in montana processit: non utique ut exemplo crederet, quae iam crediderat oraculo: Beata enim, inquit, quae credidisti (Ibid., 56) . Et tribus cum ea mensibus mansit. Tanti autem intervallo temporis non fides quaeritur, sed pietas exhibetur. Et hoc posteaquam in utero parentis exsiliens puer matrem Domini salutavit, prius compos devotionis, quam naturae.

12. And holy Scripture points out how modest she was towards her neighbours. For she became more humble when she knew herself to be chosen of God, and went immediately to her kinswoman in the hill country, not in order to gain belief by anything external, for she had believed the word of God. Blessed, she said, are you who believed. Luke 1:56 And she abode with her three months. Now in such an interval of time it is not that faith is being sought for, but kindness which is being shown. And this was after that the child, leaping in his mother's womb, had saluted the mother of the Lord, attaining to reason before birth.

13. Inde tot sequentibus signis, cum sterilis pareret, virgo conciperet, loqueretur mutus, adoraret magus, exspectaret Simeon, sidera nuntiarent, Maria mobilis ad introitum, immobilis ad miraculum: Conservabat, inquit, haec omnia in corde suo (Luc. II, 19) . Quamvis mater Domini, discere tamen praecepta Domini desiderabat: et quae Deum genuerat, Deum tamen scire cupiebat.

13. And then, in the many subsequent wonders, when the barren bore a son, the virgin conceived, the dumb spoke, the wise men worshipped, Simeon waited, the stars gave notice. Mary, who was moved by the angel's entrance, was unmoved by the miracles. Mary, it is said, kept all these things in her heart. Luke 2:19 Though she was the mother of the Lord, yet she desired to learn the precepts of the Lord, and she who brought forth God, yet desired to know God.

14. Quid, quod annis quoque omnibus ibat in Hierusalem solemni die paschae, et ibat cum Ioseph? (Ibid., 41.) Ubique in virgine comes singularum virtutum est pudor. Hic individuus debet esse virginitati, sine quo non potest esse virginitas. Nec ad templum igitur Maria sine pudoris sui custode processit.

14. And then, how she also went every year to Jerusalem at the solemn day of the passover, and went with Joseph. Everywhere is modesty the companion of her singular virtues in the Virgin. This, without which virginity cannot exist, must be the inseparable companion of virginity. And so Mary did not go even to the temple without the guardianship of her modesty.

15. Haec est imago virginitatis. Talis enim fuit Maria, ut eius unius vita omnium sit disciplina. Si igitur auctor non displicet, opus probemus; ut quaecumque sibi eius exoptat praemium, imitetur exemplum. Quantae in una virgine species virtutum emicant? Secretum verecundiae, vexillum fidei, devotionis obsequium: virgo intra domum, comes ad ministerium, mater ad templum.

15. This is the likeness of virginity. For Mary was such that her example alone is a lesson for all. If, then, the author displeases us not, let us make trial of the production, that whoever desires its reward for herself may imitate the pattern. How many kinds of virtues shine forth in one Virgin! The secret of modesty, the banner of faith, the service of devotion, the Virgin within the house, the companion for the ministry, the mother at the temple.

16. O quantis illa virginibus occurret, quantas complexa ad Dominum trahet, dicens: Haec thorum filii mei, haec thalamos nuptiales immaculato servavit pudore! Quemadmodum eas ipse Dominus commendabit Patri; nimirum illud repetens suum: Pater sancte, istae sunt quas custodivi tibi, in quibus Filius hominis caput reclinans quievit; peto ut ubi ego sum, et ipsae sint mecum (Ioan XVII, 24) . Sed si non solis sibi debent prodesse, quae non solis vixerunt sibi: haec parentes, haec redimat fratres. Pater iuste, mundus me non cognovit, istae autem me cognoverunt, et mundum cognoscere noluerunt (Ibid., 25) .

16. Oh! How many virgins shall she meet, how many shall she embrace and bring to the Lord, and say: She has been faithful to her espousal, to my Son; she has kept her bridal couch with spotless modesty. How shall the Lord Himself commend them to His Father, repeating again those words of His: Holy Father, these are they whom I have kept for You, on whom the Son of Man leant His head and rested; I ask that where I am there they may be with Me. John 17:24 And if they ought to benefit not themselves only, who lived not for themselves alone, one virgin may redeem her parents, another her brothers. Holy Father, the world has not known Me, but these have known Me, and have willed not to know the world. John 17:25

17. Quae pompa illa, quanta angelorum laetitia plaudentium, quod habitare mereatur in coelo, quae coelesti vita vixit in saeculo! Tunc etiam Maria tympanum sumens, choros virginales excitabit cantantes Domino quod per mare saeculi sine saecularibus fluctibus transierunt (Exod. XV, 20) . Tunc unaquaeque exsultabit dicens: Et introibo ad altare Dei mei, et ad Deum qui laetificat iuventutem meam (Psal. XLII, 4) . Immolo Deo sacrificium laudis, et reddo Altissimo vota mea (Psal. XLIX, 14) .

17. What a procession shall that be, what joy of applauding angels when she is found worthy of dwelling in heaven who lived on earth a heavenly life! Then too Mary, taking her timbrel, shall stir up the choirs of virgins, singing to the Lord because they have passed through the sea of this world without suffering from the waves of this world. Exodus 15:20 Then each shall rejoice, saying: I will go to the altar of God; to God Who makes my youth glad; and, I will offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay my vows unto the Most High.

18. Neque enim dubitaverim vobis patere altaria Dei, quarum mentes altaria confidenter dixerim, in quibus quotidie pro redemptione corporis Christus immolatur. Nam si corpus virginis Dei templum est, animus quid est, qui tamquam membrorum cineribus exagitatis, sacerdotis aeterni redopertus manu, vaporem divini ignis exhalat? Beatae virgines, quae tam immortali spiratis gratia, ut horti floribus, ut templa religione, ut altaria sacerdote!

18. Nor would I hesitate to admit you to the altars of God, whose souls I would without hesitation call altars, on which Christ is daily offered for the redemption of the body. For if the virgin's body be a temple of God, what is her soul, which, the ashes, as it were, of the body being shaken off, once more uncovered by the hand of the Eternal Priest, exhales the vapour of the divine fire. Blessed virgins, who emit a fragrance through divine grace as gardens do through flowers, temples through religion, altars through the priest.

CAPUT III.

UT MARIA VITAE informandae, sic Thecla mortis obeundae exemplar dicitur. Hanc a bestiis ad quas damnata fuerat, non solum nihil passam, sed e contrario cultam et adoratam esse. At ne quas superiora exempla deterreant, recentius quoddam narrandum proponitur.

CHAPTER 3.

St. Ambrose having set forth the Virgin Mary as a pattern for life, adduces Thecla as a model for learning how to die. Thecla suffered not from the beasts to whom she was condemned, but on the contrary received from them signs of reverence. He then proceeds to introduce a more recent example.

19. Ergo sancta Maria disciplinam vitae informet, Thecla doceat immolari: quae copulam fugiens nuptialem, et sponsi furore damnata, naturam etiam bestiarum virginitatis veneratione mutavit. Namque parata ad feras, cum aspectus quoque declinaret virorum, ac vitalia ipsa saevo offerret leoni, fecit ut qui impudicos detulerant oculos, pudicos referrent.

19. Let, then, holy Mary instruct you in the discipline of life, and Thecla teach you how to be offered, for she, avoiding nuptial intercourse, and condemned through her husband’s rage, changed even the disposition of wild beasts by their reverence for virginity. For being made ready for the wild beasts, when avoiding the gaze of men, she offered her vital parts to a fierce lion, caused those who had turned away their immodest looks to turn them back modestly.

20. Cernere erat lingentem pedes bestiam cubitare humi, muto testificantem sono quod sacrum virginis corpus violare non posset. Ergo adorabat praedam suam bestia: et propriae oblita naturae, naturam induerat quam homines amiserant. Videres quadam naturae transfusione homines feritatem indutos, saevitiam imperare bestiae: bestiam exosculantem pedes virginis, docere quid homines deberent. Tantum habet virginitas admirationis, ut eam etiam leones mirentur. Non impastos cibus flexit, non citatos impetus rapuit, non stimulatos ira exasperavit, non usus decepit assuetos, non feros natura possedit. Docuerunt religionem dum adorant martyrem: docuerunt etiam castitatem, dum virgini nihil aliud nisi plantas exosculantur, demersis in terram oculis, tamquam verecundantibus, ne mas aliquis vel bestia virginem nudam videret.

20. The beast was to be seen lying on the ground, licking her feet, showing without a sound that it could not injure the sacred body of the virgin. So the beast reverenced his prey, and forgetful of his own nature, put on that nature which men had lost. One could see, as it were, by some transfusion of nature, men clothed with savageness, goading the beast to cruelty, and the beast kissing the feet of the virgin, teaching them what was due from men. Virginity has in itself so much that is admirable, that even lions admire it. Food did not induce them though kept without their meal; no impulse hurried them on when excited; anger did not exasperate them when stirred up, nor did their habits lead them blindly as they were wont, nor their own natural disposition possess them with fierceness. They set an example of piety when reverencing the martyr; and gave a lesson in favor of chastity when they did nothing but kiss the virgin’s feet, with their eyes turned to the ground, as though through modesty, fearing that any male, even a beast, should see the virgin naked.

21. Dicet aliquis: Cur exemplum attulisti Mariae, quasi reperiri queat matrem Domini quae possit imitari? Cur etiam Theclae, quam gentium Doctor instituit? Da huiuscemodi doctorem, si discipulam requiris.

Huiuscemodi recens vobis exemplum profero, ut intelligatis Apostolum non unius esse doctorem, sed omnium.

21. Some one will say: Why have you brought forward the example of Mary, as if any one could be found to imitate the Lord’s mother? And why that of Thecla, whom the Apostle of the Gentiles trained? Give us a teacher of our own sort if you wish for disciples. I will, therefore, set before you a recent example of this sort, that you may understand that the Apostle is the teacher, not of one only, but of all.

CAPUT IV.

ANTIOCHENA VIRGO, CUM sacrificare idolis recusaret, ad lupanar damnata, inde militis christiani opera, mutatis inter se vestibus, sine ullo pudoris damno evadit; at cum ille propterea duceretur ad supplicium, haec e vestigio rediens, constanter de palma cum eodem contendit, qua tandem uterque donati sunt.

CHAPTER 4.

A virgin at Antioch, having refused to sacrifice to idols, was condemned to a house of ill-fame, whence she escaped unharmed, having changed clothes with a Christian soldier. Then when he was condemned for this, she returned and the two contended for the prize of martyrdom, which was at last given to each.

22. Antiochiae nuper virgo quaedam fuit fugitans publici visus: sed quo magis virorum evitabat oculos, eo amplius incendebat. Pulchritudo enim audita nec visa plus desideratur, duobus stimulis cupiditatum, amoris et cognitionis: dum et nihil occurrit quod minus placeat, et plus putatur esse quod placeat, quod non iudex oculus explorat, sed animus amator exoptat. Itaque sancta virgo, ne diutius alerentur potiendi spe cupiditates, integritatem pudoris professa, sic restinxit improborum faces, ut non iam amaretur, sed proderetur.

22. There was lately at Antioch a virgin who avoided being seen in public, but the more she shrank from men’s eyes, the more they longed for her. For beauty which is heard of but not seen is more desired, there being two incentives to passion, love and knowledge — so long as nothing is met with which pleases less; and that which pleases is thought to be of more worth, because the eye is not in this case the judge by investigation, but the mind inflamed with love is full of longing. And so the holy virgin, lest their passions should be longer fed by the desire of gaining her, professed her intention of preserving her chastity, and so quenched the fires of those wicked men, that she was no longer loved, but informed against.

23. Ecce persecutio. Puella fugere nescia, certe pavida, ne incideret insidiatores pudoris, animum ad virtutem paravit: tam religiosa, ut mortem non timeret: tam pudica, ut exspectaret. Venit coronae dies. Maxima omnium exspectatio. Producitur puella, duplex professa certamen, et castitatis, et religionis. Sed ubi viderunt constantiam professionis, metum pudoris, paratam ad cruciatus, erubescentem ad aspectus, excogitare coeperunt quemadmodum specie castitatis religionem tollerent; ut cum id abstulissent quod erat amplius, etiam id eriperent quod reliquerant. Aut sacrificare virginem, aut lupanari prostitui iubent. Quomodo deos suos colunt, qui sic vindicant: aut quemadmodum ipsi vivunt, qui ita iudicant?

23. So a persecution arose. The maiden, not knowing how to escape, and afraid lest she might fall into the hands of those who were plotting against her chastity, prepared her soul for heroic virtue, being so religious as not to fear death, so chaste as to expect it. The day of her crown arrived. The expectation of all was at its height. The maiden is brought forward, and makes her twofold profession, of religion and of chastity. But when they saw the constancy of her profession, her fear for her modesty, her readiness for tortures, and her blushes at being looked on, they began to consider how they might overcome her religion by setting chastity before her, so that, having deprived her of that which was the greatest, they might also deprive her of that which they had left. So the sentence was that she should either sacrifice, or be sent to a house of ill-fame. After what manner do they worship their gods who thus avenge them, or how do they live themselves who give sentence after this fashion?

24. Hic puella non quod de religione ambigeret; sed de pudore trepidaret, ipsa secum: Quid agimus? Hodie aut martyr, aut virgo: altera in nobis invidetur corona. Sed nec virginis nomen agnoscitur, ubi virginitatis auctor negatur. Nam quemadmodum virgo, si meretricem colas: quemadmodum virgo, si adulteros diligas, quemadmodum virgo, si amorem petas? Tolerabilius est (22, q. 5, cap. Tolerabilius) mentem virginem quam carnem habere. Utrumque bonum, si liceat: si non liceat, saltem non homini castae, sed Deo simus. Et Rahab meretrix fuit, sed postquam Deo credidit, salutem invenit. (Iosue II, 9 et seq.) . Et Iudith se, ut adultero placeret, ornavit (Iudith. IX, 1 et seq.) ; quae tamen quia hoc religione, non amore faciebat, nemo eam adulteram iudicavit. Bene successit exemplum. Nam si illa quae se commisit religioni, et pudorem servavit et patriam; fortassis et nos servando religionem, servabimus etiam castitatem. Quod si Iudith pudicitiam religioni praeferre voluisset, perdita patria, etiam pudicitiam perdidisset.

24. And the virgin, not hesitating about her religion, but fearful as to her chastity, began to reflect, What am I to do? Each crown, that of martyrdom and that of virginity, is grudged me today. But the name of virgin is not acknowledged where the Author of virginity is denied. How can one be a virgin who cherishes a harlot? How can one be a virgin who loves adulterers? How a virgin if she seeks for a lover? It is preferable to have a virgin mind than a virgin body. Each is good if each be possible; if it be not possible, let me be chaste, not to man but to God. Rahab, too, was a harlot, but after she believed in God, she found salvation. Joshua 2:9 And Judith adorned herself that she might please an adulterer, but because she did this for religion and not for love, no one considered her an adulteress. Judith x This instance turned out well. For if she who entrusted herself to religion both preserved her chastity and her country, perhaps I, by preserving my religion, shall also preserve my chastity. But if Judith had preferred her chastity to her religion, when her country had been lost, she would also have lost her chastity.

25. Itaque talibus informata exemplis, simul animo tenens verba Domini, quibus ait: Quicumque perdiderit animam suam propter me, inveniet eam (Marc. X, 39); flevit, tacuit, ne eam vel loquentem adulter audiret: nec pudoris elegit iniuriam, sed Christi recusavit. Aestimate utrum adulterare potuerit corpus, quae nec vocem adulteravit.

25. And so, instructed by such examples, and at the same time bearing in mind the words of the Lord, where He says: Whosoever shall lose his life for My sake, shall find it, Matthew 10:39 she wept, and was silent, that the adulterer might not even hear her speaking, and she did not choose the wrong done to her modesty, but rejected wrong done to Christ. Consider whether it was possible for her to allow her body to be unchaste, who guarded even her speech.

26. Iamdudum verecundatur oratio mea, et quasi adire gestorum seriem criminosam atque explanare formidat. Claudite aurem, virgines. Ducitur puella Dei ad lupanar. Sed aperite aurem, virgines. Christi virgo prostitui potest, adulterari non potest. Ubicumque virgo Dei est, templum Dei est: nec lupanaria infamant castitatem, sed castitas etiam loci abolet infamiam.

26. For some time my words have been becoming bashful, and fear to laud on or describe the wicked series of what was done. Close your ears, you virgins! The Virgin of God is taken to a house of shame. But now unclose your ears, you virgins. The Virgin of Christ can be exposed to shame, but cannot be contaminated. Everywhere she is the Virgin of God, and the Temple of God, and houses of ill-fame cannot injure chastity, but chastity does away with the ill-fame of the place.

27. Fit ingens petulantium concursus ad fornicem. Discite martyrum miracula, sanctae virgines, dediscite locorum vocabula. Clauditur intus columba, strepunt accipitres foris: certant singuli, quis praedam primus invadat. At illa manibus ad coelum levatis, quasi ad domum venisset orationis, non ad libidinis diversorium: Christe, inquit, qui domuisti Danieli virgini feros leones (Dan. XIV, 39) , potes etiam domare hominum feras mentes. Chaldaeis roravit ignis (Dan. III, 50) , Iudaeis se unda suspendit (Exod. XIV, 21) , misericordia tua, non natura sua. Susanna ad supplicium genu fixit, et de adulteris triumphavit (Dan. XIII, 42) : aruit dextera quae templi tui dona violavit (III Reg. XIII, 4) : nunc templum ipsum attrectatur tuum; ne patiaris incestum sacrilegii, qui non passus es furtum. Benedicatur et nunc nomen tuum; ut quae ad adulterium veni, virgo discedam.

27. A great rush of wanton men is made to the place. Listen, you holy virgins, to the miracles of the martyr, forget the name of the place. The door is shut within, the hawks cry without; some are contending who shall first attack the prey. But she, with her hands raised to heaven, as though she had come to a house of prayer, not to a resort of lust, says: O Christ, Who tamed the fierce lions for the virgin Daniel, Daniel 6:22 You can also tame the fierce minds of men. Fire became as dew to the Hebrew children, the water stood up for the Jews, of Your mercy, not of its own nature. Exodus 14:22 Susanna knelt down for punishment and triumphed over her adulterous accusers, the right hand withered which violated the gifts of Your temple; and now your temple itself is violated; suffer not sacrilegious incest, You Who did not suffer theft. Let Your Name be now again glorified in that I who came here for shame, may go away a virgin!

28. Vix compleverat precem, et ecce vir militis specie terribilis irrupit. Quemadmodum eum virgo tremuit, cui populus tremens cessit? Sed non illa immemor lectionis: Et Daniel, inquit, supplicium Susannae spectaturus advenerat: et quam populus damnavit, unus absolvit (Dan. XIII, 45 et seq.) . Potest et in hoc lupi habitu ovis latere. Habet et Christus milites suos, qui etiam legiones habet (Matth. XXVI, 53) . Aut fortasse percussor intravit. Ne vereare, anima, talis solet martyres facere. O virgo, fides tua te salvam fecit!

28. Scarcely had she finished her prayer, when, lo! A man with the aspect of a terrible warrior burst in. How the virgin trembled before him to whom the trembling people gave way. But she did not forget what she had read. Daniel, said she, had gone to see the punishment of Susanna, and alone pronounced her guiltless, whom the people had condemned. A sheep may be hidden in the shape of this wolf. Christ has His soldiers also, Who is Master of legions. Matthew 26:53 Or, perchance, an executioner has come in. Fear not, my soul, such an one makes martyrs. O Virgin! Your faith has saved you.

29. Cui miles: Ne, quaeso, paveas, soror. Frater huc veni salvare animam, non perdere. Serva me, ut ipsa serveris. Quasi adulter ingressus, si vis, martyr egrediar. Vestimenta mutemus; conveniunt mihi tua, et mea tibi: sed utraque Christo. Tua vestis me verum militem faciet, mea te virginem. Bene tu vestieris, ego melius exuar, ut me persecutor agnoscat. Sume habitum, qui abscondat feminam: trade, qui consecret martyrem. Induere chlamidem quae occultet membra virginis, servetque pudorem. Sume pileum quod tegat crines, abscondat ora. Solent erubescere qui lupanar intraverint. Sane cum egressa fueris, ne respicias retro, memor uxoris Loth quae naturam suam, quia impudicos licet castis oculis respexit, amisit (Gen. XIX, 26) . Nec vereare ne quid pereat sacrificio. Ego pro te hostiam Deo reddo, tu pro me militem Christo. Habes bonam militiam castitatis, quae stipendiis militat sempiternis: Ioricam iustitiae, quae spiritali munimine corpus includat: scutum fidei, quo vulnus repellas: galeam salutis; ibi enim est praesidium nostrae salutis, ubi Christus: quoniam mulieris caput vir, virginis Christus.

29. And the soldier said to her: Fear not, sister, I pray you. I, a brother, have come hither to save life, not to destroy it. Save me, that you yourself may be saved. I came in like an adulterer, to go forth, if you will, as a martyr. Let us change our attire, mine will fit you, and yours will fit me, and each for Christ. Your robe will make me a true soldier, mine will make you a virgin. You will be clothed well, I shall be unclothed even better that the persecutor may recognize me. Take the garment which will conceal the woman, give me that which shall consecrate me a martyr. Put on the cloak which will hide the limbs of a virgin, but preserve her modesty. Take the cap which will cover your hair and conceal your countenance. They who have entered houses of ill-fame are wont to blush. When you have gone forth, take care not to look back, remembering Lot's wife, Genesis 19:26 who lost her very nature because she looked back at what was unchaste, though with chaste eyes. And be not afraid lest any part of the sacrifice fail. I will offer the victim to God for you, do you offer the soldier to Christ for me. You have served the good service of chastity, the wages of which are everlasting life; you have the breastplate of righteousness, which protects the body with spiritual armour, the shield of faith with which to ward off wounds, and the helmet of salvation, Ephesians 6:14-17 for there is the defense of our salvation where Christ is, since the man is the head of the woman. and Christ of the virgin.

30. Et inter haec verba chlamydem exuit. Suspectus tamen adhuc habitus et persecutoris et adulteri. Virgo cervicem, chlamydem miles offerre. Quae pompa illa, quae gratia, cum in lupanari de martyrio certarent! Addantur personae, miles et virgo, hoc est, dissimiles inter se natura, sed Dei miseratione consimiles; ut compleatur oraculum: Tunc lupi et agni simul pascentur (Esai. LXV, 25) . Ecce agna et lupus non solum pascuntur simul, sed etiam immolantur. Quid plura? Mutato habitu, evolat puella de laqueo, iam non suis alis, ut pote quae spiritalibus ferebatur: et (quod nulla umquam viderunt saecula) egreditur de lupanari virgo, sed Christi.

30. Whilst saying this he put off his cloak. This garment has been up to this time suspected of being that of a persecutor and adulterer. The virgin offered her neck, the soldier his cloak. What a spectacle that was, what a manifestation of grace when they were contending for martyrdom in a house of ill-fame! Let the characters be also considered, a soldier and a virgin, that is, persons unlike in natural disposition, but alike by the mercy of God, that the saying might be fulfilled: Then the wolves and the lambs shall feed together. Isaiah 65:25 Behold the lamb and the wolf not only feed together but are also offered together. Why should I say more? Having changed her garment, the maiden flies from the snare, not now with wings of her own, seeing she was borne on spiritual wings, and (a sight which the ages had never seen) she leaves the house of ill-fame a virgin, but a virgin of Christ.

31. At illi qui videbant oculis, et non videbant, ceu raptores ad agnam, ceu lupi fremere ad praedam. Unus qui erat immodestior, introivit. Sed ubi hausit oculis rei textum: Quid hoc, inquit, est? Puella ingressa est, vir videtur. Ecce non fabulosum illud cerva pro virgine, sed quod verum est, miles ex virgine. At etiam audieram et non credideram, quod aquam Christus in vinum convertit (Ioan. II, 9) : iam mutare coepit et sexus. Recedamus hinc, dum adhuc qui fuimus, sumus. Numquid et ipse mutatus sum, qui aliud cerno, quam credo? Ad lupanar veni, cerno vadimonium: et tamen mutatus egrediar, pudicus exibo, qui adulter intravi.

31. But they who were looking with their eyes, yet saw not, raged like robbers for prey, or wolves for a lamb. One who was more shameless went in. But when he took in the state of the matter with his eyes, he said, What is this? A maiden entered, now a man is to be seen here. This is not the old fable of a hind instead of a maiden, but in truth a virgin become a soldier. I had heard but believed not that Christ changed water into wine; now He has begun also to change the sexes. Let us depart hence while we still are what we were. Am I too changed who see things differently from what I believe them to be? I came to a house of ill-fame, and see a surety. And yet I go forth changed, for I shall go out chaste who came in unchaste.

32. Indicio rei, quia debebatur tanto corona victori, damnatus est pro virgine, qui pro virgine comprehensus est. Ita de lupanari non solum virgo, sed etiam martyres exierunt. Fertur puella ad locum supplicii cucurrisse, certasse ambos de nece, cum ille diceret: Ego sum iussus occidi, te absolvit sententia, quando me tenuit. At illa clamare coepit: Non ego te mortis vadem elegi, sed praedem pudoris optavi. Si pudor quaeritur, manet sexus: si sanguis exposcitur, fideiussorem non desidero, habeo unde dissolvam. In me lata ista sententia, quae pro me lata est. Certe si pecuniae te fideiussorem dedissem; et absente me, iudex tuum censum feneratori adiudicasset; eadem me sententia convenires, meo patrimonio solverem tuos nexus. Si recusarem, quis me indignam indigna morte censeret? Quanto maior est capitis huius usura! Moriar innocens, ne moriar nocens. Nihil hic medium est: hodie aut rea ero tui sanguinis, aut martyr mei. Si cito redii, quis me audet excludere? Si moram feci, quis audet absolvere? Plus legibus debeo, rea non solum fugae meae, sed etiam caedis alienae. Sufficiunt membra morti, quae non sufficiebant iniuriae. Est in virgine vulneri locus, qui non erat contumeliae. Ego opprobrium declinavi, non martyrium. Tibi cessi vestem, non professionem mutavi. Quod si mihi praeripis mortem, non redemisti me, sed circumvenisti. Cave, quaeso, ne contendas, cave ne contradicere audeas. Noli eripere beneficium, quod dedisti. Dum mihi hanc sententiam negas, illam restituis superiorem. Sententia enim sententia superiore mutatur. Si posterior me non tenet, tenet superior. Possumus uterque satisfacere sententiae, si me prius patiaris occidi. In te non habent aliam quam exerceant, poenam: in virgine obnoxius pudor est. Itaque gloriosior eris, si videaris de adultera martyrem fecisse, quam de martyre adulteram reddidisse.

32. When the affair was known, because a crown was due to such a conqueror, he was condemned for the virgin who was seized for the virgin, and so not only a virgin but a martyr came forth from the house of ill-fame. It is reported that the maiden ran to the place of punishment, and that they both contended for death. He said: I am condemned to death, the sentence let you go free when it retained me. And she replied: I did not choose you as my surety on pain of death, but as a guarantee for my chastity. If chastity be attacked, my sex remains; if blood is sought, I desire none to give bail for me, I have the means to pay. The sentence was pronounced on me, which was pronounced for me. Undoubtedly, if I had offered you as security for my debt, and in my absence the judge had assigned your property to the creditor, you would share the sentence with me, and I should pay your obligations with my patrimony. Were I to refuse, who would not judge me worthy of a shameful death? How much more am I bound where there is a question of death? Let me die innocent, that I may not die guilty. In this matter there is no middle course; today I shall either be guilty of your blood or a martyr in my own. If I came back quickly, who dares to shut me out? If I delayed, who dares acquit me? I owe a greater debt to the laws who am guilty not only of my own flight, but also of the death of another. My limbs are equal to death, which were not equal to dishonour. A virgin can accept a wound who could not accept contumely. I avoided disgrace, not martyrdom. I gave up my robe to you; I did not alter my profession. And if you deprive me of death, you will not have rescued but circumvented me. Beware, pray, of resisting, beware of venturing to contend with me. Take not away the kindness you have conferred on me. In denying me the execution of this sentence, you are setting up again the former one. For the sentence is changed for a former one. If the latter binds me not, the former one does. We can each satisfy the sentence if you suffer me to be slain first. From you they can exact no other penalty, but her chastity is in danger with a virgin. And so you will be more glorious if you are seen to have made a martyr of an adulteress. than to have made again an adulteress of a martyr.

33. Quid exspectatis? Duo contenderunt, et ambo vicerunt: nec divisa est corona, sed addita. Ita sancti martyres invicem sibi beneficia conferentes, altera principium martyrio dedit, alter effectum.

33. What do you think was the end? The two contended, and both gained the victory, and the crown was not divided, but became two. So the holy martyrs, conferring benefits one on the other, gave the one the impulse and the other the result to their martyrdom.

CAPUT V.

AMICORUM DUORUM E secta Pythagorea memorabile factum cum laude recensetur; superiori tamen ostenditur esse postponendum: ubi etiam de Dionysii in spoliandis idolis irrisione, nec non de deorum in tolerandis illius sacrilegiis infirmitate disseritur, posita ex adverso quam Deus olim coepit de Ieroboam, severa ultione.

CHAPTER 5.

The story of the two Pythagorean friends, Damon and Pythias, is related by St. Ambrose, who points out that the case mentioned in the last chapter is more praiseworthy. A comparison is instituted between the treatment of their gods by heathen without any punishment, and Jeroboam's irreverence with its punishment.

34. At etiam philosophorum gymnasia Damonem et Pythiam Pythagoreos in coelum ferunt, quorum unus cum esset morti adiudicatus, commendandorum suorum tempus poposcit: tyrannus autem astutissimus, quod reperiri non posse existimaret, petivit ut sponsorem daret, qui pro se feriretur, si ipse faceret moram. Quid de duobus praeclarius, nescio. Utrumque praeclarum. Alter mortis vadem invenit, alter se obtulit. Itaque dum reus moram supplicio faceret, fideiussor vultu sereno mortem non recusavit. Cum duceretur, amicus revertitur, cervicem substituit, colla subiecit. Tunc admiratus tyrannus chariorem philosophis amicitiam quam vitam fuisse; petivit ut ipse ab his quos damnaverat, in amicitiam reciperetur. Tantam virtutis esse gratiam, ut et tyrannum inclinaret.

34. And the schools of the philosophers laud Damon and Pythias — the Pythagoreans — to the skies, of whom one, when condemned to death, asked for time to set his affairs in order, whereupon, the tyrant, in his cunning, not supposing that such could be found, asked for a bondsman who should suffer the penalty if the other delayed his return. I do not know which act of the two was the more noble. The one found the bondsman, the other offered himself. And so while he who was condemned met with some delay, the bondsman with calm countenance did not refuse death. As he was being led forth his friend returned, and offered his neck to the axe. Then the tyrant, wondering that friendship was dearer to philosophers than life, asked himself to be received into friendship by those whom he had condemned. The grace of Virtue was so great that it moved even a tyrant.

35. Digna laude, sed minora nostris. Nam illic ambo viri; hic una virgo, quae primo etiam sexum vinceret: illi amici, isti incogniti: illi tyranno uni se obtulerunt, isti tyrannis pluribus, hoc etiam crudelioribus, quod ille pepercit, isti occiderunt: inter illos in uno obnoxia necessitas, in his amborum voluntas libera. Hoc quoque isti prudentiores, quod illis studii sui finis amicitiae gratia, istis corona martyrii; illi enim certaverunt hominibus, isti Deo.

35. These things are worthy of praise; but are inferior to our instance. For those two were men, with us one was a virgin, who had first to be superior to her sex; those were friends, these were unknown to each other; those offered themselves to one tyrant, these to many tyrants; and these more cruel, for in the former case the tyrant spared them, these slew them; with the former one was bound by necessity, with these the will of each was free. In this, too, the latter were the wiser, that with those the end of their zeal was the pleasure of friendship, with these the crown of martyrdom, for they strove for men, these for God.

36. Et quoniam rei istius fecimus mentionem, par est contexere quid de diis suis senserit, quo magis infirmos iudicetis, quos irrident sui. Namque is cum venisset in templum Iovis, amictum aureum quo operiebatur simulacrum eius, detrahi iussit, imponi laneum, dicens aurum hyeme frigidum, aestate onerosum esse. Sic deum irrisit suum, ut nec onus ferre posse, nec frigus putaret. Idem cum Aesculapii barbam vidisset auream, tolli imperavit, incongruum esse appellans ut filius barbam haberet, patre non habente. Idem simulacris tenentibus aureas pateras ademit, allegans accipere se debere, quod dii darent: Quoniam haec sunt vota, inquit, hominum, ut a diis quae bona sunt, adipiscantur: nihil autem auro melius: quod tamen si malum est, habere deos non debere: si bonum est, habere magis homines debere, qui uti scirent.

36. And since we have mentioned that man who was condemned, it is fitting to add what he thought of his gods, that you may judge how weak they are whom their own followers deride. For he, having come into the temple of Jupiter, bade them take off the fillet of gold with which his image was crowned, and to put on one of wool instead, saying that the golden fillet was cold in winter and heavy in summer. So he derided his god as being unable to bear either a weight or cold. He, too, when he saw the golden beard of Æsculapius, bade them remove it, saying that it was not fit for the son to have a beard when the father had none. Again, he took away the golden bowls from the images which held them, saying that he ought to receive what the gods gave. For, said he, men make prayers to receive good things from the gods, and nothing is better than gold; if, however, gold be evil, the gods ought not to have it; if it be good, it is better that men should have it who know how to use it.

37. Ita ludibrio habiti sunt, ut neque Iupiter vestem suam defendere potuerit, nec barbam Aesculapius, nec Apollo pubescere adhuc coeperit, neque omnes qui dicuntur dii, retrahere potuerint pateras quas tenebant: non tam furti reatum timentes, quam sensum non habentes. Quis igitur eos colat, qui nec defendere se quasi dii, nec abscondere quasi homines possunt?

37. Such objects of ridicule were they, that neither could Jupiter defend his garment, nor Æsculapius his beard, for Apollo had not yet begun to grow one; nor could all those who are esteemed gods keep the golden bowls which they were holding, not fearing the charge of theft so much as not having any feeling. Who, then, would worship them, who can neither defend themselves as gods nor hide themselves as men?

38. At in templo Dei nostri cum Ieroboam, rex sceleratissimus, dona quae pater eius posuerat, auferret, ac super sanctum altare libaret idolis; nonne dextera eius quam tetendit, aruit, nec sua ei quae invocabat, idola profuerunt? Deinde conversus ad Dominum, rogavit veniam, statimque manus eius quae aruerat sacrilegio, sanata est religione (III Reg. XIII, 2 et seq.) . Tam maturum in uno et misericordiae divinae et indignationis exemplum exstitit, ut sacrificanti subito dextera adimeretur, poenitenti venia daretur.

38. But when in the temple of our God, that wicked king Jeroboam took away the gifts which his father had laid up, and offered to idols upon the holy altar, did not his right hand, which he stretched out, wither, and his idols, which he called upon, were not able to help him? Then, turning to the Lord, he asked for pardon, and at once his hand which had withered by sacrilege was healed by true religion. So complete an example was there set forth in one person, both of divine mercy and wrath when he who was sacrificing suddenly lost his right hand, but when penitent received forgiveness.

CAPUT VI.

LIBRI SECUNDI CONCLUSIO, qua testatur Auctor modestissimus, si quid hactenus boni scripserit, id totum in virginum merita referendum: sui autem officii fuisse asseverat, antequam severiora traderet praecepta, earam animos orationis atque exemplorum suavitate mulcere; quod et humano usu, et divinorum codicum auctoritate demonstrat.

CHAPTER 6.

St. Ambrose, in concluding the second book, ascribes any good there may be in it to the merits of the virgins, and sets forth that it was right before laying down any severe precepts to encourage them by examples, as is done both in human teaching and in holy Scripture.

39. Haec ego vobis, sanctae virgines, nondum triennalis sacerdos munuscula paravi, licet usu indoctus, sed vestris edoctus moribus. Quantus etenim adolescere usus potuit tam parva initiatae religionis aetate? Si quos hic flores cernitis, de vestrae vitae collectos legite sinu. Non sunt haec praecepta virginibus, sed de virginibus exempla. Vestrae virtutis effigiem nostra depinxit oratio, vestrae gravitatis imaginem quasi in speculo quodam sermonis istius cernitis refulgere. Vos si quam nostro gratiam inhalastis ingenio, vestrum est quidquid iste redolet liber. Et quoniam quot homines, tot sententiae: si quid defaecatum est in sermone nostro, omnes legant: si quid decoctum, maturiores probent: si quid modestum, pectoribus inhaereat, genas pingat: si quid florulentum, aetas florulenta non improbet.

39. I, who have been not yet three years a bishop, have prepared this offering for you, holy virgins, although untaught by my own experience, yet having learned much from your mode of life. For what experience could have grown up in so short a time of being initiated in religion? If you find any flowers herein, gather them together in the bosom of your lives. These are not precepts for virgins, but instances taken from virgins. My words have sketched the likeness of your virtue, you may see the reflection of your gravity, as it were, in the mirror of this discourse. If you have received any pleasure from my ability, all the fragrance of this book is yours. And since there are as many opinions as there are persons, if there be anything simple in my treatise let all read it; if anything stronger, let the more mature prove it; if anything modest, let it cleave to the breast and tinge the cheeks; if there be anything flowery, let the flowery age of youth not disdain it.

40. Debuimus sponsae excitare amorem; scriptum est enim: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum (Deut. VI, 5) . Debuimus in nuptiis calamistris quibusdam crines saltem orationis ornare; scriptum est enim: Plaude manu, et percute pede (Ezech. XXI, 14) . Debuimus perpetuos spargere thalamos rosis. Etiam in his coniugiis temporalibus nubenti prius plauditur, quam imperatur; ne ante dura offendant imperia, quam blanditiis amor fotus inolescat.

40. We ought to stir up the love of the bride, for it is written: You shall love the Lord your God. Deuteronomy 6:5 At bridal feasts we ought to adorn the hair at least with some ornaments of prayer, for it is written: Smite the hands together, and strike with the foot. Ezekiel 21:14 We ought to scatter roses on those uninterrupted bridals. Even in these temporal marriages the bride is received with acclamation before she receives commands, lest hard commands should hurt her, before love cherished by kindness grows strong.

41. Equorum vis plausae sonitum discit amare cervicis, ne recuset iugum. Denique prius assuescitur verbo lasciviae, quam verbere disciplinae. Ast ubi colla subdiderit iugo; et habena constringit, et stimulus urget, et compares trahunt, et iugalis invitat. Sic etiam virgo nostra debuit prius amore pio ludere, aurea thori coelestis fulcra mirari in ipso vestibulo nuptiarum, et postes frondium sertis cernere coronatos, et chori strepentis interius haurire delicias; ne se prius Dominico iugo timefacta subduceret, quam vocata inclinaret.

41. Horses learn to love the sound of patting their necks, that they may not refuse the yoke, and are first trained with words of enticement before the stripe of discipline. But when the horse has submitted its neck to the yoke, the rein pulls in, and the spur urges on, and its companions draw it, and the driver bids it. So, too, our virgin ought first to play with pious love, and admire the golden supports of the heavenly marriage couch on the very threshold of marriage, and to see the door-posts adorned with wreaths of leaves, and to taste the delight of the musicians playing within; that she may not through fear withdraw herself from the Lord's yoke, before she obeys His call.

42. Veni igitur huc a Libano, Sponsa, veni huc a Libano, transibis et pertransibis (Cant. IV, 8) . Saepius euim nobis iste versiculus recantandus est; ut vel Dominicis vocata verbis, sequatur, si qua non credit humanis. Hoc nos magisterium non invenimus, sed accepimus; sic instituit mystici carminis doctrina coelestis: Osculetur me ab osculis oris sui, quia ubera tua super vinum, et odor unguentorum tuorum super omnia aromata. Unguentum exinanitum est nomen tuum (Cant. I, 1, 2) . Totus iste deliciarum locus ludum sonat, plausum excitat, amorem provocat. Ideo, inquit, adolescentulae dilexerunt, et attraxerunt te: retro odorem unguentorum tuorum curramus: Induxit me Rex in tabernaculum suum (Ibid., 3) . Ab osculis coepit, ut ad tabernaculum perveniret.

42. Come, then, hither from Lebanon, My spouse, come hither from Lebanon, you shall pass and pass through. Song of Songs 4:8 This verse must be often repeated by us, that at least being called by the words of the Lord, she may follow if there be any who will not trust the words of man. We have not formed this power for ourselves, but have received it; this is the heavenly teaching of the mystic song: Let Him kiss me with the kisses of His mouth, for Your breasts are better than wine, and the odor of Your ointments is above all spices. Your name is as ointment poured forth. Song of Songs 1:2-3 The whole of that place of delights sounds of sport, stirs up approval, calls forth love. Therefore, it continues, have the maidens loved You and have drawn You, let us run after the odour of Your ointments. The King has brought me into His chamber. Song of Songs 1:3-4 She began with kisses, and so attained to the chamber.

43. At illa tam patiens duri laboris, exercitataeque virtutis, ut aperiat manu claustra, in agrum exeat, in castellis maneat; in principio tamen retro odorem currit unguenti: mox cum in tabernaculum venerit unguentum mutatur a castellis. Denique quo vadit, vide: Si murus, inquit, est, aedificemus super eum turres argenteas (Cant. VIII, 9) . Quae ludebat osculis, iam turres erigit; ut pretiosis sanctorum turrita fastigiis, non solum hostiles frustretur incursus, verum etiam bonorum propugnacula struat tuta meritorum.

43. She, now so patient of hard toil, and of practised virtue, as to open the bars with her hand, go forth into the field, and abide in strongholds, at the beginning ran after the odour of the ointment; soon when she has come into the chamber the ointment is changed. And see whither she goes: If it be a wall, it is said, we will build upon it towers of silver. Song of Songs 8:9 She who sported with kisses now builds towers that, encircled with the precious battlements of the saints, she may not only render fruitless the attacks of the enemy, but also erect the safe defences of holy merits.

LIBER III

BOOK III.

CAPUT 1.

LIBERII MARCELLINAM DATO virginitatis velamine consecrantis refertur oratio: cuius exordium tum a frequentia confluentium ad illius Sponsi nuptias, a quo ipsos pascendos narrat, deducit: tum a convenientia diei quo ex virgine natus est Christus, ad cuius amorem eleganti perfectionum eius descriptione illam inflammat.

CHAPTER 1.

St. Ambrose now goes back to the address of Liberius when he gave the veil to Marcellina. Touching on the crowds pressing to the bridal feast of that Spouse Who feeds them all, he passes on to the fitness of her profession on the day on which Christ was born of a Virgin, and concludes with a fervent exhortation to love Him.

1. Quoniam quae habuimus superioribus duobus libris digessimus, tempus est, soror sancta, ea quae mecum conferre soles, beatae memoriae Liberii praecepta revolvere; ut quo vir sanctior, eo sermo accedat gratior. Namque is, cum Salvatoris natali ad apostolum Petrum virginitatis professionem vestis quoque mutatione signares, (quo enim melius die, quam quo virgo posteritatem acquisivit?) astantibus etiam puellis Dei compluribus quae certarent invicem de tua societate: Bonas, inquit, filia, nuptias desiderasti. Vides quantus ad natalem Sponsi tui populus convenerit, ut nemo impastus recedit? Hic est qui rogatus ad nuptias aquam in vina convertit (Ioan. II, 9) . In te quoque sincerum sacramentum conferet virginitatis, quae prius eras obnoxia vilibus naturae materialis elementis. Hic est qui quinque panibus et duobus piscibus quatuor millia populi in deserto pavit (Luc. IX, 13 et seq.) . Plures potuit, si plures iam tunc qui pascerentur, fuissent. Denique ad tuas nuptias plures vocavit: sed iam non panis ex hordeo, sed corpus ministratur e coelo.

1. Inasmuch as I have digressed in what I have said in the two former hooks, it is now time, holy sister, to reconsider those precepts of Liberius of blessed memory which you used to talk over with me, as the holier the man the more pleasing is his discourse. For he, when on the Nativity of the Saviour in the Church of St. Peter you signified your profession of virginity by your change of attire (and what day could be better than that on which the Virgin received her child?) while many virgins were standing round and vying with each other for your companionship. You, said he, my daughter, have desired a good espousal. You see how great a crowd has come together for the birthday of your Spouse, and none has gone away without food. This is He, Who, when invited to the marriage feast, changed water into wine. John 2:9 He, too, will confer the pure sacrament of virginity on you who before were subject to the vile elements of material nature. This is He Who fed four thousand in the wilderness with five loaves and two fishes. Luke 9:13 He could have fed more; if more had been there to be fed, they would have been. And now He has called many to your espousal, but it is not now barley bread, but the Body from heaven which is supplied.

2. Hodie quidem secundum hominem homo natus ex virgine, sed ante omnia generatus ex Patre: qui matrem corpore, virtute referat patrem. Unigenitus in terris, unigenitus in coelo: Deus ex Deo, partus ex virgine: iustitia de Patre, virtus de potente, lumen ex lumine: non impar generantis, non potestate discretus: non Verbi extensione, aut prolatione confusus, ut cum Patre mixtus, sed ut a Patre generationis iure distinctus sit: ipse est fraternus tuus, sine quo nec coelestia, nec marina, nec terrestria, consistunt (Cant. V, 1) . Verbum Patris bonum, quod erat, inquit, in principio: habes eius aeternitatem. Et erat, inquit, apud Patrem (Ioan. I, 1 et seq.) : habes indiscretam a Patre, inseparabilemque virtutem. Et Deus erat Verbum: habes ingenitam eius divinitatem; de compendio enim tibi fides est haurienda.

2. Today, indeed, He was born after the manner of men, of a Virgin, but was begotten of the Father before all things, resembling His mother in body, His Father in power. Only-begotten on earth, and Only-begotten in heaven. God of God, born of a Virgin, Righteousness from the Father, Power from the Mighty One, Light of Light, not unequal to His Father; nor separated in power, not confused by extension of the Word or enlargement as though mingled with the Father, but distinguished from the Father by virtue of His generation. He is your Brother, Song of Songs 5:1 without Whom neither things in heaven, nor things in the sea, nor things on earth consist. The good Word of the Father, Which was, it is said, in the beginning, John 1:1 here you have His eternity. And, it is said, the Word was with God. John 1:1 Here you have His power, undivided and inseparable from the Father. And the Word was God. John 1:1 Here you have His unbegotten Godhead, for your faith is to be drawn from the mutual relationship.

3. Hunc, filia, dilige, quia bonus est: Nemo enim bonus nisi unus Deus (Luc. XVIII, 19) . Si enim non dubitatur quia Deus Filius, Deus autem bonus est: utique non dubitatur, quia Deus bonus Filius. Hunc, inquam, dilige. Ipse est quem Pater genuit ante Luciferum, ut aeternum: ex utero generavit (Psal. CIX, 3) , ut Filium: ex corde eructavit (Psal. XLIV, 2) , ut Verbum. Ipse est in quo complacuit Pater (Matth. XVII, 5) : ipse est Patris brachium, quia creator est omnium: Patris sapientia (Coloss. II, 3) , quia ex Dei ore processit: Patris virtus (Cor. I, 30) , quia divinitatis in eo corporaliter habitat plenitudo. Quem Pater ita diligit, ut in sinu portet, ad dexteram locet, ut sapientiam discas, virtutem noveris.

3. Love him, my daughter, for He is good. For, None is good save God only. Luke 18:19 For if there be no doubt that the Son is God, and that God is good, there is certainly no doubt that God the Son is good. Love Him I say. He it is Whom the Father begot before the morning star, as being eternal, He brought Him forth from the womb as the Son; He uttered him from His heart, as the Word. He it is in Whom the Father is well pleased; Matthew 17:5 He is the Arm of the Father, for He is Creator of all, and the Wisdom 1 Corinthians 1:30 of the Father, for He proceeded from the mouth of God; Wisdom 24:3 the Power of the Father, because the fullness of the Godhead dwells in Him bodily. Colossians 2:9 And the Father so loved Him, as to bear Him in His bosom, and place Him at His right hand, that you may learn His wisdom, and know His power.

4. Si igitur virtus Dei Christus, numquid aliquando sine virtute Deus? Numquid aliquando sine Filio Pater? Si semper ntique Pater, utique semper et Filius. Perfecti ergo patris perfectus est Filius. Nam qui virtuti derogat, ei derogat, cuius est virtus. Inaequalitatem non recipit perfecta divinitas. Dilige igitur, quem Pater diligit: honorifica, quem honorificat Pater: Qui enim non honorificat Filium, non honorificat Patrem. Et qui negat Filium, nec Patrem habet (Ioan. V, 23) . Haec quantum ad fidem.

4. If, then, Christ is the Power of God, was God ever without power? Was the Father ever without the Son? If the Father of a certainty always was, of a certainty the Son always was. So He is the perfect Son of a perfect Father. For he who derogates from the power, derogates from Him Whose is the power. The Perfection of the Godhead does not admit of inequality. Love, then, Him Whom the Father loves, honour Him Whom the Father honours, for he that honours not the Son, honours not the Father, John 5:23 and whoever denies the Son, has not the Father. 1 John 2:23 So much as to the faith.

CAPUT II.

VIRGINIS INSTITUTIONEM AGGREDITUR, quae in potu et cibo ratio servanda, et quo pacto motus animae cohibendi sint, praecipiens: qua occasione ubi fabulosam Hippolyti necem ac suscitationem retulit suggillavitque, postremo calidiores escas et convivia vitanda monet.

CHAPTER 2.

Touching next upon the training of a virgin, he speaks of moderation in food and drink, and of restraint upon the impulses of the mind, introducing some teaching upon the fable of the death and resurrection of Hippolytus, and advises the avoidance of certain meats.

5. Sed interdum etiam cum fides tuta sit, iuventus suspecta est. Modico itaque vino utere, ne infirmitatem corporis augeas, non ut voluptatem excites; incendunt enim pariter duo, vinum et adolescentia. Infrenent etiam teneram aetatem ieiunia, et parcimonia cibi retinaculis quibusdam indomitas cohibeat cupiditates. Ratio revocet, mitiget spes, restringat metus. Nam qui moderari nescit cupiditatibus, is sicut equis raptatus indomitis, volvitur, obteritur, laniatur, affligitur.

5. But sometimes even when faith is to be relied upon, youth is not trusted. Use wine, therefore, sparingly, in order that the weakness of the body may not increase, not for pleasurable excitement, for each alike kindles a flame, both wine and youth. Let fasts also put a bridle on tender age, and spare diet restrain the unsubdued appetites with a kind of rein. Let reason check, hope subdue, and fear curb them. For he who knows not how to govern his desires, like a man run away with by wild horses, is overthrown, bruised, torn, and injured.

6. Quod aliquando iuveni ob amorem Dianae contigisse proditur. Sed poeticis mendaciis coloratur fabula, ut Neptunus praelati rivalis dolore incitatus, equis dicatur furorem immisisse, quo eius magna potentia praedicetur, quod iuvenem non virtute vicit, sed fraude decepit. Unde etiam sacrificium quotannis instaurant Dianae, ut equus ad eius immoletur aras. Quam virginem dicunt, quae (id quod etiam meretrices erubescere solent) amare potuit non amantem. Sed habeant per me licet fabulae suae auctoritatem; quia licet scelestum utrumque, minus tamen sit iuvenem amore adulterae sic flagrasse ut periret, quam duos, ut ipsi dicunt, deos de adulterio certasse: Iovem autem dolorem scortantis filiae in medicum vindicasse adulteri, quod eius curarit vulnera, qui Dianam in silvis adulteraverit, venatricem sane optimam non ferarum, sed libidinum, sed ferarum etiam, ut nuda venaretur.

6. And this is said to have happened to a youth for his love of Diana. But the fable is colored with poet's tales, that Neptune, stirred with grief at his rival being preferred, sent madness upon his horses, whereby his great power might be set forth in that he overcame the youth, not by strength, but by fraud. And from this event a yearly sacrifice is celebrated for Diana, when a horse is offered at her altar. And they say that she was a virgin, and (of which even harlots would be ashamed) yet could love one who did not love her. But as far as I am concerned let their fables have authority, for though each be criminal, it is yet a less evil that a youth should have been so enamoured of an adulteress as to perish, than that two gods should, as they relate, contend for committing adultery, and that Jupiter avenged the grief of his daughter who played the harlot on the physician who cured the wound of him who had violated Diana in the woods, a most excellent huntress, no doubt, not of wild beasts, but of lust: yet also of wild beasts, so that she was worshipped naked.

7. Dent igitur Neptuno dominatum furoris, ut astruant crimen incesti amoris. Dent Dianae regnum in silvis quas incolebat, ut confirment adulterium quod gerebat. Dent Aesculapio quod mortuum reformaverit, dummodo profiteantur quod fulminatus ipse non evaserit. Dent etiam Iovi fulmina quae non habuit, ut testificentur quae habuit opprobria. Sed a fabulis ad propositum revertamur.

7. Let them ascribe, then, to Neptune the mastery over madness, in order to fix on him the crime of unchaste love. Let them ascribe to Diana the rule over the woods, wherein she dwelt, so as to establish the adultery which she practised. Let them ascribe to Æsculapius the restoration of the dead so long as they confess that when struck by lightning he himself escaped not. Let them also ascribe to Jupiter the thunderbolts which he did not possess, so that they witness to the disgrace with which he was laden.

8. Escis quoque omnibus quae gignant membris calorem, parce utendum puto; carnes enim etiam aquilas volantes deponunt. In vobis quoque ales interior illa, de qua legimus: Renovabitur sicut aquila iuventus tua (Psal. CII, 5) , sublime tenens, virgineo praepes volatu, superfluae carnis nesciat appetentiam. Conviviorum devitandae celebritates, fugiendae salutationes.

8. And I think that one should sparingly eat all kinds of food which cause heat to the limbs, for flesh drags down even eagles as they fly. But within you let that bird of which we read, Your youth shall be renewed like the eagle’s, holding its course on high, swift in its virgin flight, be ignorant of the desire for unnecessary food. The gathering of banquets and salutations must be avoided.

CAPUT III.

HORTATUR AD FUGIENDAS visitationes, ad servandum pudorem, nec non ad silentium exemplo Mariae per mysteriorum celebrationem praebendum: ea gratia ethnici adolescentis facto, et profani poetae dicto memoratis, sancti cuiusdam sacerdotis miraculum adiungit.

CHAPTER 3.

Virgins are exhorted to avoid visits, to observe modesty, to be silent during the celebration of the Mysteries after the example of Mary. Then after narrating the story of a heathen youth, and saying of a poet, St. Ambrose relates a miracle wrought by a holy priest.

9. Ipsas visitationes in iunioribus esse parciores volo, si forte deferendum sit parentibus aut aequalibus. Teritur enim officiis pudor, audacia emicat, risus subrepit, modestia solvitur, dum affectatur urbanitas: interroganti non respondere, infantia: respondere, fabula est. Deesse igitur sermonem virgini, quam superesse malim. Nam si mulieres etiam de rebus divinis in Ecclesia iubentur tacere, domi viros suos interrogare (I Cor. XIV, 34) : de virginibus quid cautum putamus, in quibus pudor ornat aetatem, taciturnitas commendat pudorem?

9. I will, too, that visits among the younger, except such as may be due to parents and those of like age, be few. For modesty is worn away by intercourse, and boldness breaks forth, laughter creeps in, and bashfulness is lessened, while politeness is studied. Not to answer one who asks a question is childishness, to answer is nonsense. I should prefer, therefore, that conversation should rather be wanting to a virgin, than abound. For if women are bidden to keep silence in churches, even about divine things, and to ask their husbands at home, what do we think should be the caution of virgins, in whom modesty adorns their age, and silence commends their modesty.

10. An vero mediocre pudoris exemplum est, quod Rebecca cum veniret ad nuptias, et sponsum vidisset, velamen accepit (Gen. XXIV, 65) ; ne prius videretur, quam iungeretur? Et utique pulchra virgo non decori timuit, sed pudori. Quid Rachel; quemadmodum extorto osculo, flevit et gemuit: nec flere desisset, nisi proximum cognovisset (Gen. XXIX, 11, 12) ? Ita et pudoris servavit officium, et pietatis non omisit affectum. Quod si viro dicitur: Virginem ne consideres, ne quando scandalizet te (Eccli. IX, 5) ; quid dicendum est sacratae virgini, quae si amet, animo peccat, si amatur, et facto?

10. Was it a small sign of modesty that when Rebecca came to wed Isaac, and saw her bridegroom, she took a veil, Genesis 24:65 that she might not be seen before they were united? Certainly the fair virgin feared not for her beauty, but for her modesty. What of Rachel, how she, when Jacob’s kiss had been taken, Genesis 29:11 wept and groaned, and would not have ceased weeping had she not known him to be a kinsman? So she both observed what was due to modesty, and omitted not kindly affection. But if it is said to a man: Gaze not on a maid, lest she cause you to fall, Sirach 9:5 what is to be said to a consecrated virgin, who, if she loves, sins in mind; if she is loved, in act also?

11. Maxima est virtus tacendi, praesertim in Ecclesia. Nulla te divinarum sententia fugiet lectionum, si aurem admoveas, vocem premas. Nullum ex ore verbum quod revocare velis, proferas: sed parcior loquendi fiducia sit. Copiosum quippe in multiloquio peccatum. Homicidae dictum est: Peccasti, quiesce (Prov. X, 19) , ne peccaret amplius: sed virgini dicendum est: Quiesce, ne pecces. Conservabat enim Maria, ut legimus, omnia in corde suo quae de Filio dicebantur (Luc. II, 19) : et tu cum legitur aliquid quo Christus aut venturus annuntiatur, aut venisse ostenditur; noli fabulando obstrepere, sed mentem admove. An quidquam est indignius, quam oracula divina circumstrepi, ne audiantur, ne credantur, ne revelentur: circumsonare sacramenta confusis vocibus, ut impediatur oratio pro salute deprompta omnium?

11. The virtue of silence, especially in Church, is very great. Let no sentence of the divine lessons escape you; if you give ear, restrain your voice, utter no word with your lips which you would wish to recall, but let your boldness to speak be sparing. For in truth in much speaking there is abundance of sin. Proverbs 10:19 To the murderer it was said: You have sinned, be silent, Genesis 4:7 that he might not sin more; but to the virgin it must be said, Be silent lest you sin. For Mary, as we read, kept in heart all things that were said concerning her Son, Luke 2:19 and do you, when any passage is read where Christ is announced as about to come, or is shown to have come, not make a noise by talking, but attend. Is anything more unbecoming than the divine words should be so drowned by talking, as not to be heard, believed, or made known, that the sacraments should be indistinctly heard through the sound of voices, that prayer should be hindered when offered for the salvation of all?

12. Gentiles idolis suis reverentiam tacendo deferunt. Unde illud exemplum proditur: Alexandro sacrificante Macedonum rege, puerulum barbarum qui ei lumen accenderet, excepisse ignem brachio, atque adusto corpore, mansisse immobilem, nec dolorem prodidisse gemitu, nec tacito poenam indicasse fletu. Tanta in puero barbaro fuit disciplina reverentiae, ut natura vinceretur. Atque ille non deos, qui nulli erant, sed regem timebat. Quid enim timeret eos, quos si idem ignis contigisset, arsissent?

12. The Gentiles pay respect to their idols by silence, of which this instance is given: As Alexander, the king of the Macedonians, was sacrificing, the sleeve of a barbarian lad who was lighting the lamp for him caught fire and burnt his body, yet he remained without moving and neither betrayed the pain by a groan, nor showed his suffering by silent tears. Such was the discipline of reverence in a barbarian lad that nature was subdued. Yet he feared not the gods, who were no gods, but the king. For why should he fear those who if the same fire had caught them would have burnt?

13. Quanto melius quod quidam in convivio patris adolescens iubetur ne meretricios amores indiciis insolentibus prodat? Et tu in mysterio, Dei virgo, gemitus, screatus, tussis, risus abstine. Quod ille in convivio potest, tu in mysterio non potes? Voce virginitas prima signetur, claudat ora pudor, debilitatem excludat religio, instituat consuetudo naturam. Virginem mihi prius gravitas sua nuntiet, pudore obvio, gradu sobrio, vultu modesto; et praenuntia integritatis anteeant signa virtutis. Non satis probabilis virgo est quae requiritur, cum videtur.

13. How much better still is it where a youth at his father’s banquet is bidden not to betray by coarse gestures his unchaste loves. And do you, holy virgin, abstain from groans, cries, coughing, and laughter at the Mystery. Can you not at the Mystery do what he did at a banquet? Let virginity be first marked by the voice, let modesty close the mouth, let religion remove weakness, and habit instruct nature. Let her gravity first announce a virgin to me, a modest approach, a sober gait, a bashful countenance, and let the march of virtue be preceded by the evidence of integrity. That virgin is not sufficiently worthy of approval who has to be enquired about when she is seen.

14. Frequens sermo est, cum plurima ranarum murmura religiosae auribus plebis obstreperent, sacerdotem Dei praecepisse ut conticescerent, ac reverentiam sacrae deferrent orationi; tunc subito circumfusos strepitus quievisse. Silent igitur paludes, homines non silebunt? Et irrationabile animal per reverentiam recognoscit, quod per naturam ignorat: hominum tanta est immodestia, ut plerique deferre nesciant mentium religioni, quod deferunt aurium voluptati?

14. There is common story how, when the excessive croaking of frogs was resounding in the ears of the faithful people, the priest of God bade them be silent, and show reverence to the sacred words, and then at once the noise was stilled. Shall then the marshes keep silence and not the frogs? And shall irrational animals re-acknowledge by reverence what they know not by nature? While the shamelessness of men is such, that many care not to pay that respect to the religious feelings of their minds, which they do to the pleasure of their ears.

CAPUT IV.

RECITATA LIBERII EXHORTATIONE, sororis virtutes laudat Ambrosius, maxime vero ieiunium illius, quod tamen ut tantisper remittat, alternisque exercitiis mentem colat, hortatur, adductis in eam rem exemplis elegantissimis. Praeterea ipsam ad preces frequentandas, orationem Dominicam et psalmos noctu etiam repetendos, recitandumque antelucanis horis symbolum urget.

CHAPTER 4.

Having summed up the address of Liberius, St. Ambrose passes on to the virtues of his sister, especially her fasts, which however he advises her to moderate to some extent, and to exercise herself in other matters, after the example which he adduces. Especially he recommends the Lord's Prayer, and the repetition of Psalms by night, and the recitation of the Creed before daylight.

15. Haec tecum sanctae memoriae Liberius: quae apud alios maiora veris, apud te minora exemplis; ita omnem disciplinam non solum virtute adaequasti, sed etiam aemulatione vicisti. Namque ieiunium in praeceptis habemus, sed singulorum dierum: tu autem multiplicatis noctibus ac diebus, innumera tempora sine cibo transigis; et siquando rogaris ut cibum sumas, paulisper deponas codicem, respondes illico: Non in pane solo vivit homo, sed in omni verbo Dei (Matth. IV, 4) . Ipse epularum usus cibis obviis; ut edendi fastidio ieiunium desideretur: potus e fonte, fletus in prece, somnus in codice.

15. After such a fashion did Liberius of holy memory address you, in words beyond the reality of practice in most cases, but coming short of your performance, who have not only attained to the whole of discipline by your virtue, but have surpassed it in your zeal. For we are bidden to practise fasting, but only for single days; but you, multiplying nights and days, pass untold periods without food, and if ever requested to partake of some, and to lay aside your book a little while, you at once answer: Man does not live by bread alone, but by every word of God. Matthew 4:4 Your very meals consisted but of what food came to hand, so that fasting is to be preferred to eating what was repugnant; your drink is from the spring, your weeping and prayer combine, your sleep is on your book.

16. Haec iunioribus convenere annis, donec mens aevi matura canesceret: ast ubi domiti trophaeum corporis virgo sustulerit, moderandum labori, ut magistra suppari servetur aetati. Cito fecundis onerata palmitibus emeritae aetatis vitis crepat, nisi aliquando reprimatur. Eadem tamen donec adolescit, exuberet, et inveterata putetur; ne silvescat sarmentis, aut fetu nimio exanimata moriatur. Bonus agricola optimam vitem et fotu terrae cohibet, et defendit a frigore, et ne meridiano sole uratur, explorat. Agrum quoque vicibus exercet: vel si non patitur otiosum, diversa alternat semina, mutatis ut fetibus arva requiescant. Tu quoque, virgo veterana, pectoris tui colles diversis saltem seminibus sere, nunc alimoniis mediocribus, nunc ieiuniis parcioribus, lectione, opere, prece; ut mutatio laboris induciae sint quietis.

16. These kings were suited to younger years, while he was ripening with the gray hairs of age; but when a virgin has gained the triumph over her subdued body, she should lessen her toil, that she may be preserved as teacher for a younger age. The vine laden with the fruitful branches of full growth soon breaks unless it be from time to time kept back. But while it is young let it grow rank, and as it grows older be pruned, so as not to grow into a forest of twigs, or die deprived of life by its exceptive produce. A good husbandman by tending the soil keeps the vine in excellent order, protects it from cold, and guards it from being parched by the mid-day sun. And he works his land by turns, or if he will not let it lie fallow, he alternates his crops, so that the fields may rest through change of produce. Do you too, a veteran in virginity, at least sow the fields of your breast with different seeds, at one time with moderate sustenance, at another with sparing fasts, with reading, work, and prayer, that change of toil may be as a truce for rest.

17. Non totus messem generat ager. Hinc de collibus vineta consurgunt, illic purpurascentes cernas olivas, hic olentes rosas. Saepe etiam relictis aratris, ipse validus agricola digito solum scalpit, ut florum deponat radices: et asperis manibus quibus luctantes inter vineta flectit iuvencos, molliter ovium pressat ubera. Eo quippe melior ager est, quo numerosior fructus. Ergo et tu boni agricolae exemplum secuta, non perennibus ieiuniis tamquam depressis vomeribus humum tuam findas. Floreat in hortis tuis rosa pudoris, lilium mentis, et irriguum sacri sanguinis violaria bibant fontem. Vulgo hoc ferunt: Quod velis prolixe facere, aliquando ne feceris. Debet esse aliquid, quod Quadragesimae diebus addatur: sed ita, ut nihil ostentationis causa fiat, sed religionis.

17. The whole land does not produce the same harvest. On one side vines grow on the hills, on another you can see the purple olives, elsewhere the scented roses. And after leaving the plough, the strong husbandman with his fingers scrapes the soil to plant the roots of flowers, and with the rough hands wherewith he turns the bullocks striving among the vines, he gently presses the udders of the sheep. The land is the better the more numerous are its fruits. So do you, following the example of a good husbandman, avoid cleaving your soil with perpetual fastings as if with deep ploughings. Let the rose of modesty bloom in your garden, and the lily of the mind, and let the violet beds drink from the source of sacred blood. There is a common saying, What you wish to perform abundantly, sometimes do not do at all. There ought to be something to add to the days of Lent, but so that nothing be done for the sake of ostentation, but of religion.

18. Oratio quoque nos Deo crebra commendet. Si enim propheta dicit: Septies in die laudem dixi tibi (Psal. CXVIII, 164) , qui regni erat necessitatibus occupatus; quid nos facere oportet, qui legimus: Vigilate et orate, ne intretis in tentationem (Matth. XXVI, 41) ? Certe solemnes orationes cum gratiarum actione sunt deferendae, cum e somno surgimus, cum prodimus, cum cibum paramus sumere, cum sumpserimus, et hora incensi, cum denique cubitum pergimus.

18. Frequent prayer also commends us to God. For if the prophet says, Seven times a day have I praised You, though he was busy with the affairs of a kingdom, what ought we to do, who read: Watch and pray that you enter not into temptation? Matthew 26:41 Certainly our customary prayers ought to be said with giving of thanks, when we rise from sleep, when we go forth, when we prepare to receive food, after receiving it, and at the hour of incense, when at last we are going to rest.

19. Sed etiam in ipso cubili volo psalmos cum oratione Dominica frequenti contexas vice, vel cum evigilaveris, vel antequam corpus sopor irriget; ut te in ipso quietis exordio rerum saecularium cura liberam, divina meditantem somnus inveniat. Denique etiam qui primus philosophiae ipsius nomen invenit, quotidie priusquam cubitum iret, tibicinem iubebat molliora canere, ut anxia curis saecularibus corda mulceret. Sed ille, sicut is qui laterem lavat, saecularia saecularibus frustra cupiebat abolere; magis enim se oblinibat luto, qui remedium a voluptate quaerebat: nos autem terrenorum vitiorum colluvione detersa, ab omni inquinamento carnis mentium interna mundemus.

19. And again in your bed-chamber itself, I would have you join psalms in frequent interchange with the Lord's prayer, either when you wake up, or before sleep bedews your body, so that at the very commencement of rest sleep may find you free from the care of worldly matters, meditating upon the things of God. And, indeed, he who first found out the name of Philosophy itself, every day before he went to rest, had the flute-player play softer melodies to soothe his mind disturbed by worldly cares. But he, like a man washing tiles, fruitlessly desired to drive away worldly things by worldly means, for he was, indeed, rather besmearing himself with fresh mud, in seeking a reward from pleasure, but let us, having wiped off the filth of earthly vices, purify our utmost souls from every defilement of the flesh.

20. Symbolum quoque specialiter debemus tamquam nostri signaculum cordis antelucanis horis quotidie recensere: quo etiam cum horremus aliquid, animo recurrendum est. Quando enim sine militiae sacramento, miles in tentorio, bellator in praelio?

20. We ought, also, specially to repeat the Creed, as a seal upon our hearts, daily, before light, and to recur to it in thought whenever we are in fear of anything. For when is the soldier in his tent or the warrior in battle without his military oath?

CAPUT V.

AD LACRYMAS FUNDENDAS hortatus Davidis versiculo, vocem lectum docet hic simpliciter accipi posse, vel figurate, ut corpus nostrum significet: quam acceptionem probat et confirmat. Quomodo Christus corpus doloris susceperit, stratumque versaverit in infirmitate? Omnia in honorem Christi referenda, et spiritali laetitia exsultandum, non autem illa, quae in conviviis insaniens Ioanni Baptistae mortem intulit.

CHAPTER 5.

St. Ambrose, speaking of tears, explains David's saying, Every night wash l my couch with my tears, and goes on to speak of Christ bearing our griefs and infirmities. Everything should be referred to His honour, and we ought to rejoice with spiritual joy, but not after a worldly fashion.

21. Iam illud quis non ad nostram institutionem dictum intelligat, quod ait sanctus Propheta: Lavabo per singulas noctes lectum meum, lacrymis meis stratum meum rigabo (Psal. VI, 7) ? Nam sive lectum iuxta litteram intelligas, tantam ubertatem ostendit profundi oportere lacrymarum; ut lavetur lectus, stratum rigetur fletibus obsecrantis: fletus enim praesentium, merces est futurorum; quoniam beati qui fletis, ipsi enim ridebitis (Luc. VI, 21) : sive pro corpore accipiamus propheticum dictum, delicta corporis poenitentiae lacrymis abluamus. Fecit enim sibi lectum Salomon ex lignis Libani, columnae eius erant argenteae, acclinatorium eius aureum, dorsum eius gemmatum stratum (Cant. III, 9, 10) . Quis est iste lectus, nisi nostri corporis species? Namque in gemmis aerii species fulgoris ostenditur, in auro ignis, aqua in argento, terra per lignum: ex quibus corpus humanum quatuor constat elementis, in quo nostra recubat anima; si non aspero montium, non humi arido expers quietis existat, sed sublimis a vitiis, ligno fulta requiescat. Unde etiam David dicit: Dominus opem ferat illi super lectum doloris eius (Psal. XL, 4) . Nam lectus doloris esse qui potest, cum dolere non possit, qui non habeat sensum? Corpus autem doloris sicut corpus est mortis eius: Infelix ego homo, quis me liberabit de corpore mortis huius (Rom. VII, 24) ?

21. And who can now fail to understand that the holy prophet said for our instruction: Every night will I wash my couch and water my bed with my tears? For if you take it literally for his bed, he shows that such abundance of tears should be shed as to wash the bed and water it with tears, the couch of him who is praying, for weeping has to do with the present, rewards with the future, since it is said: Blessed are you that weep, for you shall laugh; Luke 6:21 or if we take the word of the prophet as applied to our bodies, we must wash away the offenses of the body with tears of penitence. For Solomon made himself a bed of wood from Lebanon, its pillars were of silver, its bottom of gold, its back strewn with gems. Song of Songs 3:6 What is that bed but the fashion of our body? For by gems is set forth the splendour of the brightness of the air, fire is set forth by the gold, water by silver, and earth by wood, of which four elements the human body consists, in which our soul rests, if it do not exist deprived of rest by the roughness of hills or the damp ground, but raised on high, above vices, supported by the wood. For which reason David also says: The Lord will send him help upon his bed of pain. For how can that be a bed of pain which cannot feel pain, and which has no feeling? But the body of pain is like the body of that death, of which it is said: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? Romans 7:24

22. Et quoniam versiculum induximus, in quo Dominici corporis fecimus mentionem; ne quem forte perturbet legentem quod Dominus corpus suscepit doloris, recordetur quia Lazari mortem et doluit et flevit (Ioan. XI, 35) , et in passione est vulneratus, atque ex vulnere sanguis et aqua exivit (Ioan. XIX, 34) , spiritumque exhalavit. Aqua ad lavacrum, sanguis ad potum, spiritus ad resurrectionem. Unus enim Christus est nobis spes, fides, charitas: spes in resurrectione, fides in lavacro, charitas in sacramento.

22. And since I have inserted a clause in which mention is made of the Lord's Body, lest any one should be troubled at reading that the Lord took a body of pain, let him remember that the Lord grieved and wept over the death of Lazarus, John 11:35 and was wounded in His passion, and that from the wound there went forth blood and water, John 19:34 and that He gave up His Spirit. Water for washing, Blood for drink, the Spirit for His rising again. For Christ alone is to us hope, faith, and love — hope in His resurrection, faith in the laver, and love in the sacrament.

23. Tamen ut corpus suscepit doloris, ita etiam stratum in infirmitate versavit (Ps. XL, 4) ; quia convertit in commodum carnis humanae. Nam passione infirmitas est soluta, mors resurrectione. Et tamen moerere pro saeculo, gaudere debetis in Domino: tristes ad poenitentiam, alacres ad gratiam; licet et flere cum flentibus, et gaudere cum gaudentibus oportere gentium Doctor salutari praeceptione praescripserit (Rom. XII, 15) .

23. And as He took a body of pain, so too He turned His bed in His weakness, for He converted it to the benefit of human flesh. For by His Passion weakness was ended, and death by His resurrection. And yet you ought to mourn for the world but to rejoice in the Lord, to be sad for penitence but joyful for grace, though, too, the teacher of the Gentiles by a wholesome precept has bidden to weep with them that weep, and to rejoice with them that do rejoice. Romans 12:15

aut in facto in nomine Domini nostri Iesu Christi, gratias agentes Deo Patri per ipsum (Coloss. III, 17) . Omnia ergo dicta nostra factaque referamus ad Christum, qui vitam fecit ex morte, et lucem creavit ex tenebris. Namque ut corpus aegrotum nunc calidioribus fovetur, nunc frigidioribus temperatur; remediorumque mutatio, si iuxta praeceptum fiat medici, salutaris est: si contra mandatum usurpetur, languoris augmentum est; ita medico nostro quidquid penditur Christo, remedium est: quidquid usurpatur, incommodum.

24. But let him who desires to solve the whole difficulty of this question have recourse to the same Apostle. Whatsoever you do, says he, in word or deed, do all in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, giving thanks to God the Father by Him. Colossians 3:17 Let us then refer all our words and deeds to Christ, Who brought life out of death, and created light out of darkness. For as a sick body is at one time cherished by warmth, at another soothed by cool applications, and the variation of remedies, if carried out according to the direction of the physician, is healthful, but if done in opposition to his orders increases the sickness; so whatever is paid to Christ is a remedy, whatever is done by our own will is harmful.

25. Debet igitur bene consciae mentis esse laetitia, non inconditis comessationibus, non nuptialibus excitata symphoniis; ibi enim intuta verecundia, illecebra suspecta est, ubi comes deliciarum est extrema saltatio. Ab hac virgines Dei procul esse desidero. Nemo enim, ut dixit quidam saecularium doctor, saltat sobrius, nisi insanit. Quod si iuxta sapientiam saecularem, saltationis aut temulentia auctor est, aut amentia; quid divinarum Scripturarum cautum putamus exemplis cum Ioannes praenuntius Christi, saltatricis optione iugulatus, exemplo sit plus nocuisse saltationis illecebram, quam sacrilegi furoris amentiam?

25. There ought then to be the joy of the mind, conscious of right, not excited by unrestrained feasts, or nuptial concerts, for in such modesty is not safe, and temptation may be suspected where excessive dancing accompanies festivities. I desire that the virgins of God should be far from this. For as a certain teacher of this world has said: No one dances when sober unless he is mad. Now if, according to the wisdom of this world, either drunkenness or madness is the cause of dancing, what a warning is given to us among the instances mentioned in the Divine Scriptures, where John, the forerunner of Christ, being beheaded at the wish of a dancer, is an instance that the allurements of dancing did more harm than the madness of sacrilegious anger.

CAPUT VI.

MENTIONE SANCTI PRAECURSORIS inductus, omnia caedis eius adiuncta quam eloquentissime describit et amplificat, ut a saltatione impiorumque conviviis deterreat.

CHAPTER 6.

Having mentioned the Baptist, St. Ambrose enters into a description of the events concerning his death, and speaks against dancing and the festivities of the wicked.

26. Et quoniam talis viri non strictim praetereunda est recordatio, interest ut quis, et a quibus, et quam ob causam, quomodo, et quo tempore sit occisus, advertere debeamus. Ab adulteris iustus occiditur, et a reis in iudicem capitalis sceleris poena convertitur. Deinde praemium saltatricis mors est prophetae. Postremo (quod etiam omnes barbari horrere consueverunt) inter epulas atque convivia consummandae crudelitatis profertur edictum: et a convivio ad carcerem, de carcere ad convivium feralis flagitii circumfortur obsequium. Quanta in uno facinore sunt crimina!

26. And since we must not cursorily pass by the mention of so great a man, let us consider who he was, by whom, on what account, how, and at what time he was slain. A just man, he is put to death by adulterers, and the penalty of a capital crime is turned off by the guilty on to the judge. Again the reward of the dancer is the death of the prophet. Lastly (a matter of honour even to all barbarians), the cruel sentence is given in the midst of banqueting and festivities, and the news of the deadly crime is carried from the banquet to the prison, and then from the prison to the banquet. How many crimes are there in one wicked act!

27. Exstruitur regifico luxu ferale convivium, et explorato quando maior solito turba convenerit, reginae filia intimis mandata secretis, in conspectu virorum saltatura producitur (Marc. VI, 21) . Quid enim potuit de adultera discere, nisi damnum pudoris? An quidquam est tam pronum ad libidines, quam inconditis motibus ea quae vel natura abscondit, vel disciplina velavit, membrorum operta nudare, ludere oculis, rotare cervicem, comam spargere? Merito inde in iniuriam divinitatis proceditur. Quid enim ibi verecundiae potest esse, ubi saltatur, strepitur, concrepatur?

27. A banquet of death is set out with royal luxury, and when a larger concourse than usual had come together, the daughter of the queen, sent for from within the private apartments, is brought forth to dance in the sight of men. What could she have learned from an adulteress but loss of modesty? Is anything so conducive to lust as with unseemly movements thus to expose in nakedness those parts of the body which either nature has hidden or custom has veiled, to sport with the looks, to turn the neck, to loosen the hair? Fitly was the next step an offense against God. For what modesty can there be where there is dancing and noise and clapping of hands?

28. Tunc rex, inquit, delectatus, dixit puellae, ut peteret a rege quod vellet. Deinde iuravit quod vel dimidium regni, si petisset, concederet (Ibid., 22, 23) . Vide quemadmodum saeculares ipsi de saecularibus suis iudicant potestatibus, ut pro saltatione etiam regna donentur. Puella autem admonita a matre sua, poposcit afferri sibi in disco caput Ioannis. Quod dicit: Rex contristatus est (Ibid., 25 et seq.) ; non poenitentia regis, sed confessio iniquitatis est: quam divinae habet consuetudo sententiae, ut qui gesserunt impia, ipsi propria confessione se damnent. Sed propter discumbentes, inquit. Quid indignius quam ut homicidium fieri iuberet, ne discumbentibus displiceret? Et propter ius, inquit, iurandum. O religionem novam! Tolerabilius peierasset. Unde non immerito Dominus in Evangelio iubet non esse iurandum, ne sit causa periurii; ne sit necessitas delinquendi. Itaque ne iusiurandum violaretur, percutitur innocens (Matth. V, 34) . Quid prius horrescam nescio. Tolerabiliora periuria, quam sacramenta sunt tyrannorum.

28. Then, it is said, the king being pleased, said to the damsel, that she should ask of the king whatsoever she would. Then he swore that if she asked he would give her even the half of his kingdom. Mark 6:22-23 See how worldly men themselves judge of their worldly power, so as to give even kingdoms for dancing. But the damsel, being taught by her mother, demanded that the head of John should be brought to her on a dish. That which is said that the king was sorry, is not repentance on the part of the king, but a confession of guilt, which is, according to the wont of the divine rule, that they who have done evil condemn themselves by their own confession. But for their sakes which sat with him, it is said. What is more base than that a murder should be committed in order not to displease those who sat at meat? And, it follows, for his oath's sake. What a new religion! He had better have forsworn himself. The Lord therefore in the Gospel bids us not to swear at all, Matthew 5:34 that there be no cause for perjury, and no need of offending. And so an innocent man is slain that an oath be not violated. I know which to have in the greatest horror. Perjury is more endurable than are the oaths of tyrants.

29. Quis non cum e convivio ad carcerem cursare videret, putaret prophetam iussum esse dimitti? Quis, inquam, cum audisset natalem esse Herodis, solemne convivium, puellae optionem eligendi quod vellet datam, missum ad Ioannis absolutionem non arbitraretur? Quid crudelitati cum deliciis? quid cum funeribus voluptati? Rapitur ad poenam propheta convivali tempore, convivali praecepto, quo non cuperet vel absolvi: perimitur gladio, caput eius affertur in disco (Marc. VI, 27 et seq.) . Hoc crudelitati ferculum debebatur, quo insatiata epulis feritas vesceretur.

29. Who would not think when he saw some one running from the banquet to the prison, Mark 6:27 that orders had been given to set the prophet free? Who, I say, having heard that it was Herod's birthday, and of the state banquet, and the choice given to the damsel of choosing whatever she wished, would not think that the man was sent to set John free? What has cruelty in common with delicacies? What have death and pleasure in common? The prophet is hurried to suffer at a festal time by a festal order, by which he would even wish to be set free; he is slain by the sword, and his head is brought on a platter. This dish was well suited to their cruelty, in order that their insatiate savageness might be feasted.

30. Intuere, rex acerbissime, tuo spectacula digna convivio. Porrige dexteram, ne quid saevitiae tuae desit; ut inter digitos tuos rivi defluant sancti cruoris. Et quoniam non exsaturari epulis fames, non restingui poculis potuit inauditae saevitiae sitis; bibe sanguinem scaturientibus adhuc venis exsecti capitis profluentem. Cerne oculos in ipsa morte sceleris tui testes, adversantes conspectum deliciarum. Clauduntur lumina non tam mortis necessitate, quam horrore luxuriae. Os aureum illud exsangue, cuius sententiam ferre non poteras, conticescit, et adhuc times. Lingua tamen, quae solet etiam post mortem officium servare viventis, palpitante licet motu, damnabat incestum. Portatur hoc caput ad Herodiadem: laetatur, exsultat, quasi crimen evaserit; quia iudicem trucidavit.

30. Look, most savage king, at the sights worthy of your feast. Stretch forth your right hand, that nothing be wanting to your cruelty, that streams of holy blood may pour down between your fingers. And since the hunger for such unheard-of cruelty could not be satisfied by banquets, nor the thirst by goblets, drink the blood pouring from the still flowing veins of the cut-off head. Behold those eyes, even in death, the witnesses of your crime, turning away from the sight of the delicacies. The eyes are closing, not so much owing to death, as to horror of luxury. That bloodless golden mouth, whose sentence you could not endure, is silent, and yet you fear. Yet the tongue, which even after death is wont to observe its duty as when living, condemned, though with trembling motion, the incest. This head is borne to Herodias: she rejoices, she exults as though she had escaped from the crime, because she has slain her judge.

31. Quid dicitis vos, sanctae feminae? Videtis quid docere, quid etiam dedocere filias debeatis? Saltat, sed adulterae filia. Quae vero pudica, quae casta est, filias suas religionem doceat, non saltationem. Vos autem, graves et prudentes viri, discite detestabilium hominum epulas vitare. Si talia sunt convivia, qualia iudicia perfidorum?

31. What say you, holy women? Do you see what you ought to teach, and what also to unteach your daughters? She dances, but she is the daughter of an adulteress. But she who is modest, she who is chaste, let her teach her daughter religion, not dancing. And do you, grave and prudent men, learn to avoid the banquets of hateful men. If such are the banquets, what will be the judgment of the impious?

CAPUT VII.

QUAERENTI MARCELLINAE QUID sentiendum de illis, qui ne in persecutorum manus deveniant, sibi vim inferunt, respondet; eoque Pelagiae virginis, nec non eiusdem matris ac sororum exemplum oculis subiicit, singulari elegantia descriptum: quibus beatae Sotheris ex qua ipse cum Marcellina ducebant originem, martyrium adiicit.

CHAPTER 7.

In reply to Marcellina, who had asked what should be thought of those who to escape violence killed themselves, St. Ambrose replies by narrating the history of Pelagia, a virgin, with her mother and sister, and goes on to speak of the martyrdom of the blessed Sotheris, one of their own ancestors.

32. Iam ad finem orationis velapandenti bene suggeris, soror sancta, quid de earum meritis existimandum sit, quae se praecipitavere ex alto, vel in fluvium demerserunt, ne persecutorum inciderent manus; cum Scriptura divina vim sibi Christianam prohibeat inferre. Et quidem de virginibus in necessitate custodiae constitutis enodem habemus assertionem, cum martyrii exstet exemplum.

32. As I am drawing near the close of my address, you make a good suggestion, holy sister, that I should touch upon what we ought to think of the merits of those who have cast themselves down from a height, or have drowned themselves in a river, lest they should fall into the hands of persecutors, seeing that holy Scripture forbids a Christian to lay hands on himself. And indeed as regards virgins placed in the necessity of preserving their purity, we have a plain answer, seeing that there exists an instance of martyrdom.

33. Sancta Pelagia apud Antiochiam quondam fuit, annorum fere quindecim, soror virginum, et ipsa virgo. Haec primo domi classico persecutionis inclusa, cum se a praedonibus fidei vel pudoris circumsideri videret, absente matre et sororibus, vacua praesidio, sed Deo plenior: Quid agimus, inquit, nisi prospicias, captiva virginitatis? Et votum est, et metus est mori; quia mors non excipitur, sed adsciscitur. Moriamur si licet, vel si nolunt licere, moriamur. Deus remedio non offenditur, et facinus fides ablevat. Certe si vim ipsam nominis cogitemus, quae vis voluntaria? Illa magis est vis, mori velle, nec posse. Nec difficultatem veremur. Quis enim est qui vult mori, et non possit; cum sint ad mortem tam proclives viae? Iam enim sacrilegas aras praecipitata subvertam, et accensos focos cruore restinguam. Non timeo ne dextera deficiens non peragat ictum, ne pectus se dolore subducat. Nullum peccatum carni relinquam. Non verebor, ne desit gladius. Possumus mori nostris armis, possumus mori sine carnificis beneficio, matris in gremio.

33. Saint Pelagia lived formerly at Antioch, being about fifteen years old, a sister of virgins, and a virgin herself. She shut herself up at home at the first sound of persecution, seeing herself surrounded by those who would rob her of her faith and purity, in the absence of her mother and sisters, without any defense, but all the more filled with God. What are we to do, unless, says she to herself, you, a captive of virginity, takest thought? I both wish and fear to die, for I meet not death but seek it. Let us die if we are allowed, or if they will not allow it, still let us die. God is not offended by a remedy against evil, and faith permits the act. In truth, if we think of the real meaning of the word, how can what is voluntary be violence? It is rather violence to wish to die and not to be able. And we do not fear any difficulty. For who is there who wishes to die and is not able to do so, when there are so many easy ways to death? For I can now rush upon the sacrilegious altars and overthrow them, and quench with my blood the kindled fires. I am not afraid that my right hand may fail to deliver the blow, or that my breast may shrink from the pain. I shall leave no sin to my flesh. I fear not that a sword will be wanting. I can die by my own weapons, I can die without the help of an executioner, in my mother's bosom.

34. She is said to have adorned her head, and to have put on a bridal dress, so that one would say that she was going to a bridegroom, not to death. But when the hateful persecutors saw that they had lost the prey of her chastity, they began to seek her mother and sisters. But they, by a spiritual flight, already held the field of chastity, when, as on the one side, persecutors suddenly threatened them, and on the other, escape was shut off by an impetuous river, they said, what do we fear? See the water, what hinders us from being baptized? And this is the baptism whereby sins are forgiven, and kingdoms are sought. This is a baptism after which no one sins. Let the water receive us, which is wont to regenerate. Let the water receive us, which makes virgins. Let the water receive us, which opens heaven, protects the weak, hides death, makes martyrs. We pray You, God, Creator of all things, let not the water scatter our bodies, deprived of the breath of life; let not death separate our obsequies, whose lives affection has always conjoined; but let our constancy be one, our death one, and our burial also be one.

35. Haec effatae, et suspenso paulum incinctum sinu, quo pudorem tegerent, nec gressum impedirent, consertis manibus tamquam choros ducerent, in medium progrediuntur alveum; ubi unda torrentior, ubi profundum abruptius, illo vestigium dirigentes. Nulla pedem retulit, nulla suspendit incessum, nulla tentavit ubi gressum figeret: anxiae cum terra occurreret, offensae vado, laetae profundo. Videres piam matrem stringentem nodo manus, gaudere de pignore, timere de casu, ne sibi filias vel fluctus auferret. Has tibi, inquit, hostias, Christe, immolo praesules castitatis, duces itineris, comites passionis.

35. Having said these words, and having slightly girded up the bosom of their dress, to veil their modesty without impeding their steps, joining hands as though to lead a dance, they went forward to the middle of the river bed, directing their steps to where the stream was more violent, and the depth more abrupt. No one drew back, no one ceased to go on, no one tried where to place her steps, they were anxious only when they felt the ground, grieved when the water was shallow, and glad when it was deep. One could see the pious mother tightening her grasp, rejoicing in her pledges, afraid of a fall lest even the stream should carry off her daughters from her. These victims, O Christ, said she, do I offer as leaders of chastity, guides on my journey, and companions of my sufferings.

36. Sed quis iure miretur tantam viventibus fuisse constantiam, cum etiam defunctae immobilem stationem corporum vindicaverint? Non cadaver unda nudavit, non rapidi cursus fluminis volutarunt. Quin etiam sancta mater licet sensu carens, pietatis tamen adhuc servabat amplexum: et religiosum quem strinxerat, nodum nec in morte laxabat; ut quae religioni debitum solverat, pietate haerede moreretur. Nam quas ad martyrium iunxerat, usque ad tumulum vindicabat.

37. But who would have cause to wonder that they had such constancy while alive, seeing that even when dead they preserved the position of their bodies unmoved? The water did not lay bare their corpses, nor did the rapid course of the river roll them along. Moreover, the holy mother, though without sensation, still maintained her loving grasp, and held the sacred knot which she had tied, and loosed not her hold in death, that she who had paid her debt to religion might die leaving her piety as her heir. For those whom she had joined together with herself for martyrdom, she claimed even to the tomb.

37. Sed quid alienigenis apud te, soror, utor exemplis, quam haereditariae castitatis inspirata successio parentis infusione martyris erudivit? Unde enim didicisti, quae non habuisti unde disceres, constituta in agro, nulla socia virgine, nullo informata doctore? Non ergo discipulam, quod fieri sine magisterio non potest, sed haeredem virtutis egisti.

38. But why use instances of people of another race to you, my sister, whom the inspiration of hereditary chastity has taught by descent from a martyred ancestor? For whence have you learned who had no one from whom to learn, living in the country, with no virgin companion, instructed by no teacher? You have played the part then not of a disciple, for this cannot be done without teaching, but of an heir of virtue.

38. Qui enim fieri posset ut sancta Sotheris tibi non esset mentis auctor, cui auctor est generis? Quae persecutionis aetate, servilibus quoque contumeliis ad fastigium passionis evecta, etiam vultum ipsum qui inter cruciatus totius corporis liber esse consuevit iniuriae, et spectare potius tormenta quam perpeti, carnifici dedit: tam fortis et patiens, ut cum teneras poenae offerret genas, prius carnifex caedendo defecerit, quam martyr iniuriae cederet. Non vultum inflexit, non ora convertit: non gemitum, non lacrymam dedit. Denique cum caetera poenarum genera vicisset, gladium quem quaerebat, invenit.

39. For how could it come to pass that holy Sotheris should not have been the originator of your purpose, who is an ancestor of your race? Who, in an age of persecution, borne to the heights of suffering by the insults of slaves, gave to the executioner even her face, which is usually free from injury when the whole body is tortured, and rather beholds than suffers torments; so brave and patient that when she offered her tender cheeks to punishment, the executioner failed in striking before the martyr yielded under the injuries. She moved not her face, she turned not away her countenance, she uttered not a groan or a tear. Lastly, when she had overcome other kinds of punishment, she found the sword which she desired.

Sermo contra Auxentium de basilicis tradendis (Sermon against Auxentius)

PROLOGO

[POPULI OB IMPERIALEM iussum sollicitudinem levaturus, responsum suum exponit, additque ad consistorium se non ivisse, quod basilicae traditionem esset veritus. Tum adversariis ad disceptandum in ecclesia provocatis, negat se armis exterreri: suoque de sacris vasis responso memorato, paratum se ad certamina esse testatur. Eludi non posse dei decretum, nec praesidium ipsius superari, sed in servis suis pati eumdem velle. Cum ipse antea non fuerit captus, liquere quam inaniter haeretici tumultuentur. Deinde ubi Nabuthae historiam, et Christi ingressum in Ierusalem rei praesenti accomodavit, Auxentii perstringit crudelem legem, solutisque Arianorum obiectionibus, libenter se coram populo disputaturum praedicat: Auxentium vero iam a paganis, quos in iudices elegerat, damnatum, sicut et a Paulo et Christo ipso. Quod idem haereticus ad Caesarem provocaret, eum oblitum anni superioris: et [Arianos], dum servis Christi conflant invidiam, multo peiores esse Iudaeis: ecclesiam enim non Caesaris, sed Christi praeferre imaginem. Sub quae ubi pauca de suo responso et hymnis adiecit, se non inoboedientem, at imperatorem ecclesiae filium, et Auxentium plusquam Iudaeum esse declarat.]

To calm the anxiety of the people over the imperial decree, he lays his answer before them, and adds that he did not go to the consistory, because he was afraid of losing the basilica. Then, first challenging his opponents to a discussion in the church, he says that he is not terrified at their weapons; and also, after recalling his answer on the subject of the sacred vessels, declares that he is ready for the contest. The will of God, he maintains, cannot be frustrated, nor can His protection be overcome, yet He is ready too to suffer in His servants. Since he has not already been taken before this, it is plain that the heretics are causing this disturbance for no reason whatever. Next, after applying Naboth's history and Christ's entry into Jerusalem to the present state of affairs, he censures Auxentius' cruel law, answers the Arians' objections, and states that he will gladly discuss the matter in the presence of the people. Auxentius, he adds, has been already condemned by the pagans, whom he had chosen to sit as judges, as he had been condemned by Paul and by Christ. The heretic had forgotten the year before, when he had made the same appeal to Cæsar; and the Arians, in stirring up ill-will against the servants of Christ, are much worse than the Jews: for the Church does not belong to Cæsar, but displays the image of Christ. Then adding to these a few more words on his answer and his hymns, he declares that he is not disobedient, that the Emperor is a son of the Church, and that Auxentius is worse than a Jew.

1. Video vos praeter solitum subito esse turbatos atque asservantes mei; miror quod hoc fit, nisi forte quia per tribunos me vidistis alii, audistis alii imperiali mandato esse conventum, ut quo vellem abirem hinc et si qui vellent sequendi potestatem haberent. Metuistis ergo ne ecclesiam desererem et dum saluti meae timeo vos relinquerem? Sed quid et ipse mandaverim potuistis advertere: deserendae ecclesiae mihi voluntatem subesse non posse, quia plus dominum mundi quam saeculi huius imperatorem timerem, sane si me vis aliqua abduceret ab ecclesia, carnem meam exturbari posse non mentem, paratum me esse, ut si ille faceret quod solet esse regiae potestatis, ego subirem quod sacerdotis esse consuevit.

1. I see that you are unusually disturbed, and that you are closely watching me. I wonder what the reason is? Is it that you saw or heard that I had received an imperial order at the hands of the tribunes, to the effect that I was to go hence, whither I would, and that all who wished might follow me? Were you afraid that I should desert the Church and forsake you in fear for my own safety? But you could note the message I sent, that the wish to desert the Church had never entered my mind; for I feared the Lord of the universe more than an earthly emperor; and if force were to drag me from the Church, my body indeed could be driven out, but not my mind. I was ready, if he were to do what royal power is wont to do, to undergo the fate a priest has to bear.

2. Quid ergo turbamini? Volens numquam vos deseram, coactus repugnare non novi. Dolere potero, potero flere, potero gemere; adversus arma milites Gothos quoque lacrimae meae arma sunt, talia enim munimenta sunt sacerdotis. Aliter nec debeo nec possum resistere. Fugere autem et relinquere ecclesiam non soleo, ne quis gravioris poenae metu factum interpretetur. Scitis et vos ipsi quod imperatoribus soleam deferre non cedere, suppliciis me libenter offerre nec metuere quae parantur.

2. Why, then, are you disturbed? I will never willingly desert you, though if force is used, I cannot meet it. I shall be able to grieve, to weep, to groan; against weapons, soldiers, Goths, my tears are my weapons, for these are a priest's defense. I ought not, I cannot resist in any other way; but to fly and forsake the Church is not my way; lest any one should suppose I did so from fear of some heavier punishment. You yourselves know that I am wont to show respect to our emperors, but not to yield to them, to offer myself freely to punishment, and not to fear what is prepared for me.

3. Utinam essem securus quod ecclesia haereticis minime traderetur! Ad palatium imperatoris irem libenter, si hoc congrueret sacerdotis officio, ut in palatio magis certarem quam in ecclesia. Sed in consistorio non reus solet Christus esse sed iudex. Causam fidei in ecclesia agendam quis abnuat? Si quis confidit, huc veniat; inclinatum iam vel imperatoris iudicium, quod lata lege patefecit, quod impugnat fidem, vel sperata ambientium quorundam studia non requirat. Non committo ut quisquam vendat iniuriam Christi.

3. Would that I were sure the Church would never be given over to heretics. Gladly would I go to the Emperor's palace, if this but fitted the office of a priest, and so hold our discussion in the palace rather than the church. But in the consistory Christ is not wont to be the accused but the judge. Who will deny that the cause of faith should be pleaded in the church? If any one has confidence let him come hither; let him not seek the judgment of the Emperor, which already shows its bias, which clearly proves by the law that is passed that he is against the faith; neither let him seek the expected goodwill of certain people who want to stand well with both sides. I will not act in such a way as to give any one the chance of making money out of a wrong to Christ.

4. Circumfusi milites, armorum crepitus, quibus vallata est ecclesia, fidem non terrent meam, sed mentem exagitant, ne dum me tenetis, perniciosum aliquid vestrae oboriatur saluti. Ego enim iam didici non timere, sed vobis timere plus coepi. Sinite, quaeso, vestrum sacerdotem congredi; habemus adversarium qui lacessit, adversarius enim noster diabolus, sicut leo rugiens circuit quaerens quem devoret, ut apostolus dixit [I Pet. 5, 8]. Accepit sine dubio, accepit - non fallimur sed admonemur - temptandi huiusmodi potestatem, ne forte corporis mei vulneribus possim a fidei intentione revocari. Legistis et vos quia multis his temptavit sanctum Iob diabolus, ad postremum potestatem huiusmodi petiit et accepit, ut temptaret corpus eius, quod perfudit ulceribus.

4. The soldiers around, the clash of the arms wherewith the church is surrounded, do not alarm my faith, but they disquiet me from fear that in keeping me here you might meet with some danger to your lives. For I have learned by now not to be afraid, but I do begin to have more fear for you. Allow, I beg you, your bishop to meet his foes. We have an adversary who assails us, for our adversary the devil goes about, as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, 1 Peter 5:8 as the Apostle said. He has received, no doubt, he has received (we are not deceived, but warned of this) the power to tempt in this wise, lest I might perhaps by the wounds of my body be drawn away from the earnestness of my faith. You have read how the devil tempted holy Job in these many ways, and how at last he sought and obtained power to try his body, which he covered with sores.

5. Cum esset propositum, ut ecclesiae vasa iam traderemus, hoc responsi reddidi: me si de meis aliquid posceretur, aut fundus aut domus aut aurum aut argentum, id quod mei iuris esset libenter offerre, templo dei nihil posse decerpere nec tradere illud quod custodiendum non tradendum acceperim; deinde consulere me etiam imperatoris saluti, quia nec mihi expediret tradere nec illi accipere; accipiat enim vocem liberi sacerdotis, si vult sibi esse consultum, recedat a Christi iniuria.

5. When it was suggested that I should give up the vessels of the Church, I gave the following answer: I will willingly give up whatever of my own property is demanded, whether it is estates, or house, or gold, or silver — anything, in fact, which is in my power. But I cannot take anything away from the temple of God; nor can I give up what I have received to guard and not to give up. In doing this I am acting for the Emperor's good, for it would neither be right for me to give it up, nor for him to receive it. Let him listen to the words of a free-spoken bishop, and if he wishes to do what is best for himself, let him cease to do wrong to Christ.

6. Haec plena humilitatis sunt et ut arbitror plena affectus eius quem imperatori debet sacerdos. Sed quia lucta nobis est non solum adversus carnem et sanguinem sed etiam quod gravius est adversus spiritalia nequitiae quae sunt in caelestibus [Ephes. 6, 12], temptator ille diabolus per ministros suos certamen auget et vulneribus corporis mei experiendum arbitratur. Scio, fratres, vulnera haec, quae pro Christo excipimus, non esse vulnera; quibus vita non amittitur sed propagatur. Sinite, quaeso, esse certamen, spectatores vos esse decet. Considerate quia si quem habet civitas vel athletam vel alterius nobilis artis peritum, optat offerre certamini. Cur in maioribus rebus repudiatis quod in minoribus velle consuestis? Non metuit arma, non barbaros, qui mortem non timet, qui nulla carnis voluptate retinetur.

6. These words are full of humility, and as I think of that spirit which a bishop ought to show towards the Emperor. But since our contest is not against flesh and blood, but also (which is worse) against spiritual wickedness in high places, Ephesians 6:12 that tempter the devil makes the struggle harder by means of his servants, and thinks to make trial of me by the wounds of my flesh. I know, my brethren, that these wounds which we receive for Christ's sake are not wounds that destroy life, but rather extend

it. Allow, I pray, the contest to take place. It is for you to be the spectators. Reflect that if a city has an athlete, or one skilled in some other noble art, it is eager to bring him forward for a contest. Why do you refuse to do in a more important matter what you are wont to wish in smaller affairs? He fears not weapons nor barbarians who fears not death, and is not held fast by any pleasures of the flesh.

7. Certe si dominus huic nos certamini deputavit, frustra pervigiles tot noctibus et diebus custodias exhibuistis, implebitur Christi voluntas. Omnipotens enim noster est dominus Iesus, haec est fides nostra; et ideo quod fieri mandat, implebitur nec convenit vos divinae obviare sententiae.

7. And indeed if the Lord has appointed me for this struggle, in vain have you kept sleepless watch so many nights and days. The will of Christ will be fulfilled. For our Lord Jesus is almighty, this is our faith: and so what He wills to be done will be fulfilled, and it is not for us to thwart the divine purpose.

8. Audistis quod hodie lectum sit: Pullum sibi asinae salvator per apostolos iussit adduci mandavitque, ut si quis resisteret diceretur: Dominus operam eius desiderat [Luc. 19, 35]. Quid si et nunc pullum istum asinae hoc est eius animalis quod gravem sarcinam portare consuevit, sicut est humana conditio, cui dicitur: Venite ad me omnes qui laboratis et onerati estis et ego vos reficiam, tollite iugum meum, quia leve est [Mt. 11, 28-30], quid si, inquam, pullum istum ad se modo iussit adduci missis apostolis illis, qui iam exuti corpore incomprehensibilem oculis nostris angelorum speciem gerunt? Nonne si ab aliquo resistatur dicent: Dominus operam eius desiderat? [Luc. 19, 31] Si resistat vel vitae huius cupiditas, si resistat caro et sanguis, si resistat conversatio corporalis, quia aliquibus forsitan grati videmur. Sed qui nos hic diligit, multo amplius diliget, si sinat fieri hostiam Christi, quia dissolvi et cum Christo esse multo melius, etsi manere in carne magis necessarium propter vos [Phil. 1, 23sq.]. Nihil est ergo quod vereamini, fratres dilectissimi; scio enim quia quicquid passus fuero, pro Christo patiar. Et legi quod eos timere non debeam, qui possunt carnem occidere, et audivi dicentem: Qui perdiderit animam suam propter me inveniet eam [Mt. 10, 39].

8. You heard what was read today: The Saviour ordered that the foal of an ass should be brought to Him by the apostles, and bade them say, if any one withstood them: The Lord has need of him. Luke 19:35 What if now, too, He has commanded that foal of an ass, that is, the foal of that animal which is wont to bear a heavy burden, as man must, to whom is said: Come unto Me all you that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; take My yoke upon you, for it is easy; what if, I say, He has commanded that foal to be brought to Him now, sending forth those apostles, who, having put off their body, wear the semblance of the angels unseen by our eyes? If withstood by any, will they not say: The Lord has need of him? If, for instance, love of this life, or flesh and blood, or earthly intercourse (for perhaps we seem pleasing to some), were to withstand them? But he who loves me here, would show his love much more if he would suffer me to become Christ's victim, for to depart and be with Christ is much better, though to abide in the flesh is more needful for you. Philippians 1:23 There is nothing therefore for you to fear, beloved brethren. For I know that whatever I may suffer, I shall suffer for Christ's sake. And I have read that I ought not to fear those that can kill the flesh. Matthew 10:28 And I have heard One Who says: He that loses his life for My sake shall find it. Matthew 10:39

9. Ergo si vult dominus certum est quod nullus obsistat. Quod si adhuc nostra differt certamina quid veremini? Servum Christi non custodia corporalis sed domini providentia saepire consuevit.

9. Wherefore if the Lord wills, surely no one will resist. And if as yet He delay my struggle, what do you fear? It is not bodily guardianship but the Lord's providence that is wont to fence in the servant of Christ.

10. Turbati estis quia apertas repperistis geminas fores, quas captus oculis quidam, dum hospitium proprium repetit, patefecisse memoratur. In quo cognoscite quod nihil suffragetur humana custodia. Ecce unus qui videndi munus amisit, solvit vestra universa munimina, et custodias lusit; dominus autem suae misericordiae custodiam non amisit. Nonne ante biduum, ut meministis, etiam illud repertum est quod a parte laeva basilicae ingressus quidam pervius fuit, quem putabatis clausum esse atque munitum? Saepserunt nempe armati basilicam, explorabant hos atque illos aditus; caecitate perfusi sunt, ut quod apertum erat videre non possent, itaque per plurimas noctes quod apertum fuerit non ignoratis. Desinite ergo sollicitari, quia hoc erit, quod Christus iubet, et quod esse expedit.

10. You are troubled because you have found the double doors open, which a blind man in seeking his chamber is said to have unfastened. In this you learn that human watchfulness is no defense. Behold! One who has lost the gift of sight has broken through all our defences, and escaped the notice of the guards. But the Lord has not lost the guard of His mercy. Was it not also discovered two days ago, as you remember, that a certain entrance on the left side of the basilica was open, which you thought had been shut and secured? Armed men surrounded the basilica, they tried this and the other entrance, but their eyes were blinded so that that could not see the one that was open. And you know well that it was open many nights. Cease, then, to be anxious; for that will take place which Christ commands and which is for the best.

11. Denique exempla vobis legis proferam. Helisaeus quaerebatur a rege Syriae, missus erat exercitus qui eum caperet, circumvallatus erat undique; coepit timere eius servulus quia servulus erat, hoc est non erat liberae mentis et liberae potestatis. Petivit aperiri eius oculos sanctus propheta et ait: «Respice et vide quanto plures sint pro nobis quam contra nos.» Et respexit et vidit angelorum milia [cf. IV Reg. 6, 12-17]. Advertitis igitur quod servulos Christi hi magis custodiant qui non videntur quam qui videntur. Sed et illi si custodiunt vestris custodiunt orationibus advocati; legistis nempe eos ipsos qui Helisaeum quaerebant ingressos esse Samariam ad eum ipsum quem capere gestiebant, cui non solum non potuerunt nocere sed ipsius adversus quem venerant intercessione servati sunt [cf. IV Reg. 6, 18-23].

11. And now I will put before you examples from the Law. Eliseus was sought by the king of Syria; an army had been sent to capture him; and he was surrounded on all sides. His servant began to fear, for he was a servant, that is, he had not a free mind, nor had he free powers of action. The holy prophet sought to open his eyes, and said: Look and see how many more are on our side than there are against us. 2 Kings 6:16 And he beheld, and saw thousands of angels. Mark therefore that it is those that are not seen rather than those that are seen that guard the servants of Christ. But if they guard you, they do it in answer to your prayers: for you have read that those very men, who sought Eliseus, entered Samaria, and came to him whom they desired to take. Not only were they unable to harm him, but they were themselves preserved at the intercession of the man against whom they had come.

12. Petrus quoque apostolus utriusque rei vobis edat exemplum [cf. Act. 12, 3-10]. Nam ubi eum Herodes quaesivit et cepit, recepit in carcerem, non enim recesserat dei servulus sed steterat timoris ignarus; orabat pro eo ecclesia, sed apostolus in carcere quiescebat quod est indicium non timentis; missus est angelus qui dormientem excitaret, per quem Petrus productus e carcere mortem ad tempus evasit.

12. The Apostle Peter also gives you an example of either case. For when Herod sought him and took him, he was put into prison. For the servant of God had not got away, but stood firm without a thought of fear. The Church prayed for him, but the Apostle slept in prison, a proof that he was not in fear. An angel was sent to rouse him as he slept, by whom Peter was led forth out of prison, and escaped death for a time.

13. Idem Petrus postea victo Simone, cum praecepta dei populo seminaret, doceret castimoniam, excitavit animos gentilium; quibus eum quaerentibus Christianae animae deprecatae sunt, ut paulisper cederet, et quamvis esset cupidus passionis tamen contemplatione populi precantis inflexus est; rogabatur enim ut ad instituendum et confirmandum populum se reservaret. Quid multa? Nocte muros egredi coepit et videns sibi in porta Christum occurrere urbemque ingredi ait: «Domine, quo venis?» Respondit Christus: «Venio iterum crucifigi» [cf. Actus Petri cum Simone vel Actus Vercellenses, ed. Lipsius-Bonnet I, 45-103]. Intellexit Petrus ad suam crucem divinum pertinere responsum; Christus enim non poterat iterum crucifigi, qui carnem passione susceptae mortis exuerat: quod enim mortuus est mortuus est semel, quod autem vivit vivit deo [Rom. 6, 10]. Intellexit ergo Petrus quod iterum Christus crucifigendus esset in servulo itaque sponte remeavit; interrogantibus Christianis responsum reddidit statimque correptus per crucem suam honorificavit dominum Iesum. [cf. Eus. hist. eccl. 2, 14sq.; Heges. hist. 3, 2]

13. And Peter again afterwards, when he had overcome Simon, in sowing the doctrine of God among the people, and in teaching chastity, stirred up the minds of the Gentiles. And when these sought him, the Christians begged that he would withdraw himself for a little while. And although he was desirous to suffer, yet was he moved at the sight of the people praying, for they asked him to save himself for the instruction and strengthening of his people. Need I say more? At night he begins to leave the town, and seeing Christ coming to meet him at the gate, and entering the city, says: Lord, where are You going? Christ answers: I am coming to be crucified again. Peter understood the divine answer to refer to his own cross, for Christ could not be crucified a second time, for He had put off the flesh by the passion of the death which He had undergone; since: In that He died, He died unto sin once, but in that He lives, He lives unto God. Romans 6:10 So Peter understood that Christ was to be crucified again in the person of His servant. Therefore he willingly returned; and when the Christians questioned him, told them the reason. He was immediately seized, and glorified the Lord Jesus by his cross.

14. Videtis igitur quod in servulis suis pati velit Christus. Quid si et huic servulo dicit: Illum volo manere, tu autem me sequere [Ioh. 21, 22] et de hac arbore gustare vult fructum? Nam si illius cibus erat ut faceret voluntatem patris [Ioh. 4, 34], itidem cibus illius est ut nostris passionibus epuletur. Nonne ut de ipso domino sumamus exemplum, quando voluit passus est et cum quaereretur inventus est, quando autem hora non venerat passionis [cf. Ioh. 7, 30], per medium quaerentium transibat et videntes eum tenere non poterant? Quod utique evidenter ostendit quia quando dominus vult, unusquisque invenitur et capitur, quod autem differt, etiamsi quaerentium occurrat oculis, non tenetur.

14. You see, then, that Christ wills to suffer in His servants. And what if He says to this servant, I will that he tarry, you follow Me, John 21:22 and wishes to taste the fruit of this tree? For if His meat was to do the will of His Father, John 4:34 so also is it His meat to partake of our sufferings. Did He not, to take an example from our Lord Himself — did He not suffer when He willed, and was He not found when He was sought? But when the hour of His passion had not yet come, He passed through the midst of those that sought Him, John 7:30 and though they saw Him they could not hold Him fast. This plainly shows us that when the Lord wills, each one is found and taken, but because the time is put off, he is not held fast, although he meets the eyes of those who seek him.

15. Ego ipse non cottidie vel visitandi gratia prodibam, vel pergebam ad martyres? Non regiam palatii praetexebam eundo atque redeundo? Et tamen nemo me tenuit, cum exturbandi me haberent, ut prodiderunt postea, voluntatem, dicentes: «Exi de civitate et vade quo vis». Exspectabam, fateor, magnum aliquid aut gladium pro Christi nomine aut incendium, at illi delicias mihi pro passionibus obtulerunt, sed athleta Christi non delicias sed passiones suas exigit. Nemo ergo vos turbet, quod aut carrum praeparaverunt aut dura, ut videbatur sibi, Auxentii ipsius, qui se dicit episcopum, ore iactata.

15. And did not I myself go forth daily to pay visits, or go to the tombs of the martyrs? Did I not pass by the royal palace both in going and returning? Yet no one laid hands on me, though they had the intention of driving me out, as they afterwards gave out, saying, Leave the city, and go where you will. I was, I own, looking for some great thing, either sword or fire for the Name of Christ, yet they offered me pleasant things instead of sufferings; but Christ's athlete needs not pleasant things but sufferings. Let no one, then, disturb you, because they have provided a carriage, or because hard words, as he thinks them, have been uttered by Auxentius, who calls himself bishop.

16. Plerique narrabant percussores praemissos, poenam mortis esse decretam. Nec illa timeo et ista non desero. Quo enim abibo, ubi non omnia plena gemitus sint atque lacrimarum, quando per ecclesias iubentur eici catholici sacerdotes, resistentes gladio feriri, curiales proscribi omnes, nisi mandatum impleverint? Et haec episcopi manu scripta et ore dictata, qui se ut probaret doctissimum vetus non omisit exemplum; legimus enim in propheta quod viderit falcem volantem [cf. Zach. 5, 2]: hanc imitatus Auxentius gladium volantem per omnes urbes direxit. Et satanas transfigurat se in angelum lucis et in malum imitatur eius potentiam [II Cor. 11, 14].

16. Many stated that assassins had been dispatched, that the penalty of death had been decreed against me. I do not fear all that, nor am I going to desert my position here. Whither shall I go, when there is no spirit that is not filled with groans and tears; when throughout the Churches Catholic bishops are being expelled, or if they resist, are put to the sword, and every senator who does not obey the decree is proscribed. And these things were written by the hand and spoken by the mouth of a bishop who, that he might show himself to be most learned, omitted not an ancient warning. For we read in the prophet that he saw a flying sickle. Zechariah 5:1 Auxentius, to imitate this, sent a flying sword through all cities. But Satan, too, transforms himself into an angel of light, 2 Corinthians 11:14 and imitates his power for evil.

17. Tu, domine Iesu, uno momento mundum redemisti, Auxentius uno momento tot populos quod in ipso est trucidabit alios gladio, alios sacrilegio. Mihi basilicam petit cruento ore, sanguinolentis manibus. Cui bene praesens respondit lectio: Peccatori autem dixit deus: Quare tu enarras iustitias meas? [Ps. 49, 16] id est, non convenit paci et furori, non convenit Christo et Belial [cf. II Cor. 6, 15]. Meministis etiam quod lectum sit hodie Nabuthae sanctum virum possessorem vineae suae interpellatum petitione regia, ut vineam suam daret, ubi rex succisis vitibus holus vile sereret, eumque respondisse: Absit ut ego patrum meorum tradam hereditatem [III Reg. 21, 3]; regem contristatum esse, quod sibi esset alienum ius relatione iusta negatum, sed muliebri consilio deceptum ⟨Nabuthae⟩ morte in agrum venisse; sancus enim Nabuthae vites suas vel proprio cruore defendit [cf. III Reg. 21, 1-13]. Si ille vineam non tradidit suam, nos trademus ecclesiam Christi?

17. You, Lord Jesus, have redeemed the world in one moment of time: shall Auxentius in one moment slay, as far as he can, so many peoples, some by the sword, others by sacrilege? He seeks my basilica with bloody lips and gory hands. Him today's chapter answers well: But unto the wicked said God: Wherefore do you declare My righteousness? That is, there is no union between peace and madness, there is no union between Christ and Belial. 2 Corinthians 6:15 You remember also that we read today of Naboth, a holy man who owned his own vineyard, being urged on the king's request to give it up. When the king after rooting up the vines intended to plant common herbs, he answered him: God forbid that I should give up the inheritance of my fathers. 1 Kings 21:3 The king was grieved, because what belonged by right to another had been refused him on fair grounds, but had been unfairly got by a woman's device. Naboth defended his vines with his own blood. And if he did not give up his vineyard, shall we give up the Church of Christ?

18. Quid igitur a me responsam est contumaciter? Dixi enim conventus: «Absit a me ut tradam Christi hereditatem.» Si ille patrum hereditatem non tradidit, ego tradam Christi hereditatem? Sed et hoc addidi: «Absit ut tradam hereditatem patrum hoc est hereditatem Dionysii [Dionysius episcopus Mediolanenis ab a. 351; qui a. 355 ab imperatore Valente una cum Eusebio episcopo Vercellensi in exilium expulsus est, quod in synodo Mediolanensi a. 355 habita Athanasii condemnationi subscribere recusavit] qui in exilio in causa fidei defunctus est, hereditatem Eustorgii confessoris [episcopus Mediolanensis a. 344 - ca. 350], hereditatem Mirocletis [hic a.

313 concilio Romano in causa Caeciliani interfuit], atque omnium retro fidelium episcoporum.» Respondi ego, quod sacerdotis est; quod imperatoris est faciat imperator. Prius est ut animam mihi quam fidem auferat.

18. Was the answer that I gave then contumacious? For when summoned I said: God forbid that I should give up the inheritance of Christ. If Naboth gave not up the inheritance of his fathers, shall I give up the inheritance of Christ? And I added further: God forbid that I shall give up the inheritance of my fathers, that is, the inheritance of Dionysius, who died in exile in the cause of the faith; the inheritance of the Confessor Eustorgius, the inheritance of Mysocles and of all the faithful bishops of bygone days. I answered as a bishop ought to answer: Let the Emperor act as an emperor ought to. He must take away my life rather than my faith.

19. Ac cui tradam? Praesens lectio evangelii docere nos debet quid petatur, a quibus petatur. Audistis nempe legi quod, cum Christus pullum asinae sederet, clamabant pueruli et moleste ferebant Iudaei [cf. Luc. 19, 35-45]. Denique interpellaverunt dominum Iesum dicentes ut faceret eos tacere; respondit: Si hi tacebunt, lapides clamabunt [ibid., 40]. Deinde ingressus templum eiecit nummularios et cathedras et columbas vendentes in templo dei. Lectio nempe ista nulla nostra dispositione recitata sed casu est, quae praesentibus bene aptatur temporibus. Semper ergo Christi laudes verbera perfidorum sunt. Et nunc cum laudatur Christus, dicunt haeretici quia seditio commovetur, dicunt haeretici quia his mors parabatur; et vere mortem habent in laudibus Christi. Quomodo enim laudes eius ferre possunt, cuius infirmitatem praedicant? Itaque et hodie cum laudatur Christus, Arrianorum amentia verberatur.

19. But to whom shall I give it up? Today’s lesson from the Gospel ought to teach us what is asked for and by whom it is asked. You have heard read that when Christ Luke 19:35 sat upon the foal of an ass, the children cried aloud, and the Jews were vexed. At length they spoke to the Lord Jesus, bidding Him to silence them. He answered: If these should hold their peace, the stones will cry out. Luke 19:40 Then on entering the temple, He cast out the money-changers, and the tables, and those that sold doves in the temple of God. That passage was read by no arrangement of mine, but by chance; but it is well fitted to the present time. The praises of Christ are ever the scourges of the unfaithful. And now when Christ is praised, the heretics say that sedition is stirred up. The heretics say that death is being prepared for them, and truly they have their death in the praises of Christ. For how can they bear His praises, Whose weakness they maintain. And so today, when Christ is praised, the madness of the Arians is scourged.

20. Geraseni praesentiam Christi ferre non poterant [cf. Luc. 8, 37], isti peiores Gerasenis nec laudationem Christi sustinere possunt. Vident puerulos Christi gloriam concinentes, quia scriptum est: Ex ore infantium et lactantium perfecisti laudem [Ps. 8, 3]. Irrident istam aetatulam plenam fidei cum dicunt: Ecce quid clamant? Sed respondit his Christus: Si hi tacuerint lapides clamabunt [Luc. 19, 38], hoc est fortiores clamabunt, clamabunt et iuvenes, clamabunt et maturiores, clamabunt et senes, isti lapides ad illum iam solidati lapidem, de quo scriptum est: Lapidem quem reprobaverunt aedificantes hic factus est in caput anguli [Ps. 117, 22].

20. The Gerasenes could not bear the presence of Christ; Luke 8:37 these, worse than the Gerasenes, cannot endure the praises of Christ. They see boys singing of the glory of Christ, for it is written: Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings You have perfected praise. They mock at their tender age, so full of faith, and say: Behold, why do they cry out? But Christ answers them: If these should hold their peace, the stones will cry out, Luke 19:40 that is, the stronger will cry out, both youths and the more mature will cry out, and old men will cry out; these stones now firmly laid upon that stone of which it is written: The stone which the builders rejected has become the head of the corner.

21. His igitur laudationibus invitatus templum suum Christus ingreditur et flagellum prendit et eicit de templo nummularios [cf. Ioh. 2, 15]. Non patitur enim in suo templo pecuniae esse vernaculos, non patitur in suo templo esse eos qui vendant cathedras. Quid sunt cathedrae nisi honores? Quid sunt columbae nisi simplices mentes vel animae fidem candidam et puram sequentes? Ego ergo inducam in templum quem Christus excludit? Iubetur enim exire qui dignitates vendit et honores, iubetur enim exire qui vendere vult simplices mentes fidelium.

21. Invited, then, by these praises, Christ enters His temple, John 2:15 and takes His scourge and drives the money-changers out of the temple. For He does not allow the slaves of money to be in His temple, nor does He allow those to be there who sell seats. What are seats but honours? What are the doves but simple minds or souls that follow a pure and clear faith? Shall I, then, bring into the temple him whom Christ shuts out? For he who sells dignities and honours will be bidden to go out. He will be bidden to go out who desires to sell the simple minds of the faithful.

22. Ergo Auxentius eicitur, Mercurinus excluditur. Unum portentum est duo nomina. Etenim ne cognosceretur quis esset, mutavit sibi vocabulum, ut quia hic fuerat Auxentius episcopus Arrianus, ad decipiendam plebem quam ille tenuerat se vocaret Auxentium. Mutavit ergo vocabulum, sed perfidiam non mutavit; exuit lupum et induit lupum. Nihil prodest quod mutavit nomen, quid sit agnoscitur. Alius in Scythiae partibus dicebatur, alius hic vocatur, nomina pro regionibus habet. Habet ergo iam duo nomina et si hinc alio perrexerit, habebit et tertium. Quomodo enim patietur ut maneat ei vocabulum ad tanti sceleris indicium? Minora fecit in Scythia et ita erubuit ut mutaret vocabulum; sceleratiora hic ausus est et volet quocumque perrexerit nomine suo prodi? Tantorum populorum sanguinem manu sua scribet et poterit consistere animo?

22. Therefore, Auxentius is cast out. Mercurius is shut out. The portent is one, the names are two! That no one might know who he was, he changed his name so as to call himself Auxentius, because there had been here an Arian bishop, named Auxentius. He did this to deceive the people over whom the other had had power. He changed his name, but he did not change his falseness. He puts off the wolf, yet puts on the wolf again. It is no help to him that he has changed his name; whatever happens he is known. He is called by one name in the parts of Scythia, he is called by another here. He has a name for each country he lives in. He has two names already, and if he were to go elsewhere from here, he will have yet a third. For how will he endure to keep a name as a proof of such wickedness? He did less in Scythia, and was so ashamed that he changed his name. Here he has dared to do worse things, and will he be ready to be betrayed by his name wherever he goes? Shall he write the death warrant of so many people with his own hand, and yet be able to be unshaken in mind?

23. Paucos excludebat dominus Iesus de templo suo, Auxentius nullum reliquit. De templo suo Iesus flagello eicit, Auxentius gladio, Iesus flagello, Mercurinus securi. Pius dominus flagello exturbat sacrilegos, nequam persequitur pios ferro. De quo bene dixistis hodie: Leges suas secum ferat. Feret etiamsi nolit, feret conscientiam suam, etsi non fert cartulam, feret sanguine inscriptam animam suam, etsi atramento inscriptam epistolam non feret. Scripta est, Iuda, culpa tua graffio ferreo et ungue adamantino et scripta in pectore tuo [Ier. 17, 1], hoc est ibi scripta unde processit.

23. The Lord Jesus shut a few out of His temple, but Auxentius left none. Jesus with a scourge drove them out of His temple, Auxentius with a sword;

Jesus with a scourge, Mercurius with an axe. The holy Lord drives out the sacrilegious with a scourge; the impious man pursues the holy with a sword. Of him you have well said today: Let him take away his laws with him. He will take them, although he is unwilling; he will take with him his conscience, although he takes no writing; he will take with him his soul inscribed with blood although he will not take a letter inscribed with ink. It is written: Juda, your sin is written with a pen of iron and with the point of a diamond, and it is graven upon your heart, Jeremiah 17:1 that is, it is written there, whence it came forth.

24. Is mihi etiam audet mentionem facere tractandi, plenus sanguinis, plenus cruoris? Qui quos non potuerit sermone decipere, eos gladio putat esse feriendos, cruentas leges ore dictans, manu scribens et putans quod lex fidem possit hominibus imperare. Non audivit et id quod hodie dictum est: Quoniam non iustificatur homo ex operibus legis [Gal. II, 16], ait: Per legem legi mortuus sum ut deo vivam [ibid., 19], id est per legem spiritalem interpretationi legis est mortuus corporali. Et nos per legem domini nostri Iesu Christi moriamur huic legi, quae sancit decreta perfidiae. Non lex ecclesiam congregavit sed fides Christi, lex enim non est ex fide; iustus autem ex fide vivit [Gal. 3, 11]. Iustum ergo fides, non lex facit; quia non est per legem iustitia, sed per fidem Christi. Qui autem fidem repudiat, et legis iura praescribit, ipse se testatur iniustum, quia iustus ex fide vivit.

24. Does he, a man full of blood and full of murder, dare to make mention to me of a discussion? He who thinks that they whom he could not mislead by his words are to be slain with the sword, giving bloody laws with his mouth, writing them with his hand, and thinking that the law can order a faith for man to hold. He has not heard what was read today: That a man is not justified by the works of the law, Galatians 2:16 or I, through the law, am dead to the law, that I may live unto God, Galatians 2:19 that is, by the spiritual law he is dead to the carnal interpretation of the law. And we, by the law of our Lord Jesus Christ, are dead to this law, which sanctions such perfidious decrees. The law did not gather the Church together, but the faith of Christ. For the law is not by faith, but the just man lives by faith. Galatians 3:11 Therefore, faith, not the law, makes a man just, for justice is not through the law, but through the faith of Christ. But he who casts aside his faith and pleads for that the claims of the law, bears witness that he is himself unjust; for the just man lives by faith.

25. Hanc ergo legem quisquam sequatur, qua firmatur Ariminense concilium, in quo creatura dictus est Christus? Sed aiunt: Misit deus filium suum factum ex muliere, factum sub lege [Gal. 4, 4]; ergo factum legunt hoc est creatum. Nonne hoc ipsum considerant quod proposuerunt, quia factus dicitur Christus sed ex muliere hoc est secundum partum virginis factus est, qui secundum divinam generationem ex patre natus est? Et legerunt et hodie quia Christus nos redemit de maledicto legis, factus pro nobis maledictum [Gal. 3, 13]. Numquid maledictum Christus secundum divinitatem est? Sed quare maledictum dicatur apostolus te docet dicens: Quia scriptum est: Maledictus omnis qui pependit in ligno [ibid.; Deut. 21, 23], hoc est qui in carne sua nostram carnem, in suo corpore nostras infirmitates et nostra maledicta suscepit ut crucifigeret; non enim ille maledictus sed in te maledictus. Denique habes alibi: Qui peccatum non cognovit sed pro nobis peccatum factus est, quia nostra peccata suscepit ut sacramento suae passionis aboleret [II Cor. 5, 21].

25. Shall any one, then, follow this law, whereby the Council of Ariminum is confirmed, wherein Christ was said to be a creature. But say they: God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law. Galatians 4:4 And so they say made, that is, created. Do they not consider these very words which they have brought forward; that Christ is said to have been made, but of a woman; that is, He was made as regards his birth from a Virgin, Who was begotten of the Father as regards His divine generation? Have they read also today, that Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us? Galatians 3:13 Was Christ a curse in His Godhead? But why He is called a curse the Apostle tells us, saying that it is written: Cursed is every one that hangs on a tree, Galatians 3:13 that is, He Who in his flesh bore our flesh, in His body bore our infirmities and our curses, that He might crucify them; for He was not cursed Himself, but was cursed in you. So it is written elsewhere: Who knew no sin, but was made sin for us, for He bore our sins, 2 Corinthians 5:21 that he might destroy them by the Sacrament of His Passion.

26. Haec ego, fratres, coram ipso apud vos plenius disputarem, sed certus gnaros vos esse fidei vestrum refugit examen et gentiles quosdam quattuor aut quinque ferme homines elegit cognitores sibi, si tamen aliquos elegit: quos vellem adesse in coetu omnium, non ut de Christo iudicent sed ut maiestatem audiant Christi. Tamen illi iam de Auxentio pronuntiarunt cui tractanti cotidie non crediderunt. Quae maior eius condemnatio quam quod sine adversario apud iudices suos victus est? Ergo et ipsorum sententiam contra Auxentium iam tenemus.

26. These matters, my brethren, I would discuss more fully with him in your presence; but knowing that you are not ignorant of the faith, he has avoided a trial before you, and has chosen some four or five heathen to represent him, if that is he has chosen any, whom I should like to be present in our company, not to judge concerning Christ, but to hear the majesty of Christ. They, however, have already given their decision concerning Auxentius, to whom they gave no credence as he pleaded before them day by day. What can be more of a condemnation of him than the fact, that without an adversary he was defeated before his own judges? So now we also have their opinion against Auxentius.

27. Et in eo quod gentes elegit iure damnandus est, quia apostoli praecepta dimisit cum apostolus dicat: Audet aliquis vestrum adversus alterum habens negotium iudicari apud iniquos et non apud sanctos? Aut nescitis quoniam sancti de hoc mundo iudicabunt? [I Cor. 6, 1sq.] Et infra ait: Sic non est inter vos sapiens quisquam qui possit iudicare inter fratres, sed frater cum fratre iudicio contendit et hoc apud infideles? [ibid. 5sq.] Vides quia quod ille obtulit contra auctoritatem apostoli sit. Vos eligite utrum Auxentium an Paulum sequi debeamus magistrum.

27. And that he has chosen heathen is rightly to be condemned; for he has disregarded the Apostle's command, where he says: Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust and not before the saints? Do you not know the saints shall judge the world? 1 Corinthians 6:1-2 And below he says: Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you, who can judge between heathen? But brother goes to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers. 1 Corinthians 6:5 You see, then, that what he has introduced is against the Apostle's authority. Do you decide, then, whether we are to follow Auxentius or Paul as our master.

28. Sed quid dicam de apostolo, cum ipse dominus clamet per prophetam: Audite me, populus meus, qui scitis iudicium, quorum in corde lex mea est [Is. 51, 7]. Deus dicit: Audite me, populus meus, qui scitis iudicium, Auxentius dicit: «Nescitis iudicium». Videtis quia iam deum contemnit in vobis qui sententiam caelestis refutat oraculi? Audite me, inquit, populus meus, dicit dominus, non dicit: Audite, gentes, non dicit: Audite, Iudaei. Iam enim populus dei qui fuerat Iudaeorum quia populus erroris est factus, et qui populus erroris erat populus dei esse coepit quia in Christum credidit. Iste ergo populus iudicat cuius in corde lex divina est non humana, lex non atramento scripta sed spiritu dei vivi, non in carta exarata, sed in corde signata, lex gratiae, non cruoris [II Cor. 3, 3]. Quis igitur vobis iniuriam facit, qui recusat vestram an qui eligit audientiam?

28. But why speak of the Apostle, when the Lord Himself cries through the prophet: Hearken unto Me, My people, you who know judgment, in whose heart is My law. Isaiah 51:7 God says: Hearken unto Me, My people, you that know judgment. Auxentius says: You know not judgment. Do you see how he condemns God in you, who rejects the voice of the heavenly oracle: Hearken unto Me, My people, says the Lord. He says not, Hearken, you Gentiles, nor does He say, Hearken, you Jews. For they who had been the people of the Lord have now become the people of error, and they who were the people of error have begun to be the people of God; for they have believed on Christ. That people then judges in whose heart is the divine, not the human law, the law not written in ink, but in the spirit of the living God; 2 Corinthians 3:3 not set down on paper, but stamped upon the heart. Who then, does you a wrong, he who refuses, or he who chooses to be heard by you?

29. Conclusus undique ad versutiam patrum suorum confugit. De imperatore vult invidiam commovere, dicens iudicare debere adolescentem catechuminum sacrae lectionis ignarum et in consistorio iudicare, quasi vero superiore anno quando ad palatium sum petitus, cum praesentibus primatibus ante consistorium tractaretur, cum imperator basilicam vellet eripere, ego tunc aulae contemplatione regalis infractus sim, constantiam non tenuerim sacerdotis aut imminuto iure discesserim? Nonne meminerunt quod ubi me cognovit populus palatium petisse ita irruit, ut vim eius ferre non possent, quando se comiti militari cum expeditis ad fugandam multitudinem egresso obtulerunt omnes se neci pro fide Christi? Non tunc rogatus sum, ut populum multo sermone mulcerem, sponderem fidem quod basilicam ecclesiae nullus invaderet? Et cum pro beneficio meum sit officium postulatum, tamen quod populus ad palatium venisset mihi invidia commota est. In hanc igitur invidiam me redire desiderant.

29. Hemmed in on all sides, he betakes himself to the wiles of his fathers. He wants to stir up ill-will on the Emperor's side, saying that a youth, a catechumen ignorant of the sacred writings, ought to judge, and to judge in the consistory. As though last year when I was sent for to go to the palace, when in the presence of the chief men the matter was discussed before the consistory, when the Emperor wished to seize the basilica, I was cowed then at the sight of the royal court, and did not show the firmness a bishop should, or departed with diminished claims. Do they not remember that the people, when they knew I had gone to the palace, made such a rush that they could not resist its force; and all offered themselves to death for the faith of Christ as a military officer came out with some light troops to disperse the crowd? Was not I asked to calm the people with a long speech? Did I not pledge my word that no one should invade the basilica of the church? And though my services were asked for to do an act of kindness, yet the fact that the people came to the palace was used to bring ill-will upon me. They wish to bring me to this now again.

30. Revocavi populum et tamen invidiam non evasi; quam quidem invidiam ego temperandam arbitror non timendam. Quid enim timeamus pro Christi nomine? Nisi forte illud movere me debet quod aiunt: «Ergo non debet imperator unam basilicam accipere ad quam procedat, et plus vult Ambrosius posse quam imperator, ut imperatori prodeundi facultatem neget?» Quod cum dicunt apprehendere sermones nostros gestiunt, sicut Iudaei qui Christum versuto sermone temptabant dicentes: Magister, licet tributum dare Caesari an non? [Mt. 22, 17] Semperne de Caesare servulis dei invidia commovetur? Et hoc ad calumniam sibi arcessit impietas, ut imperiale nomen obtendat? Et isti possunt dicere quod eorum non habeant sacrilegium quorum imitantur magisterium?

30. I recalled the people, and yet I did not escape their ill-will, which ill-will, however, I think we ought rather to tempt than fear. For why should we fear for the Name of Christ? Unless perchance I ought to be troubled because they say: Ought not the Emperor to have one basilica, to which to go, and Ambrose wants to have more power than the Emperor, and so refuses to the Emperor the opportunity of going forth to church? When they say this, they desire to lay hold of my words, as did the Jews who tried Christ with cunning words, saying: Master, is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar or not? Matthew 22:17 Is ill-will always stirred up against the servants of God on Cæsar's account, and does impiety make use of this with a view to starting a slander, so as to shelter itself under the imperial name? And can they say that they do not share in the sacrilege of those whose advice they follow?

31. Et tamen videte quanto peiores Arriani sint, quam Iudaei. Illi quaerebant utrum solvendum putaret Caesari ius tributi, isti imperatori volunt dare ius ecclesiae. Sed ut perfidi suum sequuntur auctorem ita et nos quae nos dominus et auctor noster docuit respondeamus. Considerans enim Iesus dolum Iudaeorum [ibid., 18-21] dixit ad eos: Quid me temptatis, ostendite mihi denarium. Et cum dedissent dixit: Cuius imaginem habet et inscriptionem? Respondentes dixerunt: Caesaris. Et ait illis Iesus: Reddite quae sunt Caesaris Caesari et quae dei sunt deo. Ergo et ego dico illis qui mihi obiciunt: Ostendite mihi denarium. Iesus Caesaris denarium vidit et ait: Reddite Caesari quae Caesaris sunt et quae dei sunt deo. Numquid de ecclesiae basilicis occupandis possunt denarium offerre Caesaris?

31. See how much worse than the Jews the Arians are. They asked whether He thought that the right of tribute should be given to Cæsar; these want to give to Cæsar the right of the Church. But as these faithless ones follow their author, so also let us answer as our Lord and Author has taught us. For Jesus seeing the wickedness of the Jews said to them: Why do you tempt Me? Show Me a penny. When they had given it, He said: Whose image and superscription has it? Matthew 22:18 They answered and said: Cæsar's. And Jesus says to them: Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. Matthew 22:21 So, too, I say to these who oppose me: Show me a penny. Jesus sees Cæsar's penny and says: Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. Can they in seizing the basilicas of the church offer Cæsar's penny?

32. Sed in ecclesia unam imaginem novi hoc est imaginem dei invisibilis de qua dixit deus: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram [Gen. 1, 26]; illam imaginem de qua scriptum est quia Christus splendor gloriae et imago substantiae eius [Hebr. 1, 3]. In ista imagine patrem cerno, sicut dixit ipse dominus Iesus: Qui me videt videt et patrem [Ioh. 14, 9]. Non enim haec imago a patre est separata, quae unitatem me docuit trinitatis dicens: Ego et pater unum sumus [Ioh. 10, 30], et infra: Omnia quaecumque habet pater mea sunt [Ioh. 16, 15]. Et de spiritu sancto dicens quia spiritus Christi sit et de Christo accepit sicut scriptum est: Ille de meo accipiet et annuntiabit vobis [ibid., 14].

32. But in the church I only know of one Image, that is the Image of the unseen God, of Which God has said: Let us make man in Our image and Our likeness; Genesis 1:26 that Image of Which it is written, that Christ is the Brightness of His glory and the Image of His Person. Hebrews 1:3 In that Image I perceive the Father, as the Lord Jesus Himself has said: He that sees Me sees the Father. John 14:9 For this Image is not separated from the Father, which indeed has taught me the unity of the Trinity, saying: I and My Father are One, John 10:30 and again: All things that the Father has are

Mine. John 16:15 Also of the Holy Spirit, saying that the Spirit is Christ's, and has received of Christ, as it is written: He shall receive of Mine, and shall declare it unto you. John 16:14

33. Quid igitur non humiliter responsum a nobis est? Si tributum petit non negamus. Agri ecclesiae solvunt tributum; si agros desiderat imperator, potestatem habet vindicandorum; nemo nostrum intervenit. Potest pauperibus collatio populi redundare, non faciant de agris invidiam, tollant eos si libitum est imperatori, non dono sed non nego. Aurum quaerunt, possum dicere: «Argentum et aurum non quaero», sed invidiam faciunt quia aurum erogatur. Nec ego hanc invidiam perhorresco. Habeo aerarios, aerarii mei pauperes Christi sunt, hunc novi congregare thesaurum. Utinam hoc mihi semper crimen ascribant, quia aurum pauperibus erogatur! Quod si obiciunt quod defensionem ab his requiram non nego sed etiam ambio. Habeo defensionem sed in orationibus pauperum. Caeci illi et claudi, debiles et senes robustis bellatoribus fortiores sunt. Denique munera pauperum deum obligant quia scriptum est: Qui largitur pauperi deo fenerat [Prov. 19, 17]. Praesidia bellatorum divinam saepe gratiam non merentur.

33. How, then, did we not answer humbly enough? If he demand tribute, we do not refuse it. The lands of the Church pay tribute. If the Emperor wants the lands, he has the power to claim them, none of us will interfere. The contributions of the people are amply sufficient for the poor. Do not stir up ill-will in the matter of the lands. Let them take them if it is the Emperor's will. I do not give them, but I do not refuse them. They ask for gold. I can say: Silver and gold I do not ask for. But they stir up ill-will because gold is spent. I am not afraid of such ill-will as this. I have dependents. My dependents are Christ's poor. I know how to collect this treasure. On that they may even charge me with this crime, that I have spent money on the poor! And if they make the charge that I seek for defense at their hands, I do not deny it; nay, I solicit it. I have my defense, but it consists in the prayers of the poor. The blind and the lame, the weak and the old, are stronger than hardy warriors. Lastly, gifts to the poor make God indebted to us, for it is written: He that gives to the poor, lends to God. Proverbs 19:17 The guards of warriors often do not merit divine grace.

34. Hymnorum quoque meorum carminibus deceptum populum ferunt, plane nec hoc abnuo. Grande carmen istud est quo nihil potentius; quid enim potentius quam confessio trinitatis, quae cottidie totius populi ore celebratur? Certatim omnes student fidem fateri, patrem et filium et spiritum sanctum norunt versibus praedicare. Facti sunt igitur omnes magistri, qui vix poterant esse discipuli.

34. They declare also that the people have been led astray by the strains of my hymns. I certainly do not deny it. That is a lofty strain, and there is nothing more powerful than it. For what has more power than the confession of the Trinity which is daily celebrated by the mouth of the whole people? All eagerly vie one with the other in confessing the faith, and know how to praise in verse the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. So they all have become teachers, who scarcely could be disciples.

35. Quid igitur obaudientius potest esse quam ut Christi sequamur exemplum, qui specie inventus ut homo humiliavit semetipsum factus oboediens usque ad mortem? [Phil. 2, 7sq.] Denique omnes per oboedientiam liberavit: Sicut enim per inoboedientiam unius hominis peccatores constituti sunt plurimi ita et per unius oboedientiam iusti constituentur multi [Rom. 5, 19]. Si ergo ille oboediens, accipiant oboedientiae magisterium cui nos inhaeremus dicentes his qui nobis de imperatore invidiam faciunt: «Solvimus quae sunt Caesaris Caesari et quae sunt dei deo» [cf. Mt. 22, 21]. Tributum Caesaris est, non negatur, ecclesia dei est, Caesari utique non debet addici, quia ius Caesaris esse non potest dei templum.

35. What could show greater obedience than that we should follow Christ's example, Who, being found in fashion as a man, humbled Himself and became obedient even unto death? Philippians 2:7-8 Accordingly He has freed all through His obedience. For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of One shall many be made righteous. Romans 5:19 If, then, He was obedient, let them receive the rule of obedience: to which we cling, saying to those who stir up ill-will against us on the Emperor's side: We pay to Cæsar what is Cæsar's, and to God what is God's. Tribute is due to Cæsar, we do not deny it. The Church belongs to God, therefore it ought not to be assigned to Cæsar. For the temple of God cannot be Cæsar's by right.

36. Quod cum honorificentia imperatoris dictum nemo potest negare. Quid enim honorificentius quam ut imperator ecclesiae filius esse dicatur? Quod cum dicitur sine peccato dicitur, cum gratia dicitur. Imperator enim intra ecclesiam non supra ecclesiam est; bonus enim imperator quaerit auxilium ecclesiae, non refutat. Haec ut humiliter dicimus ita constanter exponimus. Sed incendia aliqui, gladium deportationem minantur. Didicimus Christi servuli non timere, non timentibus numquam est gravis terror; denique scriptum est: Sagittae infantium factae sunt plagae eorum [Ps. 63, 8].

36. That this is said with respectful feeling for the Emperor, no one can deny. For what is more full of respect than that the Emperor should be called the son of the Church. As it is said, it is said without sin, since it is said with the divine favour. For the Emperor is within the Church, not above it. For a good emperor seeks the aid of the Church and does not refuse it. As I say this with all humility, so also I state it with firmness. Some threaten us with fire, sword, exile; we have learned as servants of Christ not to fear. To those who have no fear, nothing is ever a serious cause of dread. Thus too is it written: Arrows of infants their blows have become.

37. Satis igitur propositis responsum videtur. Nunc illos interrogo quod Salvator interrogavit: Baptismum Iohannis de caelo est an ex hominibus? [Luc. 20, 4] et non potuerunt respondere ei Iudaei; si baptismum Iohannis non solverunt Iudaei, Auxentius solvit baptismum Christi? Non enim istud ex hominibus est baptismum sed de caelo, quod detulit nobis consilii magni angelus [cf. Is. 9, 6] ut iustificemur deo. Cur igitur rebaptizandos Auxentius fideles populos putat baptizatos in nomine trinitatis, cum apostolus dicat: Una fides unum baptisma [Eph. 4, 5], et se hominum dicit adversarium esse non Christi cum consilium dei spernat et condemnet baptismum, quod Christus nobis ad redimenda nostra peccata donavit [cf. Luc. 7, 30].

37. A sufficient answer, then, seems to have been given to their suggestion. Now I ask them, what the Saviour asked: The baptism of John, was it from heaven or men? Luke 20:4 The Jews could not answer Him. If the Jews did not make nothing of the baptism of John, does Auxentius make nothing of the baptism of Christ? For that is not a baptism of men, but from heaven, which the angel of great counsel Isaiah 9:6 has brought to us, that we might be justified to God. Wherefore, then, does Auxentius hold that the faithful ought to be rebaptized, when they have been baptized in the name of the Trinity, when the Apostle says: One faith, one baptism? Ephesians 4:5 And wherefore does he say that he is man’s enemy, not Christ’s, seeing that he despises the counsel of God and condemns the baptism which Christ has granted us to redeem our sins.

From 'Dictionary of Christian Biography and Literature'

St . Ambrosius, bp. of Milan (A.D. 374–397). The chief materials for his life are his own works, which include an important collection of letters. Another source is a Life by Paulinus, his notarius or secretary, who had been with him at his death and wrote at the suggestion of St. Augustine. This Life is full of prodigies, and adds hardly anything to what we learn from the works. The letters have been reduced to a chronological order with great care by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose, who have also digested the various particulars into a useful biography.

Ambrose's father, who bore the same name, was a Roman of the highest rank, and at the time of St. Ambrose's birth was prefect of the Galliae, a province which included Britain and Spain, and constituted one of the four great praetorian prefectures of the empire. The only datum for determining the year of Ambrose's birth is a passage in one of his letters in which he happens to mention that he is fifty-three years old, and at the same time contrasts the quiet of Campania with the commotions by which he was himself surrounded (Ep. lix. 3). There are two periods to which this description would apply, A.D. 387 or 393. If we assume, as seems most probable, that Ambrose was fifty-three years old in 393, we shall place his birth in 340.

After receiving a liberal education at Rome, Ambrose devoted himself to the profession of the law, which was then the usual path to the highest civil offices (see Gibbon, c. xvii.). He practised at the court of the praetorian prefect of Italy, Probus, who appointed him "consular" magistrate of the provinces of Liguria and Aemilia. He made an admirable magistrate, and became known to the people of Milan, where he held his court, as a high-minded, conscientious, and religious man. Whilst he was discharging his office, Auxentius, whom the Arian party had foisted into the see of Milan, died. The Catholic party had now grown stronger, and a vehement strife arose as to the appointment of a successor to Auxentius. The consular came down to the church to keep the peace and was addressing the people in his character as a civil magistrate, when a cry (which tradition asserts to have been that of a child) was heard, "Ambrose for bishop!" In a moment it struck the whole multitude as a solution in which both parties might acquiesce without the sense of defeat, and a unanimous shout arose, "We will have Ambrose for bishop!" It was a singular choice, even for those rougher and more tumultuous times, for Ambrose was not yet so much as baptized. But he was an earnest Christian in his belief, and had only been kept from seeking baptism by a religious awe, of which there were then many examples. Such an one naturally shrank from being made bishop. With undoubted sincerity, he resisted this popular nomination. He was, he says, raptus a tribunalibus ad sacerdotium de Officiis, i. 4). He was baptized, passed summarily through the intermediate ecclesiastical stages, and on the eighth day was consecrated bp. of Milan. This was in the year 374 (a year after the death of Athanasius, and before the death of Valentinian I.), Ambrose being thirty-four years of age. The vox populi was never more thoroughly justified. The foundation of his excellence was laid in a singular and unsullied purity of character. In the see of Milan Ambrose had found precisely his place, and he laboured indefatigably as its bishop for twenty-three years till his death.

One of his first cares after his ordination was to divest himself of the charge of private property. As a member of a wealthy family he appears to have possessed both money and lands. What he did not give away to the poor or the church or reserve as an income for his sister, he placed entirely under the management of a dearly loved brother named Satyrus. He was thus free to devote his whole energies to the work of his calling. His writings enable us to follow him in both his ordinary and his extraordinary occupations. He was wont to "celebrate the sacrifice" every day (Ep. xx. 15). Every Lord's Day he preached in the Basilica. His extant works consist mainly of addresses and expositions which had been first spoken in the church and were afterwards revised for publication. They bear traces of this mode of composition in their simplicity and naturalness, and also in their popular character and undigested form. Ambrose had to begin, as he ingenuously declares, to learn and to teach at the same time (de Officiis, lib. i. cap. i. 4.). In doctrine he followed reverently what was of best repute in the church in his time, carefully guarding his own and his people's orthodoxy from all heresy, and urging, but with wholesome, if not always consistent, qualifications, the ascetic religious perfection which the best Christians were then pursuing. The sacred books, for which he had a profound reverence, were to him — what pastoral and didactic theology has always tended to make them — verbal materials for edification, which was to be extracted from them by any and every kind of interpretation to which their letter could be subjected. His writings, therefore, or sermons, are chiefly of interest with reference to the history and character of their author; but they are lively and ingenuous, full of good practical advice, and interspersed with gnomic sentences of much felicity.

One of the secrets of Ambrose's influence over the people was his admission of them into all his interests and cares. He had nothing private from the congregation in the Basilica. The sister Marcellina and the brothers Satyrus and Ambrose (this was the order of their ages) were united together by a remarkable affection. The three loved one another too devotedly to think of marrying. Marcellina became early a consecrated virgin, but continued to feel the keenest and tenderest concern in her brothers' lives. When Ambrose became a bishop, Satyrus appears to have given up an important appointment in order to come and live with his brother and take every secular care off his hands. These domestic virtues of Marcellina and Satyrus we learn from sermons of Ambrose. His discourses on virginity became famous, and attracted virgins from distant parts to receive consecration at his hands. These discourses, in the third year after his ordination, he digested into three books, de Virginibus, which were addressed in their new form to his sister, and which contain, besides much praise of Marcellina, the address made to her at her consecration by the bp. of Rome. A year or two later occurred the death of Satyrus, in the flower of his age. In the depth of his grief Ambrose pronounced a funeral discourse upon his brother (de Excessu Satyri), which was followed seven days after by a sermon upon the hope of a future life (de Fide Res.).

The bp. of Milan, exercising the authority of a patriarchate, and presiding over a city which was frequently the residence of the emperor, was a great dignitary. But we cannot fail to recognize the high reputation which Ambrose had won for himself personally and in a surprisingly short period, when we observe the deference paid to him by the emperors of his time. He was certainly fortunate in the sovereigns with whom he had to do. The youths Gratian and Valentinian II., and the great Theodosius, were singularly virtuous and religious princes. Gratian was a boy of sixteen when the death of his father placed him on the throne, and in the year 377, the third of Ambrose's episcopate, he was two years older. In that year he was preparing to go to the assistance of his uncle Valens against the barbarian invaders by whom he was hard pressed; and desiring to be fortified against the arguments of the Arians whom Valens was favouring at Constantinople, he wrote to Ambrose, and asked him to furnish him with a controversial treatise in support of the orthodox faith. Ambrose complied with the pious youth's request by writing two books de Fide. In the following year Gratian wrote a letter, preserved with those of Ambrose, in which he requests another copy of that work, together with an additional argument upon the divinity of the Holy Spirit. In this letter he calls Ambrose parens. Ambrose amplified his former treatise by adding three books to the two he had already composed. This work de Fide was reckoned an important defence of the orthodox faith. The work de Spiritu Sancto, in three books, was written in the year 381.

The successes of the Goths which attended the defeat and death of Valens were the occasion of frightful calamities to the empire. From Illyricum and Thrace, especially, an immense number of captives were carried off by the barbarians, in ransoming whom the whole available resources of the church were exhausted by Ambrose; and when everything else had been taken, he did not scruple to break up and sell the sacramental vessels. He himself relates this fact with pride (de Off. lib. ii. 136, 138). We now see Ambrose zealous in the general affairs of the church, and the leading ecclesiastic of his time. Presiding in the council of Aquileia, 381, he questioned the two Arianizing prelates who were put on their trial before it. Several letters addressed to the emperor at this time in the name of the council of Aquileia or of the Italian episcopate on the general government of the church are preserved amongst Ambrose's letters (Epp. ix.–xii.). When Acholius died — the bp. of Thessalonica by whom Theodosius had been baptized — his death was formally announced to Ambrose by the clergy and people of his diocese; and we have two letters in reply, one written to the church and the other to Anysius the new bishop. The next two letters of the collection (xvii., xviii.) are addressed to the emperor Valentinian, after the death of Gratian, to exhort him not to comply with a request of Symmachus, prefect of the city, that he would replace the altar of Victory in the Senate House, and restore the funds for certain heathen ceremonies. Ambrose, whose influence was invoked by the bp. of Rome, protested strongly against any such concessions to paganism; and Victory, as it was said, favoured in the result her enemy more than her champion.

The struggle between Ambrose and Justina, the mother of Valentinian II., which afterwards reached such a height at Milan, had been begun with a preliminary trial of strength about the appointment of a bishop at Sirmium. But when the usurpation of Maximus occurred (A.D. 383), and had been stained by the violent death of Gratian, Justina in her alarm had recourse to the great Catholic bishop, and persuaded him to go on an embassy to Maximus, to beg him to leave Italy untouched. Maximus had Theodosius to deal with behind the boy-emperor and his mother; and his first act, when Gaul had fallen into his hands, was to send to Theodosius and propose to him, instead of war, the partition of the empire. Theodosius was constrained by motives of policy to assent to the proposal; and Ambrose had the comfort of returning to Milan with the announcement that the new emperor would refrain from passing the boundary of the Alps. Allusions are made to this embassy in a letter of Ambrose (Ep. xxiv. 7) in which he reports the less successful issue of a later appeal to Maximus.

One of the chief glories of Ambrose is that St. Augustine ascribed to him his conversion, and sought Christian baptism at his hands. The circumstances of his intercourse with St. Ambrose (A.D. 383–387) are related by St. Augustine in his Confessions. He tells us of the singularly eminent position of St. Ambrose (vi. 3), of his reputation for eloquence (vi. 13), of the difficulty of getting an opportunity of conversing with him on account of his many engagements, and his habit of reading to himself when company was present (v. 3), and of his method of expounding the Old Testament by finding under the letter a spiritual or mystical sense (vi. 4).

It was during this period, in the years 385–6, that Ambrose defended the churches of Milan so stoutly against the intrusion of Arian worship. Justina, who patronized the languishing Arian party, was bent on obtaining one of the churches at Milan for the use of her friends. Ambrose was not likely to make the concession. How in this matter he resisted the violent efforts of Justina, and the authority of her son (at this time fifteen years of age), is described at length by Ambrose himself in letters to his sister Marcellina and to Valentinian, and in a sermon preached at the crisis of the struggle (Epp. xx. xxi., and the Sermo de Basilicis Tradendis which follows them). There appear to have been two churches at Milan, the one without, the other within, the walls. The former, as of less importance, was first asked for. This being refused, some persons of the court came to Ambrose, and begged him to concede — probably for partial use only — the newer and larger basilica, and to exert his influence to prevent any popular disturbance. For it is important to observe that throughout the struggle the people were on the Catholic side. Ambrose replied loftily that the temple of God could not be surrendered by His priest. The next day, which was Sunday, as Ambrose was officiating in the principal basilica, news came that police-agents had been sent from the palace, who were hanging on the Portian basilica the curtains which marked a building as claimed for the imperial treasury. A part of the multitude hastened thither; Ambrose remained to perform Mass. Then he heard that the people had seized on a certain Arian presbyter, whom they met on the way. Ambrose began to pray with bitter tears that the cause of the church might not be stained with blood; and sent presbyters and deacons, who succeeded in rescuing the prisoner unhurt. Justina, in her irritation, treated the rich men of the city as responsible for a tumult, and threw many of them into prison. The imperial authority was being dangerously strained. Politic officials came to Ambrose and entreated him to give way to the sovereign rights of the emperor;

Ambrose replied that the emperor had no rights over what belonged to God. A body of troops was sent to take possession of the basilica, and there was great fear of blood being shed; but after mutual appeals between their officers and Ambrose, the soldiers withdrew, and Ambrose remained all day in the church. At night he went home, and on coming out the next morning he found that the church (the Portian) was surrounded by soldiers. But the soldiers were in awe of Ambrose, and, learning that he had threatened them with excommunication, they began to crowd in, protesting that they came to pray and not to fight. Ambrose took the lesson for the day as the subject of a sermon, and whilst he was preaching he was told that the imperial curtains were taken down. The emperor was worsted by the bishop, and was naturally angry. He sent a secretary to reproach Ambrose, and ask if he meant to make himself a tyrant. Soldiers continued to surround the church, and Ambrose remained there singing psalms with the faithful. The next day the soldiers were withdrawn, and the merchants who had been imprisoned were released. The struggle was over; but Ambrose heard that the emperor had said bitterly to the soldiers, "If Ambrose orders you, you will give me up in chains." He records another saying, which drew from him a retort of characteristic felicity. The court chamberlain sent him a message: "Whilst I am alive, shall you despise Valentinian? I will take off your head." Ambrose answered: "May God grant you to fulfil what you threaten; for then my fate will be that of a bishop, your act will be that of a eunuch."

In the course of the following year the attempts of the Arian party, and of the emperor as at this time governed by that party, were renewed. Ambrose was asked to hold a discussion with Auxentius, an Arian bishop, before chosen judges in the presence of the court, or else to withdraw from Milan. He consulted such bishops and presbyters as were within reach, and in their name wrote a letter to the emperor (Ep. xxi.), declining the discussion. An alarm was spread amongst the people that he was going to be taken away from Milan, and for some days, by night and by day, he was surrounded and watched by an immense concourse of his friends. He preached them a sermon (de Basilicis Tradendis), assuring them of his steadfastness, and encouraging them to confidence, and at the same time gave them hymns composed by himself to sing — hymns in honour of the Trinity — by which their fervour was greatly stimulated. Again the court party found themselves worsted, and gave way.

The singing of hymns, by which this remarkable occupation of the basilica was characterized, is described by St. Augustine as extremely moving (Conf. vi. 7), and is said by him to have been an imitation of Eastern customs, and to have been followed generally throughout the church. Paulinus also observes that at this time "antiphons, hymns, and vigils began to be performed in the church of Milan, and had spread thence amongst all the churches of the West" (Vita, 13). The reputation of St. Ambrose as a composer of hymns was such that many certainly not his have been attributed to him, and amongst them the Te Deum. The Benedictine edition gives twelve hymns, which there is some good authority for ascribing to Ambrose, the best known of which are those beginning Aeterne rerum conditor, Deus creator omnium, Veni redemptor gentium, and O lux beata Trinitas. They have a brightness and felicity which have reasonably made them favourites in the church to the present day.

We must take into account the state of mind brought about in the bishop and his flock by that protracted vigil in the basilica, when we read of the miracles into which their triumph over heresy blazed forth. We have a narrative from St. Ambrose's own pen, in a letter to Marcellina (Ep. xxii.), of the wonderful discovery of the remains of two martyrs, and of the cures wrought by them. A basilica was to be dedicated, and Ambrose was longing to find some relics of martyrs. A presage suddenly struck him. (This "presagium" is called a vision by St. Augustine, Conf. lx. 7, de Civ. Dei, xxii. 8.) He caused the ground to be opened in the church that was consecrated by the remains of St. Felix and St. Nabor. Two bodies were found, of wonderful size (ut prisca aetas ferebat), the heads severed from the shoulders, the tomb stained with blood. This discovery, so precious to a church "barren of martyrs," was welcomed with the wildest enthusiasm. Old men began to remember that they had heard formerly the names of these martyrs — Gervasius and Protasius — and had read the title on their grave. Miracles crowded thick upon one another. They were mostly cures of demoniacs, and of sickly persons; but one blind man received his sight. Ambrose himself, for once, eagerly and positively affirms the reality of the cure; and Augustine, who generally held that the age of miracles was past, also bears witness to the common acceptance of the fact at Milan. Gibbon has some excuse for his note, "I should recommend this miracle to our divines, if it did not prove the worship of relics, as well as the Nicene Creed." The Arians, as we learn from Ambrose and Paulinus, made light of the healing of demoniacs, and were sceptical about the blind man's history. The martyrs' bones were carried into the "Ambrosian" Basilica (now the church of St. Ambrogio), and deposited beneath the altar in a place which Ambrose had designed for his own remains.

The memory of this conflict did not restrain Justina and her son from asking help shortly after of Ambrose. It was evident that Maximus was preparing to invade Italy; and as Ambrose had apparently been successful in his former embassy, he was charged with another conciliatory appeal to the same ruler. The magnanimous bishop consented to go, but he was unfavourably received, and having given great offence by abstaining from communion with the bishops who were about Maximus, he was summarily ordered to return home. He reports the failure of his mission in a letter to Valentinian (Ep. xxiv.). It is worthy of remark that the punishment of heresy by death was so hateful to Ambrose that he declined communion with bishops who had been accomplices in it ("qui aliquos, devios licet a fide, ad necem petebant," ib. 12). These bishops had prevailed on Maximus to put to death Priscillian — the first time that heresy was so punished. [Priscillianus.]

Maximus was not diverted from his project. He crossed the Alps, and Justina, with her son, fled to Theodosius. It was not long before the vigour and ability of Theodosius triumphed over Maximus, who perished in the conflict he had provoked. Ambrose, who withdrew from Milan when Maximus came to occupy it, appears to have been near Theodosius in the hour of victory, and used his influence with him in favour of moderation and clemency, which the emperor, according to his usual habit, displayed in an eminent degree (Ep. xl. 32). But Ambrose unhappily prevailed upon Theodosius to abandon a course which his stricter sense of his duty as a ruler had prompted him to take. In some obscure place in the East the Christians had been guilty of outrages, from which it had often been their lot to suffer. With the support of their bishop, they had demolished a Jewish synagogue and a meeting-house of certain Gnostic heretics. Theodosius, hearing of this violence, had ordered that the bishop should rebuild the synagogue at his own expense, and that the rioters, who were chiefly monks, should be punished at the discretion of the local governor. This order naturally affronted the party spirit of the Christians. Ambrose could not bear that his fellow-believers should be thus humiliated. He wrote a letter to the emperor (who was at Milan, Ambrose being for the moment at Aquileia), entreating him most earnestly to revoke the order. With much that Ambrose says we can sympathize; but he lays down a principle fruitful in disastrous issues: Cedat oportet censura (the functions of the civil ruler) devotioni (Ep. xl. 11). Shortly after, he had the opportunity of preaching before the emperor at Milan. In a letter to his sister he gives the sermon at length, with its conclusion, addressed directly to the emperor, and begging of him the pardon of those who had been caught in a sin. When he came down from the pulpit, Theodosius said to him, De nobis proposuisti. "Only with a view to your advantage," replied Ambrose. "In truth," continued the emperor, "the order that the bishop should rebuild the synagogue was too hard. But that is amended. The monks commit many crimes." Then he remained silent for a while. At last Ambrose said, "Enable me to offer the sacrifice for thee with a clear conscience." The emperor sat down and nodded, but Ambrose would not be satisfied without extracting a solemn engagement that no further proceedings should be taken in the matter. After this he went up to the altar; "but I should not have gone," adds Ambrose, "unless he had given me his full promise" (Ep. xli. 28).

About two years later (A.D. 390) the lamentable massacre at Thessalonica gave occasion for a very grand act of spiritual discipline. The commander of the garrison at Thessalonica and several of his officers had been brutally murdered by a mob in that city. The indignation of the emperor was extreme; and after appearing to yield to gentler counsels, he sent orders, which were executed by an indiscriminate slaughter of at least 7,000 persons in Thessalonica. Ambrose protested against this in the name of God and of the church. He had always acted on the principle that "nothing was more dangerous before God or base amongst men than for a priest not to speak out his convictions freely," and his lofty disinterestedness (non pro meis commodis faciebam, Ep. lvii. 4) gave him great power over a religious and magnanimous mind like that of Theodosius. Ambrose now wrote him a letter (Ep. li.), which Gibbon most unjustly calls "a miserable rhapsody on a noble subject," but which most readers will feel to be worthy of its high purpose. With many protestations of respect and sympathy Ambrose urges his Emperor to a genuine repentance for the dreadful deed to which in an access of passion he had given his sanction. He intimates that he could not celebrate the Eucharist in the presence of one so stained with blood. Gibbon represents the behaviour of Ambrose as marked by a prelatical pomposity, of which there is no trace whatever in the only documents on which we can rely. In his own letter the bishop is most considerate and tender, though evidently resolute. He and Paulinus record simply that the emperor performed public penance, stripping himself of his royal insignia, and praying for pardon with groans and tears; and that he never passed a day afterwards without grieving for his error (Paulinus, 24; Amb. de Ob. Theod. 34.).

In the course of the following year (391), Theodosius having returned to the East, the weak authority of Valentinian II. was overthrown by Arbogastes and his puppet Eugenius, and the unfortunate youth perished by the same fate as his brother. He was in Gaul at the time of his death, and Ambrose was at that moment crossing the Alps to visit him there, partly by the desire of the Italian magistrates, who wished Valentinian to return to Italy, and partly at the request of the emperor himself, who was anxious to be baptized by him. In the next year (392) a funeral oration was delivered at Milan by Ambrose (de Obitu Valentiniani), in which he praises the piety as well as the many virtues of the departed. It appears that under the influence of Theodosius, Valentinian had learnt to regard Ambrose with the same reverence as his brother had done before him (Letter to Theodosius, Ep. liii. 2). He had died unbaptized; but Ambrose assures his sorrowing sisters that his desire was equivalent to the act of baptism, and that he had been washed in his piety as the martyrs in their blood (de Ob. Val. 51–53).

Eugenius held the sovereign power in the West for two or three years, and made friendly overtures to the great Italian prelate. But Ambrose for a time returned no answer; and when Eugenius came to Milan, he retired from that city. Shortly after this withdrawal, he wrote a respectful letter to Eugenius, explaining that the reason why he had refused to hold intercourse with him was that he had given permission, though himself a Christian, that the altar of Victory should be restored — the boon which Symmachus had begged for in vain being yielded to the power of Arbogastes.

When the military genius and vigour of Theodosius had gained one more brilliant triumph by the rapid overthrow of Arbogastes and Eugenius, Ambrose, who had returned to Milan (Aug. A.D. 394), received there a letter from Theodosius requesting him to offer a public thanksgiving for his victory. Ambrose replies (Ep. lxi.) with enthusiastic congratulations. But the happiness thus secured did not last long. In the following year the great Theodosius died at Milan (Jan. 395), asking for Ambrose with his last breath (de Obitu Theod. 35). The bishop had the satisfaction of paying a cordial tribute to his memory in the funeral oration he delivered over his remains.

Ambrose himself had only two more years to live. The time was filled with busy labours of exposition, correspondence, and episcopal government; and, according to Paulinus, with various prodigies. Unhappily this biographer spoils with his childish miracles what is still a touching account of the good bishop's death. It became known that his strength was failing, and the count Stilicho, saying that the death of such a man threatened death to Italy itself, induced a number of the chief men of the city to go to him, and entreat him to pray to God that his life might be spared. Ambrose replied, "I have not so lived amongst you, that I should be ashamed to live; and I do not fear to die, because we have a good Lord." For some hours before his death he lay with his hands crossed, praying; as Paulinus could see by the movement of his lips, though he heard no voice. When the last moment was at hand, Honoratus, the bp. of Vercellae, who was lying down in another room, thought he heard himself thrice called, and came to Ambrose, and offered him the Body of the Lord; immediately after receiving which he breathed his last breath — a man, Paulinus says well, who for the fear of God had never feared to speak the truth to kings or any powers. He died on Good Friday night, 397, and was buried in the Ambrosian Basilica, in the presence of a multitude of every rank and age, including even Jews and pagans.

By the weight of his character St. Ambrose gave a powerful support to the tendencies which he favoured. He held without misgivings that the church was the organ of God in the world, and that secular government had the choice of being either hostile or subservient to the Divine authority ruling in the church. To passages already quoted which express this conviction may be added a remark let fall by Ambrose at the council of Aquileia, "Sacerdotes de laicis judicare debent, non laici de sacerdotibus" (Gesta Conc. Aqu. 51). He was of strict Athanasian orthodoxy as against heresy of every colour. His views of the work of Christ in the Incarnation, the Passion, and the Resurrection, have in a marked degree the broad and universal character which belongs to the higher patristic theology on this subject. (For example, speaking of the resurrection of Christ, he says, "Resurrexit in eo mundus, resurrexit in eo coelum, resurrexit in eo terra," de Fide Res. 102.) With regard to religion and religious practices, he is emphatic in insisting that the worship of the heart is all-important ("Deo enim velle pro facto est," de Fide Res. 115; "Deus non sanguine sed pietate placatur," ib. 98; "Non pecuniam Deus sed fidem quaerit," de Poen. ii. ix.); but at the same time his language concerning the two Sacraments is often undeniably that of materializing theology. Attempts have been made, chiefly on this account, to call in question the Ambrosian authorship of the treatises de Mysteriis and de Sacramentis; but their expressions are supported by others to be found in undoubted works of Ambrose. He praises his brother Satyrus for having tied a portion of the consecrated elements in a napkin round his neck when he was shipwrecked, and adds, that having found the benefit of "the heavenly mystery" in this form, he was eager to receive it into his mouth— "quam majus putabat fusum in viscera, quod tantum sibi tectum orario profuisset!" (de Exc. Sat. 43, 46). He argues for the daily reception of the Eucharist from the prayer, Give us this day our daily bread (de Sacr. v. 25). His frequent strong recommendations of virginity are based, not on a theory of self-denial, but rather on one of detachment from the cares of the world and the troubles inseparable from matrimony and parentage. According to him, marriage is the more painful state, as well as the less favourable to spiritual devotion. Nevertheless, he did not expect or desire a large number to embrace the life which he so highly eulogized. "Dicet aliquis: Ergo dissuades nuptias? ego vero suadeo, et eos damno qui dissuadere consuerunt. …Paucarum quippe hoc munus [virginity] est, illud omnium" (de Virginibus, I. vii.). He and his sister used to press Satyrus to marry, but Satyrus put it off through family affection—"ne a fratribus divelleretur" (de Exc. Sat. §§ 53, 59). Fasting is commended, not as self-torture pleasing to God, but as the means of making the body more wholesome and stronger. A keen sense of the restraints and temptations and annoyances which reside in the flesh is expressed in Ambrose's remarkable language concerning death. It is a great point with him that death is altogether to be desired. He argues this point very fully in the address de Fide Resurrectionis and in the essay de Bono Mortis. There are three kinds of death, he says the death of sin, death to sin, and the death of the body (de B. M. § 3). This last is the emancipation of the soul from the body. He appeals to the arguments of philosophers and to the analogies of nature, as well as to Scripture, to shew not only that such a deliverance may be hoped for, but that it must be a thing to be desired by all. The terrors of the future state almost entirely disappear. He admits now and then that punishment must be looked for by the wicked; but he affirms that even to the wicked death is a gain (de B. M. § 28). There are two reasons why the foolish fear death: one because they regard it as destruction; "altera, quod poenas reformident, poetarum scilicet fabulis territi, latratus Cerberi, et Cocyti fluminis tristem voraginem, etc., etc. Haec plena sunt fabularum, nec tamen negaverim poenas esse post mortem" (ib. 33). "Qui infideles sunt, descendunt in infernum viventes; etsi nobiscum videntur vivere sed in inferno sunt" (ib. 56).

The see of Milan was in no way dependent upon that of Rome; but Ambrose always delighted to pay respect to the bp. of Rome, as representing more than any other the unity of the church. His feeling towards Rome is expressed in the apology with which he defends the custom of washing the feet in baptism — a custom which prevailed at Milan but not at Rome. "In omnibus cupio sequi Ecclesiam Romanam; sed tamen et nos homines sensum habemus; ideo quod alibi rectius servatur, et nos rectius custodimus. Ipsum sequimur apostolum Petrum, …qui sacredos fuit Ecclesiae Romanae" (de Sacramentis, III. §§ 5, 6).

As a writer, St. Ambrose left a multitude of works behind him, which show competent learning, a familiar acquaintance with Plato, Cicero, Vergil, and other classics, and much intellectual liveliness and industry. Their want of originality did not hinder them from obtaining for their author, through their popular and practical qualities, a distinguished reputation as a sound and edifying teacher. He is often mentioned with respect by his contemporaries, St. Jerome and St. Augustine (see especially the latter, de Doctrina Christianâ, iv. 46, 48, 50). He came to be joined with them and Gregory the Great as one of the four Latin doctors of the church. His writings may be classified under three heads, as (1) Expository, (2) Doctrinal or Didactic, and (3) Occasional.

(1) The first class contains a long list of expositions, delivered first as sermons, of many books of Scripture. They begin with the Hexaemeron, or commentary on the Creation. Of this work St. Jerome says, "Nuper S. Ambrosius sic Hexaemeron illius [Origenus] compilavit, ut magis Hippolyti sententias Basiliique sequeretur" (E). It is in a great part a literal translation from St. Basil. St. Augustine was interested by the method of interpretation in which Ambrose followed Basil, Origen, and Philo Judaeus, finding a spiritual or mystical meaning latent under the natural or historical. The Hexaemeron (6 books) is followed by de Paradiso, de Cain et Abel (2), de Noe et Arcâ, de Abraham (2), de Isaac et Animâ, de Bono Mortis, de Fugâ Saeculi, de Jacob et Beatâ Vitâ (2), de Joseph Patriarchâ, de Benedictionibus Patriarcharum, de Eliâ et Jejunio, de Nabuthe Jezraelitâ, de Tobiâ, de Interpellatione Job et David (4), Apologia Prophetae David, Apol. altera ib., Enarrationes in Psalmos (12), Expositio in Ps. cxviii., Expositio Evang. secundum Lucam (10).

(2) The second class contains de Officiis Ministrorum (3 books), de Virginibus (3), de Viduis, de Virginitate, Exhortatio Virginitatis, de Lapsu Virginis Consecratae, de Mysteriis, de Sacramentis (6), de Poenitentiâ (2), de Fide (5), de Spiritu Sancto (3), de Incarnationis Dominicae Sacramento. Of these the books de Officiis, addressed to the clergy (imitated from Cicero), and those de Fide, mentioned above, are the most important.

(3) The occasional writings, which are biographically the most valuable, are the discourses de Excessu Fratris sui Satyri (2), de Obitu Valentiniani Consolatio, de Obitu Theodosii Oratio, and the Epistles, ninety-one in number, with the Gesta Concilii Aquileiensis inserted amongst them.

Various ecclesiastical writings have been attributed to Ambrose, which critical examination has determined to be spurious. [Ambrosiaster.] Most of these are given in the Benedictine edition; in that of Migne there is an additional appendix, containing some other compositions which have borne Ambrose's name, but are either manifestly spurious or have no sufficient title to be considered genuine. Some of his genuine works appear to have been lost, especially one, mentioned with high praise by St. Augustine (Ep. xxxi. 8), against those who alleged that our Lord had learnt from Plato.

Of the connexion of St. Ambrose with the liturgical arrangement which bears his name, we know nothing more than what has been quoted above from Paulinus. [See D. C. A., arts. Liturgies; Ambrosian Music.]

There are three principal editions of Ambrose's works — that of Erasmus, the Roman, and the Benedictine. Erasmus's ed. was pub. at Basle, by Froben, in 1527. He divided the works into four tomes, with the titles, (1) Ethica, (2) Polemica, (3) Orationes, Epistolae, et Conciones, (4) Explanationes Vet. et Novi Testamenti. The great Roman edition was the work of many years' labour, undertaken by the desire of popes Pius IV. and Pius V., and begun by a monk who afterwards became pope with the name of Sixtus V. It was pub. in 5 vols. at Rome, in the years 1580–1–2–5. This edition superseded all others, until the publication of the excellent work of the Benedictines (du Frische and Le Nourry) at Paris, A.D. 1686 and 1690. A small revised ed. of the de Officiis and the Hexaemeron has been printed in the Bibliotheca Pat. Eccl. Latin. Selecta (Tauchnitz, Leipz.). Some of his works are reprinted in the Vienna Corpus Ser. Eccl. Lat.; and in the 10th vol. of the Nic. and Post-Nic. Fathers are English trans. of select works. An elaborate Life of St. Ambrose by Baronius, extracted from his Annales, is prefixed to the Roman edition; but improved upon by the more critical investigations of the Benedictine editors, who have laid the basis for all subsequent Lives. (Cf. Th. Forshaw, Ambrose, Bp. of Milan, 1884; a Life by the duc de Broglie in Les Saints, 1899 (Paris). A cheap popular Life by R. Thornton is pub. by S.P.C.K. in their Fathers for Eng. Readers.)

St. Ambrose

BISHOP OF MILAN from 374 to 397; born probably 340, at Trier, Arles, or Lyons; died 4 April, 397. He was one of the most illustrious Fathers and Doctors of the Church, and fitly chosen, together with St. Augustine, St. John Chrysostom, and St. Athanasius, to uphold the venerable Chair of the Prince of the Apostles in the tribune of St. Peter's at Rome.

The materials for a biography of the Saint are chiefly to be found scattered through his writings, since the "Life" written after his death by his secretary, Paulinus, at the suggestion of St. Augustine, is extremely disappointing. Ambrose was descended from an ancient Roman family, which, at an early period had embraced Christianity, and numbered among its scions both Christian martyrs and high officials of State. At the time of his birth his father, likewise named Ambrosius, was Prefect of Gallia, and as such ruled the present territories of France, Britain, and Spain, together with Tingitana in Africa. It was one of the four great prefectures of the Empire, and the highest office that could be held by a subject. Trier, Arles, and Lyons, the three principal cities of the province, contend for the honour of having given birth to the Saint. He was the youngest of three children, being preceded by a sister, Marcellina, who become a nun, and a brother Satyrus, who, upon the unexpected appointment of Ambrose to the episcopate, resigned a prefecture in order to live with him and relieve him from temporal cares. About the year 354 Ambrosius, the father, died, whereupon the family removed to Rome. The saintly and accomplished widow was greatly assisted in the religious training of her two sons by the example and admonitions of her daughter, Marcellina, who was about ten years older than Ambrose. Marcellina had already received the virginal veil from the hands of Liberius, the Roman Pontiff, and with another consecrated virgin lived in her mother's house. From her the Saint imbibed that enthusiastic love of virginity which became his distinguishing trait. His progress in secular knowledge kept equal pace with his growth in piety. It was of extreme advantage to himself and to the Church that he acquired a thorough mastery of the Greek language and literature, the lack of which is so painfully apparent in the intellectual equipment of St. Augustine and, in the succeeding age, of the great St. Leo. In all probability the Greek Schism would not have taken place had East and West continued to converse as intimately as did St. Ambrose and St. Basil. Upon the completion of his liberal education, the Saint devoted his attention to the study and practice of the law, and soon so distinguished himself by the eloquence and ability of his pleadings at the court of the praetorian prefect, Anicius Probus, that the latter took his into his council, and later obtained for him from the Emperor Valentinian the office of consular governor of Liguria and Æmilia, with residence in Milan. "Go", said the prefect, with unconscious prophecy, "conduct thyself not as a judge, but as bishop". We have no means of ascertaining how long he retained the civic government of his province; we know only that his upright and gently administration gained for him the universal love and esteem of his subjects, paving the way for that sudden revolution in his life which was soon to take place. This was the more remarkable, because the province, and especially the city of Milan, was in a state of religious chaos, owing to the persistent machinations of the Arian faction.

Bishop of Milan

EVER SINCE THE heroic Bishop Dionysius, in the year 355, had been dragged in chains to his place of exile in the distant East, the ancient chair of St. Barnabas had been occupied by the intruded Cappadocian, Auxentius, an Arian filled with bitter hatred of the Catholic Faith, ignorant of the Latin language, a wily and violent persecutor of his orthodox subjects. To the great relief of the Catholics, the death of the petty tyrant in 374 ended a bondage which had lasted nearly twenty years. The bishops of the province, dreading the inevitable tumults of a popular election, begged the Emperor Valentinian to appoint a successor by imperial edict; he, however, decided that the election must take place in the usual way. It devolved upon Ambrose, therefore, to maintain order in the city at this perilous juncture. Proceeding to the basilica in which the disunited clergy and people were assembled, he began a conciliatory discourse in the interest of peace and moderation, but was interrupted by a voice (according to Paulinus, the voice of an infant) crying, “Ambrose, Bishop”. The cry was instantly repeated by the entire assembly, and Ambrose, to his surprise and dismay, was unanimously pronounced elected. Quite apart from any supernatural intervention, he was the only logical candidate, known to the Catholics as a firm believer in the Nicene Creed, unobnoxious to the Arians, as one who had kept aloof from all theological controversies. The only difficulty was that of forcing the bewildered consular to accept an office for which his previous training nowise fitted him. Strange to say, like so many other believers of that age, from a misguided reverence for the sanctity of baptism, he was still only a catechumen, and by a wise provision of the canons ineligible to the episcopate. That he was sincere in his repugnance to accepting the responsibilities of the sacred office, those only have doubted who have judged a great man by the standard of their own pettiness. Were Ambrose the worldly-minded, ambitious, and scheming individual they choose to paint him, he would have surely sought advancement in the career that lay wide open before him as a man of acknowledged ability and noble blood. It is difficult to believe that he resorted to the questionable expedients mentioned by his biographer as practised by him with a view to undermining his reputation with the populace. At any rate his efforts were unsuccessful. Valentinian, who was proud that his favourable opinion of Ambrose had been so fully ratified by the voice of clergy and people, confirmed the election and pronounced severe penalties against all who should abet him in his attempt to conceal himself. The Saint finally acquiesced, received baptism at the hands of a Catholic bishop, and eight day later, 7 December 374, the day on which East and West annually honour his memory, after the necessary preliminary degrees was consecrated bishop.

He was now in his thirty-fifth year, and was destined to edify the Church for the comparatively long space of twenty-three active years. From the very beginning he proved himself to be that which he has ever since remained in the estimation of the Christian world, the perfect model of a Christian bishop. There is some truth underlying the exaggerated eulogy of the chastened Theodosius, as reported by Theodoret (v, 18), “I know no bishop worthy of the name, except Ambrose”. In him the magnanimity of the Roman patrician was tempered by the meekness and charity of the Christian saint. His first act in the episcopate, imitated by many a saintly successor, was to divest himself of his worldly goods. His personal property he gave to the poor; he made over his landed possessions to the Church, making provision for the support of his beloved sister. The self-devotion of his brother, Satyrus, relieved him from the care of the temporalities, and enabled him to attend exclusively to his spiritual duties. In order to supply the lack of an early theological training, he devoted himself assiduously to the study of Scripture and the Fathers, with a marked preference for Origen and St. Basil, traces of whose influence are repeatedly met with in his works. With a genius truly Roman, he, like Cicero, Virgil, and other classical authors, contented himself with thoroughly digesting and casting into a Latin mould the best fruits of Greek thought. His studies were of an eminently practical nature; he learned that he might teach. In the exordium of his treatise, "De Officiis", he complains that, owing to the suddenness of his transfer from the tribunal to the pulpit, he was compelled to learn and teach simultaneously. His piety, sound judgment, and genuine Catholic instinct preserved him from error, and his fame as an eloquent expounder of Catholic doctrine soon reached the ends of the earth. His power as an orator is attested not only by the repeated eulogies, but yet more by the conversion of the skilled rhetorician Augustine. His style is that of a man who is concerned with thoughts rather than words. We cannot imagine him wasting time in turning an elegant phrase. "He was one of those", says St. Augustine, "who speak the truth, and speak it well, judiciously, pointedly, and with beauty and power of expression" (De doct. christ., iv,21).

His Daily Life

THROUGH THE DOOR of his chamber, wide open the livelong day, and crossed unannounced by all, of whatever estate, who had any sort of business with him, we catch a clear glimpse of his daily life. In the promiscuous throng of his visitors, the high official who seeks his advice upon some weighty affair of state is elbowed by some anxious questioner who wishes to have his doubts removed, or some repentant sinner who comes to make a secret confession of his offenses, certain that the Saint "would reveal his sins to none but God alone" (Paulinus, Vita, xxxix). He ate but sparingly, dining only on Saturdays and Sundays and festivals of the more celebrated martyrs. His long nocturnal vigils were spent in prayer, in attending to his vast correspondence, and in penning down the thoughts that had occurred to him during the day in his oft- interrupted readings. His indefatigable industry and methodical habits explain how so busy a man found time to compose so many valuable books. Every day, he tells us, he offered up the Holy Sacrifice for his people (pro quibus ego quotidie instauro sacrificium). Every Sunday his eloquent discourses drew immense crowds to the Basilica. One favorite topic of his was the excellence of virginity, and so successful was he in persuading maidens to adopt the religious profession that many a mother refused to permit her daughters to listen to his words. The saint was forced to refute the charge that he was depopulating the empire, by quaintly appealing to the young men as to whether any of them experienced any difficulty in finding wives. He contends, and the experience of ages sustains his contention (De Virg., vii) that the population increases in direct proportion to the esteem in which virginity is held. His sermons, as was to be expected, were intensely practical, replete with pithy rules of conduct which have remained as household words among Christians. In his method of biblical interpretation all the personages of Holy Writ, from Adam down, stand out before the people as living beings, bearing each his distinct message from God for the instruction of the present generation. He did not write his sermons, but spoke them from the abundance of his heart; and from notes taken during their delivery he compiled almost all the treatises of his that are extant.

Ambrose and the Arians

IT WAS BUT natural that a prelate so high-minded, so affable, so kind to the poor, so completely devoting his great gifts to the service of Christ and of humanity, should soon with the enthusiastic love of his people. Rarely, if ever, has a Christian bishop been so universally popular, in the best sense of that much abused term, as Ambrose of Milan. This popularity, conjoined with his intrepidity, was the secret of his success in routing enthroned iniquity. The heretical Empress Justina and her barbarian advisers would many a time fain have silenced him by exile or assassination, but, like Herod in the case of the Baptist, they "feared the multitude". His heroic struggles against the aggressions of the secular power have immortalized him as the model and forerunner of future Hildebrands, Beckets, and other champions of religious liberty. The elder Valentinian died suddenly in 375, the year following the consecration of Ambrose, leaving his Arian brother Valens to scourge the East, and his oldest son, Gratian, to rule the provinces formerly presided over by Ambrosius, with no provision for the government of Italy. The army seized the reins and proclaimed emperor the son of Valentinian by his second wife, Justina, a boy four years old. Gratian good-naturally acquiesced, and assigned to his half-brother the sovereignty of Italy, Illyricum, and Africa. Justina had prudently concealed her Arian view during the lifetime of her orthodox husband, but now, abetted by a powerful and mainly Gothic faction at court, proclaimed her determination to rear her child in that heresy, and once more attempt to Arianize the West. This of necessity brought her into direct collision with the Bishop of Milan, who had quenched the last embers of Arianism in his diocese. That heresy had never been popular among the common people; it owed its artificial vitality to the intrigues of courtiers and sovereigns. As a preliminary to the impending contest, Ambrose, at the request of Gratian, who was about to lead an army to the relief of Valens, and wished to have at hand an antidote against Oriental sophistry, wrote his noble work, “De Fide ad Gratianum Augustum”, afterwards expanded, and extant in five books. The first passage at arms between Ambrose and the Empress was on the occasion of an episcopal election at Sirmium, the capital of Illyricum, and at the time the residence of Justina. Notwithstanding her efforts, Ambrose was successful in securing the election of a Catholic bishop. He followed up this victory by procuring, at the Council of Aquilein, (381), over which he presided, the deposition of the only remaining Arianizing prelates of the West, Palladius and Secundianus, both Illyrians. The battle royal between Ambrose and the Empress, in the years 385,386, has been graphically described by Cardinal Newman in his “Historical Sketches”. The question at issue was the surrender of one of the basilicas to the Arians for public worship. Throughout the long struggle Ambrose displayed in an eminent degree all the qualities of a great leader. His intrepidity in the moments of personal danger was equalled only by his admirable moderation; for, at certain critical stages of the drama one word from him would have hurled the Empress and her son from their throne. That word was never spoken. An enduring result of this great struggle with despotism was the rapid development during its course of the ecclesiastical chant, of which Ambrose laid the foundation. Unable to overcome the fortitude of the Bishop and the spirit of the people, the court finally desisted from its efforts. Ere long it was forced to call upon Ambrose to exert himself to save the imperilled throne.

Already he had been sent on an embassy to the court of the usurper, Maximus, who in the year 383 had defeated and slain Gratian, and now ruled in his place. Largely through his efforts an understanding had been reached between Maximus and Theodosius, whom Gratian had appointed to rule the East. It provided that Maximus should content himself with his present possessions and respect the territory of Valentinian II. Three years later Maximus determined to cross the Alps. The tyrant received Ambrose unfavourably and, on the plea, very honourable to the Saint, that he refused to hold communion with the bishops who had compassed the death of Priscillian (the first instance of capital punishment inflicted for heresy by a Christian prince) dismissed him summarily from his court. Shortly after, Maximus invaded Italy. Valentinian and his mother fled to Theodosius, who took up their cause, defeated the usurper, and put him to death. At this time Justina died, and Valentinian, by the advice of Theodosius, abjured Arianism and placed himself under the guidance of Ambrose, to whom he became sincerely attached. It was during the prolonged stay of Theodosius in the West that one of most remarkable episodes in the history of the Church took place; the public penance inflicted by the Bishop and submitted to by the Emperor. The long-received story, set afoot by the distant Theodoret, which extols the Saint's firmness at the expense of his equally pronounced virtues of prudence and meekness - that Ambrose stopped the Emperor at the porch of the church and publicly upbraided and humiliated him - is shown by modern criticism to have been greatly exaggerated. The emergency called into action every episcopal virtue. When the news reached Milan that the seditious Thessalonians had killed the Emperor's officials, Ambrose and the council of bishops, over which he happened to be presiding at the time, made an apparently successful appeal to the clemency of Theodosius. Great was their horror, when, shortly after Theodosius, yielding to the suggestions of Rufinose and other courtiers, ordered an indiscriminate massacre of the citizens, in which seven thousand perished. In order to avoid meeting the blood-stained monarch or offering up the Holy Sacrifice in his presence, and, moreover, to give him time to ponder the enormity of a deed so foreign to his character, the Saint, pleading ill-health, and sensible that he exposed himself to the charge of cowardice, retired to the country, whence he sent a noble letter "written with my own hand, that thou alone mayst read it", exhorting the Emperor to repair his crime by an exemplary penance. With "religious humility", says St. Augustine (DeCiv.Dei.,V,xxvi), Theodosius submitted; "and, being laid hold of by the discipline of the Church, did penance in such a way that the sight of his imperial loftiness prostrated made the people who were interceding for him weep more than the consciousness of offence had made them fear it when enraged". "Stripping himself of every emblem of royalty", says Ambrose in his funeral oration (c. 34), "he publicly in church bewailed his sin. That public penance, which private individuals shrink from, an Emperor was not ashamed to perform; nor was there afterwards a day on which he did not grieve for his mistake." This plain narrative, without theatrical setting, is much more honourable both to the Bishop and his sovereign.

Last Days of Ambrose

THE MURDER OF his youthful ward, Valentinian II, which happened in Gaul, May, 393, just as Ambrose was crossing the Alps to baptize him plunged the Saint into deep affliction. His eulogy delivered at Milan is singularly tender; he courageously described him as a martyr baptized in his own blood. The usurper Eugenius was, in fact, a heathen at heart, and openly proclaimed his resolution to restore paganism. He reopened the heathen temples, and ordered the famous altar of Victory, concerning which Ambrose and the prefect Symmachus had maintained a long and determined literary contest, to be again set up in the Roman senate chamber. This triumph of paganism was of short duration. Theodosius in the spring of 391 again lead his legions into the West, and in a brief campaign defeated and slew the tyrant. Roman heathenism perished with him. The Emperor recognized the merits of the great Bishop of Milan by announcing his victory on the evening of the battle and asking him to celebrate a solemn sacrifice of thanksgiving. Theodosius did not long survive his triumph; he died at Milan a few months later (January 395) with Ambrose at his bedside and the name of Ambrose on his lips. “Even while death was dissolving his body”, says the Saint, “he was more concerned about the welfare of the churches than about his personal danger”. “I loved him, and am confident that the Lord will hearken to the prayer I send up for his pious soul” (In obitu Theodosii, c. 35). Only two years elapsed before a kindly death reunited these two magnanimous souls. No human frame could long endure the incessant activity of an Ambrose. One instance, recorded by his secretary, of his extraordinary capacity for work is significant. He died on Good Friday. The following day five bishops found difficulty in baptizing the crowd to which he had been accustomed to administer the sacrament unaided. When the news spread that he was seriously ill, Count Stilicho, "fearing that his death would involve the destruction of Italy", despatched an embassy, composed of the chief citizens, to implore him to pray God to prolong his days. The response of the Saint made a deep impression on St. Augustine: "I have not so lived amongst you, that I need be ashamed to live; nor do I fear to die, for we have a good Lord". For several hours before his death he lay with extended arms in imitation of his expiring Master, who also appeared to him in person. The Body of Christ was given him by the Bishop of Vercelli, and, "after swallowing It, he peacefully breathed his last". It was the fourth of April, 397. He was interred as he had desired, in his beloved basilica, by the side of the holy martyrs, Gervasius and Protasius, the discovery of whose relics, during his great struggle with Justina, had so consoled him and his faithful adherents. In the year 835 one of his successors, Angilbert II, placed the relics of the three saints in as porphyry sarcophagus under the altar, where they were found in 1864. The works of St. Ambrose were issued first from the press of Froben at Basle, 1527, under the supervision of Erasmus. A more elaborate edition was printed in Rome in the year 1580 and following. Cardinal Montalto was the chief editor until elevation to the papacy as Sixtus V. It is in five volumes and still retains a value owing to the prefixed "Life" of the Saint, composed by Baronius. Then came the excellent Maurist edition published in two volumes at Paris, in 1686 and 1690; reprinted by Migne in four volumes. The career of St. Ambrose occupies a prominent place in all histories, ecclesiastical and secular, of the fourth century. Tillemont's narrative, in the tenth volume of his "Memoirs", is particularly valuable. The question of the genuineness of the so-called eighteen Ambrosian Hymns is of secondary importance. The great merit of the Saint in the field of hymnology is that of laying the foundations and showing posterity what ample scope there existed for future development.

Writings of Saint Ambrose

The special character and value of the writings of St. Ambrose are at once tangible in the title of Doctor of the Church, which from time immemorial he has shared in the West with St. Jerome, St. Augustine, and St. Gregory. He is an official witness to the teaching of the Catholic Church in his own time and in the preceding centuries. As such his writings have been constantly invoked by popes, councils and theologians; even in his own day it was felt that few could voice so clearly the true sense of the Scriptures and the teaching of the Church (St. Augustine, De doctrinâ christ.,IV,46,48,50). Ambrose is pre-eminently the ecclesiastical teacher, setting forth in a sound and edifying way, and with conscientious regularity, the deposit of faith as made known to him. He is not the philosophic scholar meditating in silence and retirement on the truths of the Christian Faith, but the strenuous administrator, bishop, and statesman, whose writings are only the mature expression of his official life and labours. Most of his writings are really homilies, spoken commentaries on the Old and New Testaments, taken down by his hearers, and afterwards reduced to their present form, though very few of these discourses have reached us exactly as they fell from the lips of the great bishop. In Ambrose the native Roman genius shines out with surpassing distinctness; he is clear, sober, practical, and aims always at persuading his hearers to act at once on the principles and arguments he has laid down, which affect nearly every phase of their religious or moral life. “He is a genuine Roman in whom the ethico-practical note is always dominant. He had neither time nor liking for philosophico-dogmatic speculations. In all his writings he follows some practical purpose. Hence he is often content to reproduce what has been already treated, to turn over for another harvest a field already worked. He often draws abundantly from the ideas of some earlier writer, Christian or pagan, but adapts these thoughts with tact and intelligence to the larger public of his time and his people. In formal perfection his writings leave something to be desired; a fact that need not surprise us when we recall the demands on the time of such a busy man. His diction abounds in unconscious reminiscences of classical writers, Greek and Roman. He is especially conversant with the writings of Virgil. His style is in every way peculiar and personal. It is never wanting in a certain dignified reserve; when it appears more carefully studied than is usual with him, its characteristics are energetic brevity and bold originality. Those of his writings that are homiletic in origin and form betray naturally the great oratorical gifts of Ambrose; in them he rises occasionally to a noble height of poetical inspiration. His hymns are a sufficient evidence of the sure mastery that he possessed over the Latin language." (Bardenhewer, Les pères de l'église, Paris, 1898, 736 -737; cf. Pruner, Die Theologie des heil. Ambrosius, Eichstadt, 1864.) For convenience sake his extant writings may be divided into four classes: exegetical, dogmatic, ascetico-moral, and occasional. The exegetical writings, or scripture-commentaries deal with the story of Creation, the Old Testament figures of Cain and Abel, Noe, Abraham and the patriarchs, Elias, Tobias, David and the Psalms, and other subjects. Of his discourses on the New Testament only the lengthy commentary on St. Luke has reached us (Expositio in Lucam). He is not the author of the admirable commentary on the thirteen Epistles of St. Paul known as "Ambrosiaster". Altogether these Scripture commentaries make up more than one half of the writings of Ambrose. He delights in the allegorico-mystical interpretation of Scripture, i.e. while admitting the natural or literal sense he seeks everywhere a deeper mystic meaning that he converts into practical instruction for Christian life. In this, says St. Jerome (Ep.xli) "he was disciple of Origen, but after the modifications in that master's manner due to St. Hippolytus of Rome and St. Basil the Great". He was also influenced in this direction by the Jewish writer Philo to such an extent that the much corrupted text of the latter can often be successfully corrected from the echoes and reminiscences met with in the works of Ambrose. It is to be noted, however, that in his use of non-Christian writers the great Doctor never abandons a strictly Christian attitude (cf. Kellner, Der heilige Ambrosius als Erklärer das Alten Testamentes, Ratisbon, 1893).

The most influential of his ascetico-moral writings is the work on the duties of Christian ecclesiastics (De officiis ministrorum). It is a manual of Christian morality, and in its order and disposition follows closely the homonymous work of Cicero. "Nevertheless", says Dr. Bardenhewer, "the antitheses between the philosophical morality of the pagan and the morality of the Christian ecclesiastic is acute and striking. In his exhortations, particularly, Ambrose betrays an irresistible spiritual power" (cf. R. Thamin, Saint Ambroise et la morale chrétienne at quatrième siècle, Paris, 1895). He wrote several works on virginity, or rather published a number of his discourses on that virtue, the most important of which is the treatise "On Virgins" addressed to his sister Marcellina, herself a virgin consecrated to the divine service. St. Jerome says (Ep. xxii) that he was the most eloquent and exhaustive of all the exponents of virginity, and his judgment expresses yet the opinion of the church. The genuineness of the touching little work "On the Fall of a Consecrated Virgin" (De lapsu virginis consecratæ) has been called in question, but without sufficient reason. Dom Germain Morin maintains that it is a real homily of Ambrose, but like so many more of his so-called "books", owes its actual form to some one of his auditors. His dogmatic writings deal mostly with the divinity of Jesus Christ and of the Holy Ghost, also with the Christian sacraments. At the request of the young Emperor Gratian (375-383) he composed a defence of the true divinity of Jesus Christ against the Arians, and another on the true divinity of the Holy Ghost against the Macedonians; also a work on the Incarnation of Our Lord. His work “On Penance” was written in refutation of the rigoristic tenets of the Novatians and abounds in useful evidences of the power of the Church to forgive sins, the necessity of confession and the meritorious character of good works. A special work on Baptism (De sacramento regenerationis), often quoted by St. Augustine, has perished. We possess yet, however, his excellent treatise (De Mysteriis) on Baptism, Confirmation, and the Blessed Eucharist (P.L. XVI, 417-462), addressed to the newly baptized. Its genuineness has been called in doubt by opponents of Catholic teaching concerning the Eucharist, but without any good reason. It is highly probable that the work on the sacraments (De Sacramentis, ibid.) is identical with the preceding work; only, says Bardenhewer, “indiscreetly published by some hearer of Ambrose”. Its evidences to the sacrificial character of the Mass, and to the antiquity of the Roman Canon of the Mass are too well known to need more than a mention; some of them may easily be seen in any edition of the Roman Breviary (cf. Probst, Die Liturgie des vierten Jahrhunderts und deren Reform, Münster, 1893, 232-239). The correspondence of Ambrose includes but a few confidential or personal letters; most of his letters are official notes, memorials on public affairs, reports of councils held, and the like. Their historical value is, however, of the first order, and they exhibit him as a Roman administrator and statesman second to none in Church or State. If his personal letters are unimportant, his remaining discourses are of a very high order. His work on the death (378) of his brother Satyrus (De excessu fratris sui Satyri) contains his funeral sermon on his brother, one of the earliest of Christian panegryics and a model of the consolatory discourses that were henceforth to take the place of the cold and inept declamations of the Stoics. His funeral discourses on Valentinian II (392), and Theodosius the Great (395) are considered models of rhetorical composition; (cf. Villemain, De l’éloquence chrétienne, Paris, ed. 1891);

they are also historical documents of much importance. Such, also, are his discourse against the Arian intruder, Auxentius (Contra Auxentium de basilicis tradendis) and his two discourses on the finding of the bodies of the Milanese martyrs Gervasius and Protasius.

Not a few works have been falsely attributed to St. Ambrose; most of them are found in the Benedictine Edition of his writings (reprinted in Migne) and are discussed in the manuals of patrology(e.g. Bardenhewer). Some of his genuine works appear to have been lost, e.g. the already mentioned work on baptism. St. Augustine (E, 8) is loud in his praise of a (now lost) work of Ambrose written against those who asserted an intellectual dependency of Jesus Christ on Plato. It is not improbable that he is really the author of the Latin translation and paraphrase of Josephus (De Bello Judaico), known in the Middle Ages as Hegesippus or Egesippus, a distortion of the Greek name of the original author (Iosepos). Mommsen denies (1890) his authorship of the famous Roman law text known as the "Lex Dei, sive Mosaicarum et Romanarum Legum Collatio", an attempt to exhibit the law of Moses as the historical source whence Roman criminal jurisprudence drew its principal dispositions.

Editions of his Writings

THE LITERARY HISTORY of the editions of his writings is a long one and may be seen in the best lives of Ambrose. Erasmus edited them in four tomes at Basle (1527). A valuable Roman edition was brought out in 1580, in five volumes, the result of many years' labour; it was begun be Sixtus V, while yet the monk Felice Peretti. Prefixed to it is the life of St. Ambrose composed by Baronius for his Ecclesiastical Annals. The excellent Benedictine edition appeared at Paris (1686-90) in two folio volumes; it was twice reprinted at Venice (1748-51, and 1781-82). The latest edition of the writings of St. Ambrose is that of P.A. Ballerini (Milan, 1878) in six folio volumes; it has not rendered superfluous the Benedictine edition of du Frische and Le Nourry. Some writings of Ambrose have appeared in the Vienna series known as the "Corpus Scriptorum Classicorum Latinorum" (Vienna, 1897-1907). There is an English version of selected works of St. Ambrose by H. de Romestin in the tenth volume of the second series of the "Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers" (New York, 1896). A German version of selected writings in two volumes, executed by Fr. X. Schulte, is found in the "Bibliothek der Kirchenväter" (Kempten, 1871-77).
